Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is the Chairman of the Manufactures Committee, and he explained to the Auditing Committee that what they intended to do was simply during the recess to make some investigations in order to report back to the next Congress, in the hope that some legislation might be had.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE

The resolution (S. Res. 173) submitted by Mr. COOLIDGE on July 20, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration hereby is authorized to employ for the remainder of the present session an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO ENLARGEMENT OF THE YELLOWSTONE AND GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARKS—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

The resolution (S. Res. 199) submitted today by Mr. ROBINSON, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the amount allotted for the investigation of the proposed enlargement of the Yellowstone Park, and the activities in the Jackson Hole region as thereto related, by authority of Resolution No. 226, agreed to February 11, 1933, be, and hereby is, increased to the extent of $310 to pay outstanding obligations incurred in pursuance of the purposes of said resolution to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolutions Nos. 157 and 182, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolutions will be read.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES—EXPENSES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 157) reported by Mr. PITTMAN (for himself, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. CLARK, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. WHITE) from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on June 20, 1935, and this day reported by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the word "purposes", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$5,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized and directed by S. Res. 246 on April 17, 1930, to investigate the conservation of wild animal life, hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $5,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask what the resolution is for?

Mr. BYRNES. It is for a continuation of the investigation of the conservation of wild animal life, which has heretofore received $15,000; and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has reduced the amount to $5,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

CAUSES OF DECLINE IN COTTON PRICES—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 182) submitted by Mr. SMITH on August 12, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The amendment of the Committte to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was, in line 10, after the word "Forestry", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, The investigation shall not cover transactions beyond July 31, 1935", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 103, agreed to March 16, 1935, and Senate Resolution 125, agreed to May 7, 1935, and Senate Resolution 172, agreed to July 30, 1935, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, are hereby continued in full force and effect, and that the limit of expenditures that may be made under authority of such resolutions is hereby increased by $50,000 and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry: Provided, The investigation shall not cover transactions beyond July 31, 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR COPELAND RELATIVE TO THE "LEVIATHAN"

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask consent—and I know it will be readily given, for fear I may make a speech—that the speech which I intended to make on the Leviathan may be printed in the RECORD as if I had made it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am very sorry to object to that; but a similar incident occurred once before in this session of Congress, and I am opposed to the Senate getting into the practice of permitting Senators to extend their remarks as though they had been delivered. Therefore, I am constrained to object to the Senator's request, although I shall have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD as a statement coming from the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] concerning the Leviathan be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall interpose no objection, although I might wish to go on and make the speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall withdraw the request if the Senator objects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE "LEVIATHAN"—STATEMENT BY SENATOR COPELAND

On July 30, the senior Senator from Minnesota made a senatorial speech entitled "The Scuttling of the Good Ship Leviathan." On certain phases of his subject his allegations were so obviously erroneous that I doubt if there is another Member of this body who seriously believes or accepts them. He is so mistaken in many of his statements as to alleged facts and figures, however, that I do not feel that the present session should be permitted to come to a close without having in the RECORD an accurate statement of the real facts.

I am not charging the Senator with any willful misstatement, of course. Undoubtedly he obtained his information from others who, either from woeful ignorance as to the true picture concerning the operation of this vessel, or from a desire deliberately to deceive, furnished him with the misrepresentations contained in that speech.

The Senator told us that the lay-up of the Leviathan was not only detrimental to the American merchant marine but was done so pursuant to the request of British interests. It is stated that the Leviathan was a most profitable carrier up to the time of her first lay-up in May 1933. It was alleged that she earned an average profit in excess of $70,000 per voyage under the Chapman management during the first 2 years of the depression.

The facts are that the United States Shipping Board operated this great vessel from July 4, 1923, to April 8, 1929, during which time she completed 80 voyages with total gross earnings of only $39,561,275.72 as compared with direct operating expenses of $39,103,635.83. But these figures do not include 1 cent of overhead or depreciation or interest, which are just as necessary a cost as the wages paid to the seamen. Allowing a reasonable expense for overhead of 10 percent of the gross earnings and an annual depreciation charge equivalent to 5 percent per year of her sales price in 1929, but still excluding any financial charges, I am reliably informed, the average loss per voyage even during this period of abnormal travel in the north Atlantic was in excess of $70,000. The so-called "Chapman interests" operated the Leviathan from April 8, 1929, to December 4, 1931, during which time she completed 40 voyages and one cruise with total gross revenue of $14,539,100.43 and total operating expense of $11,712,757.71 (exclusive of overhead, depreciation, and financial charges). Allowing 10 percent of the gross revenue for overhead, depreciation at the rate of 5 percent per annum on the purchase price, and 4¼ percent interest on deferred payments of the purchase price, there was little, if any, profit made.

The so-called "I. M. M.—Dollar-Dawson group", which took over the Leviathan on December 4, 1931, made 16 voyages and one cruise after that date to May 1933, the period of her first lay-up. The Leviathan during this period had gross earnings of $2,809,099.20 and a direct operating expense (exclusive of overhead, depreciation, and financial charges) of $3,253,630.74, or a direct-operating loss of approximately $28,000 per voyage.

This direct operating loss makes it unnecessary to add the absolutely necessary overhead expense, depreciation, and financial charges in order to establish the fact that if this great ship Leviathan was scuttled it was not by reason of British-controlled ownership or because of subservience on the part of our Government officials charged with the duty of developing an American merchant marine to British shipping interests. It was due solely to economic conditions, the obsolescence of the Leviathan with the fear of old ships and the operation of new and modern passenger vessels which are more attractive to the traveling public.

After the United States Lines, which included the Leviathan, was taken over by the I. M. M.-Dollar-Dawson group in the fall of 1931, an investigation was conducted by a committee of the other branch of the Congress and hearings were held to find out about the transaction. At that time considerable emphasis was given to the fact that the former Shipping Board had required this new interest to operate the Leviathan for only seven voyages per annum. These could be made during the summer season, whereas the British vessel Majestic operated the year round. Both the Shipping Board and the Leviathan owners keenly appreciated the possible unfavorable public reaction to this situation; and notwithstanding the Leviathan operated at a loss on the seven voyages made during the summer of 1932, her owners made eight additional voyages between September 16, 1932, and May 1, 1933, when it was almost an absolute certainty that the making of these additional voyages would entail a considerable loss. The sole purpose of these additional voyages was an endeavor to make the Leviathan an all-the-year-around vessel if this could possibly be done without too great a loss, but it was found it could not be done.

In the meantime, the United States Lines Co. had completed and put in operation in August 1932 the largest and most expensive merchant ship ever constructed in American shipyards, namely, the Manhattan. Her sister ship, the Washington, was placed in operation in May 1933. Regarding these, the Senator stated that the United States Lines Co. placed in operation two small vessels as a substitute for the Leviathan. They are smaller than the Normandie, the Bremen, and several other superliners, but by no means are "small" vessels. They cost in excess of $10,000,000 each and are the largest ships ever constructed and operated under the American flag.

In the spring of 1933, it became quite obvious from the bookings offered for the Leviathan for the summer season 1933 in comparison with the bookings made for those two new palatial liners—the Manhattan and Washington, that little, if any, improvement could be expected in the earnings of the Leviathan during the summer season over her earnings during the so-called "off season." The Shipping Board had been constantly studying the results of the operation of the Leviathan. It had established the United States Lines in the North Atlantic trade many years before and was fully cognizant of the value of a premier passenger vessel in the development of an American merchant marine. The Board also knew that the United States Lines Co. needed new and additional ships to take the place of several worn out vessels which at one time were operated by the Board on this line but had been withdrawn from the service because of their age and physical obsolescence. The construction of additional new vessels would have been indefinitely delayed if the company was required to continue to operate the Leviathan at a substantial loss. Consequently the Shipping Board, after much consideration of the matter, gave its consent to lay up the Leviathan during the summer season of 1933.

Now, the Senator stated that this act on the part of the former Shipping Board was in effect a subsidy by the United States in the sum of $900,000, the effect of which would advance shipping interests of Great Britain and react against United States shipping. It has been stated elsewhere, too, that the effect of laying up the Leviathan during the year 1933 saved the United States Lines Co. from payment of $900,000 as liquidated damages provided for in their contract.

That is not the case at all. The fact is that if the United States Lines Co. failed to operate the Leviathan, without the consent of the Shipping Board, it would not only have been obligated to pay the United States $900,000 as liquidated damages but to forfeit to the Government all of their vessels, except the two new vessels I have mentioned. Obviously the United States Lines Co. had no intention of paying any such sum as liquidated damages or forfeiting all of its vessels. It would much rather have operated the Leviathan for five voyages, of course, and absorbed the loss, which has never been estimated even by that company to exceed $500,000 a year.

At the end of the season of 1933, the company again took up with the officials of the Department of Commerce the question of the operation of the Leviathan. The Secretary of Commerce wanted to be absolutely sure that it was not possible to operate the Leviathan during at least the summer season without sustaining a prohibitive loss, and for the reason the company was required to operate the Leviathan during the summer of 1934.

At the end of the 1934 season, the company once more brought to the attention of the Department of Commerce the losses sustained during the 1934 season and urged that some arrangement be made whereby these losses could be saved and the amount of the saving be put into new construction. After 6 months of investigation and consideration, the Department of Commerce decided it would be to the best interests of the American merchant marine to lay up the Leviathan during the remaining 2 years which otherwise she would be required to be operated under the terms of the 1931 contract.

How were the interests of the American merchant marine to be furthered by laying up the Leviathan?

In the first place the United States Lines Co. estimated that the Leviathan's losses for each of the years 1935 and 1936 would be $500,000. The Department of Commerce said: "All right, we will accept your estimate of losses and since you will save $1,000,000 if the Government does not require you to operate the Leviathan during the years 1935 and 1936, you must share that saving with the Government and agree without any qualifications to pay to it $500,000 or one-half of your estimated total saving; you must also agree to construct a new ship of the Manhattan-Washington type, to cost approximately $10,000,000, and the plans for that vessel must be submitted for approval and a firm contract made for the construction of the vessel during the current year. If you fail to construct this new vessel you shall pay the Government $1,000,000 as liquidated damages unless you and your parent company—the International Mercantile Marine—cannot borrow the money from any source to build this vessel, otherwise, you will have to operate the Leviathan." So, the net result of the transaction is that while it does save the United States Lines Co. possibly $1,000,000 in operating losses, the Government receives at once one-half of that sum in money and, what is far more important, the American merchant marine is to acquire a new $10,000,000 vessel, which will sail the seas for 20 years instead of insisting upon the operation of the obsolete Leviathan for a period of 2 years and that is all a strict application of the contract could require.

The action of the Secretary of Commerce in permitting the Leviathan to be tied up during the remainder of her stipulated period of operation did not result in any pecuniary loss to the Government. On the contrary it resulted in a gain to the Government of $500,000 in hand. It resulted further in a definite obligation on the part of the company to construct at once a third 30,000-ton liner of the type which has proved far more successful on the North Atlantic than even the new foreign superliners. The development or popularity of the American merchant marine will not be retarded in the slightest during the period the new ship is under construction because there is no demand on the part of the traveling public for passage on the Leviathan at the rates that must be charged.

The Senator stated, and it has been stated elsewhere, that the lay up of the Leviathan for the years 1935 and 1936 was in effect giving a subsidy to the United States Lines Co. in the amount of the liquidated damages as specified in the contract for failure to operate the Leviathan and the other vessels during those years. To repeat, the penalty is $700,000 and forfeiture of all the vessels for the year 1935; $600,000 and forfeiture of all of the vessels for the year 1936; but this is absurd; it is not the fact any more than is the allegation that the lay-up of the Leviathan for the year 1933 was in effect a granting of a subsidy to the company in the sum of $900,000. The utter absurdity of the total figure of $2,220,000 cited by the Senator, and of many of the other irresponsible statements so frequently and carelessly made about this famous old ship, were fully demonstrated at the hearings held in June of this year by the Committee on Commerce. The record of those hearings has been printed and therefore I will not now burden Senators with the technical facts on this point, or the technical reasons why the Leviathan cannot be operated except at a terrific loss.

Throughout his speech the Senator from Minnesota emphasized the fact that the British vessel Majestic was still in operation and sought to lead the Senate to believe that the owners of the Leviathan were British controlled and that the withdrawal of the Leviathan would inure to the benefit of the British vessel Majestic. I read in the public press, and no doubt others have also, an announcement by the owners of the British vessel Majestic that at the end of this season the Majestic would be withdrawn from service and sold for scrapping. If this be true, it seems to be a complete answer to any inference of ulterior motive in laying up the Leviathan. And that it is true is confirmed by the fact that the world famous Mauretania, a sister ship of the Leviathan, is now being scrapped, and the Olympic has, within the past few days, been offered for sale for scrapping.

In conclusion, may I say a few words more with respect to the I. M. M.—the alleged British-owned and British-controlled company? It is not my purpose to place a halo around the head of the stock ownership of the International Mercantile Marine Co. But it was only recently stated under oath before a committee of this body, and is now a part of its public records that 97 or 98 percent of all the stock of this company is owned by American citizens, and has been for some years. Also part of the public records of this body is the statement under oath of the officials of the company which shows the rapid disposition of foreign tonnage and of interest in foreign steamship lines. As I understand it, in 1930 the company made an agreement with the Shipping Board to dispose of all of its foreign shipping interests as rapidly as possible and not to acquire any new foreign tonnage. The officials of the company in March 1935 advised me, and also the officials of the Department of Commerce, that it had disposed of every dollar it had invested in foreign tonnage or in foreign shipping companies.

It seems to me this much should be said in connection with the matter. I am sure the Senator from Minnesota will be glad to have this information, and possibly others will be interested.

THE PRESENT AGRICULTURAL SITUATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD various statements taken from the press and periodicals of the country concerning the present agricultural situation throughout the Nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is a rather indefinite request. Did the Senator say he desired to print in the RECORD various statements that have been made concerning the agricultural situation in the country?

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a sort of cumulative statement culled from newspapers and periodicals during the past month or two concerning the present agricultural situation of the country.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in many years of experience I have never known any request that has been so indefinite as this one. The matter in question might contain a hundred pages; it might contain a thousand pages. Unless the Senator can get the material in better form than that, I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon objects to the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

SCHOOLS ATTENDED BY INDIAN CHILDREN

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do.

Mr. FRAZIER. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I desire to report three House bills making appropriations for the assistance of public schools where Indian children attend. Two of them are on Indian reservations, and one is at the border of a reservation. I ask for their immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. Are the bills on the calendar?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; they have been passed by the House, and reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I think they ought to go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRAZIER. Does the Senator mean that for an objection?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have one more bill which is on the calendar and which has passed the House. I move to substitute House bill 5813 for Senate bill 3091, being Calendar No. 1485. This is for the Trenton school district, North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota to move to take up a certain bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is one of the bills to which the Senator from Utah has just objected.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; this bill is on the calendar, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand; but it is a bill of the same nature, and the Senator is proposing to substitute a House bill for a Senate bill. I cannot yield for the present.

WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 2178, Senate bill 2804, to authorize the payment of retired pay to William Mitchell.

Mr. President, when this measure was last under consideration and the calendar was being called, by mistake, I was listed as one of those who objected to the bill. The fact is that, in my opinion, General Mitchell performed a great service in behalf of the consideration of the importance of aerial defense when he made his fight within the Army to bring the attention of the Army staff and the country to the importance of that problem.

As a matter of fact, he found a great amount of opposition at the time he made his fight because at that time he was pioneering in the field in which he was making his endeavor. I think, looking back upon it in retrospect, every impartial person will agree that General Mitchell rendered a great service to the aerial defense of this country and to the Army itself in the fight he made for aviation.

Therefore I have been moved to make this request for the immediate consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this bill would place Colonel Mitchell in a status other officers earned by loyal and faithful service. The record shows that a court martial found him guilty of contemptuous and insubordinate utterances with intent to discredit the administration of the Navy Department. The record shows that the court martial found that Colonel Mitchell by his utterances conducted himself to the prejudice of military discipline and to the discredit of the military service.

President Coolidge, in approving the sentence imposed after a court martial and review of the record, stated, among other things:

> The board of review finds that those statements were made without basis in fact.

That is, that the statements were false.

President Coolidge also stated among other things, referring to Colonel Mitchell:

> He employed expressions which cannot be construed otherwise than as breathing defiance toward his military superiors.

This particular man is not entitled to special favors which are denied to others similarly situated. No errors appeared in his trial, and the subcommittee who considered the record of the court martial and review first reported adversely upon the bill, and then by virtue of certain requests, they reversed themselves and reported the bill.

I am sure that the conduct of the committee in reporting the bill was very complimentary to a distinguished Member of this body, but was not a reason for the Senate of the United States undertaking to review the court martial or to grant any relief without cause.

I will not occupy the time of the Senate longer in respect to this communication from the War Department, I hold in my hand, than to read a short extract from it, and then to request that the entire communication to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

I now read from page 3 of the communication of May 24, 1935, to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. The War Department says this:

> In submitting his recommendations to the President, the Secretary of War [Mr. Davis] stated in part as follows:
> "The Board of Review is of the opinion that officers of the Army are so hedged about by restrictive statutes that it would be impossible for them to utilize in commercial pursuits, while remaining officers, much of the training which they have as officers. This is so to such an extent that it would make it difficult for the accused in this case to secure employment that would permit him to make adequate provision for himself and his dependents. The Judge Advocate General concurs in this view and also invites attention to the Presidential rule in force in regard to enlisted men, namely, that a single sentence shall not forfeit allowances or more than two-thirds of the pay of one retained in the service.
> "I concur in all the above recommendations except that I recommend that the execution of so much of the sentence as adjudges forfeiture of all the allowances and one-half of the monthly pay of the accused be suspended during the pleasure of the President. According to the figures furnished by the Judge Advocate General, this would permit the accused to receive monthly $120 rental allowance, $36 subsistence allowance, and $241.66 of pay, making the total of one-half of his pay plus allowances $397.66."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have been patient. I yielded to the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin. Debate is not in order on the bill unless consent is given that it should be considered. I must ask whether the bill is to be considered. If it is not, I shall wish to proceed to other matters. I do not wish to be discourteous to my friend, the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am stating my reasons for objecting to the immediate consideration of the bill. I thought that was the privilege of a Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Under the rules the Chair is of the impression that when a Senator objects further debate is not in order. Debate now is being carried on by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator from Vermont, but there are some other matters which must be attended to, and if the bill is not to be considered, we are simply wasting time in debating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Vermont to object.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to have the statement to which I have just referred inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas suffer just one statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Vermont may proceed to a conclusion, the Senator from Wisconsin insisting that he be heard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not insisting, but I think that in fairness to General Mitchell I ought to have a chance to make one statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I conclude the statement of my reason for objecting by asking consent that there be inserted in the RECORD the communication from the War Department which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 24, 1935.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the bill, S. 2804, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, "To authorize the payment of retired pay to William Mitchell", which you transmitted to the War Department under date of May 18, 1935, with a request for information and the views of the Department relative thereto.

The proposed legislation authorizes the President to place the name of William Mitchell upon the unlimited list of retired officers, United States Army, as a colonel, with the retired pay to which he would be entitled if now upon the active list of the Army, by reason of his distinguished services.

The records show that the beneficiary of this bill entered Federal service during the Spanish-American [War] as a Private, Company M, 1st Infantry, Wisconsin Volunteers, on May 14, 1898, and later served as signal officer, United States Volunteers, in the grades of second lieutenant and first lieutenant, from June 8, 1898, to April 26, 1901. While with the volunteer forces he served in Cuba from December 1898 to August 1899, and subsequently in the Philippine Islands at the time of the insurrection.

On April 26, 1901, he entered the Regular Army as a first lieutenant, Signal Corps; was promoted to captain March 2, 1903, and major July 1, 1916; detailed in aviation section, Signal Corps, July 27, 1916; and was promoted to lieutenant colonel on May 15, 1917. He held emergency commissions as colonel in the Signal Corps from October 10, 1917, to October 14, 1918, and as brigadier general, Air Service, from the latter date to June 30, 1920. He was promoted to the permanent grade of colonel July 1, 1920, and was assistant to the Chief of the Air Service, with the rank of brigadier general, from July 16, 1920, to March 4, 1921, when recess appointment expired; and again held that office from April 27, 1921, to April 26, 1925, when he reverted to his permanent grade of colonel. He resigned as a colonel, Air Service, effective February 1, 1926.

He was on the initial General Staff Corps eligible list; was detailed in the General Staff Corps from February 14, 1913, to June 7, 1916; and was a graduate of the Army Staff College in 1909, and a distinguished graduate of the Army School of the Line in 1908.

General Mitchell served overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces from the spring of 1917 to February 1919 and participated in the following major operations: Cambrai, Somme defensive, Champagne-Marne, Aisne-Marne, Oise-Aisne, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for repeated acts of extraordinary heroism in action, and for displaying bravery far beyond that required by his position as Chief of the Air Service, First Army, American Expeditionary Forces. He was also awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services as Air Service commander, first of the zone of advance and later of the First Corps and First and Second Armies. Extract copies of the General Orders announcing the citations for such awards are enclosed. Other decorations conferred upon him include the British Order of St. Michael and St. George, and the French Croix de Guerre with Palm and Legion of Honor, and the Italian Order of Sts. Maurice and Lazarus.

General Mitchell was tried by general court martial which convened at Washington, D. C., October 28, 1925, under charges of violation of the ninety-sixth article of war, eight specifications. In substance, it was charged that the accused at San Antonio, Tex., on two occasions in September 1925, made, uttered, and published to certain individuals and news-gathering agencies, certain statements, fully set forth in the specifications. Many of the expressions contained in those statements, as well as the whole tenor of each of those statements, were highly derogatory to the War Department and the Navy Department, and the officials exercising the administration thereof, without designation of names of individuals criticized. It was specifically alleged that in thus making, uttering, and publishing those statements the accused conducted himself to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, and in a way to bring discredit upon the military service; in a manner insubordinate to the War Department, highly contemptuous and disrespectful thereto; and with intent to discredit the administration of the Navy Department. Such conduct is violative of the ninety-sixth article of war and is under that article punishable at the discretion of the court trying the case.

The accused pleaded not guilty. The court found him guilty of all the specifications and the charge, and sentenced him "to be suspended from rank, command, and duty, with forfeiture of all pay and allowances for 5 years." The board of review in the office of the Judge Advocate General, after an exhaustive study of the case, found, in effect, that the evidence amply supported the findings; that the sentence imposed by the court was authorized by law for the offenses of which the accused was found guilty by the court; and that the record of trial was legally sufficient to support the findings and sentence. That board, while recommending that the sentence be approved, expressed the opinion that the portion of its adjudging forfeitures should be modified in view of the peculiar position in which the accused would find himself if the sentence in its entirety were approved.

The Judge Advocate General concurred in the views of the board of review and transmitted the record of the trial and the opinion of the board, with his recommendation, to the Secretary of War for the action of the President. In submitting his recommendations to the President, the Secretary of War (Mr. Davis) stated, in part, as follows:

"The board of review is of the opinion that officers of the Army are so hedged about by restrictive statutes that it would be impossible for them to utilize in commercial pursuits, while remaining officers, much of the training which they have as officers. This is so to such an extent that it would make it difficult for the accused in this case to secure employment that would permit him to make adequate provision for himself and his dependents. The Judge Advocate General concurs in this view and also invites attention to the Presidential rule in force in regard to enlisted men, namely, that a single sentence shall not forfeit allowances or more than two-thirds of the pay of one retained in the service.

"I concur in all the above recommendations except that I recommend that the execution of so much of the sentence as adjudges forfeiture of all the allowances and one-half of the monthly pay of the accused be suspended during the pleasure of the President. According to the figures furnished by the Judge Advocate General this would permit the accused to receive monthly $120 rental allowance, $36 subsistence allowance, and $241.66 of pay, making the total of one-half of his pay plus allowances $397.66.

"I therefore recommend that the sentence as thus modified be duly executed. I am moved to recommend such modification of the sentence because of the fact that the accused is married and has children dependent upon him, and I do not believe that they should suffer any severe hardship as a result of his misconduct."

On January 25, 1926, the President approved the sentence; but in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, suspended, during his pleasure, the execution of so much of the sentence as adjudged forfeiture of all the allowances and one-half of the monthly pay of the accused. The sentence, as modified by the President, was published in general court martial orders no. 3, War Department, January 26, 1926, copy of which is enclosed.

In approving the sentence the President stated, in part:

"A duly constituted court martial has determined that the accused has been guilty of highly censurable conduct. The country has every reason to expect that its officers, especially those who hold positions of high rank and have had long experience in the service, will at all times be strictly obedient to the provisions of the law and the requirements of the rules by which they are governed.

"The court martial has found that on September 3, 1935, the naval airship Shenandoah was destroyed in a storm and that destruction involved the loss of 14 persons of her crew. Two days later, and at a time when the naval airplane PN–9 was supposed to be lost and all members of her crew drowned, the accused, taking advantage of the horror-stricken state of the minds of the people and their natural desire to learn the causes of such losses, and their readiness to listen to the views of persons having, or supposed to have, expert knowledge of such subjects, published his statement of September 5, 1925, set out in the charges, and in which he violently assailed the War Department and the Navy Department. He characterized the administration of those departments as incompetent, criminally negligent, and almost treasonable. He charged those administering those Departments with ignorance, suppression of the truth, and giving misleading, if not false, information concerning the Air Service to Congress and the people. The board of review finds that those statements were made without basis in fact. In his statement of September 9, 1925, set out in the charges, he employed expressions which cannot be construed otherwise than as breathing defiance toward his military superiors.

"The theory of government implies that every official, so long as he retains office, shall deport himself with respect toward his superiors. This is especially true of those in the military service. Unless this rule is applied there could be no discipline in the Army and the Navy, without which those two forces would not only be without value as a means of defense but would become actually a menace to society. Discipline is the whole basis of military training."

It is pertinent here to remark that, as a retired officer of the Army, Colonel Mitchell would again find himself under those same legal and ethical restraints that proved to be his undoing in 1926.

In a letter addressed to The Adjutant General under date of January 26, 1926, General Mitchell tendered his resignation as an officer of the United States Army, to take effect February 1, 1926. His resignation was accepted by the President, and he ceased to be an officer of the Army on the latter date.

As interpreted by the War Department S. 2804 contemplates that the beneficiary thereof shall be placed on the retired list of the Army and credited for the purposes of computing his longevity pay, with continuous and constructive service to the present time. At the time of his resignation he had served in the Army for a total of 27 years 9 months and 18 days. It appears, however, that in the event of the enactment of this bill he would receive retired pay of a colonel with more than 30 years' active service, amounting to $375 per month.

In his published statement of September 5, 1925, Colonel Mitchell, after expressing his pleasure in the service he had enjoyed, stated:

"I owe the Government everything; the Government owes me nothing (p. 13, G. C. M. O. 3).

This statement accurately reflects the views of the War Department as to the merits of the proposed legislation.

The War Department can find no justification for the enactment of the proposed special legislation, which would single out Colonel Mitchell for preferential treatment from among the many former excellent officers of the Regular Army who have voluntarily severed their connection with the military service. By his voluntary resignation more than 9 years ago, Colonel Mitchell forfeited all rights and claims to retirement. The Department is firmly of the opinion that he should not be the beneficiary of legislation that would place him in a status that other officers earn by loyal and faithful service.

For the reasons set forth in the foregoing, the War Department is opposed to the enactment of this legislation.

Sincerely yours, GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the objection made by the Senator from Vermont, I realize it is futile to debate this matter, but I want the RECORD to show that the position taken by the Senator from Vermont is purely technical and legalistic.

Like all pioneers, General Mitchell met the resistance of everybody in the service. He was willing to make sacrifices for his convictions concerning the importance of aviation. In my opinion, he was unjustly punished by those who were out of sympathy with his point of view.

I further hold, Mr. President, that the advance of time and science has demonstrated that General Mitchell rendered a service to the people of the United States in the fight he made for the consideration of aviation. I regret that the lateness of the session makes it impossible to secure consideration of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of what has been said concerning this bill, I am going to take the liberty of making a brief statement. I regard the bill as meritorious. General Mitchell is one of the great soldiers and heroes of the Nation. I believe he is entitled to the recognition which the bill proposes.

GRIER-LOWRANCE CONSTRUCTION CO., INC.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 134)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill 2808, entitled "An act for the relief of Grier-Lowrance Construction Co., Inc."

The bill proposes to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction over the claim of the Grier-Lowrance Construction Co., Inc., for losses and damages alleged to have been sustained in connection with the performance of a contract made by the company with the United States for the construction of the foundation for the bridge and watergate features of the Arlington Memorial Bridge project. The court is, however, empowered to take cognizance of such matters under the general jurisdiction reposed in it by section 145 of the Judicial Code, and consequently no special legislation is needed to that end.

The present measure seeks to enlarge the claimant's right to recover by providing that the claim should be adjudicated on the basis of all losses and damages attributable to any act of the Government. The general law limits the recovery to losses and damages due to wrongful acts of the Government. No reason appears why an exception should be made in favor of this claimant to the extent of granting to it rights not accorded to other claimants in similar circumstances. The bill further proposes to deprive the Government of certain defenses to the projected suit, namely, that the claimant failed to file timely protests as provided by the contract; that a finding made under the usual arbitration clause contained in the contract is final and binding; and "any other technical defense." While the claimant should perhaps be accorded its day in court, the Government should naturally be permitted, as it is in all cases, to interpose and present such proper defenses as its counsel deem wise and appropriate to advance. No reason appears why the Government should be denied such right in this instance.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 24, 1935.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

NOMINATION OF EDWIN R. HOLMES—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes, of Mississippi, to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. The nomination is Calendar No. 5192.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of J. D. Ross, of Washington, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for a term expiring June 5, 1940.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of M. Hampton Magruder of Upper Marlboro, Md., to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Maryland, to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. DONAHEY, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Robert E. Freer, of Ohio, to be a Federal Trade Commissioner for the remainder of the term expiring September 25, 1938, vice George C. Mathews, resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

NOMINATIONS OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. I report a number of routine nominations from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Senators from the several States have approved the nominations, and I ask unanimous consent for their confirmation en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asks unanimous consent for immediate consideration of sundry nominations for postmasters which have been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

TREATIES—INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT UNION

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of treaties on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive E (73d Cong., 2d sess.), the International Convention of the Copyright Union as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that that treaty be passed over on account of an agreement in connection with a bill of the same character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AGREEMENT—OBLIGATIONS OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the agreement, Executive L (74th Cong., 1st sess.), to refrain from invoking the obligations of the most-favored-nation clause in respect to certain multilateral economic conventions, which was opened for signature at the Pan American Union on July 15, 1934, and signed on behalf of the United States on September 20, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The high contracting parties, desirous of encouraging the development of economic relations among the peoples of the world by means of multilateral conventions, the benefits of which ought not to inure to countries which refuse to assume the obligations thereof; and desirous also, while reaffirming as a fundamental doctrine the policy of equality of treatment, to develop such policy in a manner harmonious with the development of general economic rapprochement in which every country shall do its part; have decided to enter into an agreement for these purposes, as set forth in the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The high contracting parties, with respect to their relations with one another, will not, except as provided in article II hereof, invoke the obligations of the most-favored-nation clause for the purpose of obtaining from parties to multilateral conventions of the type hereinafter stated, the advantages or benefits enjoyed by the parties thereto.

The multilateral economic conventions contemplated in this article are those which are of general applicability, which include a trade area of substantial size, which have as their objective the liberalization and promotion of international trade or other international economic intercourse, and which are open to adoption by all countries.

ARTICLE II

Notwithstanding the stipulation of article I, any high contracting party may demand, from a State with which it maintains a treaty containing the most-favored-nation clause, the fulfillment of that clause insofar as such high contracting party accords in fact to such State the benefits which it claims.

ARTICLE III

The present agreement is operative as respects each high contracting party on the date of signature by such party. It shall be open for signature on behalf of any State and shall remain operative indefinitely but any party may terminate its own obligations hereunder 3 months after it has given to the Pan American Union notice of such intention.

Notwithstanding the stipulations of the foregoing paragraph, any State desiring to do so may sign the present agreement ad referendum, which agreement in this case, shall not take effect, with respect to such State, until after the deposit of the instrument of ratification, in conformity with its constitutional procedure.

ARTICLE IV

This agreement is a single document in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French, all of which texts are equally authoritative. It shall be deposited with the Pan American Union, which is charged with the duty of keeping it open for signature or resignature indefinitely, and with transmitting certified copies, with invitations to become parties, to all of the states of the world. In performing this function, the Pan American Union may invoke the assistance of any of its members signatory hereto.

In witness whereof, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed this agreement on behalf of their respective Governments, and have affixed hereto their seals on the dates appearing opposite their signatures.

Opened for signature by the Pan American Union, in accordance with a resolution of the Seventh International Conference of American States, this fifteenth day of July 1934, at Washington.

The foregoing document has been deposited on this date with the Pan American Union and opened to the signature of all States, in accordance with the resolution of December 24, 1933, of the Seventh International Conference of American States, and the resolution of June 27, 1934, of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C., the fifteenth day of July 1934.

[SEAL] E. GIL-BORGES,
Secretary of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union.

For the United States of America:
CORDELL HULL, ad referendum, September 20, 1934. [SEAL]
For the Republic of Panama:
R. J. ALFARO, ad referendum, September 29, 1934. [SEAL]
For the Republic of Cuba:

For the Republic of Nicaragua:
HENRI DE BAYLE, ad referendum, January 23, 1935. [SEAL]
Au nom de l'Union Economique Belgo-Luxembourgeoise:
CTE. R. STRATEN, ad referendum, 14 Mars 1935. [SEAL]

I hereby certify that the foregoing document is a true and faithful copy of the original, with the signatures affixed thereto up to the present date, of the agreement on the application of the most-favored-nation clause in bilateral commercial treaties which is deposited in the Pan American Union and open to the signature of all States.

Washington, D. C., March 14, 1935.

[SEAL] E. GIL-BORGES,
Secretary of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union.

Mr. PITTMAN. This protocol has received unanimously a favorable report at the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has nothing to do with bilateral treaties. It provides that in the case of nations entering into conventions they need not feel that they should be obligated by virtue of the most-favored-nation clauses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the agreement will be reported to the Senate.

The agreement was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive L, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, an agreement to refrain from invoking the obligations of the most-favored-nation clause in respect of certain multilateral economic conventions, which was opened for signature at the Pan American Union on July 15, 1934, and signed on behalf of the United States on September 20, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the agreement is ratified.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND GERMANY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the agreement, Executive P (74th Cong., 1st sess.), between the United States and Germany terminating part of article VII of the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights, signed December 8, 1923, and in effect since October 14, 1925, which was read the second time, as follows:

The undersigned duly authorized representatives of the United States of America and Germany on behalf of their respective Governments have reached the following agreement:

ARTICLE I

The second, third, fourth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of article VII of the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights between the United States of America and Germany signed December 8, 1923, shall cease to have force and effect on and after the day on which this agreement comes into force.

ARTICLE II

The present agreement shall become operative on October 14, 1935, and on and after that day shall have full force and effect as an integral part of the said Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights.

The present agreement shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Berlin as soon as possible.

Done in duplicate, in the English and German languages, both authentic, at the city of Washington, this 3d day of June 1935.

CORDELL HULL [SEAL]
HANS LUTHER [SEAL]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is the reenactment of the treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and Germany, which has been in existence for some time. However, the German Government desires to revoke the favored-nation clause in that treaty. Therefore a new treaty along the same line was negotiated and executed by the two governments, leaving out the favored-nation clause. It is satisfactory to the United States and Germany, and, of course, we desire to preserve all the other commercial clauses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment agreement will be reported to the Senate.

The agreement was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive P, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, an agreement between the United States and Germany terminating part of article VII of the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights, signed December 8, 1923, and in effect since October 14, 1925.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to and the agreement is ratified.

EXTRADITION CONVENTION WITH BELGIUM

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty Executive Q (74th Cong., 1st sess.), a supplementary extradition convention between the United States and Belgium, signed at Washington on June 20, 1935, which was read the second time as follows:

The Governments of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Belgians, being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the convention concluded between the two countries on October 26, 1901, have resolved to conclude a supplementary convention for this purpose and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America and

His Majesty the King of the Belgians:

Count Robert van der Straten Ponthoz, His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The following crimes and offenses are added to the list of crimes and offenses numbered 1 to 14 in article II of the said convention of October 26, 1901, on account of which extradition may be granted, that is to say;

15. Crimes and offenses committed in violation of legislation on bankruptcy.

16. Fraud or breach of trust on the part of a depositary, banker, agent, middleman, trustee, executor, administrator, guardian, director, or agent of any company or corporation, or on the part of any person occupying a position of trust.

ARTICLE II

The present convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said extradition convention of October 26, 1901, and article II of the last-mentioned convention shall be read as if the list of crimes and offenses therein contained had originally comprised the additional crimes and offenses specified and numbered 15 and 16 in the first article of the present convention.

ARTICLE III

The present convention shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods and shall go into effect 1 month after the exchange of ratifications, which shall take place at Brussels, as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention, both in the English and French languages, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this twentieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five.

CORDELL HULL [SEAL]
Cte. R v. STRATEN. [SEAL]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive Q, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, a supplementary extradition convention between the United States and Belgium, signed at Washington on June 20, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

TREATY BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND UNITED MEXICAN STATES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive R (74th Cong., 1st sess.), between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at the city of Mexico on June 13, 1935, to facilitate assistance to and salvage of vessels, public or private, of either country, in danger or shipwrecked on the coast or within the territorial waters of the other country, within specified radii, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES FOR THE SENDING OF VESSELS FOR PURPOSES OF ASSISTANCE AND SALVAGE

The United States of America and the United Mexican States, being desirous, for humanitarian reasons, to facilitate the assistance and salvage of vessels in danger or shipwrecked on the coasts or within the territorial waters of the other country, have for that purpose resolved to conclude a treaty, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, R. Henry Norweb, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the United States of America to Mexico; and

The President of the United Mexican States, Emilio Portes Gil, Secretary of State for Foreign Affaires;

Who, after having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The High Contacting Parties agree that vessels and rescue apparatus, public or private, of either country, may aid or assist vessels of their own nationality, including the passengers and crews thereof, which may be disabled or in distress on the shores or within the territorial waters of the other country within a radius of seven hundred and twenty nautical miles of the intersection of the International Boundary Line and the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or within a radius of two hundred nautical miles of the intersection of the International Boundary Line and the coast of the Gulf of Mexico.

ARTICLE II

The Commanding Officer, master, or owner of a vessel or rescue apparatus of either country, entering or intending to enter the territory or territorial waters of the other, in order to assist a distressed vessel, shall, at the earliest practicable moment, send notice of such action or intention to the competent authorities of the port of entry of that other country nearest the scene of distress. This notice may be sent by radio or telegraphic dispatch or by any other expeditious method of communication. Such vessel or apparatus may freely proceed to, and assist, the distressed vessel unless advised by such competent authorities that adequate assistance is available, or that, for any other reason, such assistance is not considered necessary.

ARTICLE III

The Commanding Officer, master, or owner of a vessel or apparatus which enters the territory or territorial waters of a country to render assistance to a distressed vessel under the authority of this treaty shall notify the competent authorities of such country upon departure from such territory or territorial waters; and private vessels so entering, as well as private distressed vessels and the cargo, equipment, stores, crew and passengers thereof, shall be subject to the provisions of the laws in force in the country in whose territorial waters such assistance is rendered.

As used in this treaty, the word "assistance" means any act necessary or desirable to prevent the injury, arising from a marine peril, of persons or property, and the word "vessel" includes aircraft, as well as every kind of conveyance used or capable of being used for transportation on water.

ARTICLE IV

This Treaty shall remain in force for one year, and thereafter until terminated with three months notice by one of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE V

The High Contracting Parties shall ratify this Treaty in conformity with their respective constitutional provisions. The exchange of ratifications shall take place in the city of Washington, D. C., as soon as possible, and the Treaty shall be in force from the time of the exchange of these ratifications.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate in the English and Spanish languages in the city of Mexico, the thirteenth of the month of June in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five.

[SEAL] R. HENRY NORWEB.
[SEAL] E. P. GIL

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive R, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, a treaty between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at the city of Mexico on June 13, 1935, to facilitate assistance to and salvage of vessels, public or private, of either country, in danger or shipwrecked on the coast or within the territorial waters of the other country, within specified radii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ray Hart to be State administrator for Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have been requested by labor organizations and trade organizations in Montana to present an objection to the nomination of Mr. Hart, and I now make that objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks that the nomination go over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? (Putting the question.)

The nomination was confirmed.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden, of Pennsylvania, to be a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Michael Carmody, of New York, to be a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edwin S. Smith, of Massachusetts, to be a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Garland L. Rounds, of Illinois, to be State engineer inspector in Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. LEWIS subsequently said: Mr. President, I did not hear the clerk call the name of Garland L. Rounds, of Illinois, to be State engineer inspector in Illinois under the Public Works Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has been confirmed.

Mr. LEWIS. I must say, sir, that there have been telegrams sent to me making protest against his confirmation, and I owe it to all concerned to say that the Secretary of the Interior said they were all investigated and found to be unfounded. For that reason I have asked that they be withdrawn from the records, and had I been present I should have moved the confirmation of Mr. Rounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination has been confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

EDWIN R. HOLMES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I inquire what became of the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes, of Mississippi, to be United States circuit judge of the fifth circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination of Mr. Holmes, the Chair has been informed, was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary today on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of that committee.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Francis O'Ryan to be major general, Reserve.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. WHEELER. I understand the name of Robert E. Freer, of Ohio, to be Federal Trade Commissioner has been sent to the Senate. It was sent to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee and reported out by that committee and should be on the calendar. I ask that the nomination be taken up for immediate consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the nomination. The Chair hears none. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert E. Freer, of Ohio, to be Federal Trade Commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of Robert E. Freer, of Ohio, to be Federal Trade Commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Mr. TYDINGS. The nomination of M. Hampton Magruder, of Upper Marlboro, Md., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, to fill an existing vacancy, was today favorably reported from the Committee on Finance. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the nomination.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, was this nomination acted on favorably today by the committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of M. Hampton Magruder, of Upper Marlboro, Md., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand in recess until called to order by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The Senate reassembled, when called to order by the Vice President, at 9 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may be permitted, he will yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to explain the possible disappointment of some Senators over the fact that the Senate was not called to order at an earlier hour. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a situation has arisen respecting the deficiency appropriation bill which is now brought to the attention of the Senate.

The bill, incorporating sundry Senate amendments, was returned to the House of Representatives late this afternoon. The House has taken no action regarding the bill, and it is my information that it does not intend to do so.

This afternoon a concurrent resolution was agreed to providing that each body, when it had concluded its labors on this day, should take an adjournment sine die. The question arises as to what action the Senate will take. The body at the other end of the Capitol is in session. It is expected to continue in session for a short time.

Under the concurrent resolution agreed to, automatically, at not later than 12 o'clock tonight, according to my interpretation of the concurrent resolution, each of the two bodies will stand adjourned. Either body is at liberty to adjourn at any time it chooses to do so before 12 o'clock.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, first I should like to say that I advised a number of Senators that the Vice President would reconvene the Senate at 8:30 o'clock. There was a misunderstanding on my part. The Vice President had to take part in a conference and could not return to the Senate before this moment.

With reference to the deficiency bill, the fact is that the bill as it was passed by the Senate was sent to the House. All those of us who are interested in the passage of that bill desire that the House have an opportunity to vote upon the bill. If the House conferees should agree to meet with the Senate conferees, under the rules of the House the legislative proposals added by the Senate would have to be submitted to the House for a vote.

I am just advised by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations that the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations has said that no conferees have been appointed on the part of the House, and that they do not desire to have conferees appointed.

Under the legislative situation now existing, as I understand, all that I can do is to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby House Concurrent Resolution 38, the adjournment resolution, was agreed to and then move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the concurrent resolution to the Senate.

Before formally making that motion, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of the deficiency bill.

We have spent the entire summer in session. We have passed a social-security bill, and the deficiency bill carries an appropriation for the Board set up under that bill. Every expenditure of that Board is provided for in the deficiency bill. If the deficiency bill shall not be passed, the Board will not be able to function.

In addition to that, an appropriation is contained in the bill for the Labor Board which is absolutely essential if it is to function.

Provision is made for an appropriation of $13,000,000 for the Soil Conservation Service, which is essential to the functioning of that Department of the Government.

An appropriation is made, under the provision for the Department of Commerce, for a census of the persons who would be entitled, under the old-age pension law, to participate in the benefits of that act.

The legislatures of many States will meet in January. If this deficiency bill shall not be passed and if we shall not provide the funds, it is questionable, in my mind, whether it will not seriously delay the operations of old-age pensions and other provisions of the social-security bill.

Mr. President, all those of us who are interested in the deficiency bill ask is that the House of Representatives vote upon the measure. Therefore I think the Senate has a right to ask the House, and I think it should ask the House, to return to the Senate the House Concurrent Resolution 38, because it is my belief that whenever that request is made, the Members of the House of Representatives will see to it that conferees are appointed to meet the conferees who have been appointed on the part of the Senate.

In my recollection of 14 years' service in the House of Representatives and my service in the Senate, never before have any two men undertaken to say that the House of Representatives will not appoint conferees on an appropriation bill to meet conferees appointed on the part of the Senate.

We have spent many weeks and months enacting legislation here of vital importance to the country. It will have been wasted time if this bill providing the funds to carry into effect the provisions of those various acts shall fail. Therefore, I enter the motion first to reconsider the vote agreeing to the House Concurrent Resolution 38. Then I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return House Concurrent Resolution 38 to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina offers a motion, which the clerk will state. Has the Senator the motion in writing?

Mr. BYRNES. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to House Concurrent Resolution 38.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before that motion is submitted, the request for the return of the resolution should be made and the resolution should be returned.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I may say that I was under the same impression as the Senator from Arkansas, and only after consulting the Parliamentary Clerk did I make the motion I have made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the Senator from South Carolina enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the House Concurrent Resolution 38. It seems to the Chair that the Senator should make a motion to have the resolution returned from the House.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I made the motion in that way simply upon the advice of the parliamentary clerk. If the Chair is of the other view, then I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the resolution to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands from the parliamentary clerk that the Senator should enter his motion to reconsider and then move to request the House to return the resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is exactly what I first did. I first entered a motion to reconsider. That motion having been entered, I now move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the resolution to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am of the opinion, with great deference to the able Senator from South Carolina, and others who may differ, that we are inviting a sense of resentment from the House, and I fear that instead of benefiting ourselves and aiding our position we will give them cause for retaliation. It seems to me also, sir, that there should be some record before this body as a justification for withdrawing the resolution from the House. The statement by the able Senator from South Carolina and by the eminent leader of the majority we accept. However, there is no record here which would appear to justify this body in making an assertion from the record of any conduct on the part of the House. Surely there should be some record of whatever transpired, by which record we could justify ourselves in what we regard as an affront.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Always.

Mr. ROBINSON. How would such a record be made?

Mr. LEWIS. My answer is, anticipating that question, that there has been from some place, somehow in the House, a statement, either from a chairman of a committee or from a committee, of its refusal to deal with us; that it has declined to deal with us, and giving some reason which can be entered in the record here as a parliamentary basis for making the record such as the Senator from South Carolina suggests. Otherwise, it will appear on the face of the situation that we have presumed to take offense at something the House has done or has not done, leaving it open, with no record showing what has happened, and we give them cause for affront. I feel, sir, there is not the parliamentary basis on which the suggestion of the able Senator could be carried out with propriety.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Illinois that it is my information that the House does not intend to communicate a message to the Senate on the subject.

Mr. LEWIS. That the House does not intend to communicate a message at all, sir?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; no formal message. The fact is that no action has been taken on the bill since it was returned to the House, and no action is contemplated unless it be to refer the bill to a committee.

The Senate would have no official information of such action unless the House saw fit to send a message, which, seemingly, it does not intend to do.

I am offering no ground of offense to the other body. I am simply apprising the Senate of the situation in order that the Senate may take such action as it sees fit to take. If we wait for a message from the House of Representatives on the subject, the hour of adjournment will arrive, and we will have adjourned without any action being taken on the bill.

I think I ought to add that it is my information that the officials charged with the administration of the several measures mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina will not be prevented from functioning. My information is that means will be found to carry on the activities authorized under those various measures. Details as to how that is to be done I cannot state, because I do not know them. There was much deliberation on the subject and prolonged conferences with official representatives of the House, the conferences having lasted substantially from the time the Senate took a recess until within a few moments of the time the Vice President called the Senate into session, the conferences being for the purpose of trying to find some practical way by which the difficulties already mentioned involving the deficiency appropriation bill may be worked out. That has not been done, and I feel it my duty to acquaint the Senate with the situation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, merely in line with the observation which I have taken the liberty to make to my brother Senators, I ask my able friend from South Carolina what reason would he feel that he had a right to give this body as his justification for withdrawing from the House the resolution of adjournment?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is correct there will be no formal communication, but the Senator from Illinois desires an informal communication as to the attitude of the House.

Mr. LEWIS. No; Mr. President, it is not that I desired. I say to my able friend, when he tenders such an important matter as a motion to withdraw our action from the House that I feel he should have some reason, and what reason would he give therefor? He has a reason, but is the reason which he would tender to this body an existing official action upon which to base the action?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. As Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, I personally visited the other branch of the Congress and directly communicated with the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of that body. He authorized me to say to the Vice President and to the leader of this side of the Senate Chamber that there would be no conference on this bill, and I accordingly made that communication to them. I think that fully justifies the proposal of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desired to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the action which is proposed by this motion on the part of the Senator from South Carolina could in no sense be construed as offensive to the House of Representatives. It is a common occurrence to take such action. It occurs frequently that a Senator makes a motion to reconsider a bill, and then makes a motion to have it returned from the House, if it has been sent to the House. It is a common occurrence for the House of Representatives to do the same thing. In fact, never in my experience, both in the House and the Senate, has the body which has been requested to return a bill ever declined to do so. So I do not see that this is contrary to precedent. It certainly could not be construed as being offensive.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a bill which was passed in this body, as the able Senator from Nebraska has said, could be returned and jointly would be acted upon. On the other hand, here is a resolution which came to us from the House as the action of the House.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Let me state my position and then I shall yield gladly to the Senator from Louisiana.

That resolution, in the wisdom of the able leader on this side, was presented and as a resolution of the House was concurred in and adopted by us. Now comes the entry of a motion to withdraw from that resolution. Surely it must be that there should be something official which would indicate why we should do so; otherwise we have, figuratively speaking, affronted the House by simply withdrawing from a concurrent resolution which came from the House in the matter of adjournment sine die.

It seems to me, while the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has informed us of some action of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, we have not in that anything before us that would justify the proposed action of the Senate in retiring from the action of the Senate in concurring in the resolution of the House. I feel the foundation is not sufficient for us to justify the motion as it now stands.

I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I state to my friend from Illinois that there are several million farmers raising cotton and wheat who are absolutely destitute, needing the relief to be supplied as a result of the action of the Senate by a two-thirds vote. They ought to have it, and if we do not stop palavering around about the situation, we will adjourn and leave those people with nothing to eat.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; and I would regard such as a calamity, but how do we help it by paralyzing the measure which lies over there that provides for such relief? The bill is there and must be acted on there in order to give it the consummation desired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield gladly to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has had much more experience with legislative matters than I have had.

Mr. LEWIS. I am never so wise as is my able friend from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator knows very well that there is no reflection on the House and no discourtesy to the House involved in the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. The Senate adopted the concurrent resolution.

We have the statement of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, one of the great committees of the Senate, that he has been officially informed by the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House that the request of the Senate for a conference is not even to be given the courtesy of consideration by the House. The Senator from Illinois suggests that that is merely the view of the chairman of a committee of the House; but the fact is, and it has been borne out by the events of the last few hours, that the request for a conference has not been acceded to.

It is now a question whether the Senate is willing to allow all the efforts of the Senate to be terminated by the failure of the appropriation for the administrative services provided for and necessary to all the agencies we have created at this session, or whether we are going to insist on having consideration of an ordinary routine request for consideration of our suggestion for a conference on a very important appropriation bill.

I do not think there is anything in the world out of keeping with the ordinary parliamentary procedure or anything of discourtesy to the House of Representatives in the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. On the other hand, I believe that the present situation suggests the question to the Senate as to whether the Senate is going to permit the House to treat the Senate with great discourtesy.

Mr. LEWIS. Is there not some way, speaking to the able Senator from South Carolina and my eminent leader on this side, as well as the able Senator from Missouri, whose views are, of course, of value—is there not some way that can be communicated to the House that the measures referred to by the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from South Carolina, so important and so weighted with great consideration and consequence, are being imperiled by the nonaction of the House rather than to act upon the mere statement made by the able Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]?

Will not the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] kindly refrain from conversation that I may be heard by my associates?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois requests order on the floor and has mentioned the Senator from New York by name. The Senator from New York will kindly comply with the request of the Senator from Illinois in order that he may proceed with his remarks.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it seems to me there must be surely a feeling of humanity and justice as well as of rightful consideration on the part of the House. If we can find a way to communicate with the House and show that these things are in peril, perhaps their consideration of humanity and justice may cause them to act. Is there not a way to do that?

Mr. CLARK. How can the Senate of the United States act except as we have done today by taking official action under the Constitution and sending measures to the House? How can the House act except by acting on our request for a conference, except as they have done by flouting the action of the Senate?

Mr. LEWIS. My answer is that I have merely intimated that some method by our own body be adopted to communicate to the House that these measures are in peril and danger. I cannot but feel that that would have weight.

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky who has been a Member of the House.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, have I not a right to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LEWIS. I shall yield in just a moment after I shall have yielded to the able Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Commenting on the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois as to whether there is some official way by which the Senate may notify the House of the importance of the legislation which both Houses have passed, I simply wish to say that the Senate has officially notified the House by passage of an appropriation bill carrying appropriations for those very agencies. We have, according to our custom, asked for a conference upon the Senate amendments to that bill.

Certainly it would not be expected that the Senate should adopt a resolution inviting the House to please confer with us after we had already officially invited them to confer and communicated that invitation officially to the House. If that answers the Senator's inquiry, I will say that it is my belief there is no way by which the Senate can more efficiently communicate to the House than it has already done.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the observations of the Senator from Kentucky. I know that he himself and the Senator from South Carolina have been long distinguished Members of the House. My service in the House was of too limited a character for me to place my judgment in adversity to them.

I yield to enable the Senator from Louisiana to communicate a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONG. If this discussion should continue for an hour and 50 minutes longer, there would be no use of talking any further, would there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be in line with the conduct of the Senator from Louisiana for the last 6 months. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHALL obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely wish to emphasize what I said a few moments ago. Either House is at liberty to adjourn, under present conditions, at any time it chooses. The indications to me are that the body at the other end of the Capitol may adjourn while we are talking about this matter.

Mr. SMITH and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator yield to me for just one sentence?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I think we are on the verge of discourtesy to the body at the other end of the Capitol by insinuating that they do not know the importance of legislation which both bodies have passed. I think the House is as well advised as to that as we are.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois that this action might be construed as a discourtesy to the House, I wish to say that I happened to be in the House when the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee made a statement to the House. One of the grounds upon which he based his action in having no meeting of the conferees was the fact that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution to adjourn tonight, and expected, under the terms of the concurrent resolution, to force the House into a consideration and decision on the various items in the deficiency bill within the next 2 or 3 hours. So I think, in view of that statement, it would not be a discourtesy, but would be entirely appropriate, to take the action contemplated.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 1878. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.;

S. 2364. An act relative to the retirement of certain officers and employees;

S. 3085. An act authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose;

H. R. 7858. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and

H. R. 8444. An act to authorize the transfer of a certain military reservation to the Department of the Interior.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 1575. An act to correct the military record of John S. Cannell, deceased;

H. R. 4770. An act for the relief of Elinora Fareira; and

H. R. 8133. An act to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who are disabled World War veterans to make final proof of their entries, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 872. An act for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims;

S. 2002. An act to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes;

S. 2796. An act to provide for control and regulation of public-utility holding companies, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 36 OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield in order that the Chair may lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2 to the bill (H. R. 6776) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 to the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3 to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION—J. D. ROSS

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit a nomination to be laid before the Senate at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. D. Ross, of Washington, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for confirmation of the nomination.

Mr. LONG. I object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Louisiana will withdraw his objection to action on the nomination of Mr. Ross.

Mr. LONG. I withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Louisiana withdraws his objection. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF PULIC LAW NO. 320—AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution (S. Res. 202), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 copies of Public Law No. 320 of the current session entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", for the use of the Senate document room.

PRINTING OF PUBLIC LAW NO. 305—BANKING ACT OF 1935

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution (S. Res. 203), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 20,000 copies of Public Law No. 305 of the current session entitled "An act to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes", be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

DELAY IN SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not permit us to have a vote upon my motion, because, if we are to accomplish anything by it, it should be messaged to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; if I do not lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senator yields the floor, he yields it; that is all.

Mr. SCHALL. I do not wish to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. SCHALL. I ask permission to have a short statement of my own read through the eyes of the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that without further debate we may vote upon the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and that immediately upon taking that vote the junior Senator from Minnesota may be recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that an immediate vote may be had upon the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, and that at the end of that vote the Senator from Minnesota may be recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The clerk will read the statement of the Senator from Minnesota.

SENATOR SCHALL'S CREED

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the statement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is impossible to get order for a performance of this kind, and there is not any use in asking it.

Mr. KING. Nevertheless, I make the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will try to obtain order; but it is impossible, unless the Senate is interested in what is going on, to keep order in the Senate. The clerk will read the statement.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the statement.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk is reading the state- of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Minnesota says he will yield to me; and I now move——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota has not told the Chair so. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LONG. I now ask, if the Senator from Minnesota will yield for that purpose, that the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, which the clerk is reading, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair wishes to congratulate the Senator from Minnesota on having his remarks once printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHALL's statement is as follows:

TOM SCHALL'S CREED

Mr. SCHALL. People of Minnesota, a few months hence we shall be embarked in the greatest campaign for Union and liberty, for the independence of America from autocracy, since the days when our forefathers fought for the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln. In a Nation-wide campaign which engages the hearts and minds of 130,000,000 people it may be helpful to crystallize our points of view on the fundamental principles and measures that appear worthy of our concern in that conflict, that we may press forward in orderly union to our goal—the preservation of American liberty and all we call "America." To that end I here submit this outline which I term my "creed" and ask to hear from those interested in the preservation of our Republic.

First. I believe in the great Declaration of July 4, 1776, on which Thirteen Colonies in a wilderness here built the world's greatest Republic and the greatest Nation in all that makes for the welfare and uplift of the human race. I believe we are endowed by our Creator with inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness", subject to the will of no self-constituted autocrat; and that to secure these rights our Government was instituted—deriving its "just powers from consent of the governed."

And I condemn those Federal autocrats who now declare, "We shall never go back to the ideas of 1776", and who, like Prince George III, have "erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance."

Second. I believe in the Constitution of the United States, which begins—"We the people of the United States"—thereby making the people the only sovereign in America; the Constitution adopted September 17, 1787, and ratified and proclaimed March 1789, under which the United States of America was ordained and established; the Constitution which made this "an indissoluble Union of indestructible States"; the Constitution which every office-holder in this country has sworn to support and uphold in order to get his office and spend the money of the people.

And I condemn every perjured autocrat and every perjured bureaucratic tool who, in violation of his oath, turns about as soon as he gets into office and defies the people who made that Constitution, evades and violates its major express provisions, and even ridicules the Court which upholds it.

Third. I believe in the American Bill of Rights, the 10 original amendments, drafted by Thomas Jefferson and proclaimed in force December 15, 1791, providing for:

Freedom of speech and of the press, the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for redress of grievances;

That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and

That the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

And I condemn as violations thereof and a menace to our liberty all measures of this administration in the past 3 years to hamper freedom of the press by codes and regulations and licenses, as in the time of the Stuart tyranny in England, 300 years ago, and I condemn in particular the Communications Act of 1934 and amendments thereof which aims at placing under autocratic Federal control all radio, telegraph, and long-distance telephone communication, including interstate and foreign news dispatches, and giving the President the autocratic power, whenever he sees fit to declare emergency or Federal policy, to close down on all communications, except as dictated by him, subject to fine and imprisonment and forfeiture of communications privileges.

Fourth. The first mark of a republic that distinguishes it from an absolute monarchy or dictatorship is a free and independent legislative branch of government beyond control of the Executive.

The authors of the Constitution recognized this principle when they wrote article I creating the two Houses of Congress and reposing in that Congress the complete legislative power, including the tax power, which is the "power to destroy", the tariff making, the appropriation and allocation of public funds, the power over interstate and foreign commerce, banking and currency, the power to declare war, and the power to make all laws for the Executive to administer and enforce.

Such legislative branch of government, elective by the people, is the guaranty that this is a republic founded on the principle of "government of laws", and not a dictatorship, monarchy, or oligarchy, as recently declared by the leading "brain trust" spokesman, where a so-called "government of men" takes the place of government by the people.

I indict this administration:

(1) That the vast majority of major bills in the sessions of 1933, 1934, and 1935 have not emanated in Congress but have been written by the White House, foisted upon Congress by White House lobbies, even to the length of seating a White House lawyer or the king's agent in a Senate seat to direct legislation, forced passage of bills unprinted and carrying hundreds of millions of the people's money, strangled public debate by gag-rule methods, and placed strict censorship by devious underhanded methods upon all news going out of Washington, and employed hundreds of the best newspaper minds in the country with Government funds, contrary to any law, to print at Government expense false propaganda and circulate it under Government frank.

(2) That the Executive and his bureaus unconstitutionally have usurped the legislative function of Congress in a large share of the major bills of three sessions—of which the unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case of May 26, 1935, has presented notable evidence. I was the first man in Congress to inveigh against the autocratic rule of the N. R. A., and stood almost alone for a long time the target of abuse. I was called "guerrilla", "buzzard", and "traitor", which terms would now apply to the entire Supreme Court. I could not, if I had had the decision of the Supreme Court before me, have spoken more truly in scores of speeches uttered in criticism of the usurpation by this administration; and I repeat now as I have scores of times before on this floor.

(3) That the tax power of Congress has been unconstitutionally usurped by a bureau in levying processing taxes upon industry, the consumer, and the wage earner.

(4) That the commerce power of Congress, which is restricted by the Constitution to interstate and foreign commerce has been usurped by executive bureaus to cover intrastate commerce and industries lawfully within the power and jurisdiction of the respective States.

(5) That allocation of public funds has been usurped by the Executive to the amount of $4,800,000,000, or a billion more than the total annual revenue of the Government, within the provisions of a single bill—already the propaganda is being manufactured for a like usurpation in the next Congress, making a total expenditure for this one administration of $39,000,000,000, 15 billion more than the cost of the entire 35 administrations including Wilson's first administration and the five wars in that time of 125 years.

(6) That the tariff-making power, which is exclusively a legislative function of Congress and its fact-finding Tariff Commission, has been taken over by the President and his Secretary of State and conducted in star-chamber proceedings, with no public hearings for industry, labor, and agriculture, and conducted in secret with only a foreign-interested emissary in the confidence of the Government, thereby, in conjunction with the process to tax, resulting in the greatest tidal wave of farm imports in our history.

The new deals of Europe—in Rome, Berlin, and Moscow—abolished representative government by the people by abolishing the legislative freedom of their parliamentary bodies, along with the constitution and the bill of rights. The Washington new deal, following the Fabian policy of harassment and hullabaloo, has accomplished virtually the same result under the cloak of "planned emergency" and hypocrisy.

Fifth. I believe in the vigilant and firm maintenance of article 4, section 4, of the Constitution, to wit:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican form of government.

This is the foundation of that American doctrine that ours is—"an indissoluble union of indestructible States"—a principle for which our fathers fought in 1776 and 1860, and now again in issue.

And I condemn that autocracy, which by threats and favoritism, by encroachment upon State rights and State sovereignty, by use of a White House war club of $5,000,000,000 and a total 4-year emergency fund of $18,000,000,000, seeks to destroy that guaranty, break up the "indestructible States" and subject all to a Federal autocracy, as under the new deals of Rome, Berlin, and Moscow.

Sixth. I believe in that principle of common honesty in national finance whereby Thomas Jefferson resisted the mulcting of the people for a spending orgy by irresponsible politicians, whereby he restricted expenditures to the costs of government economically administered, with due concern for national defense and suffering through acts of nature, and whereby he denounced debt and deficit and subsidy which convert an independent people into dependent serfs and subjects.

And I condemn that new-deal autocracy which in 4 years of planned emergency will have squandered a vaster sum than our cost of the World War—gives the President in one "allocation" subject to his own will for 1936 greater than the total 5-year expenditure of Abraham Lincoln in conducting the Civil War—and is expending more for new-deal rule in 3 years than all the Presidents from the inauguration of Washington in 1789 up to President Wilson's inauguration in 1913; not only creating deficits accruing $12,000,000,000, but creating funded and contingent debt of $40,000,000,000 that shall hang as a millstone around the necks of our children and children's children.

Seventh. I believe that the tax power—the power to destroy—belongs in the hands of the people through their elected representatives in Congress, where it was placed by the Constitution of 1789 pursuant to the Declaration of 1776, where, indeed, it was placed by Magna Carta in 1215—so that Executive autocracy may not have the power to rob and destroy.

And I condemn as subversive of this "idea of 1776", (1) the processing tax levied by an executive bureau, (2) the White House confiscatory tax bill of 1935, introduced not for the constitutional purpose of revenue, but for one of the following three unconstitutional purposes: (a) for soak-the-rich politics, (b) for cracking down industry as a foundation for a Moscow industrial system, which this administration has already prepared to enter into by six great holding companies organized in Delaware which articles of incorporation I placed in the RECORD February 6, 1935, and which can be organized for no other purpose than to take over every industry in this country and make of us a facsimile of the United States of Russia, or (c) to enable a Rothschild-Wall Street conspiracy to buy America cheap.

Eighth. I hereby affirm my faith in the following good American measures and principles, for which the President pledged himself 100 percent from the platform of the Chicago Democratic Convention in 1932, and thereupon after election has repudiated:

A party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power.

Immediate and drastic reduction of Government expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices * * * eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent.

Maintenance of national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced.

Sound currency to be maintained at all hazards.

Fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference—as basis of tariff-making by Congress.

Extension of Federal credit to the State to provide unemployment relief.

Unemployment and old-age insurance under State laws.

Enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmer.

Strict and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monopoly.

Fullest measure of justice and generosity for all war veterans who have suffered * * * from actual service.

Firm foreign policy including: Peace with all the world. * * * Sanctity of treaties and * * * financial obligations. * * * We oppose cancelation of the debts owing to the United States by foreign nations.

Strengthening of Corrupt Practices Act and severe penalties for misappropriation.

Curtail the extravagant expenditures of the Government and * * * revoke improvident subsidies.

We condemn the usurpation of power.

To accomplish these purposes and to recover economic liberty, we pledge * * * in the hour of our country's need, equal rights to all, special privileges to none.

Added from the floor: We advocate the continuous responsibility of Government for human welfare, especially for the protection of children.

I take up the flag which a Federal repudiator and his obedient henchmen have thrown down, and on the platform, which is not only sound Democracy but also sound Republicanism and sound Farmer-Laborism and sound Progressivism, I take my stand for 1936.

The spirit of truth which Christ left us is embodied in the Constitution.

To the above I wish to add a plank from De Tocqueville, the great author of our national textbook Democracy in America. I submit De Tocqueville as against the present tyranny of Russia, the pagan authority of Caesar, the "permanent dictator" of Rome, whom all autocrats still worship and seek to imitate. Here are the words of De Tosqueville:

Christianity is the companion of liberty in all its conflicts, the cradle of its infancy, and the divine source of its claims.

The vital slogan for all liberty-loving Americans in 1936 was contributed to our cause long before the "horse and buggy" days and by the Greater Leader for liberty, who said:

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things which are God's.

DELAY IN SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Vice President a little while ago honored me with an admonition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did that at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who called attention to the fact that the Senator from New York was interrupting him. The Chair would not have done so if it had not been for the statement of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois whether he asked the Vice President to mention my name.

Mr. LEWIS. No; it was I who asked the Senator from New York to desist from conversation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so long as I am a Member of this body, representing a sovereign State, whether the admonition comes from the Vice President or from a Senator, I still propose to function in as normal a manner as I am capable of doing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to say that he intended no reflection; but the Senator from Illinois called attention to the fact that the Senator from New York was having a conversation and asked that he be called to order, and the Chair did so at the request of the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not care where the request came from. I do not expect to be admonished in just that way when week after week and month after month an admonition might have been given to a dozen Senators on this floor. Let us have a clear understanding about that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I am not yet through. I do not yield.

Mr. LONG. Will not the Senator please yield to me for just one moment? I wish to assure the Senator from New York that no one loves him in this body as I do. [Laughter.] Will not the Senator from New York please let us vote?

Mr. COPELAND. No; no matter how much the Senator from Louisiana loves me; and I am glad he does, because he himself is one of the most lovable characters I have ever known. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am not in the counsel of the leaders. I never was, and probably never will be. But I have never seen such an amazing lack of frankness as I have observed here tonight. Why should the House give consideration to such an outrageous bill as the one we sent over there? It is not the items in the bill which they have considered with which they are finding fault. They are finding fault with those items which have been put into the bill on the floor of the Senate.

This afternoon, when I was trying to present an amendment to the bill, I found marked sensitiveness on the part of the committee because I attempted to present a matter which they never had themselves considered. Why should not the House be resentful of our sending over there amendments to the bill carrying appropriations of hundreds of millions of dollars, dollars which will come out of the poor people of the United States?

They are not finding fault with the amendments of the bill, which are in italics. Their criticism relates to these things which were pushed into the bill today without even consideration by this body.

Mr. President, I respect the House of Representatives. I wish we had half the spunk they have. I never had the honor of sitting in that body. I wish I had had, because, if I had, I would be proud to think that I had been a Member of the House. Why should the House of Representatives accept amendments relating to cotton and to wheat running into hundreds of millions of dollars? I could not even get an amendment into the bill for onions and maple sirup and apples.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to know how many hundreds of millions of dollars the Senator has been trying to get us to spend on rivers and harbors.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if anyone wishes to know what I think about it, I think that every river and harbor bill and every flood-control bill is simply a "pork barrel." That is what I think about it. I presented these matters because I am chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of them, and I did it with my fingers crossed. That is where I stand.

The Senator from Alabama need not throw any bricks at me, either. If there is one man here who has put upon the Senate and upon the country contributions and a demand for contributions for a section of the country, contributions which must be paid for by taxation from my section of the country, if there is another man here, let him stand up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I assume the Senator will be courteous enough to permit an answer to that direct reflection.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what the Senator is talking about, and I doubt whether he knows what he is talking about. I assume that he is talking about the cotton program, but I want to remind him that practically all the money which comes to the South as a result of the cotton program goes to the State of New York to support the industries and the financial interests in his State in the payment of interest.

Mr. COPELAND. O, Mr. President, ever since I have been in the Senate I have heard that New York is the reservoir into which flows the wealth of the Nation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They told the truth when they said it.

Mr. COPELAND. But every time they want to build a schoolhouse or something else in the State of Alabama they come to New York to borrow the money.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. We are, I trust, near the close of a very long session. We have transacted much business, and quite naturally near the end of the session as always happens there is a considerable degree of pressure.

I feel that it would be unfortunate and that we would all regret it if we should permit ourselves to respond to a resentment which will quickly pass, and indulge expressions here which will constitute a permanent record.

I hope that we may all continue that good will toward one another which has been manifested throughout the session.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. For a question.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from New York has announced that he reported the river and harbor bill and the flood control bill, and took charge of them on this floor with his fingers crossed. I want to bear witness that the Senator from New York did not report the bill from the Commerce Committee authorizing the plundering of the Federal Treasury by millions and millions of dollars for a lot of shipowners with his fingers crossed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I can take that. If the Senator from Missouri is willing to have the American merchant marine sunk, I am not with him. But I think it is an outrageous thing that ever so many years we hitch together a bill and everyone rushes in to put some "pork" in it, and if the Senator from Missouri is willing to contrast that sort of a bill with a constructive bill to build up an American merchant marine, he can have that opinion but I do not share it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say that, so far as I am concerned, I have not been a party to the reporting of any bill from the Committee on Commerce of which I was not in favor, and quite willing to defend on the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. I have to say that the Senator has been consistent. If there is any bill that has been brought before the Committee on Commerce since I have been chairman which he has not opposed, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I ask the Senator's indulgence for just a moment that I may read into the RECORD some figures——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order! I object to the Senator yielding for a speech. He can yield only for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEIWER. I will propound a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if he is familiar with the figures which the competent clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations has compiled showing the appropriations by this Congress as follows:

Regular annual acts	$2,883,054,864.14
Deficiencies, approximately	485,535,063.92
Permanent annuals	2,200,111,127.00
Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, 1935	4,000,000,000.00
Transfer of funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation	500,000,000.00
Miscellaneous acts and resolutions, approximately	4,000,000.00
Total	10,077,701,055.06

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator asked me if I knew whether those appropriations were made.

Mr. STEIWER. I merely wanted to know whether the Senator from New York was familiar with the grand total of expenditures.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the page please bring me the figures. I thought they were a little larger than that. It is only $10,077,000,000, is it not?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. There are several hundred million dollars which have not been added to that statement.

Mr. COPELAND. That is what I thought. How much of this will be spent down in the State of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not much, if the Senator raises that question.

Mr. COPELAND. I am asking the question of the Senator from Alabama. Does he know how much will be spent there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Practically nothing. Most of it is spent up in New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I thought the time had come for frank talking.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I asked the Senator if he wanted to be frank and state the figures. He is acquainted with the figures. I am not. If he wants to be frank let him state them.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, very well, Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right, let the Senator state them if he wants to be frank, and not create a false impression.

Mr. COPELAND. If they pass the bill over in the House I venture to say that the Senator——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to yield. The Senator can make his talk later.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator should not talk about it if he does not intend to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I venture to say that if the last deficiency bill shall pass there will be plenty of money spent in Alabama. Outside of the taxes which we pay in New York, and we will put those aside, let me say to the Senator that there are human beings who live in New York. There are human beings; if you scratch the skin they will bleed just like you and I will bleed. They are just plain human beings. But they have to eat.

Mr. President, may I ask if the Chair has admonished anyone else recently?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York seems to have the arena all to himself.

Mr. COPELAND. I have at the moment, but at the time I asked the question I did not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let there be order in the Senate, and also in the galleries.

Mr. COPELAND. The people I was talking of in New York do not live on Fifth Avenue. They have no offices in Wall Street. I am talking about Oliver Street. I am talking about the tenement districts. The charge that will be made upon those people if this bill shall become a law, which that wise body at the other end of the Capitol is preventing, will be enormous. There will be a charge of Heaven only knows how much upon the products, the necessary products, the plain little cotton gowns and overalls those people buy. Undoubtedly the House is aware of the significance of the amendments which we put on the bill without due consideration of the committee.

Mr. President, I derive some consolation also from the House. I received some more consolation this evening due to the fact that by a vote of about 3 or 4 to 1 they passed the resolution continuing the mail contracts because of a message which came from the White House that the President wanted an extension.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand that the Senator makes the statement on the floor that a message came from the White House favoring the resolution which the Senator had offered here? If so, I deny it.

Mr. COPELAND. If I may trust friends in the press gallery who heard the statement of the Chairman of the Rules Committee, he stated that he had had word from the President that he wanted the resolution passed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I decline to permit the statement to go unchallenged on this floor that the President approved that resolution. I do not believe that the Chairman of the Rules Committee made such a statement, and I have definite and positive information that he had no authority to make the statement that the President favored that resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Senator splitting hairs when he says this? Was it because there was a word in it nere or there?

Mr. BLACK. No; I am not splitting the Senator's hairs.

Mr. COPELAND. I have a great many of them to split.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; the Senator has a few, but I think he is going to split them walking around on the floor if he does not stop.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, I will keep on my feet. I will not stand on my head even for that.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator would be very graceful standing on his head; about as graceful as he is standing on his feet. However, the question I had in mind was that in my judgment it could not be established that the President had authorized anyone to say that he favored the passage of that resolution, or one of the resolutions over the other resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. But I happen to know, and I think the Senator will not dispute this, that the rule brought out prohibited any amendment. Therefore, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama last night, which he contended for so vigorously, had no chance.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I think it is true that the rule which was brought out did not permit an amendment, and it was because those who, like the Senator, are very anxious and solicitous about spending any money to help the farmers in some other section, but who want to raid the Treasury for the shipowners and the shipbuilders in various places, were not willing to permit the House to vote upon a direct issue between the two resolutions.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course that is a reflection upon the House. I could not join the Senator in that. If we were to go on paying $27,000,000 a year to maintain a merchant marine, somebody who is better at figures than I am can divide $10,077,701,000 by $27,000,000, and he will see that that is about a fraction of one-half of 1 percent.

Seriously, I think we are lacking in frankness when we find fault or even evidence suspicion of fault in the tone of voice, that the action of the House is for this, that, and the other reason. Everyone knows why it is. It is because we have loaded down this bill with such a burden of weight that the Treasury cannot stand it.

If we were to show real statesmanship, we would call back that bill with a view to eliminating these amendments, which never were given serious consideration in our committee, and make it a bill more in harmony with the one which came to us, with the amendments which were properly considered and put in the bill.

Mr. President, I am not here for the purpose of filibustering. I am going to vote against any proposition to recall the adjournment resolution because I desire this Congress to adjourn. It should have adjourned 3 months ago. Everything that we have done during the past 2 or 3 months is something we could do next year, or something we ought never to have done.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I shall subside. I hope I have conveyed the idea that I feel that there is an amazing lack of frankness on the part of Senators in considering the situation. If I were in the confidence of the leadership, I expect these things would have been explained to me so I could understand them. But not being in that confidence I have to gather my understanding, as it seems to me, from my observation of things going on around me.

Senators may do as they like. They can follow our leadership and call back the resolution of adjournment and stay here all day tomorrow and next week. So far as I am concerned, if that is done, I will stay; but I think it is perfectly absurd, and if we had real manliness in our souls I think we would confess our faults, bring the bill back, and take off these outrageous amendments, and let the bill be passed upon its merits, as is statesmanlike and decent in the way of legislation.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to request the House to return to the Senate House Concurrent Resolution No. 38.

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. COPELAND. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, we have asked for a conference with the House of Representatives and they have declined to accede to our request.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. As I understand the situation, the House has not even shown the Senate the courtesy of refusing to accede to a conference. They have ignored the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is practically what I have said. I do not see why the Senate ought not to be dignified enough to stand its ground. I think for the Senate of the United States to knuckle now at the eleventh hour when the body at the other end of the Capitol refuses for the first time, so far as anybody knows, in legislative history, to meet with our representatives to work out a matter which is in dispute between the two Houses, and that in the face of that refusal we are willing to recall an adjournment resolution, is the wrong thing for the Senate to do. I submit the Senate would thus prove that it has no more backbone or dignity than a jellyfish.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not understand, as a former Member of the House, that the situation is not due to any action of the House, but is wholly due to the individual personal action of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House in refusing to present the matter to the House?

Mr. TYDINGS. He represents the House, and every Member of the House knows what has taken place. He and every other Member of the House understand the situation—that the Senate has asked for a conference, that conferees on the part of the Senate have been named, and those who head the committee having the measure in charge in the House have refused to treat with the Senate. Because of that refusal the Senate has done no wrong whatsoever, but comes into court with clean hands; and the Senate is ready now to overlook that slight and affront and indignity and go all the way in agreeing to a motion so we can meet the whim of the House.

If the House treats with the Senate, and there is an agreement before 12 o'clock, it would be proper to withdraw the motion for final adjournment, but until the House treats with the Senate I do not think we are justified in agreeing to this motion. I know when we have the wheat interests together with the cotton interests there are probably enough votes to do it. I am not going to filibuster against it. I simply want to state why I shall not vote to recede from the adjournment resolution which we have adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Under the concurrent resolution transmitted to the House and which we adopted, at 12 o'clock midnight automatically do we not stand adjourned?

Mr. TYDINGS. We do stand adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let there be order in the Chamber. All Senators on their feet will please sit down. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. Let there be a division.

On a division the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now move to reconsider the vote whereby the motion of the Senator from South Carolina was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONG and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I want the floor in my own right. If the Senator wants to proceed, that is all right.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to move a recess.

Mr. LONG. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana is now recognized in his own right.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I assume that at a very early moment the Senate will dispatch this resolution over to the House, and the House, if it does the ordinary, regular, usual, and courteous thing, will return the concurrent resolution so the Senate may reconsider its action with reference to adjournment today.

If I were endeavoring to delay anything I would not conclude the remarks which I intend to make, but I do not want the Senate to take a recess. I am ready, willing, and anxious to proceed and shall surrender the floor the very moment that any action is taken at the other end of the Capitol to send the measure back in order that we may rescind our action.

I want to say to my friend who addressed the Senate—and he is my friend, my political friend and my personal friend—the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and also I take the same view with regard to my friend from Maryland and others, that my friend the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], reflected a serious note in this body tonight which the Members of this body do not appreciate. I understand the State of Alabama is suffering like a great deal of my own State and like other States in the South, as well as some States in the West, which are affected because of the condition of wheat, are suffering. That State is affected by cotton, and favors this kind of situation.

The United States Government has told the farmers of the State of Alabama and of South Carolina, as well as the other States, including Louisiana, that the Government is going to lend them 12 cents a pound on their cotton. The farmers have gone to work on that basis. They have reduced their acreage, signed up contracts, under some of which, at the very most, a man with a family will get no more than $75 to $100 a year even at that. After the agreement had been made in good faith, the Government tows them out in the middle of the ocean, pulls the plug out of the bottom of the ship, and tells them, "Sink or swim", and takes that action regardless of the good things these farmers have been doing.

If Senators go home tonight, if the House takes this infamous action, if the body at the other end of the Capitol tonight refuses to let this bill pass that has been passed by two-thirds vote of the Senate after suspending the rules, I want the Senators and Members of the House to go home knowing that every act of destitution that has been committed tonight and will be committed this fall is due to the unusual, perfidious conduct, not of the United States Senate. I am not permitted to say where else it has occurred without breaching the rules of the Senate.

Those poor devils have had the word of the President of the United States. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] says he was given this assurance by the President of the United States. That assurance was communicated to the Congress of the United States; and with that assurance, the promise of the party of the Government, given to them by the highest officer who was competent to make that pledge, the Congress of the United States sits tonight, in one place or the other, undertaking by some process that a majority shall not give complete, accredited performance to what it has been understood would be done in connection with the Bankhead Act.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, knows that the House is likely to adjourn at any moment.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. And that by continuing his present address the Senator is likely to endanger the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary, I am not delaying a thing on earth. The Senator is mistaken. I am trying to prevent this body from going into recess. That is our trouble now. We went into a recess this afternoon, and we were not called back into session until about 3 hours of our time had elapsed. It was well known here in the Capitol. I myself went out here and called on certain important men in charge of the functions of this Government and of the Senate and told them that a majority of the Senate wanted to do something to keep the House from keeping that bill from being passed tonight; and it was 2 hours after that time before we could have the Senate called into session. There was a refusal on the part of a leader high in the affairs of the Government to call this body together, for no other purpose on God's living earth except that. You do not have to eat a whole beef to tell when it is tainted.

Why talk about the House? Why talk about some Member of the House? We all know who is responsible for the perfidious breaking of faith that has been performed here in the Capital City today and tonight.

Do not think the people of the United States will not know who is to blame. You watch the election returns from the solid South. We will give you a solid South next year if you starve the people down there this fall. We will give you a dadgummed solid South, one you are not used to having.

You starve these southern people. You have done it for years and years. The Republicans never have worried about the South, because it did not make any difference whether they gave them anything or not; they still were going to vote the Democratic ticket. The Democrats come in, and they do not worry about the South, because they are going to vote the Democratic ticket anyway. Tweedledum, tweedledee; it made no difference. Go down in the South every election and spring the "nigger" issue.

Talk about the "nigger" down there. "You had better vote the Democratic ticket. If you do not do it, the 'nigger' will take charge of the country"; and as long as they did not have any better sense than to pay attention to that kind of falderal, about all they needed to do on election day was to wave the "nigger" flag down in the South, and keep the so-called "conservative South" lined up with the so-called "conservative East", hoodwinking either the East or the South, one or the other, all the time, and keeping this kind of perfidious conduct in the saddle.

I know how my friend from New York looks on this thing. He is a splendid friend of mine, one of the best friends I have ever had in public life; and that means he is a very good friend, because for any man to have been with me in public life means that he must have been willing to take a rocky road. There is mighty pretty scenery on the road, but the road is a little bit rocky. One never forgets some of the things he sees and some of the lessons he learns.

My friend from New York has stood with me here in this body several times, and I appreciate it very, very much. He is a gentleman of the first order. He cannot appreciate that the southern Senators—and I say that for almost all of them—so far as I can recall have never turned their backs upon any proposal that has ever been made in this body for the relief of the distressed, the hungry, and the suffering people of the city of New York. There may have been some who have done it, but I do not recall a single instance when any appreciable number of the Senators from the South have not done everything in their might and main to accommodate the purposes of the Senator from New York in feeding the hungry of that part of the country.

The Senator from New York feels that his people are taxed. He does not realize that for years and years about all the cotton farmer got out of the cotton he raised was the right to eke out an existence in a poverty that no one wanted except himself, and that whatever prosperity ever came from raising cotton went to this region in the East where they make far more profit out of handling the cotton through the exchanges and through the textile mills in the East than the man who plowed the ground ever made.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend.

Mr. COPELAND. Was the Senator ever in a tenement house?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I have been in some tenement houses—quite a few of them.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator ever see any such poverty on any farm in his State, or any other place in the country, as he can see in a tenement house?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I have seen worse. I have seen as bad or worse, I think. I agree with the Senator from New York that the condition is as bad as it can be in tenement houses, and it is as bad as it can be on some of the farms. For the information of the Senator from New York, I believe I could say to him that the whole four rooms of the house in which I lived the first few days of my life probably were not as big as perhaps one room in some of the tenement houses he is talking about. I did not live there so very long. Part of my time was spent in a house not so much better, perhaps.

I want to say to the Senator from New York and other Senators, we are not going to bring the United States out of this terrible turmoil by any of the band-box legislation we have been passing. The Senator is right about that. It is not going to relieve the farmer. All the Bankhead Act is doing is managing to allow some of the people—not all of the people—to hold hair and hide together until something can happen, or until the Congress of the United States will wake up long enough and severely enough to do something to reform the condition from which we are now suffering.

The great trouble with my friend from New York, however, and many others of my friends here, is that you cannot be brought seriously to see that you will have to redistribute the wealth of the United States to help anybody.

You will never help the tenement-house man, you will never help the share-crop man, you will never help the common man and the poor people of this country, no matter in what part of the country they live nor what may be their occupation, until you redistribute the wealth of the United States. You are not going to do it. Everybody says he is in favor of it, just as they talk about the weather, but they never do anything about it.

The Democratic Party says it is for a redistribution of wealth. Does anybody deny that the Democratic Party contends that? Does anybody deny that the President of the United States says he is in favor of a redistribution of wealth? No. We have heard that song sung back to us that we have sung to them. They sent the message of the President of the United States in here, saying and resaying over again everything we ever said about it; but we are adjourning with bills pending that have been before Congress for 3 years to provide for a redistribution of wealth, and nothing is going to be done about it. All right!

I inquire of the Chair, if I may propound a parliamentary inquiry, has anything been heard yet from the House? Is anything back from the House, the papers on this resolution to adjourn? May I inquire of the Chair if they have been returned?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No information regarding the matter has been received by the Chair.

Mr. LONG. Then I will continue to talk in the hope that in the next few minutes we will hear something. [Laughter.]

REGULATION OF WHALING

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1513, Senate bill 3413, relating to a convention for the regulation of whaling.

Mr. LONG. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3413) to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments, in section 2, on page 2, line 9, to strike out the words "said Convention" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Convention for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932"; in section 8, on page 4, line 4, to strike out the word "date" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "data"; in section 9, page 4, line 21, after the words "vessel a", to strike out the word "fine" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "forfeiture"; on page 21, after the word "which", to strike out the word "fine" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "forfeiture"; on line 25, after the word "act" and the period to insert the words "In the event of the seizure and conveyance to port, such vessel including its apparel shall be forfeited to the United States by proper proceedings in the United States District Court of the said district", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "The Whaling Treaty Act."

SEC. 2. That unless and except as permitted by regulations made as hereinafter provided, it shall be unlawful to hunt, take, capture, kill, attempt to take, capture, or kill, possess, offer for sale, sell, offer to purchase, deliver for shipment, ship, cause to be shipped, deliver for transportation, transport, cause to be transported, carry or cause to be carried by any means whatever, receive for shipment, transportation, or carriage, import or export at any time or in any manner, any right whale, or the young of any whale; or to sell, purchase, ship, transport by any means whatever, import, or export, the products of any right whale, including oil, meat, bone, meal, or fertilizer.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful to kill at any time any calves or any female whales accompanied by calves or suckling whales, protected by article 5 of the convention for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932.

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of this act, right whales shall be deemed to include North Atlantic or North Cape whales, Greenland or Bowhead whales, and Pacific right whales; calves or suckling whales shall be deemed to include whales having a length less than the following dimensions: Blue or sulphurbottom, 60 feet; finbacks, 50 feet, and humpbacks, 35 feet.

SEC. 5. That subject to the provisions and in order to carry out the purposes of the convention, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed from time to time to determine when, to what extent if at all, and by what means it is compatible with the terms of the convention to allow hunting, taking, capturing, killing, possession, sale, purchase, shipment, transportation, carriage, import, or export of any whale or the product of any whale protected by said convention.

Any regulation made under the provisions of this act shall become effective when approved by the President.

SEC. 6. That the fullest possible use shall be made of the carcass of every whale taken by extracting the oil by boiling, or otherwise, from all blubber, from the head, the tongue, and from the tail as far forward as the outer opening of the lower intestine; and when whales are brought on shore adequate provision shall be made for utilizing the residue after the oil has been extracted.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person, association, partnership, or corporation or for the owners of any vessel of American registry to kill a gray whale at any time, or to kill any whale wantonly, for sport, or without utilizing the carcass.

SEC. 8. That before engaging in whaling, any person, association, partnership, or corporation shall obtain a whaling license from the Secretary of the Treasury. In making application for such license the applicant shall:

(a) furnish evidence of having adequate equipment for complete utilization of the whale insofar as practicable and for the manufacture of whale oil, meal, guano, or fertilizer;

(b) agree to engage crews and gunners of whaling vessels on some basis not solely on number of whales taken;

(c) provide for keeping accurate records of the catch, any biological data necessary, and statistical records of production required by the Secretary of the Treasury;

(d) pay a fee of $1,000 for a license good for 1 year from date of issue.

SEC. 9. That the provisions of this act or any regulations thereof shall be enforced primarily by the Coast Guard and the Bureau of Customs. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized when necessary to request assistance of the Secretary of the Navy, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, upon request, to cooperate in the enforcement of this act. Any commander of a Coast Guard, customs, or naval vessel, who shall find a whaling vessel of United States registry violating this act, shall have authority to seize such vessel and order it conveyed at the expense of the owners to the nearest port of the United States, and shall also have authority, in lieu of seizure, to impose on and collect from the commanding officer of such whaling vessel a forfeiture of $2,500, which forfeiture shall be reported and paid forthwith to the United States District Court of the district in which is situated any port to which such whaling vessel might be conveyed for action under the terms of this act. In the event of the seizure and conveyance to port, such vessel including its apparel shall be forfeited to the United States by proper proceedings in the United States District Court of the said district.

SEC. 10. That any employee of the Treasury Department, authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the provisions of this act, shall have power without warrant to arrest any person committing a violation of this act in his presence and to take such person for examination or trial before an officer or court of competent jurisdiction, shall have power to execute any warrant or other process issued by an officer or court of competent jurisdiction for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and shall have authority, with a search warrant, to search any place. All whales or parts or products thereof captured, shipped, transported, carried, imported, or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act, or of any regulations made pursuant thereto, shall, when found, be seized by any such employee or by any marshal, deputy marshal, or commander of a Coast Guard, customs, or naval vessel, and upon conviction of the offender, or upon judgment of a court of the United States that the same were captured, shipped, transported, carried, imported, or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act, or of any regulations made pursuant thereto, shall be forfeited to the United States and disposed of as directed by the court having jurisdiction.

SEC. 11. That any person, association, partnership, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of said Convention, or of this act, or who shall violate or fail to comply with any regulation made pursuant to this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be deprived of his license and shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 6 months or both.

SEC. 12. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the several States and Territories from making or enforcing laws or regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of said Convention or of this act, or from making or enforcing laws or regulations which shall give further protection to whales or their young, or which shall regulate the possession, transportation, or sale of whale products of any kind.

SEC. 13. Nothing in this act or in the regulations thereof shall apply to natives or Eskimos engaged in whaling who use only canoes or other native craft propelled by oars or sails, do not carry firearms, are not employed by others than natives or Eskimos, and are not under contract to deliver products of their whaling to any third person.

SEC. 14. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged to be invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes."

PORCUPINE SCHOOL DISTRICT, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Some little time ago I called up three House bills which have been passed in the House and reported out of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Utah objected at the time. I have conferred with him, and I think there is no objection now.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 8516.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8516) to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CANNON BALL SCHOOL DISTRICT, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 8511.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8511) to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT YATES SCHOOL DISTRICT, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 8512.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARTIES IN CIVIL SUITS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, heretofore, when Calendar No. 891, Senate bill 2524, to amend the United States Code, came before the Senate, there was only one Senator who objected. That Senator has since stated that he has no disposition to object further to the consideration of the bill. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary, and is a bill to protect the rights of minority stockholders in mergers of public utilities and other mergers. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2524) which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That except as provided in sections 113 to 117 of this title, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in sections 113 to 118 of this title, no civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant: Provided, That in cases where there is more than one defendant, suit may be brought in any district where any of such defendants resides, but the court shall, upon petition, transfer such suit to the district where the convenience of all the parties will be best subserved, and process in such cases may be served on any defendant who resides in any other district than the one in which such civil suit is brought by service in the district where such other defendant resides or may be found.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Heretofore the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] offered an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 10, after the word "found", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following: "and this proviso shall apply only where all of the parties joined as defendants are indispensable parties."

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the first part of the bill is exactly as the law now stands. The proviso just read by the clerk at the end of the bill, providing that service could be had upon a defendant not in the jurisdiction of the court where the suit is brought is the new matter. I have filed with the Committee on the Judiciary a very extensive brief.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, is there a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill was unanimously reported by the committee as a result of hearings.

Mr. President, this bill is occasioned by the fact that where there is a merger, the parent company being in one jurisdiction and the operating company in another jurisdiction, quite frequently the assets of the operating company are siphoned out to the parent company. When the stockholders go into a State court they cannot get jurisdiction because the parent company is in another jurisdiction. When they go into the United States court the jurisdiction is there so circumscribed in certain cases that they cannot get jurisdiction there. The result is that there is no court where they can get all the parties necessary to prove the fraud. The concluding proviso of the bill provides, where a situation of that kind exists, that the court may issue a summons in another jurisdiction, where the parties are indispensable, so that all the proceedings may be tried by one court to ascertain whether or not the minority stockholders have been defrauded or not.

I have submitted a brief, buttressed by hundreds of decisions, showing the necessity for this legislation, and the existing gap in the law.

Mr. McCARRAN. Just one question. I think I recall the bill in the committee. Under the bill, would the plaintiff have the right to select the place of jurisdiction?

Mr. TYDINGS. The law would remain just as it is now in that respect, except that it confers the right on the plaintiff, if he brings suit, where the law now permits him to bring suit, to get summons on some indispensable party outside of the jurisdiction.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland will recall that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and myself had an amendment in connection with this bill. As I understand, from subsequent conversations with the Senator from Maryland, he feels that the provisions now in the bill make the amendment unnecessary.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the bill contemplates the amendment, and that the amendment would be superfluous.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then, Mr. President, I have no desire to call up the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. RHINE

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up for immediate consideration Calendar No. 1501, House bill 3783, for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co. The bill has passed the House. It is recommended by the Treasury, and favorably reported by the Committee on Claims, without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3783) for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS, TRENTON DISTRICT, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Senate bill 3091, Calendar No. 1485. The House bill, H. R. 8513, is an identical bill. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate considered the bill (H. R. 8513) to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton school district, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF HOMES IN HAWAII

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is a bill on the calendar affecting the Territory of Hawaii—House bill 7974, Calendar No. 1505. It simply provides that a certain landing field on the island of Molokai shall be turned over from the Hawaiian Homes Commission for aviation purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7974) to withdraw and restore to their previous status under the control of the Territory of Hawaii certain Hawaiian home lands now in use as an airplane landing field, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OTTO MISCH CO.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of House bill 6137, Calendar No. 1510, for the relief of the Otto Misch Co.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. During the year 1933 this claimant had a contract to erect a marine hospital at Norfolk, Va. After the work on the contract had been completed a hurricane occurred which resulted in very serious damage to the buildings. An emergency existed. It was not possible to ask for bids for the repairs. If the repairs had not been made, the amount of money which had been expended on the contract would have been wasted; so the Treasury Department asked this claimant to proceed immediately with the work. The work was done in 1933. It was necessary. There was no dispute about the amount involved. The Department recommends the amount of the payment to the claimant, feeling that the bill should be approved.

Mr. KING. Was it unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has it been passed by the House?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6137) for the relief of the Otto Misch Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Otto Misch Co., the sum of $28,000, in payment for work done by the said company in repairing damages to the United States marine hospital at Norfolk, Va., caused by hurricane and flood on August 22 and 23 and September 15 and 16, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE C. CALHOUN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1500, Senate bill 3453.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have some statement of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill pertains to the exemption of Clarence C. Calhoun, who is a lawyer here, from the provisions of the code which would prevent his employment by the Government, because of the fact that he has had claims against the Government.

Captain Calhoun has peculiar qualifications for employment by the Department of Justice in the matter of some insurance cases. I have been advised that the Department desires to employ him, but because of the fact that he has had claims against the Government it cannot do so without the passage of such a bill as this. It is for this reason that the bill is introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate considered the bill (S. 3459) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to Clarence C. Calhoun, in the event he shall be employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the prosecution of litigation arising under the War Risk Insurance Act, as amended.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR REYNOLDS ON THE SILVER QUESTION

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] on the silver question.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on one small phase of the tax question which seems ridiculous in the light of the fact that we have before us a bill which attempts to create over $400,000,000 of new revenue, while I am directing my remarks to one feature of present tax legislation that yields to this Government only about $1,000,000.

The one-fourth of 1 percent of present income compared with the 100 percent of anticipated income under the new bill is seemingly insignificant. I prefer to think, however, that the provisions under present law whereby there accrues to the Treasury a mere million dollars is as important to the economic prosperity of this Nation as is the gigantic tax bill before us.

According to the 1930 estimate of the International Statistical Institute of the League of Nations at Geneva, there are 2,000,000,000 people living on this earth of ours—950,000,000 on the continent of Asia, 550,000,000 on the continent of Europe, 230,000,000 on the American continents, 150,000,000 in Africa, and 7,000,000 in Australia.

Every year this old earth seemingly is gaining in population 30,000,000 people, and at the present rate we are doubling our population every 66 years. Today 150,000 persons are born, and today 100,000 die.

Now, throughout the history of the world there have been two great monetary metals—the older one, silver, and the more recent one, gold—and there isn't a continent in the world, except Europe with one-quarter of the world's population, that is now left on the gold standard. But it isn't the 550,000,000 of Europe who are left on the gold standard. It is only seven nations of Europe, the so-called "gold-bloc" countries of France, Italy, Belgium, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Poland, and Switzerland. France and Italy with 41,000,000 apiece, Poland with its 32,000,000, Belgium and the Netherlands with 8,000,000 apiece, Switzerland with its 4,000,000, and the little Grand Duchy of Luxemburg with its 300,000 contribute a total of only 134,300,000 out of this world's 2,000,000,000 population—so that less than 7 percent of the peoples of the world are represented by the so-called "gold-bloc" countries which at Brussels in October of 1934 reaffirmed their determination, as set forth in the London conference of 1933, to maintain the present gold parities of their respective currencies and to act together in their economic plans predicated upon gold.

Let me reiterate a fundamental fact based upon geography and population that, if we look at this earth geographically, Asia, Africa, the two Americas, and Australia have not a nation or people within their confines that attach their currencies to gold. There remains the one continent, Europe, that still has a gold bloc. Within that continent of Europe there are seven countries, representing one hundred and thirty-odd million people out of Europe's 550,000,000, that have pending an agreement reaffirmed last October 20, 1934, at Brussels to act in concert with respect to gold. The delegates from these seven European gold-bloc nations proclaimed their fidelity to the gold standard and proposed to expand trade within the group and to fortify members against continued pressure from the depreciated currencies of other nations.

On November 13, 1934, in Belgium, the DeBroqueville Cabinet resigned because of the inability to agree on retaining the present gold value of the belga.

Today the gold standard is the standard of but three nations of the world—France, Holland, and Switzerland—France with its 41,000,000, Holland with its 8,000,000, and Switzerland with its 4,000,000. A total of 53,000,000 of this world's inhabitants is tied to the old gold standard. Less than 3 percent of the peoples of the world, the inhabitants of three European nations, still cling to the gold standard.

On the other hand, 2 years ago there was held in London an economic conference attended by 63 nations, and on June 21, 1933, under the authority granted by an act of Congress approved May 12, 1933, the President ratified by proclamation the so-called "London agreement", which had been unanimously adopted by 63 governments with respect to silver.

The essence of the London agreement was this, that these 63 governments of the world would refrain from the policy and the practice of melting up and debasing silver coins; that they would replace low-value paper money with silver coins; that they would not enact legislation which would depreciate the value of silver in the world market. The great Republic of China with her nearly five hundred millions was a party to the London agreement and, of course, is a silver nation. China agreed not to sell silver accruing from the debasement of her coins.

India, with over 350,000,000 population, was a party to the London agreement and agreed to limit the sale of silver in the world market, due to the melting of her coinage, to 35,000,000 ounces for a period of 4 years.

Spain likewise agreed, with her 30,000,000 people, to limit such sale to 5,000,000 ounces annually for the succeeding 4 years.

Australia, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and the United States, representing a total of over 160,000,000 people, agreed to impound the production of silver from their respective mines to a gross of 35,000,000 ounces annually.

Here are governments of the world representing in 8 nations alone out of the 63 over a billion people, over one-half the population of the earth, concentrating on a use for silver.

The London Economic Agreement was signed by 63 nations, representing 1,700,000,000 people interested in silver; on the other hand, there are the gold-bloc nations, with a population of less than 55,000,000. And that is why I say our interest is in silver.

Mr. President, I do not blind myself to the fact that the powerful and the rich of this world still love gold. I have before me an Associated Press dispatch of June 22, 1935, with the heading, "London Keeps Faith in Gold." The subtitle to this release is "French Vie With Britons in Buying Bullion."

I will read it. It is, of course, a release from London. I quote:

"LONDON, June 22.—Faith in gold continues strong in the minds of speculators, investors, and financiers.

"Speculators especially have been buying large quantities in the London bullion market and 'putting it away' for some future realization.

"French nationals, in their fear of franc devaluation, have sent funds over here and turned them into gold, which is being offered in the market daily. Their anxiety to secure the precious metal is indicated by their willingness to pay a premium of 2 shillings over the parity price of the franc."

Now, Mr. President, the next is the important paragraph:

"That gold is going to be the basis of any future international currency is generally accepted here, and it is pointed out in some quarters that the countries which have 'gone off gold' are gradually increasing their supplies of the metal, while countries still supposed to be 'on gold' are losing it."

Then we have the propaganda of a certain F. R. Phillips, chairman of the Central Mining & Investment Corporation, with vast interests in gold mines. This is his statement, made at the annual meeting of that corporation:

"It is incontrovertible that before trade between countries again flows freely the existing exchange restrictions must be very much relaxed or entirely removed, and in order to bring this about it is necessary that the currencies of the various countries must again be stabilized, and stabilized on the only sound basis of currency, namely, gold. Our faith in gold remains undiminished; indeed, it is strengthened by the fact that countries, whether on or off the gold standard, have either added still further to their stocks of gold or are desirous of doing so."

That is the end of the quotation from the Associated Press release.

Mr. President, it has often occurred to me during the past 2 years when silver has been foremost in the thoughts of the people of the world why it is that this Government has been so solicitous as to who owns silver and who speculates in silver but has never once sought to inquire who owns gold and who speculates in gold.

It is such press releases which can only be considered pure propaganda that suggest to my mind that the rich of this world love gold and that the poor of this world love silver. It has driven me to the conclusion that gold is the rich man's money and that silver is the poor man's money.

Out of this Associated Press dispatch the chairman of a mining corporation can impress upon a financial world that the British Empire, off the gold standard since 1931, is awaiting that day when the peoples of the world—a billion seven hundred million of them—represented by the 63 nations that participated in and signed the London Economic Agreement—may again have their fortunes tied to the rich man's money, gold.

On January 15, 1934, President Roosevelt sent a message to the Seventy-third Congress, in which he said:

"It is a prudent step to vest in the government of a nation the title to and possession of all monetary gold within its boundaries and to keep that gold in the form of bullion rather than in coin.

"Because the safekeeping of this monetary basis rests with the Government, we have already called in the gold which was in the possession of private individuals or corporations. There remains, however, a very large weight in gold bullion and coin which is still in the possession or control of the Federal Reserve banks.

"Although under existing law there is authority, by Executive act, to take title to the gold in the possession or control of the Reserve banks, this is a step of such importance that I prefer to ask the Congress by specific enactment to vest in the United States Government title to all supplies of American-owned monetary gold, with provision for the payment therefor in gold certificates. These gold certificates will be, as now, secured at all times dollar for dollar by gold in the Treasury—gold for each dollar of such weight and fineness as may be established from time to time."

"The title to all gold being in the Government, the total stock will serve as a permanent and fixed metallic reserve which will change in amount only so far as necessary for the settlement of international balances or as may be required by a future agreement among the nations of the world for a redistribution of the world stock of monetary gold."

Then comes the following sentences, Mr. President, which I deem to be of utmost importance, still quoting from the Presidential message—

"Our national currency must be maintained as a sound currency which, insofar as possible, will have a fairly constant standard of purchasing power and be adequate for the purposes of daily use and the establishment of credit.

"The other principle is the inherent right of government to issue currency and to be the sole custodian and owner of the base or reserve of precious metals underlying that currency."

That ends the quotation from the Presidential message of January 15, 1934.

Now, Mr. President, I voted for the nationalization of gold because I believe that if the currency of the Nation is to be predicated upon a metal, the Government should own that metal. But I did not notice, following that message or the congressional action with respect to gold, that there was any movement on the part of the administration to discover who owned the stocks of gold in the country and to place a retroactive law upon the statute books which would tax the profits that were to be made in gold.

Of course, the gold within the country was seized, it was confiscated, it was nationalized. But there was no discriminating legislation against the American citizen who held gold abroad. He did not have to leave the country for a period of 90 days and then sell his holdings held abroad to escape taxation. We were not concerned with the profits to be made by nationals out of gold. We nationalized our gold and then we revalued it.

Many people believe that gold has a fixed value. Actually, gold fluctuates daily in the terms of the currencies used by the peoples throughout the world. Every country has its own money, its own currency, and the price of gold may be daily quoted in the national currencies of the peoples of the earth.

In revaluating gold we have revaluated actually our own currency. And America and other nations, particularly England through her exchange equalization fund, pushed up the value of gold. As the price of gold was pushed up artificially since 1931, as much as 70 percent in terms of the currencies of a majority of the peoples of the world, then the ability of the peoples of the world to pay for goods in their own currencies has fallen where gold is used still as the international yardstick of value.

For 3 years now England, which holds the balance of power in numbers of her consumers, has manipulated gold to suit her own ideas as to what the world commodity prices in terms of her currency should be. The longer we hitch our currency to gold, the longer we will keep the prices on American commodities low.

When America nationalized her gold and revaluated her gold there was our opportunity to do something for the American people. But the American people find that the only thing we did was to sterilize gold in the vaults of the United States Treasury. And by withdrawing gold from the markets of the world and not using it, we simply aided the British policy in raising the price of gold.

Then we embarked on a silver policy. We carried out fully the terms of the London Economic Conference. We did more. The President by a proclamation opened the Government mints to the coinage of standard silver dollars from silver produced in the United States or in its possessions.

On May 22, 1934, President Roosevelt sent a message to Congress recommending the enactment of legislation declaring it to be the policy of the United States to increase the amount of silver in our monetary stocks, with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of these monetary stocks in silver and three-fourths in gold. He asked that the Executive authority be authorized and directed to make the purchases necessary to obtain the ultimate objective. He asked authority to nationalize all silver at just compensation, and authority to regulate imports, exports, and transfers of monetary silver. Then he asked for a 50-percent tax on all profits to be made out of the Government's action.

Gold is the rich man's money, and silver is the money of the peoples of the earth. A profit was to be made on gold, and a profit was to be made on the world's monetary silver. But we didn't inquire as to who owned gold, and we did inquire as to who owned silver. We didn't tax the profits to be made from gold, and we did tax the profits to be made from silver.

But gold was a monetary metal, and silver had been given no monetary value in and of itself. When we nationalized silver we did it on the basis of accumulating it. In order to withdraw it from the world market and raise the price of silver, we embarked upon our silver purchase policy, definitely and expressly to raise the price of silver to $1.29 an ounce or until that time when silver in the Treasury vaults would bear the relation to gold in the Treasury vaults of 1 to 3.

Following the Presidential message on silver on May 22, 1934, Congress did nothing.

Following the Presidential message on gold on January 15, 1934, Congress laid the basis for the United States to have a fixed and permanent metallic reserve by nationalization, and Congress laid the basis for the Presidential revaluation of the gold dollar.

But as respects that other recommendation, incorporated in these words: "Our national currency must be maintained as a sound currency which, insofar as possible, will have a fairly constant standard of purchasing power and be adequate for the purposes of daily use and the establishment of credit"—Congress did nothing.

It was hoped that by the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act Congress would repeat with respect to silver what had been done with respect to gold. But immediately we were asked to turn our attention away from the accumulation of a great silver reserve against which money might be safely and freely issued, and we became entangled in the useless and senseless provisions of the Silver Purchase Act which had to do with taxation.

Gold is the rich man's money; silver is the money of the hundreds of millions. Gold is the money of 3 nations; silver the money of 63 nations. Gold is the standard of the governments of 55,000,000 persons, while silver is the standard of 1,700,000,000 of the peoples of the earth.

I have quoted for you the Associated Press dispatch to the effect that "London keeps faith in gold." London keeps faith in gold—and the Treasury of the United States, in carrying out its silver policy, appoints the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, the notorious enemy of silver, as its agent and abolishes the American silver market and goes straight to London to reestablish the strength of a world silver market in which we once led—to reestablish its strength over in London.

And the silver policy of the United States Government today is executed by four London silver-bullion brokers, who can advise the speculative interests of this world when to sell short and when to buy long.

We have facing us three provisions in a tax bill that virtually exclude the American citizen from participating in the benefits of this program on silver. Our attention was away from the interests of the people of the world in their commercial relationships with us, and concentrated on punitive legislation which punished the American who invested in silver and freed the American who invested in gold.

We actually, by the very language of the act, made the American citizen get out of the country, expatriated him for a period of 90 days if he were to escape a 50-percent tax on his profit in the sale of silver. We did not only that. We actually passed a retroactive law which confiscated the profits that might have been made on silver between May 15, 1934, and the date of the passage of our act.

I am not interested in either the investors in silver or the investors in gold. But I simply cannot refuse to blind my eyes to the fact that behind this monetary legislation is not the interest in America or in the peoples of the world. But somehow, somewhere, there has crept into the treatment of gold and of silver not the objective consideration which two monetary metals should have but rather a philosophy which treats with contempt the owners of the one and with high honor the owners of the other.

Nor do I care to be understood to have my mind for one minute lured far away to foreign peoples and foreign objects to the discount of my own country. The plain blunt truth of it is that I believe we abandoned temporarily the purchase of silver in the markets of the world until our neighboring country of Mexico, which I visited but a few months ago, could accommodate herself to the rising price of silver.

I believe likewise the President of France was simply honest in his expression of gratitude to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States who went to the aid of France, one of the three gold-standard countries of the world, with the full use of the equalization fund at the command of a foreign power.

And I know, or I have seen an open letter from a London bullion broker to his clients to the effect that he used the Treasury of the United States to support the market for private investors all over the world so that they could make their speculative profits in silver while at the same time on our statute books there was a 50-percent tax on the American who dared to do likewise.

When I go abroad it is merely to compare the situation with respect to both gold and silver, and I find that the teeming masses of the world have adopted silver—the poor nations of the world, if you will, have adopted silver—and the powerful nations of the world—or the rich nations of the world—have adopted gold.

I had hoped that through our silver-purchase policy we would have raised the price of silver from the 47 cents that it was on the day we passed the act to $1.29 by now. The purpose of the act was not to make a record by the Treasury Department in how cheaply it could accumulate silver. It was not in the mind of any man in this body to have a corner on the world silver supply only to impound it in the Treasury of the United States and do nothing with it. It was not in the mind of any Member of this body to have the Treasury build up a record of accomplishment by which silver is amassed at the lowest possible price.

There isn't an interest in this whole United States, a basic economic interest, that is not affected and, I believe, affected favorably in the carrying out of the silver policy as intended. Admittedly the 10 or 11 silver-producing States would have their income enhanced and their prosperity increased. In 1931, 1932, and 1933 there was an average production of about $8,000,000 dollars of silver in the United States, or an average of 24,000,000 ounces. And, of course, it makes a vast difference whether silver is 25 cents or $1.29 an ounce, and whether the West receives $31,000,000 instead of $8,000,000 for the same production.

Our own country has produced since 1918 an average of 53 million ounces for the past 16 years, and it would make a vast difference to the silver-producing States of the West whether the income from their mines totals $8,000,000, which has been the average for the past 3 years, or $68,000,000, which is $1.29 an ounce multiplied by the average production of 53,000,000 ounces.

But it is not the silver-producing States alone. It is the great cotton South that had expectations for a correct use of silver. According to the testimony of Oscar Johnson, from the Treasury and Agricultural Departments, before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, on page 94, there is reason to anticipate that the foreign growth of cotton for 1935 will be between twelve and thirteen million bales, with a world carry-over of 14,500,000 bales. The American crop Mr. Johnson estimated at 15,000,000 bales. Here is a world supply of over 42,000,000 bales.

In the competitive markets of the world, cotton is produced almost entirely by the silver nations, and it was the hope of the South that by raising the price of silver we would raise the cost of production of cotton in the silver-using nations of the world. We had also thought that the increased use of silver in our monetary system would offset the acknowledgedly lower price which cotton would take on the old monetary standard, and give us a cheaper money which an economically ruined South could at least use to pay debts and transact normal business.

But instead of aiding us, we have piddled along in the execution of this Silver Purchase Act with attention directed to the tax provisions of the act instead of its chief purposes. We have not sought to accumulate silver until its total volume equals one-third of the gold of the country. We have gone along on a policy seemingly of going into the market and buying at the cheapest price or, worse yet, at a price whose sole justification is that it will take the world-wide clients of the London bullion brokers safely out of their speculative activities, whether they are long or short.

We have permitted silver to rise to 81 and drop to 67, and no man in this Chamber can answer the question as to how we can expect silver to reach $1.29 an ounce by permitting it to drop from 81 to 67.

The relationship of cotton to silver is obvious to any man who knows the cotton story. I repeat. Our competitors are silver nations. The largest single crop in point of value in America is always cotton. It is also our largest export crop.

A prosperous South breathes unlimited prosperity to the Nation and contributes a buying power with the northern manufacturers of all types of goods. It contributes untold millions of raw materials to our rails and waterways and coastal shipping. It uses American bottoms; it uses American marketing machinery and American financial machinery. It's good income-tax income for the United States Treasury, and it's good for nearly 600,000 individual cotton producers in this Nation who are being pauperized and reduced to the standards of the rest of the world as cotton is plunged into new lows.

But that is not all. Mr. President, the South had another reason for our hope in the Silver Purchase Act. In the year 1933–34 the consumption of cotton over the preceding year in the leading nations of the world increased by approximately 800,000 bales. Prominent in this increase were Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Poland, Holland, Austria, Portugal, Finland, Hungary, Denmark, Japan, Canada, Mexico, and Brazil. All these nations used American cotton and the cotton of foreign countries. Yet, despite the increase in consumption in these 18 nations, the use of American cotton fell off in the cases of Germany, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Poland, Switzerland, Holland, Hungary, and China.

Among the countries which gained in the consumption of cotton we lost 580,000 bales in their consumption of American cotton. In addition to this, though India dropped in the consumption of cotton 26,000 bales, America lost in Indian trade 95,000 bales. At the same time, these very countries who dropped their use of American cotton by over 580,000 bales, increased the use of cotton—the product of other nations and their own—by 384,000 bales.

In the world market the conclusion is irresistible that the silver-using nations are our competitors in cotton; that as silver is increased in price in the markets of the world the cost of cotton production must rise in these silver-using nations; and that the one thing to do is to raise the price of silver, gradually if you will, but certainly and effectively and within the course of the next few months to $1.29 an ounce.

And not alone for the agricultural South but likewise for the textile industry of all America we must recognize that the consumption of cotton in this country in the year 1933–34 was 5,670,000 bales against 6,109,000 during the previous year. We used actually 430-odd thousand less bales of cotton last year than we did the year before. This is American consumption and this economic fact has a direct bearing upon the monetary question. Had we sincerely carried out the policy of Congress and accumulated silver and let its price go to the $1.29 an ounce, we could safely say not only that the silver-producing States of the West would have prospered by $50,000,000 additional revenue annually, but that America would have been able to ship at least an equivalent of the world's increased use of cotton amounting to approximately 800,000 bales or $40,000,000 without any change in the price of cotton.

But I am one of those who believe that these figures are ridiculous and I believe, Mr. President, that by any rational approach to the silver question and to the monetary question generally we can raise the price of cotton 10 cents a pound in this country and make out of cotton a billion-dollar crop which will be consumed annually.

As to the other economic effects of the tax provisions in the Silver Purchase Act, I, of course, am wholly in accord with the theory that we never should have thrown away our silver market which was the leading silver market of the world and handed it over to England on a platter.

I am also of the belief that there is no law on the statute books of America which has the potentiality of corruption as has the Silver Purchase Act whereby we, the United States Government, become the outstanding buyer of silver in the world. And instead of using the old market machinery on a fair and open basis of a free market, we permit the world market to use us as a preferred customer and then operate secretly in an operation which involves the Treasury and the Federal Reserve private banking system of this country—not the whole system but just one regional preferred agency up in New York City—and permit that Federal Reserve bank, privately owned, in turn to operate through four bullion brokers over in London so that, Mr. President, you can't find out and I can't find out what the Treasury attitude toward silver is today. We don't know whether they are buying or selling, and maybe it is none of our business—but certainly it has become the business of a little group of men up in the Street and it has become the business of four men over in England. They know; we can't know.

Mr. President, when the time comes for my good friend the Senator from Nevada to offer his amendment to the tax bill, I certainly trust that no Member will vote to table it, if such a motion is made. I trust we will almost unanimously keep in mind that it is England that produces the gold of the world, predominantly, and that it is the Americas that produce the silver; that the peoples of the world love silver; that only three nations cling to the gold standard today; that there are elements in the financial world against silver, and these very elements control the execution of our silver-purchase policy; that gold is the money of the rich, and silver is the money of the poor. And when it comes to voting to the discrimination of one against the other, in our hearts and in our consciences we should vote against gold and for silver.

We do not have to vote that way today. We have done for gold everything asked of us. We have nationalized it; we have revalued it. We have over nine billions of it over in the Treasury, sterile. And we never went about taxing the owners of gold as though they were quasi-criminals.

We have an opportunity of making use of silver. There is no objection in the bill whatever to the silver-purchase policy as such. But silver has not been monetized. It is still a commodity, and as a commodity there is no use of refusing free and open trading in it. A free and open American market regained for silver will, I believe, help to raise silver in price and it will at least direct our Government to purchase through Americans and perhaps of Americans, with American market machinery, the metal we are now driving out of the hands of private individuals and into the hands of the speculators of the world, Americans excluded, and driving it into the hands of the speculators of the world from whom we are now buying it, through secret agencies.

I will vote to repeal the tax sections of the Silver Purchase Act.

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR EARLE, OF PENNSYLVANIA, AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered last evening at the National Young Democratic Convention at Milwaukee, Wis., by Gov. George H. Earle, of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A political party is as young as its leader's ability to feel, interpret, and satisfy the needs of its times. Ours is a young party again. We have no time to mull over the past glories, no occasion to carp witsfully for the good old days. We are at grips with a reality here and now—a reality which 3 years ago threatened to engulf this Nation.

We have made progress. But we are still in the thick of one of the 3 major crises in American history.

We can still apply the principles of Jefferson and Jackson, and we can at least borrow from them the courage to face the need for change, the faculty of seeing straight, the ability to act as the circumstances of our times dictate.

The fundamental change wrought by the new deal is this: It has turned the eyes of the country in upon itself. The center of gravity has swung away from New York toward this Middle West, where it belongs. We have ceased to trace the will-o'-the-wisp of economic dominion beyond the seas, and we now seek our markets among our own people. As an industrialist myself and as Governor of a great industrial State, I feel that change keenly.

Looking back we can trace much of the folly of the old deal to the fallacy of foreign markets. The unwholesome prosperity of the 1920's was built upon the sands of shores other than ours. Our credit structure rested not entirely on our own shoulders and too heavily on those foreign peoples who, through no fault of their own, were unable to bear it.

Why? Who directed that nearly fatal tendency toward economic imperialism? How did we come to leave the midwestern farmer sinking lower and lower into debt and insecurity while we poured out billions of American money to finance purchases of our goods in foreign countries?

The Republican leaders who governed during the 1920's encouraged this madness because they were dominated by Wall Street bankers who made their profits in foreign trade, loans, and exchange. These international bankers came to see the winning of world markets as the beginning and end of American economic effort. Absorbed in one purpose, they allowed the relative price of farm products to sink in order that the wages of industrial workers could be lowered, thus placing American products in a "better" competitive position in the world markets.

To these bankers Government action to increase the farmer's income was held to be the lowest form of public immorality.

Yet they begged and threatened and in some instances even bribed to obtain ship subsidies from the Federal Government. Even today the blind obsession of these men is still able to block a Government-subsidized building program in the United States. Yet all over Germany are workers' housing developments built with the money of American investors—money which these international bankers handled, upon which they drew their commissions and most of which never has and never will be and never could have been repaid.

If these billions had been spent at home in the electrification of farms, in the prevention of soil erosion, in the elimination of slums, the real wealth of America would have been increased and we would be enjoying dividends today in the form of better health, greater comfort, greater opportunity, and a major advance in our war against crime.

But instead we choose to depress the American farmer and the American worker while we offered up our surplus billions to the false goddess of foreign trade.

The political and economic drill sergeants who formerly ruled the United States formed this Nation into a hollow square, facing outward, eyes yearning across the seas.

About face, America! Turn eyes inward from the Atlantic and from the Pacific. Between these coasts is the great inland empire of the Midwest, greater than any of the foreign empires of trade of which Wall Street dreamed. Here are our markets.

Here in the Midwest our future lies!

I do not mean that the new deal is in any way a sectional movement. It is not turning the Nation inward for the special benefit of the Midwest. East coast, west coast, and the South will benefit equally with the interior States from the reorientation of the national effort. The west coast and the South have suffered bitterly from the former focus of national effort upon foreign trade. The remedy for the evils of those sections lies in the same direction as does the hope of the East and the Midwest—in the stimulation of domestic trade.

This great country can be self-fulfilling, self-sustaining, economically self-sufficient. In a world gone mad with war, thank God for that. We do not need colonies beyond the seas, nor do we need to jostle and struggle in the lawless marketplace of international trade.

The obsession of foreign trade reached its height when Herbert Hoover was Secretary of Commerce. He flung out a series of go-getters across the globe to sell America to the world. Unfortunately, America was being sold out at home. The proper market for the great industries of the east coast is the agricultural population of the Midwest. But the Hoover policy tended systematically to impoverish that great potential Midwest market while it sought to enrich our markets abroad with unpayable loans.

With the internationalist attitude in economics prevailing, it was only natural that the foreign political policy of the United States should reflect the European attitude. Our State Department busied itself with such extreme idealism as the Kellogg Pact, meanwhile neglecting the only sound, safe, and natural foreign policy which the United States can pursue.

We don't want war. Never in our history have we had less reason to become involved. Imperialist sentiment which flared up in the United States toward the end of the last century has died down—never, I hope, to rise again. We are not directly threatened by any nation, because there is no strong country which has not dangers too near at home to venture in this direction.

And yet the national economic policy dictated by Wall Street to three successive Republican administrations was leading us blindly but surely into war.

We must make up our minds that we cannot take profits out of Europe, nor can we save Europe from the deep-seated causes of war which today seem to be drawing her nearer and nearer the explosion point. We must take that attitude without any smug self-satisfaction and without contempt for less fortunate men overseas. Our safety is largely the luck of geographical position and natural resources, which make us a self-contained economic unit.

Do not let us throw away our luck. It is charity to help our neighbor who lies injured by the road, but it is senseless suicide to plunge into the crater of an active volcano because our neighbor has fallen in.

The Democratic Party must become the party of deliberate and uncompromising neutrality. It is our task and our opportunity to keep this Nation out of war. We can do it because President Roosevelt has freed the United States from the hallucination of dependence upon foreign trade and from the shackles of the international bankers.

President Roosevelt has turned our eyes and our efforts inward. We must keep them turned in this direction, working always toward an economy that is self-sufficient and self-fulfilling. By that I do not mean merely that we should develop certain raw materials which we now buy abroad. I mean first of all, that we raise the status of the American consumer to a point where our industries need no longer look futilely and perilously beyond the seas for a market for our products.

The old deal said, "Cut labor costs. Cut food costs. We must beat the competition of this or that or the other nation."

The new deal says, "Raise the farmer's income. Raise the worker's income. Give industry customers at home."

As Governor of a great industrial State and an industrialist myself, I would rather sell a radio to every American farmer than a rifle to every soldier in Europe.

Since they are diametrically opposed in principle, it is not strange that the new deal should display a striking contrast with the old in its methods of fighting the depression. Hoover had placed his whole faith in foreign trade. It was his career, his life, his philosophy. When it failed him he was helpless. He turned to Wall Street and Wall Street was helpless. They tried this and that expedient, talked endlessly of the encouraging significance of this or that development abroad—but they never looked from Washington westward across the country.

The old deal told the people to have faith in the stock market and the stock market crashed. It told labor to have faith in the stability of American industry, but industry was unable, by itself, to justify that faith. It told the farmer to have faith in the Farm Board, and the Farm Board failed. It told the people to have faith in the banks, and the banks crashed. It told the unemployed veterans to feed themselves on glory—and then it told them, at the point of bayonets, to get out of Washington.

Was it any wonder that the fortitude and trust of the people snapped? Was it any wonder that the wildest rumors circulated and an abject paralyzing fear seized the country from its princes of banking and industry on down?

The amazing contrast between the last days of Hoover and the first days of Roosevelt springs partly from a difference in character, but to an equal degree, I believe, from the difference between their conflicting philosophies of political economy. Hoover could do nothing about the condition of the rest of the world. So he did nothing. Roosevelt could do something about America. Turning his back upon the inanities of the London Economic Conference, he went to work.

Immediately, a people more demoralized than at any time since the Civil War rallied round him with renewed courage. This man had direction. He had an objective and he knew how to start about obtaining it.

Characteristically, he announced a broad policy of raising wages, increasing farm income. He scorned the myth of international currency stabilization and sought instead to stabilize American currency at a point which would do justice between the average debtor and the average creditor. Both these policies have been largely successful. Their results are reflected in improved business conditions in every part of the country.

The N. R. A., although it was set aside by the Supreme Court, established for all time in our national life the principle that business and industry have a social responsibility. It made the employer recognize and accept, for his own protection and the protection of society, the public obligation to provide fair wages, reasonable working hours, and other safeguards for labor.

Regulation of public utilities in the public interest has been a major objective of the Roosevelt administration. We did not need the crash of the Insull empire to tell us that regulation was needed, but the task of accomplishing it in the face of hostile propaganda and high-pressure lobbying is difficult and tedious. The President has made a major step forward in giving the Nation his Tennessee Valley Authority project as a rate yardstick, and all of you know of the fight his administration has made to break down the gigantic utility holding companies which have been bleeding the ratepayer for so many years.

The Guffey coal bill, passed by the Senate yesterday, is another major achievement of the Roosevelt administration and reflects great credit upon our own Democratic Senator from Pennsylvania. This bill, asked for by both operators and miners, averts what might have been a major catastrophe in the march to recovery.

One of the major accomplishments of President Roosevelt which will be of enduring value to our people for generations to come is the enactment of the Eccles banking bill. In this the President struck a mighty blow at Wall Street domination, taking the power to regulate the value of our medium of exchange out of the hands of the bankers and placing it where it belongs—in the hands of the Government. This bill, together with bank-deposit guaranties, the Securities Act, and similar measures, represents a memorable achievement in the protection of our credit structure.

President Roosevelt's message on income taxes is, I believe, one of the most important documents of our time. Taxation on the basis of ability to pay has been recognized as the most equitable revenue principle. But the depression and the President have taught us that it is not only the fairest principle but the most efficient, in the economic sense.

I believe that the capitalistic system, with all its faults, is by far the most workable, the most beneficial to the people as a whole. But in the light of recent experience it is simply folly to deny that laissez faire capitalism, as it has been practiced among us, has been misused for the benefit of the few and the exploitation of the many. Wealth tends to accumulate in the hands of a few, just as it did in the precapitalist days of the feudal economy. This concentration, appropriate enough in feudalism and in the early stages of industrialization, has proved wellnigh fatal in our own day. We are no longer facing the original need of expending our means of production at a faster and faster pace. If we were, then it would be improper, from the point of view of public welfare, to seek a more equal distribution of wealth because the more wealth is concentrated the more we can invest in new production. Our problem today is a different one. The concentration of wealth into a few hands leaves these proprietors with plenty of productive machinery but with insufficient customers for the products of that machinery.

There exists in this country enough productive plants to feed everyone adequately, clothe everyone adequately, and supply other necessities and even semiluxuries to all. But there does not exist the mass purchasing power necessary to make these products useful to all. It is folly to talk of maintaining the price-and-profit system unless we resolve—as the President has resolved—to break the jam of concentrated wealth and force the proprietors of productive machinery to give themselves customers by a more equal distribution of national income.

Sharply graduated income taxes are an important device in the accomplishment of that economic reform. They operate in a manner exactly opposite to the sales tax which encourages the concentration of wealth. In Pennsylvania I led a successful fight against the sales tax, which I consider a sock-the-poor tax. From the man of average and subaverage income, who must spend every cent he makes, the sales tax take, say, 2 percent of his whole earnings. But from the well-to-do and the rich who spend on living expense only a small part of their income, the sales tax takes far less than 2 percent. Thus it becomes a graduated income tax that is graduated downward instead of upward. It is exactly the sort of tax which we must avoid.

It accelerates the very tendency which causes depressions and which makes it so difficult to emerge from depression.

In sponsoring the Social Security Act, President Roosevelt faced the realities in America today. For better or worse—I believe it will ultimately be for the better—the progress of industrialization and technological change has reached the point where it is no longer possible to obtain security for every man and his family. We need not be surprised at this development. There was a time when one family was an entirely self-supporting unit which did not seek cooperation even for protection against its enemies. In various ways economic cooperation in units as large as tribes or villages grew and with it an increasing lack of certain kinds of self-reliance. Until recently in the United States it was generally possible for a decent, hard-working man of average intelligence to build up for himself and his dependents an adequate competence. But the pace has become too fast. Depression aside, we must face the fact that modern industrial life wears out the worker's capacity for maximum efficiency long before he is past the age when his children are grown up and able to support him. Many factories make a policy of laying off men at 40. Other skilled workers find life-long trades suddenly valueless to them because technological advance has superseded them.

What are we going to do with this army of men and their dependents? Throw them upon the humiliations of charity? That's a bitter reward for self-respecting and efficient service. Urge them to save? With wages what they have been and still are, that's an even bitterer jest.

The money to provide for them is here. They themselves made it with their hands and brain. It only remains to find a funnel by which that wealth can be siphoned off the excess profits of industry and stored up in the form of security pensions.

To do this is justice—and something else besides. There is a secondary aspect of the security bill which in the long run may prove the more important. The pensions and unemployment insurance will be useful to the whole Nation—rich and poor—because they will cushion the shocks of periodic depressions which have threatened to shake our economic life to pieces.

We have seen what happens when our people are without safeguards against the effects of panic, depression, or even the ordinary economic fluctuations of our modern life. Because we have failed to provide these safeguards in the past, we now must provide relief. You will agree that prevention is the better policy.

I most earnestly contend that the veterans of industry, as well as the veterans of our wars, are entitled to economic protection in accordance with the service they have rendered in creating the wealth of our state. Practical economics dictate that there be some external factor, controlled by the Government, to balance our industrial machinery so as to eliminate the periodic depressions. Labor and social security laws provide that factor.

The new deal has carried the Nation forward out of the morass of economic imperialism onto the firmer ground of progress within our own borders. This national conception of the public good demands policies delineated on a national basis. As always, we must look to our Constitution to show us what we can do and how we can do it. Certain provisions of the Constitution—especially the interstate commerce clause—have lately been interpreted by the Supreme Court in a manner too narrow to meet the present needs of the Nation. As communication and the interdependence of various parts of the Nation develop still further this narrow construction of the powers of the Federal Government over business will become an ever-increasing obstacle to progress.

What are we going to do about it? The Constitution itself supplies the answer: If we cannot find a way within the Constitution then that document must be amended in the form prescribed therein. I have too much respect for the framers of the Constitution to believe that they ever intended the words they wrote to become predominant over the national need. They were men who themselves lived in changing times, men who were not afraid to accept new responsibilities, to strike out upon new paths. Did they intend the Constitution to become the instrument of injustice, of oppression, of national utility in the face of disintegration? I do not believe it.

We've changed the Constitution with 21 amendments and regretted only one of them. Now, if it appears that the Nation cannot be rescued without another amendment, then amend we must. If this be treason, make the most of it.

I believe in liberalism, in the liberalism of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Liberalism is fair play. Liberalism believes that the best heritage it can leave to the future is to put the present in order.

When I hear the reactionaries complain of what they term the "confusion" of the new deal I take it as an implied compliment to the President and his party. They must have expected an administration of demigods if they thought the chaos in which the old deal ended could be straightened out in two and a half years.

The President is blazing a new trail out of depression valley. Slowly but surely our Nation is scaling the mountainside of recovery along that trail.

But like every newly blazed trail the path is slow and the roadway uneven, arduous. Tedious and painstaking effort must be exerted to settle the new roadbed—to lay the foundation of a lasting path which may be traveled safely and conveniently by our own and future generations.

We today, it must be remembered, are not building only for the present but also for the future a road to economic security and social justice.

It is for us, the young Democrats, the representatives of liberal government, to take part in this great work and to advance this new design for American living—the development of American markets for American industry and agriculture.

In the words of the President, we are on our way.

MUNITIONS INDUSTRY AND NEUTRALITY

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement and letter writen by myself dealing with the status of the various legislative proposals of the committee of the Senate investigating the munitions industry and a statement on the neutrality bill.

There being no objection, the statement and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEUTRALITY BILL—A STATEMENT BY GERALD P. NYE

I wish I could be as sure as some seem to be that America will not be drawn into another foreign war. Our experience of 20 years ago is, or should be, a ready reminder of the power of the forces that would drag a great nation into wars not of its own making. We witnessed in our last effort to remain neutral how munitions sales, bankers' loans to the Allies, and Americans sailing upon the vessels of nations at war, such as the Lusitania, tended to bring us into a conflict which was in its inception of no relation to us. Had America had a well-defined and strong neutrality policy at the beginning of the World War, she might have escaped participation in that war, and escaped, too, the penalties which we have been bearing and paying ever since, with the end not yet in sight.

Now, with the world topsy-turvy and quite definitely headed for more war, we can well afford to exercise every caution against repetition of our painful experience of 20 years ago. In many respects the situation in Europe and Africa at the moment is on all fours with that existing in 1914, starting with Sarajevo. We need now, as we need nothing else, a determined neutrality policy. If we wait until war is an actuality before moving, we shall find it quite impossible to alter existing neutrality policy without committing at once what one or more nations will deem an unneutral act. Such was the case during the World War prior to our entry, when our Government refrained from adopting any policy for fear its doing so would cause one side or the other engaged in the war to feel that that policy was directed at them and advantageous to their opponents.

Members of the Senate Munitions Committee have offered and had pending before the Senate and its Foreign Relations Committee for many weeks what is thought by its sponsors to be an encompassing program of neutrality, a program covered by four legislative proposals, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 99, a proposal to withhold passports from Americans sailing in war zones, forbidding Americans sailing upon the vessels of belligerent nations, and a warning that Americans who risk their lives in war trade can expect no greater support from their fellow countrymen than those adventurous souls who risk their lives by joining the foreign legions;

Senate Joint Resolution 100, which provides an embargo on all loans and credits to belligerents during a war; a program which would at once notify the Morgans and other banking houses that if they must have a hand in another European war they will have to personally enlist in the foreign legion;

Senate Joint Resolution 120, carrying two distinct proposals. First, it provides a positive embargo against the exportation of munitions of war to any nation engaged in war. Second, it provides that in that larger field classifying commodities as other than munitions but considered contraband of war, while American exportation of contraband is permissible, the buyer must undertake to accomplish delivery of the supplies, and the use of American ships and the American flag to accomplish that delivery is forbidden.

The fourth legislative proposal is embodied in S. 2998 and provides for an extensive program of licensing of American munitions manufacturers and exporters, with a well-thought-out provision affording large publicity and knowledge of munitions activities.

Since the announcement of Senators some few days ago to resort to drastic means to accomplish consideration of the neutrality question before adjournment is taken by Congress there has been a decided demonstration of what the people of this country want in this field. The telegrams and other communications, together with editorial comment over the country, clearly reveal the demand for this or equally strong legislation to insure, so far as it can be insured, American neutrality. These expressions are not alone by isolationists by any means. They come from so-called "internationalists" as well—from fathers, mothers, boys and girls, from educators, from men high in business and professional circles.

The Senate and House have just adopted Senate Joint Resolution 173, a compromise reached after many days of effort. I regret exceedingly that the compromise seems necessary, but it is apparent that it is the maximum to be expected in these last and tired hours of the session. As a compromise it is a stopgap that will afford splendid service if war comes to other parts of the world while Congress is in recess until next January. But it should be noted that the compromise does not cover many features encompassed by the aforesaid program. The compromise generally covers the proposal embodied in S. 2998, in part Senate Joint Resolution 99, and in part Senate Joint Resolution 120. But it leaves wholly uncovered the question of control over loans and credits to belligerent nations and the question of exportation of contraband. More than this, the compromise limits the effectiveness of the mandatory feature governing the matter of munitions exports only until March 1, 1936. The only reason this limitation is accepted is because of the element of time and emergency existing and of definite belief that it can be made a permanent policy when Congress reconvenes in January.

The compromise proposal is worth while. It alone, or even the larger program originally proposed and still pending for consideration when Congress takes up its work again in January, will or would not prevent our being drawn into more war. But it will materially lessen the danger of America being dragged into another conflict on foreign soil.

Neutrality is a difficult thing to maintain to say the least, but Senate Joint Resolution 173, the compromise and temporary neutrality proposal, constitutes splendid gain and is certain to serve advantageously during these months when almost anything can and may happen.

Regarding the issue concerning control over loans and credits, which the compromise proposal ignores, it has been said that by reason of the Johnson resolution forbidding loans to nations which have defaulted in meeting the debts owing the United States there is no need for further action. While this resolution does largely meet the issue it should not be overlooked that it does not apply to all nations or any nation that might go to war, for there are some nations which do not owe us and which have not defaulted in meeting their obligations to us.

It is likewise being said that to write now a mandatory neutrality program and policy to become effective with the outbreak of war anywhere in the world might be a terrible mistake and destroy our best purposes. Some recite the unfortunate condition that would prevail if Canada or Mexico were attacked by a foreign power with such a strong and mandatory neutrality as is proposed in effect. It is argued that the President should have permissive power in these emergencies. We ought to be reminded that President Wilson had permissive powers in our last effort to remain neutral. It seems to me that Congress, establishing a neutrality policy, could well be expected to alter it to meet such situations as are suggested by the far-fetched possibility of our neighbors being attacked. Emphatically, experience dictates that a strong neutrality policy be established. If it is found to be poor policy, it can be altered, even repealed. In any event such a program takes away from one man the power to let us drift into war and leaves the decision of American participation in war to the representatives of the people, their Congress.

There is high resolve on the part of many in this Congress, among whom I am glad to be included, to return to the task in January of enlarging upon the neutrality policy now written, to make permanent what has been provided as temporary, and to include in the policy a coverage of the disputed issues of loans, credits, and contraband.

The measures to which I have referred follow: Senate Joint Resolution 99, Senate Joint Resolution 100, Senate Joint Resolution 120, Senate bill 2998, and Senate Joint Resolution 173.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING MUNITIONS INDUSTRY,
August 24, 1935.

Mr. WILLIAM T. STONE,
Foreign Policy Association,
8 West Fortieth Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. STONE: I had promised at the close of this session to advise you at once concerning the status of the various measures which have been recommended by the Munitions Investigating Committee to the Senate for passage and of the reports made by the committee and its plans respecting future activity in conclusion of its duties under resolution ordering the investigation.

We have thought it a matter of economy to refrain from the conduct of public hearings until we were prepared to stage them quickly and completely. For that purpose no hearings have been scheduled until January, when we shall undertake to make quick work of the remaining hearings to be held. Immediately following these the committee will make its final report to the Senate, and its completed recommendations as well to the Senate.

After devoting a great deal of study to the salesmanship exercised in the sale of munitions of war, the committee members have sponsored a bill, S. 2998, which aims to accomplish a measure of control over the situation at least in a temporary way. While the bill does not by any means go to the head of the ill for which remedy it desperately needed, it does afford an approach of merit and ought to be passed. It will be subject, of course, to enlargement when we have finished our work, after which, I hope, there can be recommended a sweeping program looking to the control of this industry which has evidently at times recognized no bounds of decency in furtherance of its business. S. 2998 is approved by the State Department, and has been recommended to the Senate by the Foreign Relations Committee. It is now upon the Senate calendar and is probably not going to have passage during these closing hours. However, it should be noted that in a material way the provisions of this resolution have been incorporated by the Foreign Relations Committee in the neutrality bill which had its final passage through Congress today.

The committee has studied the economic conduct and control in the last war in a more thorough way, I believe, than any other body has ever done. As a result of its work in that field, it has drafted and proposed to the Senate its war-profits tax bill. In December of 1934 the President expressed in a public way the need for taking profit out of war. To the Munitions Committee there was referred H. R. 5529, a House bill designed to take profit out of war, but a bill devoid of taxing strength such as are considered highly essential if control of war profits is really to be accomplished. Our committee conducted the extensive studies and hearings upon the question and on May 1, 1935, reported to the Senate the House bill largely amended to provide for war-time taxes. The bill was at once referred to the Senate Military Affairs Committee, which conducted hearings upon it and reported it to the Senate with its recommendations on June 14. The bill was then referred to the Senate Finance Committee. A subcommittee thereof was appointed but not until last week was a meeting of that committee held. It then became apparent that it was futile to hope for action in time to win results before adjournment of this Congress. It is regrettable that the matter has been thus delayed, but the Munitions Committee has done its best to move it along. Our committee feels that the preparation of the war-profits legislation was a larger duty assigned it by the Senate. I hope that you can find as much encouragement as we are finding in the very evident prospect that the Finance Committee will afford that consideration which will permit early report of the bill to the Senate when Congress reconvenes in January.

In connection with this bill let me say that two reports have been submitted to the Senate by our Munitions Committee. Its report offered of recent days is the most thorough study of its kind into the subjects of war-time taxation and war-time price fixing.

After very extensive study on the subject of naval shipbuilding and on the activities of the shipbuilding companies, a report was laid before the Senate on the subject (No. 944) on June 19, 1935. At the same time the committee introduced, through Senator VANDENBERG, two bills each directed at the prevention of collusion in bidding for naval vessels and to eliminate profiteering in their construction. These bills, S. 3098 and S. 3099, were introduced on June 19, 1935, and referred by the Senate to the Naval Affairs Committee. That committee has held no hearings upon the bills and has made no efforts to report them out. One of the results of the failure of Congress to act on these two bills in the present session is that the huge 1935 naval-construction program is left without adequate control in the hands of the Government against collusion and profiteering. Before the bills were introduced we had been given the impression that they would be considered promptly. However, at this moment there is no assurance given that they will ever be considered or reported, but I want to say to you that upon the reconvening of Congress in January the committee will exert its every effort to accomplish consideration by the Naval Affairs Committee and by the Senate.

You know, of course, that the Munitions Committee has been much interested in legislation covering the general principles of the shipment and sales of munitions to belligerents during a war in which the United States is a neutral. These bills touched on the general field of foreign relations, and so their committee did not wish to report on them as a committee, but allowed two of its members to put them before the Senate in a bipartisan way in order that they might be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. These proposals are Senate Joint Resolutions Nos. 99, 100, and 120. Today witnessed final passage of a compromise neutrality bill, which does not cover all the ground proposed in the aforesaid resolutions but which constitutes a real and genuine step in the way of progress. Success for this program only indicates the large opportunity that exists for larger progress when Congress reconvenes.

The committee will, of course, offer further legislation and reports following its hearings in January, when it hopes to conclude its work. The committee, however, will not feel that it has completed its work fully until it has acomplished the passage of adequate legislation to meet the situation revealed to exist by the investigation.

I have been asked often regarding the help which has been afforded our committee. In addition to those who have been engaged and paid through the moneys appropriated by the Senate for the conduct of this investigation, we have had the services and assistance of able men from the Interstate Commerce Commission, who were loaned to us upon our request. The committee has also had the assistance of some lawyers, engineers, and clerical help through the New York State F. E. R. A. This assistance has all been employed in the committee's New York office. Our work was not considered a relief project but a works project. All the workers assigned to the committee in this connection were assigned to it by the F. E. R. A. of New York and not by the Munitions Committee. As many as 39 such workers were at one time utilized by the committee. This has been splendid assistance, and the committee appreciates the help that has thus been afforded it.

You have indicated a desire to know of the availability of the printed hearings of the investigation and of reports made by the committee. Permit me to say that these are available at a very nominal cost through the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office here in Washington.

Sincerely appreciating the purpose of your inquiry and the cooperation which you have afforded us, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

GERALD P. NYE.

THE COTTON-LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following radio address by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to be delivered on August 31, 1935, as follows:

I wish to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to WBT of Charlotte, N. C., and to WFBC of Greenville, S. C., for the opportunity afforded me to respond to many inquiries as to the cotton-loan program announced by the Government on last Monday.

The plan is substantially as follows:

During this crop year the farmer will receive a loan of 10 cents, based upon low middling seven-eighths cotton. The loan will bear interest at 4 percent, as was the case last year.

In addition to the 10-cent loan, the farmer will receive an adjustment payment equal to the difference between 12 cents and the average price at which middling seven-eighths cotton sold on the 10 designated spot markets on the day that the farmer sold his cotton. In other words, if the farmer on yesterday, the 29th, sold middling seven-eighths cotton for 10½ cents, he can now make a claim for 1.42 per pound, which represents the difference between 12 cents and the price at which middling seven-eighths cotton sold on the 10 designated spot markets yesterday, which was 10.58 cents per pound.

The loan is made on the basis of low middling seven-eighths cotton because that was the basis fixed for loans last year. In the case of the bounty, or adjustment payment, the basis is middling seven-eighths cotton because quotations on the 10 designated spot markets are based upon middling seven-eighths cotton.

If a farmer produces extra staple cotton or has cotton of a grade better than middling seven-eighths, he will receive a premium from the buyer who purchases his cotton. If he sold yesterday the adjustment payment he receives will be 1.42 cents per pound in addition to the premium that he receives because of the superior grade of his cotton. In other words, even though he received yesterday, because of the superior grade of his cotton, a price in excess of 10.58 cents, he will receive an adjustment payment equal to the difference between 10.58 and 12 cents.

On the other hand, the man who yesterday sold cotton grading lower than middling seven-eighths will, of course, receive less from the buyer than the price of middling seven-eighths. The bounty of 1.42 per pound, however, will be added to whatever price he received for his cotton.

The farmer can borrow 10 cents per pound upon all of the cotton he produces, regardless of the Bankhead allotment.

However, he cannot receive the bounty or adjustment payment except upon his actual production, not exceeding the Bankhead allotment. The loan is made upon all cotton in order to encourage the orderly marketing of the crop. The bounty could not be paid upon cotton which is in excess of the Bankhead allotment, because it would encourage violation of the curtailment program.

At the time the farmer makes his claim for an adjustment payment, he must agree to cooperate in the curtailment program of next year. Statements that there will be a 50-percent reduction are unfounded. There has been no determination of what that program will be and there will be no determination until there is clearer information as to the size of this crop and as to the demands for the crop.

The money to make possible these adjustment payments to cotton growers will come from the fund authorized by the recent legislation setting aside one-third of the tariff revenues to encourage the marketing and exportation of agricultural products.

The Comptroller General has not yet determined whether, under the language of the law establishing this fund, the Department will have to pay those who did not cooperate this year, as well as those who cooperated. That decision will be rendered in a few days. Department officials, however, state that should the Comptroller General rule that those who did not cooperate must be paid, the Department could require and would require that such growers, before they received payments, agree to cooperate next year. It is their purpose, if they have to make adjustment payments to those who did not cooperate this year, not to make such payments until those persons not only agree to cooperate next year, but give some evidence of compliance with that agreement.

There are many reasons for the requirement that the grower agree to cooperate next year. Among them is the fact that the constitutionality of the Bankhead Act is being attacked in the courts. The Supreme Court will probably decide that question this fall. While the attorneys representing the Government are of the opinion that its constitutionality will be sustained, still, if they are in error and the Court should hold the act unconstitutional, the Department would then have the agreements in exchange for bounty payments, which would make possible the continuation of the effort to reduce the carry-over toward normal proportions. Without the ability to control production, no man can justify a 10-cent loan.

A very important feature of the new program is that whenever a check is given to the grower for his bounty or adjustment payment, he will be asked to sign an agreement to pay each producer, share-tenant, share-cropper, or other person having an interest in the cotton the amount of such interest.

The adjustment payments to farmers will apply to all sales of this year's crop, dating back to the first day of the crop year, August 1. Therefore, the farmer who has, since August 1, sold his cotton should immediately obtain from the buyer of his cotton a sales slip, showing the name of the buyer, the date of the sale, and the grade and weight of the cotton. These slips he should keep until the printed forms are prepared upon which he can make a claim for his adjustment payment. These forms will in due time be forwarded to the county agents.

The farmer who after this date sells should get from the purchaser a sales slip signed by the buyer, giving this information, and retain it until he can get a printed form for his claim. The printed forms for applications for loans will, in the opinion of the Department, be available by September 8.

Should the price of cotton decline below 10 cents, there is no excuse for a farmer selling his cotton when he can borrow 10 cents from the Government. He must remember that he cannot receive a bounty or adjustment payment in excess of 2 cents per pound—the difference between the loan price and 12 cents. To permit any man to receive in excess of this would simply encourage him to dump his cotton at any price and destroy the whole program.

Under the plan originally announced it was generally believed that the adjustment payment would be received only for cotton sold between September 1 and January 1. The inevitable result would have been to encourage dumping upon the market during these 4 months. Under the new plan which has been put into effect this loan will be made and the adjustment payment will be made upon cotton at any time between August 1, 1935, and July 31, 1936. There is, therefore, no excuse for dumping. There is every incentive for the farmer to get the best possible price for his cotton, and there is an assurance that the farmers having better grades of cotton will get the premiums paid for such grades and staples.

The Commodity Credit Corporation today holds 4,450,678 bales of cotton. In addition, there is under the control of the Government what is known as "pool cotton", amounting to approximately 600,000 bales of spot cotton. Sales from the pool have been suspended. The Government is going to withhold this approximately 5,000,000 bales of cotton from the market until the price reaches 13 cents. That means the available American cotton will be limited to the relatively small amount of cotton which is abroad and in the hands of spinners and the crop which is made this year, which is estimated at 11,780,000 bales.

The demand for cotton has recently improved. If the cotton growers will but cooperate with the Government in its effort to help them and will avail themselves of the 10-cent loan instead of dumping their cotton, they have everything to gain and nothing to lose. If they will borrow the 10 cents and the crop is marketed in an orderly manner, cotton is bound to increase in price. Should it rise above 13 cents, the cotton growers will receive an equity out of the four and a half million bales of cotton which are in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation as security for the loans of last year, but the title to which cotton still remains with the farmers.

While it is no part of this plan, it will be of interest to cotton growers to know that under legislation adopted just prior to the adjournment of Congress this year the grower holding a Bankhead certificate for cotton in excess of that which he grows can sell that certificate to another cotton grower residing anywhere in the same State instead of being restricted to such sale within the same county, as was the case last year.

Under the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration Act, the Department was authorized to compensate ginners in connection with the enforcement of the Bankhead Act. The appropriation bill, which was filibustered to death, carried the appropriation for this purpose. The President has asked the Comptroller General to determine whether or not, out of any funds heretofore appropriated, money could be secured to pay ginners the amounts authorized by the A. A. A. No decision has yet been rendered by the Comptroller General. My earnest hope is that it will be found possible to immediately carry out the wishes of the Congress. If it is not, then when Congress meets in January the appropriation bill will be passed providing the compensation for the ginners.

I have never believed that we could present sound arguments for a 12-cent loan policy on a permanent cotton program. The loan program was inaugurated in an emergency and with the expectation that it would continue only during the emergency. It was made necessary because in 1932 and 1933 our carry-over of cotton increased to such a figure at a time when the demand was decreased, that cotton sold at 5 cents per pound. We knew that we could not continue to produce cotton upon an unrestricted acreage and ever expect any recovery of the purchasing power of the people of the South. Voluntary efforts to control production had failed. Action was proposed by State legislatures, and the legislatures of several States actually enacted laws prohibiting the planting of any cotton for a year. This was to be done without providing any benefits to those who were deprived of the right to produce the greatest money crop of the South. A number of the States failed to enact these laws, and the plan failed. The United States Government then attempted to come to the aid of the cotton farmer by providing for the control of production, paying benefits to those who would reduce their production. The Bankhead Law went into effect. Gradually the carry-over has been reduced. There must be a still further reduction. The average annual carry-over in the 5 parity years, 1909 to 1914, was 3,200,000 bales.

After all of our efforts at curtailment we still had on hand in America on August 1 this year 7,150,000 bales, 5,000,000 bales of which are being held off the market by the Government for 13 cents. Nevertheless, we know that there must be a continuation of the reduction program until we have something approaching a normal carry-over.

At the same time every sane man knows that we must provide for the export of our cotton to foreign markets. Under this new plan we can hope for an increase in our exports. The estimates of the Department of Agriculture are that there will be a reduction in the amount of cotton produced in China. No marked increase is looked for in Brazil. If, while the farmer is receiving an average of 12 cents per pound, cotton can still be exported at a price that it will be absorbed by foreign purchasers, we can look forward to an increased price and the gradual reduction of the stock of cotton held by the Government.

The legislation setting aside one-third of the tariff revenues to encourage the exports of agricultural products will furnish the fund with which we can supplement the farmer's income while we encourage our exports.

It will be urged that this is a subsidy to the cotton farmer. It is the application of the principle of the tariff to the production of the cotton grower. He can never benefit by any tariff duties. He has always paid tribute to the manufacturers of the Nation through the operation of the tariff. This legislation simply diverts one-third of the tariff revenues to be used to improve the condition of the farmer and to maintain his purchasing power.

While this plan is put into operation, the Congress and the administration can look to the establishment of a permanent policy. While we must continue to control the production until the carry-over is reduced, we can consider the advisability of adopting a plan under which the fund established from the tariff duties can be used to pay to the cotton grower an adjustment payment upon that part of his crop which is consumed domestically. If, for instance, 50 percent of the cotton crop is consumed by domestic mills, and if, under the Bankhead Act, a grower is allotted 50 bales, he could receive an adjustment payment upon 25 bales, or 50 percent of his crop, sufficient to increase the price received for this portion of his crop to the price determined upon as the parity price. The other 50 percent of his crop would be sold at the world price and would compete with the cotton of other nations. It would give no advantage to a foreign spinner because the domestic spinner will pay the same price as the foreign spinner, the increase to the farmer coming out of the fund derived from tariff revenues.

Other plans somewhat similar have been proposed and are being considered. As a result of the study given to the subject, I feel confident that a sound permanent policy can be established.

The announcement of the 9-cent loan and the first plan recommended by the Commodity Credit Corporation undoubtedly brought disappointment to cotton growers. They had expected a continuance of the 12-cent loan. It must be said that from the outset the President believed in the continuance of the 12-cent loan, because he believed that the farmer had cooperated with the expectation of receiving an average of 12 cents per pound for his cotton. I think it is true that the delay in the announcement of a program was due to the inability of the President and the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation to agree. It certainly is true that the President finally approved the plan of the Commodity Credit Corporation only because he was assured by the directors of that Corporation that the plan suggested of the 9-cent loan and the payment of the difference between the average price over a period of 4 months and 12 cents would give to the cotton grower an average of 12 cents.

When the plan was announced I was equally convinced it would not accomplish the purpose of the President. I offered an amendment to an appropriation bill directing the continuance of the 12-cent loan. I did so because I believed it was the best, if not the only, way to force a reconsideration by the Commodity Credit Corporation of their announced plan.

The Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House was opposed to the cotton amendment, and under the rules of the House action could not be secured without delay, and the House had adopted a resolution to adjourn. A committee of southern Senators called upon the President. I analyzed the plan that was announced and our committee presented their views. The President became convinced that the original plan was inequitable and would not accomplish his purpose. When he became so convinced, he called in the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and as a result of the conferences that followed between us the new plan was announced.

I realize that it is not wise to legislate the rate of a loan upon any commodity. Ordinarily that should be determined by executive officials, based upon the value of a commodity and the control of production. When we legislate upon the subject, similar action is asked for other crops and commodities, the production of which is not controlled, as is the case with cotton under the Bankhead Act.

When the President agreed to this new plan, Senators from the cotton-growing States, with one exception, were in favor of the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill. Its failure to pass is not due to the cotton amendment. We knew that the defeat of that bill could not help the cotton growers and would hurt many others throughout the Nation, and we advocated the passage of the appropriation bill.

My difference with the President in this matter was only a difference of opinion as to whether or not a certain plan approved by him actually accomplished the object he had in mind and that I had in mind.

Whenever such an issue arises, it is my belief that it is wise for a legislator to confer with the Executive. If we cannot agree and the matter is one of vital importance to the people of my State, then, regardless of the views of the Executive, I advocate that policy which will best promote the interests of the people I represent. As to issues where no such principle is involved, it is my policy to endeavor to reach a compromise, because nearly all legislation is enacted as the result of a compromise.

In this matter it was a happy conclusion, because the plan which is now announced is fair to the cotton growers of the South and carries out the desire of the President that the cotton growers should receive for this year's crop an average of 12 cents per pound.

LOOKING AHEAD WITH ROOSEVELT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the authority granted by the Senate, I am inserting in the RECORD an article to appear in Collier's Weekly of September 7, 1935, entitled "Looking Ahead with Roosevelt", by George Creel, of California, as follows:

[From Collier's Weekly for Sept. 7, 1935]

LOOKING AHEAD WITH ROOSEVELT

By George Creel

It is the deep conviction of Franklin D. Roosevelt that the Constitution of the United States was never meant to be a "dead hand", chilling human aspiration and blocking humanity's advance, but that the founding fathers conceived it as a living force for the expression of the national will with respect to national needs.

At the time that Washington rode from Mount Vernon to Philadelphia for the Constitutional Convention, the Thirteen Colonies did not hold as many people as the present population of New York City; Robert Fulton had not yet built his steamship; there were no railroads; and a purely agricultural civilization was without conception of slums, sweatshops, holding companies, stock exchanges, automobiles, and airplanes. With a great continent open for settlement by the needy, dissatisfied or ambitious, how was it possible for the Convention to imagine the March days of 1933, when 10,000,000 jobless men tramped the streets and highways, when hundreds of thousands faced homelessness through dispossession, and when half the people rested under the black fear of hunger?

THE ESSENCE OF THE CONSTITUTION

Sincerely, steadfastly, the President refuses to believe that the framers of the Constitution meant to tie the hands of posterity until the end of time, denying future generations freedom of action in meeting the problems presented by 150 years of change. Like Abraham Lincoln, who put forth the Emancipation Proclamation in full faith that the great document was never designed to embalm evils and injustices, he rejects the theory that the Constitution was intended to stand as a barrier against social and spiritual progress.

He knows, as few seem to remember, that the founding fathers were not doddering octogenarians, fearful of change, but young and ardent men who had just thrown off the shackles of Old World despotism. Even with Franklin's 81 and Washington's 55, the average age came under 40. Madison, for example, was 36 and Hamilton only 30.

The thing that has come to be called the "new deal" is Franklin Roosevelt's conscientious, deliberated effort to continue the Constitution as a truth and a hope, not as a mere collection of obsolete phrases. Believing that the vast and bewildering changes in American life compel new objectives in human relations, the laws that he has proposed are frank attempts to gain those objectives, and nothing is more certain than that he will keep up the drive with all the force of his being and all the power of his office.

Against charges of precipitancy he places grim facts of record. The conditions that he inherited demanded immediate action. What faced him were terrifying emergencies, and to have parleyed and postponed would have invited chaos. Banks were crashing, factories shutting down, millions begged for work and food, mortgages were being foreclosed on homes and farms, and industry and agriculture alike rushed to ruin. In 1932 alone there were 31,822 failures with liabilities of $928,000,000, and the threatened bankruptcy of the railroads menaced savings banks and life-insurance companies.

Two courses were open to him. Either he could have sat idle while Congress framed a constitutional amendment to be acted on by the legislatures or the special conventions of the 48 States, a process of months at best, or he could assume, as he did assume, that it was never the thought of the founding fathers to deny those that followed them the right of self-preservation.

NECESSITY MAKES THE LAWS

The Farm Credit Administration saved farms and farmers; the Home Owners' Loan Corporation saved city and suburban homes; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, galvanized into new and vigorous life, saved banks, railroads, industry, and came to the rescue of depositors in closed banks; the Federal Emergency Relief Administration cared for ten millions, and the Civilian Conservation Corps took a million American youngsters out of city streets and gave them wholesome, useful occupation.

A Federal Housing Administration stimulated home modernization and new construction; a Public Works Administration swung into action with its millions for great and necessary projects, and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration proceeded to double the purchasing power of the farmer, lifting wheat from 25 cents a bushel to 98 cents; corn from 10 cents to 80 cents; oats from 8 to 50; rye from 25 to 60; alfalfa from $5 a ton to $25; cattle from $6 a hundredweight to $13.50; and hogs from $2.50 to $9.50.

The worst drought in history presented the administration with another emergency that did not permit of backing and filling. Millions were rushed to the devastated areas, and in addition to other aid, 300,000 stockmen were granted feed loans for the maintenance of foundation herds, and some 445,000 individual seed loans were made.

Where was there specific warrant in the Constitution for these expenditures? Ten million jobless, hungry men were as remote from the consciousness of the founding fathers as airplanes. What did they know of city plague spots where men and women lived miserably, breeding hates and rebellions? Or a million boys, doomed to idleness and despair? Or wholesale dispossession? The President acted under the compulsion of terrific necessities, and never at any time was there a doubt in his mind that such swift action would have had the approval of those great men who put such stress on life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The clamor against him for his failure to have the constitutionality of new-deal measures "guaranteed" has moved him not at all, and will continue to leave him unmoved. Doubt as to the attitude of some court will not be permitted to delay legislation imperatively needed for the relief of human misery and the cure of obvious evils. He holds that any other course is an invitation to frustration and defeat, for where is there any authority able to pass on the constitutionality of a law in advance of enactment? Federal district judges? No two can agree, and scarce a week passes by but an appellate court overrules them, and is overruled in turn by a higher tribunal. The Supreme Court itself divides 5 to 4 in important decisions.

With respect to the future, his mind is equally calm and his purpose equally clear. In the next few months the Supreme Court will hand down fresh pronouncements with respect to new-deal laws, and it is possible that the President will get "another licking."

If so, much will depend on the language of the "licking." In event that unconstitutionality is found, perhaps the decisions will point the way to statutory amendments. This is the hope. If, however, the Constitution is construed technically; if it is held that 150 years of change have no bearing on the case, and that the present generation is powerless to meet social and economic problems that were not within the knowledge of the founding fathers, and therefore not made the subject of their specific consideration, then the President will have no other alternative than to go to the country with a constitutional amendment that will lift the dead hand, giving the people of today the right to deal with today's vital issues.

A SEARCH FOR THE BEST WAY OUT

Nothing bothers Franklin Roosevelt less than charges of inconsistency. As does every other seeing man, he knows that the rush of science and invention left America's economic and social thinking far behind, and as a consequence the great crash found us absolutely unprepared. With the national mind confused, and the unanimous demand for instant remedial action unaccompanied by any agreement as to the nature of that action, there was bound to be a large amount of groping. If it be inconsistency to search for the best way out, refusing to cling to preconceptions when new conditions force their abandonment, then he welcomes the accusation.

While he lays no claim to supreme wisdom, and freely admits that blunders have been made and will continue to be made, in all probability, objectives stand clear in his mind, and he is without doubt as to ultimate goals. What he wants is not a meager American life, but a full, rich existence for every citizen, and to this end all effort will be made to raise consumption to a level with our very highest production. Restrictive controls are temporary expedients compelled by lack of a modernized system of distribution.

Refusing to dodge realities, he stands like iron in his belief that we have come to a stage in the Republic's development when unlimited, unrestricted competition must give way to cooperation, and a planned economy substituted for the haphazard, helter-skelter, dog-eat-dog system under which America has been living. The purpose of a social order, as he sees it, is to supply those who live under it with the necessities of existence in abundance, to provide work for the strong and willing, to rob old age of its terrors, and involuntary unemployment of its despairs, and, above all, to give such guaranties of social security that men will be able to go to bed at night without wondering miserably what will become of them on the morrow. Any civilization that fails in these objectives, he insists, is not a civilization that deserves to endure.

The President is without apologies for the N. R. A. It had its extremes and absurdities, but the fundamentals were, and still are, as much commandments as though they had come down from Sinai. Majority rule is the essence of the democratic principle, and it must and will be applied to business. When the decent and honorable 90 percent in an industry agree on a code of ethics, it should not be possible for an outlaw 10 percent, refusing to play the game of fair competition, to make the ethical majority choose between bankruptcy and the surrender of standards. The abolition of child labor, together with the establishment of standards for minimum wages and maximum hours, continue to stand as Roosevelt objectives.

THERE'S NO ABSOLUTE OWNERSHIP

It is not his intent to do away with the profit motive or to drive against the institution of private property. The wistful imaginings of More and Bellamy have their appeal to him, as they must to every man with any capacity for idealism, but he refuses to drug himself with ideals as an escape from reality. He does hold, however, that there is no such thing as absolute ownership, and that the right of private ownership cannot be permitted to operate against the general welfare. Following the same line of reasoning, he believes that the profit motive can be divorced from greed and brutal disregard of ethics and fair play. Courage, initiative, and enterprise are to be preserved as precious heritages, but they must be the real article, and not mere masks for rapacity.

Neither now nor at any previous time has the President set a limit on size in business. It is not his thought that industry should be put back into rompers, but it is his determination that the big fellows must give up their loaded dice and play the game fairly and squarely with the little fellows. If there is no inclusion of false values in capitalization, and if growth is not accompanied by the strangling, smothering tactics of unfair competition, the size of a business will be left to the test of economic efficiency. A vitalized, vigilant Federal Trade Commission will establish these safeguards and see that they are heeded.

With respect to banking, there is no doubt in his mind as to the need of radical reform. With 48 State banking systems, a national banking system, and the superimposition of a Federal Reserve System on both, unification must come and will come. For the present, however, he contemplates only such centralization of existing power as will enable the Government to recapture the control of money and credit. All that pending legislation proposes is the concentration in the Federal Reserve Board of authority over discount rates, reserve requirements, and open-market operations. It means, however, the recognition of a national viewpoint rather than the local viewpoint, and that is the struggle.

In requesting legislation to bar gold suits against the Government nothing was more remote from his mind than to rob any citizen of a constitutional right. What moved him was anger against a new type of racketeer. No man now holding a Government bond can prove loss, for the dollar today buys more than it did in 1926, a year accepted as an average for the period between 1920 and 1929. What these swarming litigants want, in the President's opinion, is $1.69 for their dollar, and he views it as an essentially dishonest demand.

The hue and cry against his tax program as a soak-the-rich drive has worked no change in his purpose, and he is equally unimpressed by the charge that it was a political move to gain the favor and support of left wing elements. The question of taxation has been in his mind from the first, and the message of June 19 represented the crystallized convictions that came from long thought and deep study.

A revenue measure in its essence, it is only in the manner of raising the revenue that there is an expression of his social philosophy. The principle to which his mind has run—the principle laid down in the bill—is that taxes must be levied in proportion to ability to pay and in proportion to benefits received. He has no firmer belief than that wealth does not come from individual effort, but through the cooperation of the entire community, from people in the mass. Income is the one true measure of benefits received and ability to pay, and the income tax, in his belief, must stand as the governing principle in Federal taxation.

Another formed thought of the President is in connection with the debt burden. The new bankruptcy acts, encouraging reorganizations, point a way to reduction of principal, but it is equally important that interest rates be lowered. Usury has been, and is now, an all too common practice, either boldly or through the slick expedient of adding "commissions" to the legal rate. In a letter to James A. Moffett, under date of November 1, 1934, the President virtually commanded a uniform basic interest rate of 5 percent as the start of a drive against pawnbroking methods. Today every lending agency of the Federal Government, operating in agriculture, industry, and in direct contact with the home owner, is being used, and will be used, to force interest rates down to a fair figure that takes cognizance of the debtor's ability to pay.

PEACE ON THE INDUSTRIAL FRONT

The real and true partnership of labor and management is another objective close to the President's heart. Industrial peace is as much a necessary human goal as world peace. Section 7-a in the National Recovery Act was the Government's frank recognition of the right of workers to organize and to bargain collectively with their employers through representatives of their own choosing. The Wagner bill, creating an independent and quasi-judicial National Labor Relations Board, is the necessary extension and elaboration of section 7-a, and stands now, as it will continue to stand, as a Roosevelt fundamental.

What, he asks, is a corporation itself but the organization of capital? What of the chambers of commerce, the various manufacturers' associations, and the numberless groups of employers? He holds tenaciously to the conviction that workers must have the same right, and it is equally his insistence that an honest acceptance of the law will bring about a real partnership between labor and capital instead of the shoddy, meaningless phrase that is now the rule.

If there is one new-deal agency that enlists the championship of the President more than another, it is the Securities and Exchange Commission. As a Governor he came to an exact appreciation of the evils of unbridled speculation and knew sickness of heart by reason of the extent to which the credulous were robbed of their savings. In 1 year in New York State alone $500,000,000 was filched from fools by get-rich-quick promoters and high-pressure salesmen. He stands like granite on the premise that it is a prime function of government to make the word "investment" mean what it was intended to mean, and at no point will he give an inch in his support of the S. E. C. and its right to regulate stock exchanges and to drive against swindlers.

TOWARD A NEW SOCIAL ORDER

It is a somewhat common complaint against the President that his "sunny optimism" and "sophomoric enthusiasms" blind him to the grim facts of given situations. As a matter of truth, his "sunny optimism" proceeds from a deep and abiding faith in the resources, the courage, and capacities of America and the American people. Out of his belief that we lead the world in invention, science, specialized skill, and adventurous enterprise, he believes implicitly that we can lead the world into a new social order that will free men from their fears and miseries and make them truly masters of their destiny.

In 1929, when prosperity was assumed to have been at its peak, some two and a half million men were walking the streets in search of work. Even if the country recovers in full measure, at least five or six million will be technologically disemployed. Jobs must be found for this vast army of idle. What the President conceives is a continuous and expanding program of public works that will not only provide employment for all, but lift American life to a new and nobler level. We have the resources, the brains, the energy, and all that we need is to rid ourselves of the fixations carried over from years of scarcity, the period of struggle.

Our housing is a reproach. Half of the population lives meanly. There are existing cities to be rebuilt and new cities to be built. Not only slums must go, but tenement districts and drab, dingy neighborhoods, giving way to a loveliness that will permit a release of the spirit. Municipalities are without money for the task, and to say that the Federal Government cannot step in is to continue squalor and misery.

Thousands upon thousands are living under Daniel Boone conditions, and the whole great field of sanitation offers itself for exploration and advance. For years medical research has gone cap in hand, begging pennies. What better use for money?

Few nations have given greater lip service to education than America, yet our illiteracy statistics are appalling. What more active poison can be poured into the wells of citizenship than ignorance? What the President plans is a continuance and intensification of the drive against adult illiteracy and a vigorous compaign to make education a true thing and a vital thing. Already a start has been made in the creation of the National Youth Administration. One hundred thousand high-school students will be helped to complete their courses and another hundred thousand college students will be aided. Exceptional ability will be rewarded with post-graduate years.

The President's imagination has gained force and sweep from his contact with the life and problems of 48 States. At the time the Constitution was written, men deemed America's fertility inexhaustible. If a farm petered out, there was new land to be had for the taking. Today, however, scientists declare that unless remedial measures are taken at once, another hundred years will see the reversion of part of the country to desert.

A great conservation plan, therefore, is in the making, based on Franklin Roosevelt's conviction that the Federal Government must have the right of control over all running water. Millions will be devoted to the fight against soil erosion, for the retirement of submarginal land, and for great reclamation projects, reforestation, and the redistribution and resettlement of population. At no point, however, will this feature of the program be compulsory. Just as the Republic offered homesteads in earlier days, so will the new deal present unhappy, dispirited groups with the opportunity for a new start in a new environment, leaving it to them to accept or reject.

In this vast, far-flung plan, the development of water power will be emphasized to the limit. It is the last great natural resource remaining in possession of the people, and nothing will be permitted to interfere with its full utilization. As far as possible, development will respect private investment. Contracts will be made with existing companies for transmission in order to avoid duplication of facilities, and when competition is compelled by the exigencies, purchase of private plants will be made at a fair price.

Nevertheless, there is a job to be done, and it will be done. A comparison bitter in the President's mind is that the Scandinavian countries sell current so cheaply that barns have electric light and running water, while here in the United States a full 90 percent of the rural population live by oil lamps and pumps or wells. Already the Farm Home Electric Authority, operating at present with the Tennessee Valley Authority, has succeeded in cutting the prices of electrical equipment in half and reducing interest rates on installment buying from 18 to 5 percent.

It is inevitable in all this period of radical change that the question of sovereignty will be raised. Throughout his entire adult life the President has been a champion of States' rights, but what he has been forced to see is that many festering evils lie within domains that the Commonwealths cannot reach, and that there are needed standards in various social and economic areas that must be national.

The Lindbergh Kidnaping Law, the Mann Act, and the Pure Food Act were direct invasions of State sovereignty, yet they were passed and have stood without challenge, because public opinion recognized the necessity for Federal control. If it is constitutional for the central Government to protect the Nation against kidnapers and food poisoners, the President sees no reason why the children of America should not be guarded against exploitation and the 90 percent of honest, decent business men against the wolfish competition of an indecent, dishonest 10 percent.

A BALANCED BUDGET IN SIGHT

With respect to a balanced Budget, the President holds that the best and quickest way to balance the National Budget is to balance the budget of the American citizen. Even so, receipts and expenditures are being given the ultimate in careful consideration, and the Treasury experts already see the day when the Budget can and will be balanced, and that without ignoring an essential governmental duty or human obligation. Here are the figures:

The Treasury receipts for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1934, were $3,116,000,000, and the deficit was $3,630,000,000. For 1935 receipts were $3,800,000,000 and the deficit $3,002,000,000. For the year ending July 1, 1936, receipts will be $3,992,000,000 and the deficit $3,892,000,000. For 1937 it is estimated that receipts will amount to $4,200,000,000, with a deficit of $2,000,000,000, and the estimate for 1938 is $5,000,000,000 receipts and a $5,000,000,000 deficit. In 1939, according to estimates, receipts will run well above five billions and instead of a deficit we will be able to show a half-billion plus. The United States has not neared its debt limit, and another fact stressed by the President is that the cost of the debt structure is being steadily reduced. Two years ago a little over 4 percent, its cost is already down to nearly 3 percent.

Turning away from domestic problems to world conditions, it may be said that the President is under no illusions as to the ability of a nation to live of itself and by itself in this modern universe. He knows, however, that under present conditions there is small possibility of international concert along constructive lines, but when the nations of earth come to their senses we will play our part in disarmament, in world trade, and in currency stabilization.

In the meantime the administration will not give ground before the drive of the economic nationalists and their gospel of a self-sufficient America. The work of the trade-agreement section will be continued and supported. It is the belief of the President and his advisers that both agricultural and industrial recovery can be given no greater impetus than by the recapture of foreign markets for our surpluses. The basis of the effort, however, will be reciprocity, with emphasis always on the exchange of such products as will work the minimum of harm to our own domestic market.

INTELLIGENT CRITICISM WELCOMED

Today, after the two most strenuous years ever experienced by any Chief Executive with the possible exception of Washington, Franklin Roosevelt has suffered no impairment of strength or health and retains in full degree both the courage and optimism that have been his outstanding temperamental characteristics. It is true that he has evinced irritation in connection with certain attacks of the opposition, and this has been hailed as giving the lie to his own repeated statements that he not only invited criticism but welcomed it.

The answer to this is that the President's quarrel is not with the fact of criticism but the nature of it. Sincerely believing that no public official has the gift of infallibility, it is a fundamental of his political philosophy that nothing is more helpful and corrective than a strong and intelligent opposition. It is his complaint, however, that new-deal opposition has been neither strong nor intelligent, but merely abusive and obstructive, and in support of this he cites the fact that never at any time have his opponents come forward with an alternative proposal. They attack what he has done, but not once do they say what they would have done or would do. To answer attempts to end child labor and wipe out slums by crying that it is the opening wedge for a dictatorship that will destroy free speech, free press, free assemblage, abolish trial by jury, and end in the quartering of soldiers in the homes of citizens, seems to him in no sense critical, but the last word in sabotage.

On the whole, however, he retains his amazing serenity, not underestimating his task, but addressing himself to it with all that he has of courage, conscience, and ability, sustained by the thought that the American people, after all, are his sole judges and that their judgments are based on results.

COAL INDUSTRY REGULATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under authority granted by the Senate, I insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a radio address by Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, on August 29, 1935, on regulation of the coal industry, as follows:

Before proceeding with the subject matter of my address, I desire to express my thanks to the Washington Star for its invitation to address this vast radio audience on the bituminous-coal industry of this country and the effect thereon of the Bituminous Coal Act, which I sponsored and which passed the Congress.

I was born in the shadow of a bituminous-coal tipple. I have lived all my life in the center of the bituminous-coal fields of Pennsylvania. I am not a coal producer, mine operator, or broker. I own no stocks or bonds of any coal company. I own no coal lands or coal royalties. Every member of my family is in a similar position. Therefore, I believe I am in a position to approach the problem of the coal industry from an entirely disinterested viewpoint.

I am familiar with both the working and living conditions in bituminous-coal fields, not only of Pennsylvania, but eastern Ohio and northern West Virginia.

One of my earliest recollections was seeing the miners evicted from their homes and compelled to live in tents on sand bars in the river, and this in severe winter weather.

I have witnessed all the labor troubles in the bituminous-coal fields for the past 40 years, and I have also witnessed all the horrors of the mine disasters in this territory.

Now, on the other hand, I have seen all the problems and hardships of the operators who, in my opinion, have had almost as hard and difficult a time as the miners.

The bituminous-coal industry consists of between ten and twelve thousand mines in which approximately 500,000 men are employed. These employees have approximately 2,000,000 relatives dependent upon them. A majority of our people depend upon it for heat and light, and a large part of industry depends upon it for power. It is the principal source of power for railroad transportation.

Yet in spite of the importance of this industry, upon which so much depends, it has never been operated on a sound economic basis. There have been many reasons for this, the most important being the failure or inability, for one reason or another, of the mine owners and operators to conduct their business on a profitable basis.

The owners and operators willfully, or because of force or fear, have engaged in cutthroat competition, which has resulted in the adoption of the most wasteful methods of mining, thereby accelerating the depletion of the rich fields of coal, and leaving in the ground great quantities of this valuable natural resource. This waste was brought about by their efforts to mine that coal which could be gotten out in the easiest way and at the lowest possible cost, so that they might try to keep up with the mad competitive struggle in which they were engaged. A large number of these operators were forced to do this by large consumers, such as the railroads and public utilities, who, because of their tremendous purchases of this product, imposed their will and demanded and obtained coal at prices even below the cost of production. The railroads were purchasing and consuming substantially one-third of our bituminous output, and they actually purchased coal at from a minimum of 5 cents to a maximum of $1.30 a ton below the actual production cost. These railroads, systematically and methodically, used their vast purchasing power to prey upon the coal industry by playing one operator against another, one coal field against another, and one coal against another. They shifted their tonnage purchases from one field to another until they brought the operators of the first field to their knees and compelled them to accept prices which the railroads wanted to pay. They shifted their buying from one State to another for the same purpose. They even wrecked coal companies. They did not stop at anything which would result in their obtaining coal at absurdly low prices. It is a matter of record that contracts were made by the railroads for coal at $1 a ton, 90 cents a ton, 85 cents a ton, 75 cents a ton, and in one instance one railroad had a contract in northern West Virginia as low as 52 cents a ton. At the very time that railroad companies in northern West Virginia were paying 52 cents a ton for West Virginia coal they were charging from $3.09 to $3.38 a ton for hauling coal from the Kanawha district in West Virginia to Washington, D. C. And of course, the smaller consumer had to pay that charge.

Individually the men who own and operate the coal mines in this country are just as fine citizens and intelligent men as exist in any cross section of our population, or of any industry or profession, but they simply have not been able to function collectively and conduct their business in such a manner as to operate successfully and without that mad and destructive competition in which they have always engaged.

What has been the effect upon mine owners and operators?

Many of them were unable to pay their power bills or their supply bills, and few, if any of them, were able to pay their mine workers anything like a living wage. Some of them have beaten their employees out of their pay rolls, not once or twice but as many as five times. That was because they couldn't sell their coal reserves, built up an indebtedness, and were left without hope for the future. Inevitably they had drifted or were drifting into a receivership and eventual dissolution of their assets.

These conditions which have existed in the bituminous-coal industry have had a drastic effect upon the 500,000 men who work in and about the mines, as well as their 2,000,000 dependents. These men have almost always been paid a pitiful wage, one upon which it was impossible for them and their kin to live adequately. The miner has never had anything like full-time work. In 1923 he averaged only 179 days; in 1930, 187 days; in 1931, 160 days; in 1932, 146 days; in 1933, 167 days. In most instances the pay was from $2.50 to $3 a day. The highest wage scale during the period was $5, and this usually was paid in districts with fewer working days than the average. Men were working in nearby States for as little as $1.50 per day for 12 or 14 hours' work. Even while the N. R. A. codes were in operation, the average miner did not make over $15 a week. In northern West Virginia, where many railroads were buying their fuel coal, the price per ton paid to the workers who mined the coal and loaded it into the mine cars was as low as 22½ cents. That is about one-third the amount it costs one in Washington to hire a man to carry a ton of coal from the curb or alley and place it in a coal bin; and the miner had to pay for his own explosives, buy his own tools, and keep his lights going out of that 22½ cents a ton.

WAGES 65 PERCENT OF COST

Wages consume approximately 65 percent of the cost of mining bituminous coal and are the only item of cost in which there is any flexibility. If an operator has to reduce his cost, he thinks in terms of reducing the wage cost. He cannot reduce his power cost, his timber cost, his machinery and supply cost, his taxes, or royalties. When forced to reduce his costs in an effort to keep up the destructive competition in which he is engaged, he goes out to the pit head with his tacks and tack hammer and nails up a notice on the bulletin board that wages have been reduced. The result has been that the miner and his dependents live in misery, poverty, and even serfdom.

I have actually seen these miners and their families living in hovels which would not be used by farmers as shelter for their cattle and swine.

The bituminous-coal industry was conducted with partial success under the N. R. A. for a little more than a year. This was the first time in half a century, except for the war period, that the mine owners and operators cooperated for the benefit of themselves and the miners. At the same time the consumer obtained his coal at reasonable prices. The N. R. A. code developed advantageous effects in the way of stability and brought the industry in general from insolvency to profit. Those coal operators who observed the code as to price and collective-bargaining features were able to sell their coal at a price which would cover the cost of production, pay a decent wage to labor, and yield a return on the investment. But this was not to continue. The N. R. A. Act did not contain the authority necessary to force compliance with the code by the operators. After the code had been in effect for about a year, certain producers began to cut prices in violation of the code agreements. These price cutters or "chiselers", as they became known in the trade, so unstabilized the industry that the law-abiding operators were compelled to appeal to the code authorities for permission to cut prices to figures in line with those of the violators of the code. In other words, the market was controlled by the so-called "chiseler."

A general disregard of the price provisions of the code, a more or less general attempt to evade the provisions of the code in the making of contracts and in the delivery of tonnage resulted. The entire code was jeopardized. The price structure broke down. The code became unworkable.

Such a state of affairs could only mean one thing—a return by all owners and operators to the previous cutthroat and unscrupulous competition with its resulting wasteful mining operations, cutting of wages, receiverships, etc.

Having first-hand knowledge of these failings of the owners and operators, knowing of the misery and hardships with which the miners and their dependents were faced, and feeling that this industry and this natural resource could only be saved and made available to the American public through direct action by Congress, I undertook to prepare and have enacted into law the necessary legislation. This effort has terminated in the enactment of what is known as the "Guffey-Snyder bituminous-coal bill."

The legislation was formulated for the purpose of curing the evils which have played havoc with this industry, so that the owners and operators might make a fair profit on their investments, so that the miners who toil to produce this valuable product might receive fair wages and they and their dependents might enjoy decent living conditions, and so that the consumers—the great American public—might always have a dependable supply of fuel at reasonable prices. The legislation, in my judgment, will accomplish these objectives through its provisions for stabilization, cooperative marketing, conservation, and taxes.

This law provides for the appointment of a National Coal Commission by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commission will regulate and manage the industry in the interest and for the welfare of the entire Nation, but as private enterprise and with due regard for consumer, investor, and workman. Working under the Commission and subject to its authority at all times will be district boards consisting of duly elected representatives of the producers, marketing agencies, and labor. Thus, the plan is most practical in that the Commission will have under it and cooperating with it practical coal men—operators and miners—who have a complete knowledge of the business. This insures intelligent and successful administration.

These district boards will be organized with the aid of the Commission, and it will be their function to fix minimum prices as provided for in the bill.

Generally speaking, each district board will be supreme in its district, but subject, of course, to the approval of its actions by the Commission. Where district boards are required to act in conjunction with other district boards, as in fixing minimum prices, the Commission may and will take steps to avoid conflicting action by such boards. Producers and all parties in interest are given the right to appeal to the Commission from any action of the district boards. Appeals from even orders of the Commission itself may be taken in courts of appeals.

UNIFORM ACCOUNT SYSTEMS

The boards, in fixing minimum prices, must take into consideration wages, operating costs, sales profits, losses, and the like. This will not be a difficult task, because wages, which consume 65 percent of all coal-production costs, will be definitely known at all times and the Commission will compel producers to maintain uniform systems of accounting covering costs. The methods of determining these prices are specifically set forth in the bill and must be followed by the district boards. In addition, the prices arrived at by the district boards must be confirmed by the Commission before they become effective. If the Commission does not agree with the prices proposed by the boards, it is obligated to modify or disapprove them. The ultimate result will be that prices fair to all concerned will be established.

The bill provides for the formation of a code and contains specific provisions making the competitive practices discussed previously, together with others not discussed but nevertheless important unfair methods of competition.

It imposes a tax on the sale or other disposition of soft coal of 15 percent of the sale price, or in the case of captive coal, which is coal produced for large corporations by subsidiary companies, of the fair market value thereof. All those coal producers who join and live up to the code and its provisions will receive a credit or drawback of 90 percent of the amount of the tax. This tax will be productive of substantial revenue—it is estimated that it will produce approximately $10,000,000 per annum, which is more than enough to pay all expenses faced by the Government because of the administration of the act. Of course, those coal operators who fail to sign the code or live up to its provisions will not receive the 90-percent credit or drawback. Should there be any such, they will be handicapped in their efforts to market their coal in competition with those operators who comply because of this additional expense. Personally, I feel that a very few, if any, of them will assume this extra burden.

The bill also directs the Commission to study methods of production control and to report its findings and conclusions to the next Congress. This is important in that should a satisfactory method of production control be found, it would assist very much in the stabilization problem. The Congress will consider this report and if it concurs with the findings of the Commission, amend the present legislation.

What will this bill do for the labor that works in and about the mines?

It will provide a better living wage with which these 500,000 men may take care of their 2,000,000 dependents, all of whom most of the time have lived close to starvation. It will restore to these men and their families their rights as American citizens by bringing to an end in some mining communities conditions which in fact made serfs of them. It will do this through the labor provisions of the bill.

By the terms of the bill and the provisions of the code, employees in the industry have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. They are to be free from interference, restraint, or coercion of employers in the designation of representatives or in self-organization for collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. No one employed or seeking employment is to be required to join a company union. Employees are guaranteed the right of peaceful assemblage for the discussion of principles of collective bargaining. They cannot be required as a condition of employment to live in company houses or to trade at a compahy store. Maximum and daily hours of labor will be agreed upon by producers of more than two-thirds of the annual tonnage and representatives of more than one-half of the mine workers employed, and such agreements must be accepted by code members.

Wage agreements in any district or group of districts of more than two-thirds of the annual tonnage in the district or districts involved and the representatives of a majority of the mine workers involved are to be accepted as minimum wages by the code members operating in the district or districts involved.

A bituminous-coal labor board is provided for and is given power to conduct elections for the purpose of determining who are the freely chosen representatives of the employees, to offer its services as mediators in certain disputes, and, upon written submission of a controversy by the parties thereto, to arbitrate the matter submitted.

I believe these labor provisions guarantee rights to which the workers are entitled and that they will do much to relieve the constant disruption of soft-coal mining caused by dissatisfaction of the workers and consequent strikes.

What effect will this legislation have upon the consumer and how is he protected?

Little, if any, increase in the price of bituminous coal to the consumer will result from the operation of this act. I believe that increased efficiency of operation which will be brought about by this plan will reduce the cost of production in an amount greater than the tax imposed. In my judgment, under the methods prescribed for fixing prices, all operators will be compelled to carry on their business with the greatest possible efficiency. The prices of coal at the mine are coordinated and averaged in accordance with the operating costs of all the mines in the respective districts. The owner whose operating costs are high will have as an incentive for efficiency a prospect of a better profit if he becomes more efficient. As he does this the general average of operating costs of the mines in his district necessarily will be lowered and the minimum price for coal at the mine thereby reduced. This will inure to the benefit of the consumer.

The Coal Commission is authorized to establish maximum prices at a uniform increase above the minimum prices, the amount of the increase to be such as will represent a reasonable return or profit above the average total cost.

A consumers' counsel is provided to represent the consumers of soft coal. He is to be independent of the district boards, the Commission, the Labor Board, and the industry. He is prohibited from being connected with the coal industry or competing allied industries, and is given his own assistants and appropriation. It is his duty to appear and represent the consumer in proceedings before the Commission. He will have compulsory process to obtain testimony and is given authority to institute proceedings and investigations by the Coal Commission.

The bill requires the Commission to hear complaints and to take action to remedy abuses found whenever substantial complaint is made by consumers that soft-coal prices are excessive.

The consumers' interests have been well protected, indeed.

This Guffey-Snyder bituminous-coal bill is a rational formula for the stabilization of a much-oppressed national-resource industry. The importance of this industry in the economic scheme of things in our country warrants this direct action by the Congress. It is my judgment and belief that it will prove most beneficial to all the people of this Nation.

FAIR WEATHER FOR FARMERS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is always gratifying to be able to refer to an administration policy which transcends the bounds of partisan politics and becomes the object of support by citizens regardless of party. I refer to the Roosevelt administration's farm program, and my evidence for calling it nonpartisan lies not merely in the conduct of the program itself but in the results as given to the Nation recently by an unquestionably unbiased nonpartisan authority.

There has come to hand today the August 24 issue of Editor and Publisher, which includes a special 36-page supplement devoted to the present condition of agriculture and the prospects for the immediate future. This supplement is, the magazine says, the first of its kind. It is one of the most amazing and encouraging reports it has been my privilege to read in a long time. Let me quote two paragraphs from an editorial introducing it:

In the reports from close observers of agriculture the country over, published in this number, the A. A. A. program is not treated as a political issue. For the farmer it has overwhelmingly attained its purpose. Marginal land is out of production. Rich acreage has been planted to feed crops, which a bountiful season has prospered. Fat stock is going to market in far smaller numbers than before the limitation was set, but commanding prices that make the smaller herds and droves of no moment to the seller. For the first time in many years the farmer and stockman is in the driver's seat, making up in one lush year all that nature and politics and bad management had lost him in many. Secretary Wallace says that the farmers' income available for spending on commodities has doubled since 1932. * * *

* * * The present fact is that the farm population, comprising one-third of the whole, is now prepared to spend money for urgently needed supplies. This is good news for sellers and advertisers of commodities. To make the opportunity clear to advertiser, agency, and publisher, Editor and Publisher herewith presents a national survey, the first of its kind to be prepared, and the heartening statement of the Secretary of Agriculture. The situation as depicted here proposes sound encouragement. * * *

The banner headline on page 1 states the theme, "Farm come-back over whole Nation now opening up vast rich markets." There follows an article by the Secretary of Agriculture in which he summarizes in two brief paragraphs the purpose and the accomplishments of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Here is the purpose:

The Adjustment Act grew out of the theory that general recovery could be hastened by increasing the purchasing power of farmers. It was agreed that the way to increase farm purchasing power was to correct the severe and increasing disparity between the prices of agricultural and other commodities.

The results, in general terms and without, of course, ignoring the influence of other recovery measures and of the weather, have been as follows:

Disparity between the prices of agricultural and other commodities has been narrowed; farm purchasing power has been increased; the national economic emergency has been relieved.

Secretary Wallace goes on to specify that the index of farm purchasing power, considering the pre-war years as 100, has gone from a low of 49 in early 1933 to a high early this summer of 87; that farm cash income has gone from four and one-third billion dollars in 1932 to an estimated $6,700,000,000 for 1935; that income left to the farmer for living expenditures had more than doubled between 1932 and 1934.

The Secretary also cites a study of railroad shipments which shows how increased farm income in the southeast has definitely stimulated increased industrial activity and income in the northeast, with notable increases in shipments of every conceivable manufactured product.

In short—

The Secretary concludes—

the increase in farm purchasing power has been reflected, as the theory of the Agricultural Adjustment Act stipulated, in increased industrial and commercial activity and in putting city wage earners back to work.

The remainder of this 36-page supplement of Editor and Publisher is given over to articles by newspaper correspondents and others and to advertisements of newspapers from every section of the country testifying to the fact that farmers, so long in the trough of depression, are at last leading the Nation back to recovery. The high spots of the story are summarized in a box on page 2 under the headlines "Farm Market Ripe for Selling. Here Is the Story in Brief."

It looks like the farmer's wife is going to wear silk stockings again this year. Secretary Henry A. Wallace writes for Editor and Publisher that farmers' income available for buying commodities has more than doubled since 1932. The customarily wary United States Crop Reporting Board, through its expert chief, Joseph A. Becker, ventures that with the single exception of wheat, the outlook for all principal crops is highly satisfactory from a national standpoint as regards food supply and from the farmer's standpoint as regards the jingle in the sock.

This is how experts in every section, invited to speak out by Editor and Publisher, tell the glad story:

Northeast: Milk prices to farmers 100 percent above depression low. Apple crop 50 percent to 100 percent (in spots) above 1934. Poultry outlook best in years. Potatoes, fruit, hay swell.

Mississippi Valley: Minnesota farm rebuilding may touch $100,000,000. Wheat crop cut by rust 45 percent, but hay, rye, barley, others almost double. Hogs were $3.50 hundredweight January 1934, and $11.35 hundredweight August 1935. Farm income for 6 months, $135,000,000—a 30-percent gain.

Iowa sees half billion farm income, the biggest since 1930. The hog market booms. Corn gains 55 percent over 1934.

Central Illinois has satisfactory corn, while whole State's production is up 60 percent. Hay crop largest since 1927 and apples will stack up higher than since 1931. Peaches are rolling nicely. Grain forage brings real grins, and corn, wheat, oats, barley total bushelage doubles 1934.

Ohio's cherry, peach, grape yield grand. Vegetable farmers have a ready market for a good yield.

Indiana's diversified crops are way above average. An estimated farm income of $500,000,000 boosts the 1934 total 30 percent. Car purchases up 25 percent.

Peaches and apples are rosy in Michigan and all soft fruit meant a good net.

Wisconsin's $300,000,000 compares with a depression low of $189,000,000. Grain, tobacco, fruit, berries, eggs all above generous hopes. Milk prices excellent, with plenty outlets. Fields are green—lakes brimming.

North Dakota reports 44,000,000 bushels wheat despite handicaps. Flax, rye, potatoes, sugar beets very strong. Prospects, say North Dakotans, of $1,000,000 farm income. With feed to spare, they're scouring the West for hungry animals to eat it.

South Dakota has 300,000,000 bushels of durum wheat, only 2 percent below the 10-year average. Forage crops are unequaled in 25 years. Rain brought hat-high corn, and car registrations double in some sections.

Nebraska stockmen are riding the crest. One hundred and sixty-two million dollars this year for beef and hogs through Omaha stockyards, $150,000,000 last year. Machinery sales up 50 percent. A farm bought at $130 an acre sold the next day for $175.

Kansas in 20 words: Wheat up 8 cents a bushel; corn, 7 cents; cattle, $3 hundredweight; hogs, $5; lambs, 75 cents; eggs, 10 cents a dozen.

South: Kentucky tobacco at 13,000,000 is 5 percent better. Forty-five distillers scrambling for Kentucky corn. Federally pegged cotton prices will swell income, with better production methods aiding. Missouri's emergency crops proving boon. Texas has largest feed crop in history. Oklahoma poultry is a big item, and citrus satisfactory. Spinach, cabbage, sweet corn bursting pocketbooks. Weevil damage lighter, and A. A. A. even less—they are saying—laughingly admitting its benefits.

Mountain States: Montana's Gibson Dam and other irrigation projects in region zooming land and crop values. A $64,000,000 income will mean 42 percent increase over 1934. Stockmen are smiling over additional $10,000,000. Wheat yield through this section is high, oats sometimes double. Cash income of Colorado livestock 25 percent more than 1934 so far. Forage and pasture conditions best in years.

Pacific Northwest: Wheat yield 10 percent up; peas assuming big proportions. Apple quality is high, and soft fruit generally going at higher prices.

Southwest: California's luxury products will rival old-time prices as citrus, avocado, wine, walnut industries prosper. Deciduous fruit best in years, says chamber of commerce. "Smart money" said to be buying up land in southwest coast. California expects $625,000,000 1935 farm income.

And that isn't all.

Proceeding through the special supplement, we begin to see the significance of this increased farm income. Here is a full-page "ad" in which the Des Moines Register and Tribune asks—

A half billion dollars * * * what's that to you? Iowa's half billion dollar 1935 farm income means more than money in farmers' pockets; * * * it means surging business in hundreds of Iowa cities and towns, humming factories, busy stores, a parade of glistening new cars upon concrete highways, the buying of scores of new necessities and luxuries, * * * it means $65,000,000 more to spend than in 1934.

And on the opposite page we find J. S. Russell, farm editor of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, observing that the prospective half-billion-dollar income for Iowa in 1935 is the largest since the prosperous year of 1930. He continues:

The new 5-year peak in Iowa farm income represents tangible evidence of increased farm prices, which have been working upward the last year as surpluses were wiped out. The Government programs and the diminution of supplies due to the drought have been factors in this reversal of the trend of a couple of years ago.

With prices at new high levels for recent years, the production is now undergoing expansion back to normal levels. Favorable crop conditions this year are an important factor, and, even though farm prices recede somewhat in coming months from present levels, the increased production is expected to more than offset any declines. * * *

Mr. Russell adds that Iowa's farm-equipment factories have been doing their best business since 1929; that for the first 6 months of 1935 the sale of automobiles in Iowa showed an increase of 75 percent over the same period of 1934, even though 1934 was better than either 1932 or 1933. He notes a trend toward farm repairs, improvements, and new buildings. In short, he lists the numerable pleasing results of the fact that the Iowa farmer's buying power has advanced from half of pre-war to better than 90 percent.

To the east in Indiana the story is the same. Here is a full-page ad for the Indianapolis News pointing out the amazing increases in Indiana farm income this year and adding the statement, "Indiana farmers are able to buy and ready to buy." An advertisement for the Indianapolis Star sings the same tune, observes that Indiana farm income in 1935 will exceed the total of 1934 by 30 percent, and links together the fact that Indiana farmers are spending money with the fact that industry in Indiana is busy. The situation is summed up in an article by Bert Henley, market editor for the Indianapolis Star, who writes:

Indiana farmers are writing their semiannual financial statements in black ink this year, and the change, according to their own way of expressing it, is "highly gratifying."

Since the beginning of the year there has been a slow but steady improvement in marketing conditions as well as in prices for almost all products the farmer has to sell, and farmer income has had a generous boost. Estimates on the amount of increase in Indiana farm income vary according to the type of farming, and range from a modest gain of slightly more than 25 percent for the crop farmer to more than 100 percent for the farmer who depends largely upon the production and sale of cattle for his income.

The case for Nebraska is summed up by Walter E. Christenson, managing editor Omaha World-Herald. He remarks that the people of the plains during the devastating drought of 1934 "thought they heard in the whistling hot winds the death rattle of midwestern agriculture. What they really heard", he points out, "was the boom of returning prosperity." Then he cites the record: Bank clearings from 10 to 20 percent above 1934; farm-implement sales in Omaha 50 percent above 1934; retail sales from 7 to 10 percent ahead. And Mr. Christenson asks:

If so much improvement has followed the worst drought here in Nebraska's history, what will happen when the 1935 income starts rolling in?

He answers his own question:

When you travel through the State now you see hay fields dotted with stacks which were bare a year ago; bins filled with grain which were empty then; tall, green, silk-dotted corn in fields that were barren in 1934. Pigs in the pasture are fat and sleek. Yearlings on the range again have plenty of grass.

One of these days the 1935 money will start pouring in real volume into Nebraska's towns and cities. When that happens, even the most optimistic will rub their eyes. The plain fact is that Nebraska's 1935 production, as estimated today, multiplied by current market prices, will give the State one of the best incomes of its history. * * *

The picture is reflected in the land market. A month ago a Nebraska estate in liquidation tried to sell a medium-quality farm. The best offer, $60 an acre, was rejected. Two weeks later, after being readvertised, it brought $75. The other day an Omaha man bought a farm in Omaha territory at $130 an acre. The next day he was offered $165.

Those are signs of the times.

Mr. Christenson's testimony is given additional weight by the advertisements of Omaha papers in this same supplement. The Omaha Bee-News, for example, takes a page to explain that "Nebraska comes back with a bang—purchasing power at a high peak and steadily improving."

The story for Kansas is ably told by the well-known Roy A. Roberts, managing editor of the Kansas City Star:

The blessing of rain in the drought-stricken Southwest and the aid of Government—

Mr. Roberts' article reveals—have helped the great southwestern farming country to stage one of the greatest physical and mental comebacks in contemporary farm history.

Mr. Roberts continues:

Competent observers estimate that the crop income in this section, including the States of Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma, will be at least double that of last year. * * *

The price side of the picture contains as much food for satisfaction. Wheat is 8 cents a bushel higher in price than a year ago; corn is 27 cents a bushel more; cattle, $3 a hundred pounds higher; lambs are up 75 cents a hundred; and eggs, 10 cents a dozen. Butterfat has lost a cent a pound.

With the increased production and the improved prices, the southwestern farmers, also beneficiaries of tens of millions of dollars in adjustment payments from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the Government, see the beginning of a chance to get back on their feet.

In this connection, the new rehabilitation program of the Government is presenting an interesting angle. For example, there were 16,000 Kansas farm families on work relief last fall—there was no dole or direct Government relief in Kansas; beneficiaries of Government aid took it out in work on Government projects.

This summer there is not a single bona fide farm family in the State on relief. Six thousand of the original 16,000 families financially wrecked by the drought of last summer have become self-sustaining again through the improved conditions since the rains. The other 10,000 farmers are being rehabilitated by loans from the Government Resettlement Administration.

Further evidence from Kansas comes from the advertisement of the Kansas City Journal-Post, which, under a cartoon of the farmer dancing in the field, avers that—

The farmers are cheerful again in the Kansas City area.

Over in the Mountain States what early this spring looked like a dismal outlook has changed to one of great promise, according to E. M. McKim, of Western Farm Life. He writes:

The cash income from livestock and livestock produce during the first quarter of 1935, when much of the fattened stock is marketed, was 24 percent greater than during the same period of 1934.

Range and pasture conditions are excellent in most of the territory, assuring plenty of feed for livestock and a good carry-over of hay for winter feeding. With prices for livestock maintaining high levels, the cattle and sheep raiser is in an excellent position. The scrub stock have been culled out of his herds, thanks to governmental emergency cattle and sheep buying last year. With the demand for good feeder stock strong and with his herds going into the coming winter in good flesh, the producer of livestock bids fair to reap handsome profits from his activities during the coming months.

Out on the Pacific coast the report comes that smart people are investing their money in farm land. John E. Pickett, editor of the Pacific Rural Press, tells the story this way:

"Smart money", which has been quietly going into California farm land for more than a year. These men feel that farm land is the soundest investment of all, and they are encouraged by the fact that agriculture in the Pacific coast region has made the best recovery of any major industry, and has a cheerful outlook ahead.

Here's official testimony on that trend:

The eleventh district office of the Farm Credit Administration at Oakland, comparing sales which have come within its official notice, reports that California farm sales for the first 6 months of 1935 are 115 percent more numerous than for the first 6 months of 1934, and the price of land per acre is rising month by month. Exact comparisons on this are difficult, but it is a published fact that the 115 percent increase in farms sold represented an increase of value of more than 300 percent, and down payments are nearly twice as large as they were a year ago.

This optimism is supported by the fact that the best farm year since 1929 is unfolding in California. Of the more than 180 crops which the State produces in commercial quantities, there are almost no crop failures and very few of the overlarge crop surpluses which are sometimes as disastrous as failures.

The winter rains and snow storages for irrigation helped this. Precipitation was the best in 45 years, and there were no important weather complications to destroy any crops. The United States Department of Agriculture estimates show that farm income in California for the first 5 months of 1935 is standing 33.8 percent higher than for the first 5 months of 1934, which was considered a year of great improvement, and if two-thirds of that rate of gain should be maintained for the balance of 1935 the total income from agriculture in the State will be approximately $625,000,000, or an impressive average of more than $5,000 income per farm.

Incidentally costs of production for farmers have not yet returned to the 1929 level, so the spendable income which the United States Department of Agriculture calculates by deducting from the gross farm values the cost of production, plus value of the crops retained for home consumption, may well give the farmer the most spending money which he has had in 7 years—certainly the most in 6.

Retail sales show a pulse quickening from this blood transfusion from agriculture. Automobile sales have increased 79 percent in California during the first 5 months of 1935 and truck sales are 48 percent higher. The major part of this gain is in rural territory, where there is almost no unemployment as compared with the cities where those on relief gravitate, and a much higher average income per family. * * *

The rural cities also have a commanding lead over such cities as Los Angeles and San Francisco in retail sales per capita. Last September the Bank of America published a study showing that the agricultural towns of the State headed the list in per capita sales of such products as food, general merchandise, automotive, apparel, furniture and household, lumber and building materials and all groups. The large cities led only in the per capita expenditures in eating places.

Even the highly conservative Los Angeles Times seems to share the feeling that this year and the year ahead look appreciably better than 1932, for Mr. Harold M. Finley, of that newspaper, says that California agriculture—

Both in the fields in which it has a minimum of competition and those in which its crops share the fortunes of the country's staples, California is sitting more prettily this summer than at any other time since the depression. Prosperity seems to have rounded that corner in California insofar as agriculture is concerned.

Down in Texas, according to Victor H. Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas Morning News, they are expecting a bumper 1935–36 season with the increased farm income by a reflection in a pronounced business upturn. Back east in Pennsylvania, a full-page advertisement for 14 of the smaller city newspapers announces "Expected fall advances based on strong economic foundations in Pennsylvania." The advertisement goes on to speak of general advances in production values and industrial pay rolls and employment.

Anyone who will recall the news from South Dakota in the summer of 1934 will recall a story of misery and suffering. According to the Argus Leader, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota has made a romantic come-back through the combined help of the weather and the Federal Government. Mr. Ralph O. Hillgren, of that newspaper, after citing the crop and farm income gains this year, mentions their significance to general business in this fashion:

New-car registrations in June trebled the number for the same month in 1934, and for the first 6 months were more than double the total in a similar period in 1934. South Dakota was second in the percentage of increase in car sales for the first half of the year.

Farm-implement branches at Sioux Falls have been unable to supply the demand for tractors and other farm machinery. Some of the large houses have experienced increases up to 200 percent.

Furniture dealers in Sioux Falls report business increases over last year as high as 100 percent. Amusement places have better receipts, railroad passenger traffic is greater, and even food dealers assert business is steady to 25 percent greater.

In Montana Mr. Lester Call, editor of the Montana Farmer, testifies that Montana is not only maintaining a leading position among agricultural States but is striding along toward real prosperity. He writes that only five States enjoyed a greater percent increase in cash farm income in 1934 over the previous year than did Montana. The figure for Montana was 42 percent. This year, with large crops, the prospect is equally bright. Results are shown in the fact that new motor-truck registrations increased 105 percent in Montana last year and automobile registrations for the first half of this year increased 100 percent.

For the Northwest as a whole, the story of returning farm prosperity is told in the advertisement of the Minneapolis Journal and in the article by Charles F. Collisson, farm editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, who declares that a trade revival is already in full swing up there as a result of a tremendous come-back of northwestern agriculture.

Over in the Corn Belt again for a moment I notice an article by Frank Ridgeway, farm editor of the Chicago Tribune, which states that the sun seems to be shining once more in more ways than one on Illinois farmers; and my eye is struck by advertisements of the Daily Pantagraph of Bloomington, Ill., and the Journal-Transcript, of Peoria, Ill. The latter advertisement puts the situation this way:

Revived business conditions in all agricultural States are not only apparent in America's richest farm belt, of which Peoria is the heart, but in Peoria itself, where more than 10,000 workmen are busily engaged in making farm implements to help harvest this year's crop. Total industrial employment in Peoria is highest in history. Because of these improved conditions, the buying power of its neighboring farmers and city workers make Peoria an excellent market for your products.

Over in Ohio the situation is neatly summed up in an article by the editor of the Sandusky Star-Journal, Mr. Earl F. Walrath, who quotes a local farm authority on the farmer's condition as follows:

He is out of the night and the sun is up. The farmers of this region can now begin to see where they can pay their taxes and some of their interest. They see where they can talk over, in a friendly way, their affairs with their creditors again. The farmer's wife is beginning to look at new hats and new dresses.

Up in Michigan, according to an advertisement for the Booth Newspapers, Inc.—

Recent industrial activities in Michigan have made this State the no. 1 market of the Nation for many months. Now, bumper crops and good prices add to this prestige. Michigan's varied agricultural interests are enjoying prosperous times.

In my own State of Kentucky, according to Mr. Paul Hughes, of the Louisville Times, both farmers and retail merchants are jubilant over the prospects for fall and winter trade. The Louisville Board of Trade predicts that farmers will have as large an income this year and last year and much more to spend, because a large percentage of them have taken care of the debts that pressed them during the depression.

For the South as a whole, of course, the story is sensationally satisfying. The picture in the Cotton Belt is ably described in this Editor and Publisher supplement by Mr. William Johnson, of the Arkansas Democrat, of Little Rock, Ark., when he writes:

From Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas eastward to the Carolinas the Cotton Belt is a lively scene of mounting farm income, revived business, restored confidence, and renewed planning for the future.

The spectacular recovery of cotton in 1933 and 1934 from the depression-smashed price of 1932 released a pent-up tide of buying that has swung the South into the forefront of the climb of all agricultural sections back to normal conditions. * * *

Even though returns from the 1935 crop should be no larger than from last year's harvest, there is certain to be a stronger uplift imparted by it to agricultural and business recovery. This is because producers have now got their debts reduced and comfortably adjusted and most of their delinquent taxes paid. They will have more to spend from each cotton dollar in 1935 than they had from any since the depression came.

That's why confidence is high today in the Cotton Belt. It's refurnishing its homes, remodeling its dwellings, building needed new ones, and again equipping itself for normal, happy living. And it sees every prospect of going farther with this pleasant enterprise on the crop of 1935 than it has on any since 1929.

The effect of this increase in farm buying power the country over is summarized from point of view of the farm-machinery industry by Mr. Harry G. Davis, director of research of the Farm Equipment Institute. Mr. Davis writes as follows:

Recovery of agriculture has been reflected sharply in the volume of trade in industries which deal exclusively with farmers. The farm equipment industry, whose sales dropped to 28 percent of normal in 1932, noted a pick-up when farm prices started up in 1933, and its volume went up to about 29 percent of normal in that year. In 1934 it reached 47 percent. Sales for the first half of 1935 indicated that this year's volume will be approximately 75 percent of normal.

Taken in all, the situation of agriculture is most favorable. There is a spirit of optimism in rural districts that has been lacking for many months. Demand for goods of all kinds is most active and modernization has reached the farm to the degree that farm people are now buying very much the same class of goods city people buy.

All this seems to be a wonderful change to have come about in such a short time, but really there is nothing remarkable about it. It is not an overnight change, but the result of a number of factors which have been operating to improve the economic status of agriculture. Among those might be mentioned the Federal Government's agricultural policy, the wide-spread drought of the past 2 years, and the general improvement in industrial employment, all three of which have had their influence in more nearly balancing the supply and demand for agricultural products and bringing about a higher price level. Cash rental and benefit payments have given farmers ready money, while the Farm Credit Administration has eased, if not entirely removed, their pressing debt burdens.

Finally the Editor and Publisher sought the testimony of the country's leading farm journals. In introducing this summary, Editor and Publisher says:

Concrete evidence that the farmer is leading the country out of the depression can be found in the following symposium of farm journal editors—experts in their field. The general expression of these men, representing farm papers in every section of the Nation, indicates the long pent-up demand for goods by the American farmer is going to break forth this fall with an unprecedented sale of merchandise. The farmer is harvesting his automobile, washing machine, and scores of other products. He is coming to town with money to spend, judging from the optimistic and hard-boiled facts put forth by editors in the farm field.

There is room to record only a few of these expert appraisals. Here are four of them:

C. V. Gregory, editor Prairie Farmer:

Farm income is made up of price times volume. When volume is too large prices go too low and total income is decreased. We have been through that. Last year the drought reduced volume too drastically. Some reduction would have increased income. Too much reduction kept the increase from being as large as it would have been with large yields. This year, according to present prospects, will be just about right. Grain yields in the eight Middle Western States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Minnesota, and the Dakotas will be more than double last year, but still closely enough in line with domestic needs so that prices should not go too low.

Ray Yarnell, editor Capper's Farmer:

Middle Western agriculture is definitely better off than it was a year ago. That is the verdict of farmers themselves. Crops are better, income is larger, debts are lower, optimism is stronger. The Capper farm papers recently sent questionnaires to a large number of farmers scattered throughout the Middle Western States, from Ohio to Colorado and from Minnesota to Texas. More than two-thirds of the farmers replying said they were definitely better off than they were a year ago, and the same percentage felt they were definitely coming out of the depression. By almost exactly the same ratio they reported that farmers they knew owed less current debts and that trade in small towns was decidedly improved. * * *

L. L. Rummel, editor Ohio Farmer:

The year 1935 is a banner season. I don't recall in 20 years when our State has looked so luxuriant in all its fields and orchards, and surely not in 5 years has the farmer spent so much for machinery, fence, paint, roofing, building, electric service, motor vehicles, and other farm necessities as he is doing this season. A drive through the country anywhere, a chat with a county-seat merchant or the mail carrier, a survey of machinery merchants or power companies—all bear testimony that our farmers are back in the market in a big way with cash to pay. * * *

Sam R. McKelvie, publisher Nebraska Farmer:

One farm woman in Nebraska said last week, "My new washing machine is right out there", pointing to a field of wheat just ready for harvest. A farmer in another part of the State made this remark: "I'll begin harvesting my new automobile day after tomorrow." So the farm people themselves think of their crops and livestock in terms of merchandise. Plenty is the key to farm purchasing power, and the indications are that Nebraska farmers will have a normal crop or better this year.

DELAY IN SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, at this hour of 11:20, inasmuch as some 40 minutes ago there was dispatched to the House a request to return the papers in House Concurrent Resolution 38, relating to adjournment, I inquire whether or not anything which now lies on the table has been received from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have heard it stated here tonight, and I have heard it privately, that this marks the first instance in a long list of precedents which has never been broken, of a House of Congress declining a request for the return of papers in a matter of this kind when such request is made to it by the other branch of the Congress.

It is a very fitting occasion for this to happen. It so chances that it is occurring at a time when the consequences are to be visited upon the farmers of the United States. The wheat and cotton farmers of the United States represent a majority of the farmers, and are in a position today where their earnings amount to one-half of what they did in the year 1929. The year 1929 is referred to as the first year of the Hoover depression, and yet in the year 1929 farm income was $2 as compared with $1 today.

Mr. President, there is a very sad picture to be drawn. Let me refer to the State of Texas. We all know that is the main cotton State of the South. It lies to the west of the State where I live. Part of my life was spent in the State of Texas. In the State of Texas the cotton yield is about 3,000,000 bales. This action tonight will cost the farmers of the State of Texas $50,000,000 on cotton; from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 on wheat. The farmers of the State of Texas are tonight being penalized from $65,000,000 to $75,000,000 as a result of what is occurring here between the two Houses.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the clerk to read a telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the telegram, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate:

Will you not be willing to stay here an hour or two extra so that our leave bills can come up under motion? This will give justice to 350,000 employees and only means a small amount of time to you.

Respectfully,

E. CLAUDE BABCOCK,
President American Federation of Government Employees.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he would not be willing for us to take up House bill 8459, which relates to annual leave for Government employees?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, undoubtedly I will not. I have already stated publicly that at the coming session of Congress in January I shall be glad to cooperate with the Committee on Civil Service to take up the bill and consider it thoroughly, and deal fairly with all the employees of the Government; but I am not going to agree to the consideration of the bill at this late hour when it means a 4-day week for some of the employees and for others no leave of any kind, nature, or description. I am not willing to do that. If the Senator endeavors to bring up the bill, of course, I shall do my best to defeat it.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean to intimate that the Civil Service Committee did not give the bill the consideration it deserves?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I am not making any intimation against the Civil Service Committee. I am exercising my right as a member of that committee and as a Member of the Senate to object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course I can sympathize with the Senator and I respect his rights. However, I feel that the employees of the Government are entitled to the sick leave provided by the bill, but if the Senator takes another view, that is all right.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from New York believe in a 4-day week and only 5 and a half hours a day for the 4 days?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; for everybody.

Mr. McKELLAR. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator from Louisiana for yielding to me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to say that while the Senator from New York was addressing the Senator from Tennessee I have been advised that the House voted 125 to 103 to return the resolution to the Senate. Now they have called for a yea-and-nay vote, and probably that is being done for the purpose of having the hands of the clock reach 12 o'clock before a decision can be reached. If they do that, the people of Texas, the farmers of Texas, the cotton farmers of Texas, are going to find out in the next 25 minutes whether or not they are going to be penalized $50,000,000 out of their pockets and $20,000,000 out of the pockets of the wheat farmers.

In 35 minutes the farmers of Texas—Texas, remember! I am going over there and tell them about it, too, believe me. I am going to Texas. I am going to Texas and tell the people of Texas that here tonight a gold mine has been taken away from them.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator speak a little louder? I cannot hear him. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. What is the name of the Senator who just interrogated me? [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am very reluctantly compelled to admit that the oratory of the Senator has completely submerged me. I can understand why he questions the Chair about my identity.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yielded only to enable him to tell me his name and not to tell me anything else. [Laughter.]

I was conferring a few days ago with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. He said to me that in the State of Nevada in 1 year, or possibly 2 years, they produce gold enough and other minerals enough in that State to yield somewhere between $50,000,000 and $75,000,000. That seemed like a terrible lot of gold. Think of the gold mines of that State, rich in sluices of ore, yielding $75,000,000 of gold. Think of what is being done tonight. There is being taken from the pockets of the cotton farmers of the State of Texas tonight at least $15 a bale on 3,000,000 bales of cotton—$45,000,000 of the coin of the realm that ought to be going into the pockets of the distressed cotton farmers of Texas.

Whether that shall be done depends upon whether the House breaks a precedent which has stood since this country was first born. If they see fit to break that precedent, they do it in the teeth of the knowledge that they are inflicting losses of from $65,000,000 to $75,000,000 upon the cotton farmers of the State of Texas.

There are other States which will be affected as well. Oklahoma produces something like 1,250,000 bales of cotton, perhaps more than that. Oklahoma will be penalized millions of dollars.

Louisiana? Of course Louisiana can stand it better than any other State. [Laughter.] We have blessings there that other States do not have. The State of Louisiana can somehow or other make it through. We do not ask you to consider us in this matter. We are a philanthropic State. We are a patriotic Commonwealth. We need very little help from the outside.

As a matter of fact we had rather not have any outside help. We do not need any help and we do not want any help. We are able to finance ourselves.

A short time ago, several months ago, pronouncements went out here that the State of Louisiana would not receive any of this Federal money. Has anybody heard anybody crying about it down in Louisiana? Suppose we never get a dime of it. It is not going to inflict any great harm on us, because we learned to take care of ourselves and of a large part of the rest of the United States long, long ago.

Go over to Alabama: what is Alabama going to owe to this? Suppose this thing takes off $15 a bale on every farmer's cotton in Alabama tonight. How much is that going to cost the farmers in Alabama? I do not know what they are allowed under this compromise Bankhead Act. I have not looked up, by States, just how much it is; but it will be several million dollars. I should imagine somewhere around $10,000,000, at the very least, will be extracted from the pockets of the destitute cotton farmers of the State of Alabama.

Go over to Georgia. How much is Georgia going to lose tonight as a result of this unheard-of conduct, this breaking of precedent at a time when the farmers are struggling as they are?

How much will the farmers of Georgia lose? I do not know how much the allotment of Georgia is under the Bankhead Act, but I should imagine that the State of Georgia, under this matter, will lose somewhere between 10 and 12 million dollars.

Go to the State of Tennesse and they will lose somewhere in the millions of dollars.

In the case of North Carolina, I should say under the Bankhead Act they would have been allowed perhaps 600,000 bales of cotton, and therefore the State of North Carolina will lose $9,000,000 as a result of this kind of action tonight.

Go to the State of Arkansas: How much is Arkansas going to lose by this conduct of the House tonight, and of the national administration? I should imagine that the State of Arkansas will lose something like $10,000,000.

There you have it—10 millions, 12 millions, 15 millions, 30 millions, 45 millions, 50 millions in cotton of Texas; 70 millions in wheat and cotton of Texas; many more millions of wheat of Oklahoma. Then go and visit the wheat States of the Middle West, and see what their losses are going to be. There you have, tonight, the Congress of the United States fiddling while Rome burns; the Congress of the United States excited over the anxiety, the pleasantries, the highly pleasurable conduct of one part of the Capitol conducting a circus, and another part of the Capitol that is made to wait because it is not allowed to act, and the farmers of the United States being penalized—in one State, $70,000,000 for 1 year. They are going to have a good deal of explaining to do.

"Oh, well, the South is going to remain as it has been", is it? Let us see if it is.

I come up for reelection in January. I am the first man up. They have not got me up an opponent down there yet. They had better hurry up or I will not get a chance to run if they do not get up an opponent. It looks as if the people of Louisiana will be the first people in America to speak on this thing, provided this man over here in Ohio does not come to the White House and demand some more. I was just thinking that we might put off the election in Louisiana if this Ohio man would tell me how to work the thing. I am a good friend of the Governor down there in Louisiana. [Laughter.] I am often called in as one of the lawyers of that State. I have made quite nice fees in some of the cases there this year, if things pan out as I figured they would. I hope they will pan out even better than I figured they would.

Mr. President, it is now 25 minutes of 12 o'clock.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. MINTON. The question takes this form:

> Oh, HUEY! Oh HUEY! Come home to us now!
> The clock in the steeple's half past.
> You wander across that little green aisle,
> Pray, tell us how long will it last?

[Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Indiana is not entitled to any answer. Tonight he asked me for one of my pictures. [Laughter.] I know, Mr. President, that probably my photographs are in many places. There is no telling just where you will find them; but there is one thing as to which I can go home and be absolutely sure of a good defense—that not by any positive action of my own has my photograph been put up in the office of the Senator from Indiana. The Senator voted wrong on this bill, too. He has usually voted wrong on all these questions.

Now, at 23 minutes to 12 o'clock, I propound the parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, Has there been anything returned, or any report made by the House to this body, in regard to House Concurrent Resolution 38, relative to adjournment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the way in which House messages come to the Senate is that the messenger appears at the door, and his appearance is announced. It has not yet happened.

Mr. LONG. Then, Mr. President, I will continue for a few moments, in the hope that the messenger will appear at any moment. [Laughter.] If there were other business that the Senate had to take up that I thought would do it more good than listening to me, I should yield the floor. I know of no such business. The fact of the case is, I do not know that I have seen any such business since I have been here.

The Presiding Officer who is no longer in the Chair made the remark tonight that the Senator from Illinois and certain ones conferring with him were pursuing a course of conduct for which I had become noted for the past 6 months. Of course the Presiding Officer did not know what he was talking about on that matter, because he had not been there long enough to know. [Laughter.] He has not been in the Chair all the time. The Presiding Officer has some pretty hard duties. It is pretty hard to keep your ear to the telephone to learn what is going on all around the country, and know what is going on in the Senate at the same time.

I undertook tonight to advise the Presiding Officer of the Senate, the Vice President of the United States. I met him in there, and I said to him, "I think it would be a good idea to come in here and call the Senate into session"; and he said something to me which I will not repeat. [Laughter.] As he walked out of the door, he looked as though he were a little bit excited. He did not come to this door; he meandered around, and I did not know but that perhaps he was excited, and I followed him to the corridor. He meandered through the crowd, went around here to the elevator, turned to the left, and came here, and I still followed very closely behind him. When he got here he turned the other way, going toward the other end of the Capitol. I said, "Hold on! It is this way. You have the wrong direction."

He never turned around or said a word. It was 15 minutes to 9 o'clock. The Senators were all here, all dressed up and nowhere to go, and the Vice President of the United States looked as if he had turned the hands of the clock back, not 2 hours, but 2 years or 3 years.

He reminded me of a friend of mine who was a judge. He was married when he was about 50 years old. He had a house all fitted up, a cozy home. The day after he was married he went back to his old boarding house and sat down and began eating at the same table. He forgot all about being married. [Laughter.] The Vice President of the United States forgot all about being Vice President of the United States. He was trying to go back over to the House.

The people of Texas are going to pay mighty heavy for this. There is going to be a big contribution for breaking that kind of a precedent. The last time we had the Vice President of the United States on the ballot, he was running for Congress at the same time, and he was actually elected to two offices on the same day, Vice President of the United States and Representative from the State of Texas, on the same day. That is a pretty good precedent. That was the breaking of a precedent, and it was a pretty good precedent. A lot of people want to know why the people of Louisiana are fixing up their election laws. We are learning something every day from the State of Texas as to how election laws ought to be fixed up.

Mr. President, now it is 19 minutes to 12 o'clock; there are 19 more minutes, and there is nobody at the door, nobody at the door. [Laughter.]

I am going to ask the gentleman who came around here a moment ago and told me what was going on in the House if he will be so kind as to inform me, through whatever legitimate processes there may be, what is going on over there. I would like to receive the information as to what is occurring over in the House on the yea-and-nay vote which they have called for. I do not know how long it takes for a roll call there. I guess it takes about 20 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It takes about 45 minutes to call the roll in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LONG. Then, if it takes that long, I suppose the Clerk will call the roll slowly enough over there tonight so that it will probably be 12 o'clock before the roll can be called; before they finally get through, the clock will have struck 12.

That is quite a filibuster they have conducted. Of course, they are not going to be out any money. They have $4,800,000,000 in this work-relief fund. They are not worried about setting up these boards which they have provided, one board supposed to administer the social-security law. another board to dispense other functions of human relief, or supposed to be; but, after all, they have $4,800,000,000 that has been appropriated in the work-relief bill, and they will take the money and pass it around to the same men. They may call it something else, but it will not make any difference. They might get a little bit more. I do not suppose that is going to make any difference.

The only man who is going to lose anything is the farmer, the cotton farmer and the wheat farmer. They are going to lose their money. They are going to be not only as bad off as they were last year, but they are going to be worse off than they were last year. They are going to take away from them even what they have.

This year there are more farmers out of homes than ever before. There are more of them out of homes that have been sold under mortgages, and now they are going to cut what little they have; and the southern Senators have to go home and do one of two things. They have to tell their constituents that they fought this thing and the results of this effort or they have to tell them that they are here now ready to defend the result of what has been done in the Congress at this session or, rather, what the Congress has failed to do at this session. I for one will be able to go back to my constituents as I came here.

Now, I want to say something to my friend the Senator from Alabama and to my friends on the other side of the Chamber, where I belong [laughter]; that is, where I did belong. It does not make much difference now. There is no longer any necessity of an aisle here in the Senate. So far as the division of the Republicans and Democrats is concerned, there is no such thing left here any longer.

That has long since been forgotten. There is no need of an aisle. But I was just going to say, since I am speaking on the side of the aisle that used to be called the Republican side of the aisle, when my friend goes back to Alabama I hope the people of Alabama will appreciate the fight he has made for these farmers. But we went about it the wrong way, and I now have cause to refer to the original advice I gave on this farm problem.

I never did believe that anything but tears would come from this farm program. I knew that at some time or other they would have to pull the cork out of the ship and let it go. I knew this thing would come to distress. I know there would be a weeping time, and I said so on the floor of the Senate. I did not think it would come quite so early, but there never was a silver lining that ever was seen in this farm program so far as the Southern States were concerned.

Now, they have lured us out into the wide-open sea, pulled the bung out of the old A. A. A. ship, and we go, sink or swim, live or die, the best we can. There is a farm income of around $150 a person, compared with a farm income of $394 a person that we had in the 1929 depression year of Herbert Hoover.

Oh, Mr. Hoover was bad enough, he was bad enough, but I never did know, I had never heard it alleged, that he had a political twin. [Laughter.] I never knew that he had one. No, sir, Mr. President, I never knew that politicians were born twins, but if there is any such thing as political twins, the last two Presidents of the United States had the same political creator. One of them is just like the other, but one of them is worse than the other. [Laughter.]

If I had to pick between the two of them, I do not know which one I would pick tonight. The same old policies that Hoover tried to put over, that we kept him from putting over, were put over by the President who now sits in the White House. At last he has had to abandon what was a scourge.

Fifty million dollars will be paid by the poor cotton farmers of Texas, $10,000,000 will be paid by the poor cotton farmers of Louisiana, millions and hundreds of millions of dollars will be paid by the wheat farmers of the West and the North, and the whole trouble is that at the other end of the Capitol things are so manipulated that the action taken by a two-thirds vote here in this body today cannot be gotten into law because they have seen fit to break a precedent.

Mr. President, it is 12 minutes to 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator concluded his remarks?

Mr. LONG. I am willing to do so, if the Chair would like to have me do so. I am willing to conclude my remarks. It does not make a bit of difference to me right now. I see that we are in for it. I see this thing has all been fixed up for us. I see I have to go back to the little cabins in Louisiana and say to the poor cotton farmer, "I am sorry for you, old man. It is not only not going to be any better than it was last year, but it is going to be worse. You have to fork over $10,000,000 that you had last year on which you starved to death." I am sorry, but that is the message you have got to go back and deliver to the farmers of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, it is 10 minutes to 12 o'clock. I am going to see if some one of the noble leaders in this body, on either side of the Chamber, has anything to say. The Senate has been kept in session, due to the efforts of several of us; we have not recessed; the doors of the Senate have remained open, so that any moment the messenger might come from the House.

Mr. ASHURST. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. LONG. If he will be here in a moment, I want the Senate to remain in continuous session. Perhaps some other Senator would like to talk for 10 minutes until he gets here. Does the Senator from South Carolina wish me to yield to him?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will yield, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement in reply to some of the statements made earlier in the evening.

I do not think there should be any misunderstanding about this situation. It cannot be said that it is due to the action of the House, as was stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. The House has never had an opportunity to act upon the deficiency bill. What those of us who are interested in the appropriation bill complain of is that the House has been denied the opportunity to consider the amendments of the Senate. The bill was sent over there hours ago; but the House has been denied an opportunity to consider it, although those who received the papers say that had they been presented to the House they know the House would have voted to concur in the action of the Senate. The Senate voted 50 to 19 to suspend the rule and adopt an amendment.

If, under the rules, that bill had gone to conference, there could be no complaint on the part of any man in either body because of the action of the conferees upon it; for, under the rules of the House, the two legislative propositions contained in the bill would have to be submitted to the House to be acted upon there. It is the object of the House and the Senate to permit the Members of the House, elected by the people of the respective districts, and the Members of the Senate, elected by the States, to vote their convictions upon a measure. So the bill was sent to the House hours ago; but instead of being presented to the House, it has been pocketed and the House denied an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the House have plenary power, if a committee or subcommittee refuses to act, to compel, by proper resolution, the presentation or the restoration of the papers to the House and discharge the committee?

Mr. BYRNES. That cannot be done under the rules of the House. There is no way by which the House could get those papers tonight, because the motion, if one were made, unless unanimous consent was given, would have to be to send the bill to the Appropriations Committee. They do not have to discharge the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to give some information?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. LONG. The House has just voted overwhelmingly to send the concurrent resolution back to the Senate, and it is expected to arrive here almost immediately.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, Mr. President, I was going to present——

(Mr. Chaffee, one of the reading clerks of the House, appeared at the main door of the Senate.)

Mr. LONG. Here is the clerk from the House. The people win.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the people win, I will take my seat.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday, the 24th day of August 1935; and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the question now is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38) was agreed to, as I understand?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the motion, as the Chair understands.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to reconsider the vote by which House Concurrent Resolution 38 was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, August 26, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1935

(Legislative day of Friday, Aug. 23, 1935)

The recess having expired, the House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the House there are six or more conference reports on the desk. The Chair is going to take the liberty of asking the gentleman from New York and the House to suspend consideration of the bill which was under consideration when the House recessed last night until these conference reports, or at least the most of them, can be disposed of. The Chair will not recognize anyone until most of these conference reports are disposed of for any purpose except to correct the RECORD, to ask permission to insert matter in remarks, or to consider privileged urgent matters that may come up.

Mr. SNELL. That is a very good suggestion.

A RESOLUTION TO END WAR—SUPPORTED BY FIFTY-FIVE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, FRANK B. KELLOGG, AND MANY OUTSTANDING CITIZENS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein expressions from a number of my colleagues on the subject of war and international relations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is to report to the country the progress that has been made in promoting House Joint Resolution No. 167, the war referendum resolution I introduced in the last session, which is designed to minimize the possibility of America being dragged into unjustifiable wars. If this resolution is adopted and the amendment it purposes is written into the Constitution it will keep us out of wars we have no business to enter and will protect our precious boys, the fine young manhood of the Nation, from being swept into the maelstrom of foreign conflicts.

I believe there are more humanitarian possibilities wrapped up in this resolution than in any other measure that has come before the Congress in my time and that every American who loves his country, and desires to serve it, should support this resolution with all his heart and with every ounce of his resources and energy.

If we could get this proposed amendment or its substance written into the Constitution we would perform a major service for humanity in these dark and troubled times when dictators are threatening the peace of the world and war broods over Europe, Africa, and the Orient, and we would erect a permanent and substantial safeguard against war for all time.

If the amendment I propose is adopted, persons who make loans to foreign governments or to nationals of foreign countries and those who sell munitions to belligerents will not find it so easy to maneuver this country into war to protect their hellish profits. They will find that the people of America will have something to say about that and that the people, when given a chance to vote on war, will place humanity above dollars and the lives of our precious young men above greed and selfishness.

My resolution is a simple proposition and provides that, except in the case of invasion or attack, there shall be no declaration of war until the question has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority of the voters in a national referendum; also that in the event of war all war properties, munitions plants, and so forth, shall be taken over by the Government for the period of the emergency, thus removing the profit incentive to war. It is predicated on the theory that those who have to suffer and die, if need be, and to pay the awful costs of war ought to have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. The owners of war properties, dreaming of fabulous profits to begin when war is declared, will have a rude awakening if the amendment I have proposed is adopted. They will find that on the declaration of war they will become the servants and not the masters of the state; that thenceforth all their properties and resources will be used during the period of the war for the benefit of the state and for a nominal interest return of 4 percent on pre-war tax valuations, and that they will share with the rank and file some of the burdens and the sacrifices of war, which is as it should be. My amendment, in short, takes the profit out of war, and once the lure of profits is removed there will be few wars.

HOW FRIENDS CAN ASSIST

This resolution has passed the stage of a most successful hearing and is now pending before the House Committee on the Judiciary awaiting action by that committee. I expect to press it with all possible vigor when the Congress reconvenes in January. There has been enough of a national awakening to show that the resolution correctly interprets the heart and soul of America, but a movement of such magnitude, involving an amendment to the Constitution, cannot succeed unless it has the support of an active and determined public opinion on a Nation-wide scale.

My own means are so limited that I cannot give the proposal the publicity which its merit warrants or the promotion that is necessary to bring it forward and make it stand out as an essential feature of the next legislative program, so I would be glad if persons of financial resources, who wish to do something worth while for humanity, would take the task in hand to see that funds are provided and organizations are established to bring the resolution to public notice in their respective communities and to urge those who are interested to ask their Representatives and Senators in the Congress to support it. Only by such combined and intensive efforts can success be attained.

A SUCCESSFUL HEARING

The hearing on the resolution took place on June 19 last before Subcommittee No. 2 of the Judiciary Committee and was presided over by the chairman, Hon. EMANUEL CELLER, of New York, for whose courtesy and fine spirit of cooperation I wish to express my grateful appreciation. The other members of the subcommittee that conducted the hearing are Representatives ROBERT L. RAMSAY, of West Virginia; P. L. GASSAWAY, of Oklahoma; JAMES P. B. DUFFY, of New York; CLARENCE B. HANCOCK, of New York; and EARL C. MICHENER, of Michigan.

I have attended hearings on many bills, but never had I been present on an occasion so fraught with human interest, when the witnesses were so united, so sincere, so enthusiastic in support of the proposition presented. Speeches in behalf of the resolution were made by the following:

Dr. Mary Williams, professor of history, Goucher College.

Rabbi Edward L. Israel, of Baltimore, Md.

Gen. Smedley D. Butler, major general United States Marine Corps, retired.

Dr. Homer P. Rainey, president of Bucknell University, Pennsylvania.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, a Representative in Congress from the State of Texas.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, general federation director from the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs.

Miss Dorothy Detzer, national secretary of the Women's International League of Peace and Freedom.

Hon. MATTHEW A. DUNN, a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, a Representative in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. Arthur J. Lovell, vice president and national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, Washington, D. C.

Hon. JOHN J. BOYLAN, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

Dr. Arthur Call, secretary American Peace Society and the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. J. A. Farquharson, national legislative representative, Brotherhood Railway Trainmen, Washington, D. C.

Mr. W. D. Johnson, vice president and national legislative representative, Railway Conductors of America.

While the committee was in session the executives of the 21 brotherhoods of railroad men met in Washington and adopted a stirring memorial in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment, and it was brought over to the committee room and read to the subcommittee by Mr. W. D. Johnson, vice president of the Railway Conductors of America.

KELLOGG AND THE WAR MONGERS

Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, former Secretary of State and author of what is known around the world as the "Kellogg Peace Pact", made known at this meeting that he is in complete sympathy with the resolution I have introduced. In a letter read at the meeting he said:

I certainly believe that if a national referendum were required before the United States should engage in a war except in the case of repelling an invasion, it would go a long way toward preventing any war. I think your resolution is a very good one, and I should be glad to do what I could to further its approval.

Later, on August 14, Mr. Kellogg again wrote to me a letter of cheer and encouragement in which he said:

I wish you luck! I do not know whether our people would ever adopt a constitutional amendment on this subject or not, but I should consider it a great handicap on the war mongers.

Mr. Kellogg has used a very expressive term—"war mongers." It is the war mongers we want to reach—those who would coin the blood of human beings into filthy dollars, those who would wrench the hearts of women and children with misery unspeakable in order to accumulate vast private fortunes.

COMMENDED BY ARCHBISHOP CURLEY

Most Reverend Michael J. Curley, archbishop of Baltimore, is as enthusiastic for my resolution as is Mr. Kellogg. In a letter he says:

I have read your bill, and I wish to say to you very frankly that it has my fullest approval. Any measure that will keep us out of war and from a repetition of the horrible tragedy of 1914–18 ought to be welcome to the people of the United States. It is my humble opinion that the people of this country do not want war, and I doubt if the people of any nation in the world want war. After all, wars are not made by the people and certainly were not made by the millions of the sons of sorrowing mothers who went down to their graves in the fratricidal strife of those 4 horrible years never to be forgotten.

Nations have been lashed unwillingly into war by high-powered propaganda carried on under the supervision of the swivel-chair gentlemen, who keep far away from the danger point in all wars, and at the same time the people have been made the victims of the wretched individuals who have made countless millions of dollars out of, so to speak, the dead flesh of the youth of the world. Consequently, your idea of placing the whole matter before the people for a referendum vote is excellent. The time should be gone forever when a few men can come together and throw nations at each other's throats.

Two other great archbishops of the Catholic Church—Drossaerts of San Antonio and McNicholas of Cincinnati—and numerous bishops of that faith urge the passage of this resolution as a measure of vital interest to humanity.

Eminent leaders of every Christian denomination in America are back of this measure. Four of the greatest rabbis in America—Israel, of Baltimore; Wise and Goldstein, of New York, and Feuerlicht, of Indianapolis—are among its ardent champions. Mrs. William E. Ochiltree, president of the American War Mothers, whose sons so valiantly served the Nation in the last war, is tremendously interested in this resolution. The leaders of the great brotherhoods of organized labor, knowing how the working people are ground by the cruelties and the insufferable burdens of war, are pleading with you to report this resolution.

There is no doubt that this resolution reflects the innermost soul of America. There is no doubt that it reaches straight into the heart of the common man and finds a lodgment there. There is no doubt the people of America yearn for the peace and security this resolution would establish in place of the everlasting uncertainty, the confusion, worry, and dread that now harry the souls of peace-loving citizens. For the people of America, like the people of all countries, are inexpressibly weary of war; they are weary of its heartaches, of its unspeakable sorrows; they are weary of the pain it puts in the hearts of mothers.

Countless thousands of American citizens have had their attention attracted to this proposal and they are looking to it as a way out of the wilderness. Innumerable individuals have written their endorsements, and no one could read their letters without knowing that their words come direct from the heart. Many large associations and groups have approved it unanimously in resolutions which they have sent to Washington. In one city over 2,000 school children have signed petitions urgently requesting its enactment. I wish I could shake the hand of every signer of the petitions that have come to me and tell him that my heart meets his in trying to find the way to permanent peace. I wish I could answer every one of the thousands of letters I have received, but such a task is manifestly impossible.

LEAST CONSPICUOUS OF GOD'S CREATURES

And beyond these whom I have described as leaders among men are many other people who are among the least conspicuous of God's creatures, people with hearts and feelings but devoid of education, who say in their letters, "This is the first time I have ever written to a Congressman, but I just had to let you know that I endorse all you are trying to do." There are times when the tongue cannot speak and the pen cannot write the language of the heart, and many of these correspondents write falteringly, violating all rules of punctuation and spelling, but saying enough to make themselves articulate in their earnest, almost pathetic desire that there shall be no more wars and that the common people, who have to do the fighting and the suffering and dying, shall at least have something to say as to whether America shall enter future conflicts.

The resolution already has penetrated deep into the consciousness of America. It has established itself in the hearts of many of our countrymen as a great and righteous principle that should be recognized and vitalized in the form of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

STATEMENTS BY SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES

It is to me a source of much encouragement and satisfaction that 55 Members of Congress have endorsed my war referendum resolution and by unanimous consent of the House I herewith present their endorsements so that the country may know that the resolution I have introduced has a strong nucleus of support in the national lawmaking body. Among the endorsers is Senator BENNETT C. CLARK, of Missouri, a World War veteran who knows what war is. He is a past national commander of the American Legion, and he was chairman of the caucus held in Paris, France, which organized the Legion. He is a very active and efficient Member of the Senate Munitions Committee, that has been investigating the war profiteers, and no one in the country has a better insight into the plots and machinations of greedy interests that foment war for the sake of profits.

Following are letters and statements by Members of Congress endorsing House Joint Resolution No. 167, the resolution I have introduced to keep America out of war:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 19, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR LOUIS: I have followed your remarks on various subjects pertaining to war with great interest and great admiration.

I do not think there can be any question on earth as to the soundness of your position that steps must be taken to keep us out of war before the actual crisis has developed, for after the hysteria of war has been brought about it is impossible to depend upon Congress to withstand the demand for declaration of war. Therefore, I am entirely in sympathy with your proposition that except in case of attack or invasion a vote of the people should be required for the declaration of war. Of course, I think that certain other steps should be taken to prevent a situation from developing which will make it necessary for the people to vote on such an issue. I think that the United States should establish a neutrality policy which will make it impossible for us to drift into another war through the efforts of profiteers and international bankers as we did in the last one. It is for this reason that Senator NYE and myself have proposed three resolutions together making up a comprehensive neutrality program.

You deserve the thanks of the country for your efforts to focus public attention and arouse public sentiment in this great issue.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

BENNETT CHAMP CLARK.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
June 24, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: I have followed with much interest your joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution with respect to the declaration of war and the taking of property for public use in time of war.

I believe that your argument is sound in saying that those who have to serve should have a voice in determining whether we should go to war. Your proposition to take over all war properties during the emergency will, in my opinion, effectively remove the profit incentive to war. Please command me whenever I can be of service to you in the premises.

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK VAN NUYS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 18, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: I am strong for your proposal and I will be glad to help you in any way I can. Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Permit me to acknowledge your letter of June 21, wherein you enclosed a copy of House Joint Resolution 167, and also your speeches of April 4 and February 19.

I wish to advise that this resolution, designed to minimize the possibility of America being dragged into unjustifiable wars, is in the right direction, and I will give it every possible support.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SUMNERS: I wish to make a very brief comment on House Joint Resolution No. 167, introduced by Representative LOUIS LUDLOW, of Indiana.

I think it is the most far-reaching progressive piece of legislation in the history of the world.

THEODORE L. MORITZ, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: It was a very real regret that I could not be present at the hearings held on House Joint Resolution No. 167, but on account of important executive meetings of the Committee on Agriculture it was impossible.

It was my pleasure to appear at a hearing on a similar resolution a year ago, and I want to take this opportunity to express to you my hearty endorsement of this legislation.

In the interests of peace many measures have been introduced and many measures advanced, but I know of none which is more sane or more logical than the one contained in your resolution, namely, to insist upon a plebiscite before the country goes to war. It is democratic; it is common sense; it is constructive action, and I know of nothing which would be a greater deterrent to our participation in unnecessary conflict than passage of this resolution.

I am sure that once this Nation realizes its import and the machinery it would create toward our common objective, peace, there would be a tremendous popular demand for its enactment. I commend you for introducing it, and would be glad to stand shoulder to shoulder with you in working for passage of the resolution.

You will find some powerful allies in this cause if it can only be brought to their attention. I refer to the women and youth of America, and the rank and file of our citizenship.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES W. TOBEY, M. C.

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM P. CONNERY

I am in hearty agreement with the provisions of House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by Congressman LUDLOW, providing that except in the event of invasion the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum.

My colleague, Mr. LUDLOW, rightly states that this resolution, if enacted, will be a real preventative to war.

Munitions dealers and international financiers have too often engendered strife between nations for their own avaricious gains, without the slightest compassion for the young manhood of our country slain in battle, the mothers' broken hearts, nor the children who are made orphans. While the people of our Nation are still suffering the aftermath of the war, the depression through which we are now passing, these professional war makers are busy in other quarters of the world agitating strife there, so that they may continue to pile up their bloody profits. I do not think that we should again permit these greedy profiteers to force war upon us, but that, if necessary, this solemn declaration should be made through the war referendum of the ballot box by those people who have to suffer and pay the awful costs of the war. War would then only be declared in the cause of righteousness, and not to satisfy the selfish and unprincipled objectives of the few.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: As a soldier of the Great War, I am very pleased to endorse your House Joint Resolution No. 167, which is designed to minimize the possibility of America being dragged into unjustifiable wars. It proposes a constitutional amendment; and I believe the purposes are just and good. It does not prevent us from waging war to defend our own land, nor does it prevent us from engaging in war at all. It merely means that if we are to go into offensive wars away from our own territory, that the people shall have a right to say whether they desire to do so and whether or not they wish to send their sons off to be killed.

It is always difficult to have constitutional amendments passed. You know that as well as I do. I will say, however, that your resolution has already done a great deal of good in this country to let the people know the difference between an offensive and a defensive war. Your resolution has brought about widespread national discussion and it demonstrates not only your ability to represent the people of your district, but to represent all the people of the United States of America.

The purposes of your joint resolution, which calls for a new amendment to the Constitution, appear to me to be extremely valuable and I shall be glad to give you whatever support I am able.

Very truly yours,

MAURY MAVERICK, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I want to commend you most highly for introducing House Joint Resolution No. 167, which is designed to minimize the possibility of America being dragged into unjustifiable wars.

In my representative capacity, I can assure you that the great majority of the people in the First Congressional District of the State of Washington favor the principles embodied in this resolution and I, as their representative, will do anything I can to cooperate with you to bring about the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Sincerely yours,

M. A. ZIONCHECK, M. C.

STATEMENT OF HON. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, M. C.

Gentlemen of the committee, I doubt if any more important matter has ever come before your committee than House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by my distinguished colleague, Mr. LUDLOW. I beg of you to consider it carefully.

We have to look at war with cold realism. Patriotism itself requires us to do so. We have to think of it in terms of the greater good, and the long perspective. Shall a million lives be sacrificed to vindicate a hundred?

War comes in the present. It is liquidated in the future. It affects us, but it concerns posterity. The decision when made is irrevocable. Its burden must be borne by generations who had no voice in its decision.

During the World War we spent more money than in the 128 previous years since Washington became President. The payment of that debt will tend to lower the standard of living of our grandchildren.

War no longer is the business of armies. It is directed against the entire civilian population, and is fought by them. As it has become mechanized it has become merciless. It is said that only 8,000 died of battle wounds during the entire period of the Revolutionary War. Today that number would be the death toll of a single day—or an hour.

The decision whether we should engage in future war is too serious to be decided by box-car headlines, flag waving, hidden economic interests, munitions makers, mass psychology, emotional insanity. It can only properly be decided by the anxious deliberations of father, mother, son, and daughter sitting at the American fireside. It concerns them.

This resolution would give time for sober second thought. It would prevent a nation from being swept off its feet by an unfortunate incident, like the sinking of the Maine, or the Lusitania. It would serve notice to the purveyors of propaganda that the case for war must be so clear and clean that it can stand inspection by those who have nothing to gain from it. This resolution takes selfishness out of the decision to fight. It places war on the rock of patriotism. It deserves to stand on no other foundation.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 9, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Your letter dated June 29 together with a copy of House Joint Resolution 167 have been received.

Your proposal which is designed to minimize the possibility of America's entrance into war meets with my approval. In the consideration of the legislation, however, amendments will be considered which may prove helpful and they also will have my support.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JIM MEAD, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I desire to assure you that I am in hearty accord with House Joint Resolution 167 and wish to commend you for the fine effort you are making for its favorable consideration.

I was a Member of Congress during the World War and voted for the declaration of war, much against my convictions. I felt then that a great mistake was being made but yielded to the clamor for war. I have regretted every day since that I did not stand by my convictions. I have also daily regretted that I did not vote for the McLemore resolution to keep off the high seas. You will, therefore, understand by these declarations how I feel about war.

I am not a pacifist when our shores are invaded or our Government is in peril, but would never again vote for a declaration of war unless by the expressed voice of a majority of the people. You are at liberty to use this letter in any way you desire.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 9, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I appreciate your letter of June 29 calling my attention to House Joint Resolution 167. While it would be inadvisable to commit oneself to any piece of legislation before hearing it fully discussed, I can say without reservation that I favor the objectives you have in view and will be glad to assist you in any way possible.

With cordial regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

THEODORE CHRISTIANSON,
Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have studied with interest your Resolution No. 167, which proposes to refer the question of war and matters pertaining to war to the people.

I think your bill is a step in the right direction.

With good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

HERMAN P. KOPPLEMANN,
Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: I am very much interested in your Resolution No. 167 and your motive of minimizing the possibility of America being dragged into unjustifiable wars.

I am heartily in favor of any action that can be taken to establish peace and the settlement of differences by peaceful methods.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES J. COLDEN, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I wish to acknowledge your letter of June 26 relative to your House Joint Resolution 167, a copy of which was enclosed therewith, and believe in the basic principle that the people of the United States should have some voice in the matter of declaring war, and that properties should be conscripted upon substantially the same basis as man power in the event of a national emergency.

Sincerely yours,

CHESTER THOMPSON, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am glad to acknowledge your letter of June 29 and the enclosure of a copy of your House Joint Resolution 167, which proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the declaration of war and the taking of property for public use in time of war.

I am glad to assure you of my cooperation and support of this measure. If I can be of any service to you personally in your efforts in this connection, please feel free in calling on me.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

R. T. BUCKLER, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am in hearty sympathy with your resolution (H. J. Res. 167) and will gladly support it when it comes up in the House for consideration and passage.

I have advocated this policy for years and agree with you that if such an amendment is adopted it will prevent our country ever taking part in any war except one of actual self-defense in case of invasion.

Wishing you the best of success in this very worth-while undertaking, I remain,

Yours very sincerely,

KNUTE HILL, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have very carefully read House Joint Resolution 167, and feel that it is worth most serious consideration by our people and covers the subject on which they should be permitted to express their views. In my opinion, such an amendment to the Constitution would have a far-reaching effect, and no doubt would tend to prevent our hasty entry into a war of invasion against any country.

Sincerely yours,

F. L. CRAWFORD, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am in receipt of your letter of June 29 in which you enclosed copy of House Joint Resolution 167. I am interested in legislation which will assure the United States neutrality in the future.

You may be sure that this resolution which you have introduced will receive my most careful consideration.

Very sincerely,

OTHA D. WEARIN, M. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have read and carefully considered a resolution recently introduced by you designed to prevent the United States from being involved in unnecessary and unjustifiable war.

I am heartily in favor of your resolution and shall be very glad to support it to the utmost of my ability.

Sincerely yours,

F. J. SISSON, M. C.

STATEMENT OF CAROLINE O'DAY, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM NEW YORK

I am in favor of the Ludlow resolution, House Joint Resolution 167.

So long as there are economic rivalries between nations, so long as there are territories to be annexed, so long as there are political controversies, so long will there be potential tendencies toward war—for war is the final and most violent phase of political action.

Nevertheless, there is no problem affecting humanity that cannot be settled without resort to war if the people so will.

War, in the last analysis, results through a game played behind closed doors in the courts, foreign offices, committee rooms, and counting houses of the world. The rank and file of citizens, the man in the street who later becomes the man at the front, know nothing of this game until cleverly directed propaganda begins to play upon the finest and most admirable trait of mankind all the world over—love of country.

The word "patroitism" is debauched by diplomats, statesmen, and by profiteers. A conscienceless press fans the flames of international misunderstanding. Mass psychology is artfully directed, and when the time is ripe for the purpose of its instigators war is declared.

We who know the horrors of the World War and its ghastly aftermath must shape a new code of international morality—a new system of relationship between nations that will prevent the slaughter of the youth of the world and the sacrifice of its young manhood.

A national referendum held by hostile nations pending a declaration of war would provide time for sober reflection, for allaying national hysteria, for investigating the truth or falsity of prevailing propaganda, for weighing the cost of human lives as against the acquisition of territories, the salvaging of investments for powerful financiers, as against the glorification of rulers and war lords, or avenging a national slight.

Through a referendum the rank and file of the people, the fathers and mothers of the Nation's youth would make the solemn decision as to whether or not that youth should be sent to the fields of slaughter.

Who can doubt but that a national referendum would prove a powerful instrument toward the maintenance of peace and the abolishment of that "sum of all iniquities"—war.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have given considerable thought and study to the resolution you have introduced in an effort to prevent our Nation from being forced into possible future unnecessary armed conflicts. I am deeply impressed with the righteousness of this effort to outlaw, through legislation, American participation in unjustifiable wars.

America, having enjoyed friendly relationships with her immediate continental neighbors for so many years, has no reason to anticipate the necessity of entering into war with nations in any section of the world. It is hard to presume that war will come to us from abroad, but it is decidedly foolhardy to leave anything undone which could prevent America from going to war on other continents.

Your resolution, as I understand it, gives full protection to the National Government in case of the emergency of invasion, but at the same time passage of your resolution would make it practically impossible for this Nation to become the aggressor in any armed conflict.

I approve especially of the provision in your resolution which gives those who must do the suffering in time of war the right to have a voice in the question of whether or not our Nation shall enter such conflict. I believe the further provisions of your resolution giving the Government full control over all properties in time of war will have a decided desirable effect on any person who might be interested from a selfish standpoint in seeing this Nation at war.

You will find me ready at all times to assist you in any way possible in pushing your resolution to final favorable action by Congress.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

WM. H. LARRABEE, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR LOU: House Joint Resolution 167, which was introduced by you on February 14, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the declaration of war and the taking of property for public use in time of war, is one of the most far-reaching resolutions which have been introduced in a long time, and in writing this I believe I am expressing the sentiments of the people of my district that they will be for the resolution practically 100 percent.

I believe that this resolution will come closer to ending war in the future than any other bill which has been presented in the history of this Nation, owing to the fact that under your proposed resolution the people will be the ones who will make the final decision as to whether or not we are going to engage in war. And why not? After all, why shouldn't these people, who must stand ready to do the actual fighting and to sacrifice their lives to defend this great Nation if necessary, have an opportunity to be heard regarding their views on the necessity of entering into conflict with other nations. I am confident that a vote of this nature would prove that these people are very much in opposition to war, and as a result war profiteering will come to an immediate end.

Permit me to congratulate you on the introduction of the bill and to wish you success in securing its enactment into law. Should I be in a position to render you any other service in furthering the interests of House Joint Resolution 167, please do not hesitate to call upon me.

With my best wishes I remain,
Sincerely yours,

WM. T. SCHULTE, M. C.

STATEMENT OF HON. VIRGINIA E. JENCKES, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM THE SIXTH DISTRICT OF INDIANA

Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my approval of House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by my distinguished colleague, the Honorable LOUIS LUDLOW, of Indiana.

I endorse this most important measure not only as a Member of the Congress but as an American woman, a mother, and a citizen, who has had the opportunity of observing the sufferings of the people resulting from the declaration of war as a result of an emotion or hysteria rather than upon the cool, calm judgment as expressed by the ballot of all the people, as provided by Mr. LUDLOW'S bill.

As we look back over the years and remember the day when the Congress declared war on Germany, and when we review the many events which caused suffering and anguish and privation among our citizens, I am sure that if Mr. LUDLOW'S bill had been law in 1916 our Nation would not have been so quick to have rushed into a conflict which destroyed thousands of our fine American men and caused untold sufferings among their families.

We all remember how proud we were when we took credit for having helped save the world for democracy, but today we find these same nations for whom we sacrificed the flower of our citizenship, for whom we impoverished ourselves in sending them supplies and funds, we find these same nations today refusing to repay to the United States the moneys which we loaned them, moneys which represented the earnings and savings of our people. We find these same nations again getting ready for war, wasting their resources, and again getting ready to destroy the lives of their citizenship.

I am not a pacifist. I believe in an adequate and proper national defense. I believe in the best Army and the best Navy and the best air force of any nation in the world, but I also believe that we should be the slowest Nation in the world to think of war or to engage in war except for the purpose of repelling an actual invasion.

The mothers of America demand that they be recognized in determining whether their sons shall be used for cannon fodder to satisfy a national emotional outburst. The women of America have been given the ballot. The women of America are voting, and the women of America demand that the United States shall never engage in another war until all of the citizens by their direct ballot shall indicate their approval or disapproval of the contemplated declaration of war.

I appeal to the committee for favorable action on House Joint Resolution 167. I appeal to our American women to support this very meritorious measure; and when it becomes law—and I hope it will be made law at this session of the Seventy-fourth Congress—I request all women to take a genuine interest in the administering of this law in order to prevent the horrors of another war.

I thank you.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have your letter, together with House Joint Resolution No. 167. I am in favor of this resolution, but believe that the Congress of the United States should provide a sufficient Army, Navy, and air force to repel any aggression which might be made on our country. This in my judgment is the greatest preparation against war.

Yours sincerely,

MORGAN G. SANDERS, M. C.

STATEMENT OF HON. GLENN GRISWOLD, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, FIFTH DISTRICT OF INDIANA

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am highly pleased to be able to use any influence that I may have in support of the resolution of my colleague, Mr. LUDLOW, of Indiana, now pending before your committee. By this resolution our entry into war would not be decided by the vote of a few of we old men here on the floor of the House and the Senate, but under his resolution some voice would be given to those who will be required to fight our wars and who now have no voice in creating the war to which they must give their time, effort, and in many instances their lives.

In my opinion, there are just two causes of war—the avariciousness of the rich and the patriotism of the poor. Without these two factors working in conjunction there would be no war. When Congress votes a declaration of war the next thing to do thereafter is to determine who shall fight the war. In the past the Membership has gazed at one another and discovered that the vast majority of the Members of the House were beyond 45 years of age and immediately reached the conclusion that the actual fighting should be done by men under 45 years of age. I submit that this is not fair nor just. We older men, by our votes, shove the young men into the battle line.

A few days ago, during the Shrine Convention, I, with thousands of others, viewed the parade. Band after band and unit after unit passed with its flags. Each time a flag passed I noticed that the Boy Scouts, who were acting as ushers in the grandstand, stood at attention and saluted. I was proud of those boys and their evidence of patriotism and respect for the flag, standing each time almost alone, while we, their elders, remained seated. But I was deeply moved when I thought that in later life when these boys would have grown into their very prime that that same spirit of patriotism might force them, because of a vote of Congress, into the front lines, to become cannon fodder and crippled by devastating gas.

We talk much of the cost of war in dollars. I am interested more in the cost of war that cannot be measured in dollars—the cost of war that is evidenced in the loss of brain power to the Nation. In my district is located, at Marion, Ind., the largest Veterans' Bureau mental hospital in the United States. If you would know the greatest cost of war, then you should view the dead minds in living bodies that reside in that hospital.

In this, a government of majorities, in such a vital thing as war, I think it is just and right and proper that the men who are to suffer the loss of their minds, the men who are to have twisted bodies as a result of the war, and the parents who must bear the anguish and torture of awaiting the casualty list should have some vote in the declaration of war.

I sincerely hope that the committee can see fit to make a favorable report to the House on the resolution of Mr. LUDLOW.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I heartily approve of House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by you in the House of Representatives. I shall be glad to support the resolution with my vote.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 11, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have for acknowledgment receipt of your letter of June 29 relative to your resolution, House Joint Resolution 167, and in answer thereto wish to state I will be glad to lend all possible aid in furtherance thereof and have so written to many of my constituents who have addressed me on the subject.

Again assuring you of my support, I am
Very sincerely yours,

M. H. EVANS, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have your letter of recent date enclosing a copy of House Joint Resolution 167. In reply, permit me to state that I am in sympathy with the major portion of the resolution and believe if enacted it would be for the benefit of the country as a whole.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM L. HIGGINS, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Please accept my thanks for a copy of House Joint Resolution 167, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the declaration of war and the taking of property for public uses in time of war.

To my mind there is much to recommend the resolution, and you are to be commended for having introduced it. I trust that it will be favorably reported by the committee and brought up on the floor of the House for general discussion.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE BURNHAM, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 11, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: My attention has been called to House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by you on February 14, 1935, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the declaration of war and the taking of property for public use in time of war.

In view of international developments in recent years, I feel that this resolution is very timely and should be passed and submitted to the States for ratification. If you and your friends are successful in getting this resolution made a part of the organic law of our Nation, I feel that you will have rendered a major service to humanity and civilization.

The world looks to America as to the preserver of the highest ideals of our civilization, and the passage of this resolution would be a step in that direction.

I assure you that I shall be glad to cooperate with you in your efforts to bring about the passage of this resolution. I have received some very interesting letters calling my attention to the merits of your resolution, and I am sending you copy of a letter from my old friend and teacher, Dr. W. S. Dearmont, of Lafayette, La., for your inspection.

Very sincerely yours,

ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter dated June 29, with enclosed copy of House Joint Resolution No. 167.

Although I am ordinarily slow to endorse changes in the Constitution of the United States, I can see the merit in your proposed amendment. I believe if same were made a part of our Constitution, that the possibility of war would be greatly decreased.

Your proposed amendment has my approval and you have but to command me for any assistance I can render in support of same.

Yours truly,

WILL ROGERS, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Received your letter, enclosing House Joint Resolution No. 167. I have gone over same, and can assure you that the farmers generally will back up section 1.

There may be some difference of opinion on section 2, because the majority of the farmers, I believe, feel that wealth should be conscripted on the same terms and conditions as men: take and use it during the war, and return what is left of it after the war. They feel if this were done, there would be less war.

I am satisfied that the overwhelming majority of the people of this nation are in favor of a constitutional amendment along the lines of your bill. Shall be glad to cooperate with you.

With personal regards, I am

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM LEMKE, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am definitely in favor of any plan to insure peace in this country.

The plan to remove the profit incentive from war will dissuade many of our war makers from further activities, I am sure.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS R. AMLIE, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am in receipt of your letter of June 29 regarding House Joint Resolution No. 167, designed for the purpose of minimizing the possibility of America being dragged into war.

I do not see how any well-meaning person could be opposed to a resolution of this sort. I know that the rank and file of American people believe in that kind of doctrine.

You may be assured of the fact that I shall give your proposition my endorsement.

With best wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,

SAM MASSINGALE, M. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I have read with a great deal of interest your letter and the attached joint resolution.

I think you have found, and have in good form, the only method that will prevent us from entering a foreign war. I am in hearty agreement with your proposal, and wish to give it my unqualified support.

Sincerely yours,

PHIL FERGUSON, M. C.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SUMNERS: I wish to be recorded as being heartily in favor of House Joint Resolution No. 167, introduced by Representative LOUIS LUDLOW as a means of keeping America from being dragged into unjustifiable wars. I believe it is the best proposal that has been brought forward to accomplish that end. I believe that those who have to bear the awful burdens of war and those who have to do the suffering, the fighting and the dying, if need be, should have the right to say something in regard to whether or not war shall be declared, and Mr. LUDLOW's resolution seeks to give them that right. I believe the people of America want this resolution passed.

WILLIAM F. BRUNNER, M. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: I am in sympathy with the purposes of your House Joint Resolution No. 167. I believe that the statesmanship of America cannot devote itself to any more worth-while project than the minimizing of the danger of America going into another war. The jingoists and the superpatriots have so much power now that it certainly would be well to guard against their baneful use of it in case of the imminence of another war.

Sincerely yours,

FRED BIERMANN, M. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 29 relative to the resolution introduced by you known as "House Joint Resolution No. 167."

While it is generally agreed that war should be abolished and while sober thinkers realize that there is little possibility that any nation of the world not under the control of madmen would attempt armed invasion of another in the near future, it is too much to hope that another terrible world conflict is not inevitable. No, of course, we do not want war, but we cannot help but recall the post-war remark of that war-time English statesman, Lloyd George, who said: "No country really wanted war in 1914 but we gradually slid into it."

No country really wants war today but once the conflagration starts and patriotism is fired up with martial music and propaganda the demands of the mass of people will be such that sober reflection and calm judgment will be forced to give way to the feverish desire to annihilate the enemy. War is inevitable; even with all of its gruesome aspects, its vile frightfulness and brutality forever engraved on the minds of those who participated in the last one; with the horrors of human conflict, murderous and fatal, dimmed by a few intervening years, those who yesterday swore they would never again bear arms will be among the first to come forward to fight to the tune of "save democracy" or "down with tyrants" or another catch phrase of like ring.

Why is war inevitable?

While the answer to this question may easily be complicated by examination of historical precedent, it finally narrows down to the bare fact that the cause of war is economic, and as long as the ambitions of men direct them toward progress in trade and commerce just so long will the desires of the nationals of one land conflict with those of another and ultimately lead to inhuman warfare among humans. The inception of war is motivated by the desire for human gain, in the first instance, and is always followed by a synthetic patriotism, fostered and nurtured into the actual and necessary patriotic fervor which is the prerequisite of the murder and suicide of war. This, we well know. We also know that when war is imminent these facts are obscured as reason vanishes in the face of blind unreason.

Even in peace time we appear to find it difficult to get together on methods of minimizing war hazards. I am supporting the Ludlow House Joint Resolution 167, because it is designed to take the profits out of war and to obtain a referendum of the people as to whether or not they favor or disfavor our entering into conflict. I believe the people should rule. I heartily endorse the Ludlow movement.

Very truly yours,

JOHN M. HOUSTON, M. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 11, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: The more I study history the more I become convinced that war is international insanity. I am wholeheartedly in favor of any action on the part of our Government which would tend to prevent war.

I believe that most wars could have been avoided if the people involved had been given the power to declare war or to insist on peace at their discretion. All too often diplomats and foreign ministers are more interested in fame than in the public welfare, and nations are forced into war against their will in order to satisfy some politician's appetite for empty glory.

Democracy is repudiated when the people are denied a voice in times of greatest crisis. Under true democracy the people themselves would decide every vital issue on its merits. Your resolution (H. J. Res. 167) is a long step toward the attainment of true democracy, and I will cooperate with you in every possible way to bring about the adoption of this resolution during the present session of Congress.

Very truly yours,

ABE MURDOCK, M. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I think it is well to give serious thought to House Joint Resolution 167, which you are sponsoring in the House. I believe our people are daily becoming more conscious of the awful costs of war and of the need for aggressive action toward preventing further world conflagrations with their attendant human sacrifice and suffering.

Recently, I presented to the House a petition signed by several thousand of my constituents and filed through the Morning Call, of Paterson, N. J., calling for a constitutional amendment embracing substantially the article you propose.

With kindest personal wishes, I remain

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: I have read House Joint Resolution 167 and your remarks very carefully, and I want you to know that you can depend on whole-hearted support in this matter.

Certainly those that have to do the fighting and suffering should have something to say as to whether or not war should be declared.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
February 13, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: While intensely interested in the plans of yourself and others, to reduce the danger of our country being drawn into more war, it has been a resolve of members of our Munitions Committee to refrain from endorsement of any specific program. We are hopeful that upon completion of our pending investigation we shall be able to get together on a specific program. I hope you will understand the purpose which is mine in refraining from giving direct endorsement to any plan. I can say to you, however, that I look with very large personal favor upon any program which would give the people a direct voice in the question of whether or not our country should engage in war.

I had a delightful experience out at your city last week, and want to thank you again for the encouragement which your interest gives us in continuing our study of the munitions question.

Sincerely yours,

GERALD P. NYE,
Chairman Special Committee Investigating the Munitions Industry.

DEAR LOUIS: Some days ago I received a letter from you, together with copy of House Joint Resolution No. 167.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Your Joint Resolution 167 proposing something which I have for years advocated—a referendum on war. I conducted the first congressional referendum on war as a Member of Congress in 1916, and found my constituents about 8 to 1 against America's entry into that foreign conflict.

I am certain that a referendum on war is one of the best possible methods of preventing our participation in foreign conflicts.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST LUNDEEN, M. C.

Keep out of the League of Nations, the World Court, and European entanglements in general. Trade with all—friends with all—entangling alliances with none. That is the Washington-Jefferson formula to keep out of war.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Just a word to let you know that I will be glad to cooperate with you in your House Resolution 167. I do not know the details of it, but will leave it to your good judgment.

Sincerely yours,

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN: I desire to go on record approving House Joint Resolution No. 167, which proposes an amendment to the Constitution, with respect to providing the people of the country the right to approve or disapprove a declaration of war.

This is a most meritorious piece of legislation and its passage, I am confident, will prevent many needless conflicts, with their resultant loss of lives and destruction of property. The people, who must suffer any losses incurred in armed conflict, should possess the privilege of plunging our Nation into warfare, or preventing us from entering into war.

With many foreign nations excited about anticipated conflicts, it is of even greater importance for us to remain calm and unaffected by the tangled political situations remarked in other countries. The citizens of this country disapprove foreign invasions by our armed forces, and I believe the acceptance of this measure would do much to prevent any unwarranted entrance into foreign disturbances.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY E. STUBBS, M. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of June 7 calling my attention to House Joint Resolution 167. I think that amendment has merit, and I see no good reason why it should not be adopted.

With kindest regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES R. ECKERT, M. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: I am very earnestly in favor of your House Joint Resolution No. 167. It proposes the most effective plan to keep America out of war. Command me in any way I can serve.

Sincerely,

JAMES A. FREAR,
Former Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: Your effort to secure the passage of legislation giving the people of the Nation the privilege of referendum on any proposed declaration of war is a public service for which you deserve the highest commendation.

What reasonable argument can be offered against the proposition that the people who do the paying and the dying should have the privilege of declaring whether there shall be war?

Give the people an opportunity to vote for or against a declaration of war and much of the war propaganda and war hysteria inspired by the profiteering patrioteers will be ineffective.

The Congress of the United States can render no greater service to the Nation than to approve legislation permitting the people to settle the war issue at the ballot box.

Sincerely yours,

BROOKS FLETCHER, M. C.

THE UTILITY HOLDING-COMPANY BILL

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER], would like to have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein one or two short letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from Hon. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL and my reply thereto:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 17, 1935.

Mr. EDWARD C. EICHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. EICHER: I have read the personal attack made by you upon Mr. HUDDLESTON and me, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

I thought that you were a gentleman and that we were friends. Our relations this winter have been cordial. While disagreeing on certain aspects of the utility bill, we have done so with respect to the good faith of each other that should always be the conduct of gentlemen. Even during the debate we met frequently in the cloakroom and drank a cup of coffee together as friends. When you were stricken ill I wrote you a letter expressing my regret and the hope for your early return to duty, which was kindly acknowledged by your wife. At one time I received a letter from a newspaper publisher in your district very critical of you and replied by saying that, while you and I disagreed on some points of the bill, I was certain that you were sincere and actuated only by your conception of the public interest. I did this in the hope that it would do you some good in your own district and sent you a copy of the letter.

Now, some 6 weeks after the bill passed the House, you have seen fit to spread in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a personal attack. You stated, in substance, that I purposely prolonged the hearings and the executive consideration of the bill, for the purpose of giving the utility lobby time to emasculate and defeat the bill. This is the first occasion when my motives have ever been challenged by a colleague, in three sessions of Congress.

I am at a loss to know how to meet this attack. It raises the question of personal privilege, which thoroughly entitles me to answer it on the floor of the House. I will, however, be at a great disadvantage in attempting to do so when it is known that you are sick in bed and not present on the floor to defend yourself. I have, therefore, decided to make no public reply at this time to your false and groundless insinuations. I can only explain this sudden reversal of attitude toward me on the ground that you are sick, nervously exhausted, and have become the victim of Messianic hallucinations.

In the event, however, that it is intended by you or those you now represent for it to be seized upon by political enemies of mine for use as a speech or campaign document in my district, I am preserving the record by making this reply to you at this time, so that it cannot be charged that I did not answer it.

The charge of prolonging the hearings and the Executive consideration of the bill for the purpose of giving the lobby time to work is false. You know that it is false. You know that I was neither chairman of the full committee nor the subcommittee. You know that the control of time both in the hearings and the executive sessions was at all times in the hands of the chairman. You know that he could have shortened the time if he had wanted to. You know that you never protested in my presence at the length of the hearings or the length of sessions. You know that you never, in my presence, charged me with prolonging the hearings or the sessions. You know, too, that it was generally understood that the hearings and the executive sessions were prolonged by parties other than myself, for the purpose of giving the Senate an opportunity to act first. You know further, if your memory is good, that I often objected to the length to which the executive sessions were being dragged.

Now, a word about lobbying and your connection with it. I can only explain this holier-than-thou attitude so recently assumed by you on the ground that your illness has distorted your judgment. You know William Chamberlain, of Chicago, Ill., chairman of United Light & Power Co., with operating properties in your State and district. Who was it that introduced Mr. Chamberlain to me? It was yourself. You brought him to my office to give him an opportunity to explain to me the financial structure of his company and the harm which he anticipated would result from the enactment of the bill as originally drawn. From the conversation at that time it was indicated to me that you were sympathetic with the difficulties with which Mr. Chamberlain saw his company surrounded. The only time I ever talked with Mr. Chamberlain was in your presence and at your solicitation. I do not refresh your memory on this matter with a view that you did anything wrong in bringing one of your business constituents to me. I have never felt that there was anything wrong in people talking with Members of Congress with reference to pending legislation, provided it is confined to a fair presentation of the facts and argument entertained by the constituent.

I refer to this only to disabuse your mind of the hallucination you now entertain that you are the sworn enemy of the lobby.

How many more utility executives you consulted in the privacy of your office I, of course, do not know.

I will add one word further. Chairman RAYBURN, of our committee, told me today that he alone was responsible for the length of the hearings and the sessions; that I had nothing to do with their length, and that he will give me a letter to that effect to be used by me in my district in the event that the false charges made by you are circulated against me.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, M. C.

AUGUST 20, 1935.

Hon. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SAM: Your letter of the 17th instant has been received.

From the point of view of practical power, Chairman RAYBURN may accurately enough acknowledge responsibility for the length of our committee deliberations. But if he had shut off questions, or witnesses, or discussion, the charge that he was attempting to railroad his bill would have been strenuously, and no doubt effectively, urged, with injury to its chances of passage as great as actually occurred from the long delay. I don't concede your countercharge of dilatory tactics on the part of our chairman. In fact, I do not recall that any time was taken off on his own motion except 3 days over one week-end when he went to Texas by airplane to fill a long-promised engagement there.

The record of the House hearings tells its own story. I am quite willing to rest corroboration of my own conclusions upon the judgment of any impartial mind—even one that you are sure is not subject to Messianic hallucinations—which will make even a cursory examination of the interrogations and statements set forth therein.

However, it is difficult for me to fathom your seeming concern over my review in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the bill's legislative history. I have repeatedly disclaimed any impugning of motives and have openly credited to you the same patriotic impulses that I claim for myself. Once convinced that a bill is against the public interest, certainly a legislator is justified in resorting to any legitimate means, dilatory or otherwise, to obstruct its enactment into law. If your ultimate position in favor of the continuance of far-flung holding-company systems is sustained by your best judgment, then you certainly have nothing to be ashamed of. You are even entitled to change your mind, as you did on the question of regulation through taxation, without having any reflection cast on your reason therefor, and I assure you that nothing of that sort is intended by me. But I insist that you cannot with reason be surprised when I register disappointment over your final attitude of indecision with regard to the "push and pull" taxation incentive for holding-company elimination, that during our long deliberations you had so enthusiastically and so ably sponsored.

Let me confess, also, to a feeling of surprise over your juvenile inclination to begin calling names because of my review of a record that speaks for itself. If the cause you espouse is just, it will prevail, and you will have no occasion to apologize for being its protagonist. If the country doesn't want any regulation of utility holding companies it will eventually say so. Regardless of the concessions that the President may make in order to get some kind of a law, common sense is convincing that Mr. Hopson and many others cannot be effectively regulated without mandatory or, at least, taxation-encouraged, simplification of financial structure.

I don't know why your remarks about lobbying stay so far away from the real sore spot. No fair mind can be critical of business executives who pass on to legislators their facts and figures as to how the proposed legislation will affect their business. But newspaper influence that is bought and paid for and misleading propaganda practiced on legislators is something else again. All who worry about the maintenance of a free press in our Republic should pause to consider whether a Hitlerized press or a Hopsonized press constitutes the greater threat to the survival of free institutions.

Although my colleague, Representative WEARIN, of Iowa, was denied unanimous consent to read my statement on the floor, you need not hesitate, Sam, so far as I am concerned, to ask for time for yourself, provided you include this interchange of letters in your remarks.

With kindest personal regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. EICHER.

REHABILITATION IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein certain documents in regard to the conditions of the island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain documents in regard to the conditions in Puerto Rico, I desire to begin by stating that when President Roosevelt issued his recommendations to the State works rehabilitation administrators he said in part:

This whole thing very largely will depend upon the close cooperation with local authorities everywhere—Governors, mayors, county officials, and various State agencies. It is a Federal administration program, and, of course, the Federal Government is ultimately responsible. You are responsible because you represent the Federal Government, and yet at the same time we cannot conduct it successfully unless we get cooperation and joint effort on the part of all the localities.

The second point I make is that we have to be extremely careful not to make any kind of discrimination. We cannot discriminate in any of the work we are conducting either because of race or religion or politics. Politics, so far as we are concerned, is out. If anybody asks you to discriminate because of politics you can tell them that the President of the United States gave direct orders that there is not to be any such discrimination.

TO TREAT ALL EXACTLY ALIKE

That applies both ways. It means we cannot hurt our enemies nor help our friends. We have to and will treat them all exactly alike. In carrying out this work consider it purely and solely from a human point of view. Do everything you can to prevent the use of political consideration, one way or the other.

These thoughts also are supposed to apply to Puerto Rico, where Dr. Ernest Gruening has been appointed administrator by Executive order. On that occasion the White House gave out the following press release:

The President today signed an Executive order establishing the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration to carry out in a coordinated way all reconstruction work in Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. He designated Ernest H. Gruening as administrator. The Reconstruction Administration approved projects for Puerto Rico on the basis of a program that has been formulated.

To avoid overlapping of the activities of the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration and the normal duties of the insular government and to coordinate their respective functions members of the Reconstruction Administration and of the insular government will form a coordinating committee. This committee will be headed by the Governor of Puerto Rico and will consist of the Governor as chairman, members selected by him from the executive and legislative branches of the insular government, and an equal number designated by the Reconstruction Administration.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

The discussion of H. R. 8621 and its companion bill, S. 3140, entitled "To provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropiration Act of 1935 may be expended for permanent rehabilitation, and for other purposes", which took place on the floor of the House—several declarations were made that require some explanation.

It has been stated that the administration was interested in the passage of the measure in the House, as it had passed the Senate, and, in order to add some more information on the subject matter regarding conditions in Puerto Rico for the use of the Members of the House, it would be appropriate, I think, to have inserted in the RECORD the introduction of a report prepared by the Puerto Rico Policy Commission, presided over by the dean of the University of Puerto Rico, Dr. C. Chardon, who has spent 6 months in Washington on this work in the office of the Director of Territories and Island Possessions, Dr. Ernest Gruening, Department of the Interior. The introduction of said report is as follows:

REPORT OF THE PUERTO RICO POLICY COMMISSION

INTRODUCTION

The economic problem of Puerto Rico, insofar as the bulk of its people is concerned, may be reduced to the simple terms of progressive landlessness, chronic unemployment, and implacable growth of the population.[1] A policy of fundamental reconstruction should therefore contemplate the definite reduction of unemployment to a point at least where it may be adequately dealt with by normal relief agencies; the achievement of this largely by restoration of the land to the people that cultivate it and by the fullest development of the industrial possibilities of the island. These achievements will be unavailing, however, if population growth cannot be checked or at least reduced. This last factor is of very great importance, because even if a parity between population and employment—as to farming or to industrial jobs—can be approximately achieved, it cannot be maintained unless the rate of population growth can be kept within the scope of further economic development. It therefore seems to be highly desirable, probably imperative, that a land restoration and industrial development program, combined with a policy of emigration to suitable environments, be fully worked out as soon as possible. The carrying out of these programs should then progress as rapidly as the means at hand and the nature of the specific problems presented may determine.

For purposes of illustration we may take the unemployment figure arrived at by the local offices of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. It is estimated by that office that there are in Puerto Rico not less than 150,000 heads of families permanently unemployed. This covers roughly about half the population. A study of the possibilities should determine what proportion of these may be absorbed over a period of years by the maximum industrial development as determined by present knowledge and conditions. The unemployment remaining beyond such possibilities of industrialization must obviously be taken care of by the return of the land in small farms to agricultural workers and by emigration that will provide employment in other regions. Although a scientific scheme of birth control should be part of any far-sighted policy for Puerto Rico, it cannot be hoped that it will be socially effective until the standard of living, and therefore the sense of responsibility of the mass of the population, has been substantially improved. It will probably be effective in keeping the rate of growth down in the future after the improvement brought about by economic reconstruction has begun to be felt by the population as a whole.

INDUSTRIALIZATION

We are not in a position to make very specific recommendations as to development of new industries, as this is a subject that has not been surveyed in Puerto Rico as adequately as it should have been. We have, of course, plenty of labor, and such small industries as have managed to be founded and to survive to date seem to demonstrate that the Puerto Rican worker is easy to train in new trades and vocations. We have already developed about 100,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric power, and the potentialities are probably double that figure. We have local cheap raw materials such as final molasses for rum manufacture and possibly for the manufacture of motor fuel; bagasse for rayon and building materials; limestone and clay for cement manufacture; sea island cotton for the manufacture of certain textiles, etc. Within economic distance of Puerto Rico raw materials are found, such as wood in Santo Domingo, hides in Venezuela and Texas, etc., which may be processed into finished products by Puerto Rican industry; and, of course, we have agricultural products, both animal and vegetable, to be processed and preserved. It may be feasible to develop other industries which, like the art linens, hand embroideries, and garment industries, require from Puerto Rico only the contribution of its labor, skill, and management.

In determining upon an industrialization policy for Puerto Rico, perhaps the local market should be considered as the first goal in many cases, though facilities should be provided for the development of industrial exports. Many of the goods now imported into Puerto Rico can and should be produced on the island.

With these general purposes in view, so far as industrialization is concerned, we believe that the following steps would be necessary:

Cheapening industrial credits by extension of all possible facilities now within the scope of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The assessment of a high income tax, to be abated if invested in new industries, determined by the Government under conditions laid down by the Government—and this should include employment conditions—so as to throw a substantial part of local capital available into channels of planned development. Industries should be selected on two main principles: Availability of markets and preponderance of pay roll in operating costs.

The protection of the local market by a local tariff. In order to avoid the possibility that such a tariff will develop into an instrument of exploitation, it could be set up on the condition that the industries protected would be regarded as public utilities insofar as the limitation of profits is concerned, perhaps allowing them the choice between no protection and no limitation on the one hand and protection and limitation on the other. A local tariff would also serve as a lever for opening up external markets both to the products of Puerto Rican industry and Puerto Rican agriculture.

LAND

The policy of crop reduction brought about by the Sugar Act will probably prove beneficial to Puerto Rico, independently of the current need for stabilization of the American sugar market; and it will probably also prove a valuable contribution to a more rational Caribbean economic policy in its relations to United States. It must be borne in mind, however, that a program of reconstruction for the island begins with the handicap of a sudden reduction of 150,000 tons of sugar with a value of about $9,000,000, which will increase the number of unemployed by approximately 15,000 workers. It seems very desirable, therefore, that compensation for these immediate losses be made in the form of permanent reconstruction and not merely as transitory benefit payments. The plan submitted herewith proposes to invest the money available for compensation in the purchase of cane lands and sugar mills, the land so acquired to be given in exchange for marginal cane lands, and from the farms now occupying such lands cane would be retired and subsistence homesteads would be set up in them. The farmers in the marginal cane lands would thus be compensated by receiving good cane lands in exchange in equitable proportion, and the workers left without employment by cane retirement would receive the homesteads. These subsistence homesteads would be large enough to provide for a small cash crop, as the workers acquiring them would not have opportunity to earn wages in industry under immediate conditions. This accomplishes the maximum purposes of compensation for sugar reduction. But it simultaneously accomplishes much more. In the first place, compensation in land is socially sounder than compensation in cash, which may be misspent, possibly making the recipients again dependent upon the community. In the second place, the cane reduction would be permanent instead of transitory. In the third place, the sugar mills acquired in the public interest would function as processing and marketing centers and possibly serve as a competitive yardstick to establish more equitable return to cane growers and cane workers throughout the industry. This redistribution of income from the industrial to the agricultural factor in sugar production would not only encompass long-delayed economic justice to farmers and workers, but it would also actually retain in the island a large proportion of the millions that now flow out each year in the form of excess absentee profits.[2] Estimating the amount thus retained on the island at the conservative figure of $6,000,000 a year, this sum alone would cover the pay roll of not less than 15,000 workers at substantially higher wages than those now obtaining. This is, again, a conservative estimate. To this should be added the economic activities stimulated by the circulating velocity of the worker's dollar. The balance sheet of the policy suggested would be, in tentative figures, as follows:

Reduction in employment caused by reduction in sugar	15,000
Workers that would derive their livelihood out of subsistence farms set up in formerly marginal cane lands, about	17,000
Workers employed through the retention in the island of $6,000,000 of absentee profits	15,000
Net reduction in unemployment	17,000

It is estimated in our sugar plan that this result can be brought about by an expenditure of an amount approximately equal to the Puerto Rican processing tax over the 3-year period specified by the Jones-Costigan Act.

Even after this substantial achievement, the bulk of the Puerto Rican problem would remain before us. Probably not more than 50,000 workers could be absorbed by the most complete industrialization that can now be envisaged. Adding this highly speculative figure to the somewhat tentative total figure of 17,000 already set down as the number of laborers possibly employed by the operation of the sugar policy, we have a total of 67,000 to be subtracted from the total figure of the unemployed, and that not immediately but over a period of time. As the Emergency Relief Administration's estimate of our unemployment, counting heads of families alone, is given as 150,000, we would still have before us the task of taking care of 83,000 workers. This must be accomplished, to a great extent, through coffee, fruit, and tobacco rehabilitation, but mainly through emigration and through further homesteading. The adoption of an intensive system of coffee cultivation, as proposed elsewhere in this report, will give employment to 10,000 additional workers. The proportion to be taken care of by emigration on the one hand and by the land policy on the other would have to be determined after specific knowledge of emigration possibilities to suitable regions had been acquired.

In connection with the sugar policy here suggested, and with the general land policy, it would seem necessary to enact promptly adequate legislation prohibiting corporations, partnerships, and individuals from purchasing or otherwise securing ownership of any land the acquisition of which would push their holdings beyond the limitation of 500 acres. This restriction has existed in the Organic Act of Puerto Rico since 1900 as regards corporations. Having had no teeth or any attorneys general interested in enforcing it, this provision of the Jones Act has been either cunningly evaded or entirely disregarded. There would probably be grave danger to the economic stability of the island in an attempt to enforce this land-ownership limitation suddenly and universally; but a future restrictive policy extensive to partnerships and individuals, as well as to corporations, is absolutely necessary in connection with the suggested policy of establishing public centrals, which may eventually be used as a yardstick to assure a fair deal to the colonos and workers of the island. The reason is this:

Centrals today own on an average 60 percent of the cane they grind, 40 percent being produced by farmers. By the operation of the yardstick principle, it is intended that the farmers obtain full equitable return for the cane they supply to the mill. The mill, however, would continue to derive the full return from their own administration cane. There would be considerably more profit for the mills in their owning the land than in their buying the cane from the farmers. Therefore the danger would be present of the mills tempting the farmers with large offers to sell their land to them, and thus the effect of the public centrals acting as yardsticks to compel the retention on the island of wealth produced on the island would be invalidated.

COFFEE

Coffee is, from the point of view of social welfare, a very desirable crop for Puerto Rico. It is now in ruins due to hurricanes, low prices, and lack of credit facilities. Its production in the past has often reached half a million quintels. It is now 90,000 quintels. Every effort should be made to rehabilitate this industry.

[2]Appendix B shows how in a normally good year like 1927–28, in spite of an apparently favorable balance of $14,688,000, the net deficiency of the international income account was $10,367,000.

In stating that coffee is a very desirable crop for Puerto Rico, we are considering the following factors:

It is the only agricultural product of the island which can be classed as unsurpassed in quality, being considered as a luxury product in European markets; it is not dependent upon the tariff policies of the United States; land is more evenly distributed in coffee than in any other crop; fruit and food crops can be grown simultaneously with coffee; growing under shade, its land coverage has an important effect on water run-off and consequently on forestation and on hydroelectric power; it does not compete with any product of the United States.

From a social and technical point of view coffee rehabilitation requires: Cheap hurricane insurance; cheap production credits; cheap fertilizers; reforestation, development of seedbeds, to make the present recovery and future recoveries from hurricanes as rapid as possible; and some provision whereby coffee laborers will receive the use or the title to homes and to small acreages in exchange for labor paid for from reconstruction funds. The coffee growers are now in such distressed financial condition that they can hardly cover pay rolls; coffee laborers, landless, jobless, are subject to charity relief.

Coffee needs also an effective educational campaign which would bring about the adoption of an intensive system of cultivation and fertilization, resulting in increasing the crop output, reducing its cost, and giving more employment.

From the commercial viewpoint every effort should be made to regain the markets temporarily lost through shortage of production. Trade agreements in favor of Puerto Rican coffee, negotiated by the State Department, with Italy, Spain, France, Germany, etc., would probably assure the recovery of the markets that Puerto Rican coffee has lost. While endeavoring to increase production to its former level, provision must be made for marketing.

CITRUS FRUITS

A very prosperous citrus-fruit industry was developed in Puerto Rico in recent years, chiefly by continental Americans. This group, which has made a substantial contribution to the Puerto Rican economy, and to our farming and cooperative methods, should receive all possible aid in a reconstruction program. Their chief needs at present are similar to those of the coffee growers. Excessive shipping costs, however, probably affect the fruit growers more disastrously than any other agricultural group.

TOBACCO

Tobacco is another Puerto Rican crop that has always enjoyed a certain quality reputation. This reputation has been considerably impaired of late through a number of factors involving the technic of manufacture and marketing. The present acreage-reduction program seems to be working well. Besides the common needs of all Puerto Rican agriculture, already mentioned in regard to other crops, perhaps the most important steps that can be taken in favor of tobacco would be the strengthening of cooperative facilities and the establishment of a central selling agency. Research work for the improvement of varieties and cultural procedures is also greatly needed.

The increase in employment arising from the rehabilitation of coffee, tobacco, and citrus fruits would be, of course, deducted from the number of the unemployed that cannot be dealt with in any way save emigration.

EMIGRATION

There are many Puerto Ricans successfully earning their living in the continental United States, in Santo Domingo, and in the Virgin Islands. Organized emigrations, however, have in the past proved generally unsuccessful. This may, perhaps, be attributed to the fact that similar environments and suitable conditions have not been sought in the past for organized emigrations. Contingents of Puerto Ricans have been taken as workers to Georgia, Arizona, and Hawaii. Of these emigrations only the one to Hawaii has proved partially successful, and that perhaps may be attributed to certain similarities in working conditions and environment.

Emigration, however, may eventually become imperative in any well-coordinated policy to improve economic conditions in Puerto Rico. Possibilities should be explored as to mass colonization projects in underpopulated regions of tropical countries similar to Puerto Rico, not only in climate but also in language, religion, racial stock, traditions, and culture.

These emigrants should go to settle farm lands, not to be exploited as wage laborers. It would probably be very helpful if part of their home organization and environment could be carried with them—priests, ministers, school teachers, social workers who would be known to them, and, perhaps, general supervisors, natives of Puerto Rico, who might be vested for a time with the rank of United States consular officials. Santo Domingo, Cuba, and Costa Rica are suggested as the neighboring countries which have underpopulated regions and which afford conditions more closely approximate to those obtaining in Puerto Rico. Venezuela and Brazil may be tried also. We understand that outside labor will be needed in the construction of the Pan American Railway through Central America, and that laborers will be given an opportunity to settle land along the line. Puerto Rican laborers could well be employed and subsequently settled in connection with this project.

The suggestions and recommendations contained in this report are predicated upon our conviction that the United States, under the present administration, will at all times place the welfare of the Puerto Rican people above the interests of particular groups and that the only interest that must be recognized as deserving special preference in the premises is the prestige of the American Nation as a whole in connection with the development of a rational and equitable economic policy in the Caribbean. As a result of the plans suggested, it is probable that the United States would temporarily lose perhaps as much as 15 percent of its trade with Puerto Rico. This would mean, by present figures, a loss of perhaps $10,000,000 a year to American exporters.[3] An increase in employment and prosperity in Puerto Rico would be likely to more than cover this temporary loss in a number of years, through an increase in our purchasing power which will immediately result in increased trade with the mainland. But even assuming that it would not be covered, it must be borne in mind that Puerto Rico is headed toward a major social catastrophe, which can hardly be postponed for more than 20 years unless something fundamental is accomplished. The issue, therefore, is as between the possible loss of several millions to American exporters and the practical certainty of social chaos in Puerto Rico. Quite independent of the fact that such chaos would entail a much greater economic loss to the United States, but purely as a problem in responsibility and humanity, there can be little doubt as to how the American people would wish such an issue to be decided, or as to how a high order of American statesmanship, once convinced of its reality, will decide it.

THE LAND PROBLEM OF PUERTO RICO

Apparently the land problem of Puerto Rico has resulted in the transfer of one attorney general to another position and the induction of another to that office. In connection with this problem, I desire to call attention again to certain declarations of Secretary Ickes:

FEBRUARY 20, 1935.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COMMISSIONER IGLESIAS: I have learned, with interest, of the action of the Puerto Rican Senate in resolving by a unanimous vote to request me to cause quo warranto proceedings against the Eastern Sugar Associates to be instituted, and that this message has been sent to you by the Honorable Rafael Martinez Nadal, president of the Senate of Puerto Rico.

I am happy to inform you that on January 4 instructions were sent to the Governor of Puerto Rico to order the attorney general to proceed to bring a quo warranto against the Eastern Sugar Associates for violation of the joint resolution of May 1, 1900.

I also note the Senate's recommendation that similar proceedings be instituted against other entities which have likewise acted in violation of the act of Congress of May 1, 1900, prohibiting the holding of lands in excess of 500 acres. I think we may safely assume that the Government's action against the Eastern Sugar Associates will aim to establish a precedent to be followed thereafter.

Likewise, I note the request of the Puerto Rican Senate that in these proceedings special attorneys be appointed who are in sympathy with the intent which inspired the Senate of Puerto Rico to approve said resolution. This matter will have my consideration.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES.

The Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, issued the following press release which in effect is the following:

As far back as 1900, Congress approved a resolution limiting land ownership by agricultural corporations in Puerto Rico to 500 acres of land. This limitation also is embodied in the present Organic Act of Puerto Rico, enacted by Congress and approved March 2, 1917. The purpose of the resolution is clear in itself, and is rendered clearer by debates it occasioned in Congress in 1900.

Puerto Rico is a small agricultural and overpopulated island. The soil is the basic security of its population. This system of intolerable exploitation, the concentration of land into the hands of limited ownership, must be avoided, especially an absentee ownership. For 35 years this law of Congress has been a dead letter. What Congress in its wisdom wished to avoid is exactly what has happened. Most of the good soil in Puerto Rico today is in the hands of a few large corporations, predominantly absentee owners. Under past administrations, Puerto Rico has become more and more a factory-plantation system, worked by landless peons, consequently taxpayers on the continent are called upon to foot bigger and better bills for unavoidable, yet socially unsound, relief.

The Department of the Interior is whole-heartedly supporting the policy established by Congress 35 years ago to decentralize landholding by huge corporate entities in Puerto Rico. It is to be hoped that, since this policy has the overwhelming approval of the Puerto Rican people, it will speedily be put into effect. The Department of the Interior will vigorously pursue its course on the basis of the congressional enactment, which up to now has been a dead letter, and we are confident that all interests in Puerto Rico will cooperate.

On this subject Hon. Rafael Alonso, vice president of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, has rendered the following report:

REPORT ON LAND-HOLDING IN PUERTO RICO

When a civil government was established in Puerto Rico the Congress of the United States passed on May 1, 1900, a joint resolution, introduced by Senator Foraker, limiting the holding of lands to not more than 500 acres, anticipating that the time would come when national or foreign capital would be invested in lands in Puerto Rico, constituting large centralizations of such lands which would result disastrously to the people in general on account of the smallness of our island.

When this problem of the centralization of lands was for the first time submitted to the consideration of the people in general at a mass meeting held in the Plaza Baldorioty de Castro in San Juan, the speakers' platform was practically surrounded by police officials, and policemen armed with carbines and ready for action were posted to guard the entrance to the Intendencia Building, and the speakers were accused of being lunatics, enemies of society, and disturbers of the peace and tranquillity of the people of Puerto Rico, instigated by the old political leaders.

When the present organic act, which liberalizes the civil system in Puerto Rico, was about to be passed, Senator Broussard practically held up the approval by the Senate when our fellow citizen, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, now Resident Commissioner for Puerto Rico, in Washington, insisted that the problem of the centralization of lands should be investigated so that the Congress of the United States might adopt measures tending to its solution.

The control of the lands by the great corporations was practically recognized and always backed by the political organization known as "Unión de Puerto Rico", whose members now form the Liberal Party. The argument offered was that the violation was committed by civil partnerships and not by corporations, as specified in the statute, and, besides, that no penalty was prescribed, as is the case with Hawaii, and that, therefore, the provision was academic. At that time they even went so far as to request as a Christmas present the passage of the organic act in the original form introduced, which provided that in order to be a member of the house or of the senate it would be necessary to pay taxes on property valued at from $2,000 to $5,000, thus practically making the insular parliament a body of property owners and divesting it of its popular character.

The provisions as to the holding of property were excluded from the bill, but we have seen that the vote franchise was restricted in 1929 by those who call themselves "Liberals" because of their fear of the people, the illiterates being deprived of their vote. This evil has been corrected by the present parliamentary majority, which has established universal suffrage; and as regards the holding or possession of lands in Puerto Rico, section 39 of the present organic act provides that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provision contained in section 3 of the joint resolution approved May 1, 1900, with respect to the buying, selling, or holding of real estate. That the Governor of Puerto Rico shall cause to have made and submitted to Congress at the session beginning the first Monday in December 1917 a report of all the real estate used for the purposes of agriculture and held either directly or indirectly by corporations, partnerships, or individuals in holdings in excess of 500 acres.

On January 18, 1918, President Woodrow Wilson sent to the Congress of the United States a message or document in connection with lands directly or indirectly held by corporations, associations, and individuals in excess of 500 acres.

When the new organic act was implanted SANTIAGO IGLESIAS was elected senator at large, and he introduced in the Senate of Puerto Rico joint resolution no. 3, which contained the report rendered by Gov. Arthur Yager, of pleasant memory for the members of the Liberal Party and bitterly remembered by the laborers and socialists, who were brutally persecuted, some being killed, and who were even deprived of the constitutional guaranties, which caused a hot debate in the Senate of Puerto Rico. On that occasion the then President of the Senate of Puerto Rico, Hon. Antonio R. Barceló, uttered the memorable words against Senator IGLESIAS to the effect that if he were the President of the Republic he would deport him from the island. This showed the clear and precise fact that the centralization of lands in Puerto Rico was sponsored and maintained by the then Unión de Puerto Rico Party, whose members now form the Liberal Party, which is responsible for the present extent of said centralization which has thrown thousands of countrymen into the urban zones and has left more than 57,000 former property owners without any property, resulting in the largest unemployment registered in the history of Puerto Rico.

That was not sufficient reason for the representatives of the Free Federation of Labor of Puerto Rico and of the Socialist Party to cease to insist, once and again, with the Legislature of Puerto Rico and with the Congress of the United States, for the enforcement of that part of the organic act which refers to the 500-acre limitation.

At the hearings held in 1924 in Washington, D. C., by the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, when the joint commission of the Legislature of Puerto Rico appeared to demand greater powers and liberty, Senator IGLESIAS made the following remarks when the question of the monopolization of lands was brought up:

"One of the problems that Puerto Rico wants to solve is the enforcement of the joint resolution, section 3, approved May 1900. When this problem came to the United States Congress for legislation, and that was when our first organic act was approved, a Senator thought and knew in advance what was going to happen in Puerto Rico and which I will state hereafter. The insert is section 3 of the joint resolution of May 1, 1900:

"'No corporation shall be authorized to conduct the business of buying and selling real estate or be permitted to hold or own real estate except such as may be reasonably necessary to enable it to carry out the purposes for which it was created, and every corporation hereafter authorized to engage in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 500 acres of land; and this provision shall be held to prevent any member of a corporation engaged in agriculture from being in anywise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture.'

"Now, what has happened in Puerto Rico was just the reverse that the Congress was expecting. I consider it entirely a problem for the island of Puerto Rico, all what has happened today in the holding of land; we have a monopolistic holding of land in the island of Puerto Rico. Such was the case when the Jones Act was passed by Congress in 1917, and when some influences wanted to prevent the enforcement of this section 3 of the aforesaid resolution and practically legalize what was going on, a compromise came, and a clause was put in the Jones Act demanding by the United States an investigation regarding the land question and the investigation was carried on. I will insert this document in the record to show the results of said investigation. It was signed by Woodrow Wilson at the White House on January 18, 1918.

"In such document may be seen the condition of the holdings of the land; you will see corporations, associations, partnerships, controlling from 10,000 up to 40,000 and 75,000 acres of the best land of Puerto Rico. The result is that the great part of the east, the south, and the north of the island is controlled by a few, and consequently the thousands and thousands of workingmen and workingwomen in these sections of the island are practically at the mercy of these corporations.

"Mr. WARD. But you have not satisfied me as to what was done by the Jones Act. What is the preseht law of Puerto Rico with respect to the holdings of these corporations?

"Senator IGLESIAS. Senator Broussard introduced two amendments to the Jones Act to penalize the violations, that never passed.

"Mr. SALMON. Covering 500 acres?

"Senator IGLESIAS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is there a penalty affixed in case of violation?

"Senator IGLESIAS. No; the opinion has been in Puerto Rico that the enforcement of the law was almost impossible, and the majority of the legislature thought that we did not have authority to go into the penalties to enforce it.

"Mr. WARD. Mr. Iglesias, we have nothing before this committee directed to this question. Why have you not some bill here?

"Senator IGLESIAS. I am going to ask the introduction of a bill.

"Mr. WARD. Mr. Dávila is supposed to introduce bills that may pertain to the immediate interests of the island.

"Mr. DÁVILA. I introduced the bill under consideration following the unanimous views of the delegation.

"Mr. WARD. You have no bill which touches the question he is on?

"Mr. DÁVILA. None at all.

"Mr. WARD. Why do you not have some bill laid before this committee that they may pass upon it one way or the other?

"Governor TOWNER. Perhaps I know about as much about the provision in the Organic Act as anyone. The Organic Act provided, as Senator IGLESIAS said, that the limitation should be 500 acres of land. Now, when it came to the question of paying, that is a mere declaration that it should be followed by a penalty or it should be followed by provisions by which it could be regulated or it should be provided with provisions which should enable the disposition of land already acquired and owned, all of these things were considered, so it was left entirely to the Legislature of Puerto Rico to do what they thought best with regard to fixing penalties, and making such arrangements, because, gentlemen, you will recognize this fact, which is well known in the jurisprudence of the United States, that the control and disposition of lands is within the control of the States exclusively, insofar as those regulations relate to the disposition and control of lands.

"Now, insofar as I know, neither Senator IGLESIAS or anybody else has ever introduced any bill in the Legislature of Puerto Rico with regard to that proposition. I do not see how there can be any question regarding the legal right to do so, but the people of Puerto Rico have never thought it to their interest to even introduce any legislation like that.

* * * * * * * *

"Mr. WARD. Governor, you laid down a proposition and got my consent to it, that, after reflection, I doubt if either of us is correct about, that it is within the States to control the ownership or limit the ownership of lands. North Carolina for 30 years had exactly that statute, and it was more honored in the breach than in the observance, and it went out of our statute law. It was eliminated from the new codification of laws, and was not enforced at all. Is it not a national constitutional question?

"Governor TOWNER. Do not misunderstand me, because I think that Congress would have the power to act.

"Mr. WARD. The education that you and I have as American citizens, having grown up on a great continent where we want to encourage the acquisition of property and foster progress of that sort, would seem to be quite different in an overpopulated island. I am impressed with the idea that the law ought to be enforced down there, but not in Iowa, for instance, because there is so much land there.

"Mr. SALMON. I would like to ask you a question.

"Governor TOWNER. I beg your pardon.

"Mr. SALMON. With reference to the policy of the State to regulate the disposition and ownership of property that the law pertains more directly to States, but to Territories it does not apply, does it?

"Governor TOWNER. Well, I think it does, insofar as the past history of our Territories are concerned.

"Senator IGLESIAS. I want to explain that as a senator of the Legislature of Puerto Rico I have on various occasions introduced bills to remedy this land problem, and when this land question came up on the floor of the Senate of Puerto Rico the bill was killed, and then I have to come before several administrations and Congress of the United States to ask for the remedy, as I am doing it now. The delegation has met and discussed this matter and has approved the proposition of coming before this committee to ask you and request that a bill be introduced to insert a new clause in our organic law.

"Mr. WARD. Introduce what?

"Senator IGLESIAS. We are asking and requesting this committee to introduce a bill by itself with the land clause in it.

"Mr. WARD. I doubt if you want to do it until you have gone there, to your legislation, and exhausted your authority.

"Mr. SALMON. He has done that.

"Mr. WARD. You have said you have had your bill defeated upon the argument of its unconstitutionality.

"Senator IGLESIAS. Not only that, but because it has been stated that the Legislature of Puerto Rico had not the authority to legislate regarding the land question." (Copied from the Third Report of the Legislative Committee to Investigate the Causes of Unemployment in Puerto Rico, of February 2, 1932, pp. 99, 100, 101, and 102.)

Together with this problem, there is that of absenteeism, which constitutes one of the heaviest drains that a country can support.

CÁMARA DE REPRESENTANTES,
San Juan, P. R., July 1, 1935.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a copy of a memorandum, which I respectfully submit to you regarding House Resolution 8621, expressing my points of view, specially on that part on which I believe that Congress is trying to recognize and legalize the Chardon's plan relative to purchasing sugar mills and the creation of an agency to take charge of all the rehabilitation measures for Puerto Rico.

With my best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours fraternally, RAFAEL ALONSO TORRES.

For SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington.

Memorandum about H. R. 8621, "To provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 may be expended for permanent rehabilitation, and for other purposes."

Under section 1, it is provided that it shall be constituted a special fund to provide relief and work relief to increase employment in Puerto Rico, with all the sums which the President has aggregated or allotted or shall segregate or allot for projects in Puerto Rico, out of money appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. The fund thus established shall continue available for expenditure until June 30, 1940.

Furthermore, all incomes derived from operations financed out of this fund and the proceeds of the disposition of property acquired therewith shall constitute a revolving fund which shall remain available for expenditure for the purposes and in manner authorized herein and in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

In page 2, lines 12 to 19, it is made clear that projects for rural rehabilitation in Puerto Rico may include the acquisition, development, maintenance, and operation of agricultural and industrial properties and enterprises.

This language may signify that any agency or agencies lawfully designated or established to administer funds allotted hereunder or the revolving fund herein authorized may be embarked in the acquisition, development, maintenance, and operation of sugar factories and other similar kind of enterprises, in order to increase employment in Puerto Rico.

But nothing is said about that this agency or agencies could represent a supergovernment in Puerto Rico, as may be seen in H. R. 8621 mentioned. It is understood that these agencies shall be in their constitution and character, Federal. Not one word about the cooperation with the insular government is consigned. All projects are realized just as the P. R. E. R. A. has done in the past.

Unless a definition or amendment is inserted, making the above point clear, the aspiration of laborers is wrecked. Laborers claim for the establishment of subsistence farms, so as to have a better distribution of our soils, which is a paramount problem in our rural regions. We have over 400,000 inhabitants without means of subsistence.

No protection is given laborers regarding wages and length of working hours during week, unless this is covered by "A reasonable charge may be made for materials and services produced or made available by any project; provided, that such materials and services may also be supplied as compensation, in whole or in part, for services rendered by persons employed upon any project", contained in page 2, lines 13 to 19 of said House Resolution.

We cannot object to any kind of relief and work relief tending to increase employment in Puerto Rico. If we do so, it could be considered as an obstruction to the rehabilitation program which President Roosevelt and Congress intend to establish in Puerto Rico. But this House resolution, as we see it, does not bring relief to our agricultural and industrial laborers, as it would not create enough means to solve our unemployment problem.

Power is conferred to any agency or agencies lawfully designated or established to administer funds allotted, or the revolving fund herein authorized to acquire, develop, maintain, and operate agricultural and industrial properties and enterprises, and also to dispose of such property acquired. It seems to us that Congress is trying to recognize and legalize that part of Chardon's plan to buy sugar mills, and create one agency to take charge of all the rehabilitation measures for Puerto Rico. This belief arises because no agency has been created as yet, and nobody knows what measures shall be adopted for the welfare of the Puerto Rican people.

By section 2, it is provided that "All or any part of the unobligated balance of taxes heretofore or hereafter collected from the processing of sugar beets or sugarcane in Puerto Rico and/or upon the processing in continental United States of sugar produced in or coming from Puerto Rico are hereby authorized, in the discretion of the President, to be transferred to the revolving fund authorized by this act."

A sum not exceeding $10,000,000 of this fund may, in the discretion of the President, be set aside in the Treasury for use as an insurance fund to insure individual agriculturists in Puerto Rico, but to the extent only of such insurance fund and its accretions, against damage by hurricane to their farm dwellings and farm buildings; growing crops; plants and trees, including trees used as shade for growing crops; warehouses; and produce in barns and warehouses.

This is a good thing, but we wish to call the attention that in the hurricane periods many people living in the urban zones, who have suffered great losses and damages, not covered by insurance policies, due to the high rates of insurance, have never received help of any kind. These conditions have been the same for laborers in general. Little house shops and factories have been destroyed and devastated by the hurricane furies.

In this line we believe that something could be done by the Congress of the United States.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Specifically, Puerto Rico has suffered to the extent of $27,544,851 by new-deal legislation which Mr. deHostos (president of the Chamber of Commerce of Puerto Rico), detailed as follows:

"Increased cost of commodity purchases in the United States, $8,193,652; flour-processing tax, $1,000,000; excess over benefit payments from processing taxes on commodities produced in the island, $800,000; sugar surplus $15,000,000; wage loss through sugar restriction $2,000,000; wage loss in tobacco and needlework industries, $500,000. In addition, island commerce has suffered losses from business stagnation and restriction.

THE COTTON ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR THE THIRTEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS, THE STATE OF TEXAS, AND THE NATION

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this time a letter just received from Mr. C. A. Cobb, Director of the Division of Cotton of the Department of Agriculture, giving complete information pertaining to the cotton adjustment program for my district, the State of Texas, as well as the Nation. I am sure this information will be of great value to the people of my district, as well as the Nation generally.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., August 24, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM D. McFARLANE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. McFARLANE: Recognizing that you are keenly interested in knowing of the progress made in the adjustment of cotton under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, we are taking this opportunity to supply you with information pertaining to the cotton-adjustment program for your district.

Enclosed is a tabulation, by counties, for your district, and a summary for the State of Texas which gives, by years, the value of the cotton crop, including rental and other payments to farmers for the 1932–33, 1933–34, and 1934–35 seasons.

For your district the farm value of lint and seed in the 1932–33 season was $11,866,331.35, and in the 1933–34 season, including payments, was $23,554,357.87, and in the 1934–35 season, including payments, was $9,176,583.71.

Producers in your district also received $902,078.92 from the sale of surplus tax-exemption certificates through the national pool. This was truly crop insurance to producers in your district. The cotton program is price insurance as well as crop insurance. The grower receives his rental and parity payments on cotton regardless of drought, flood, or insect damage. Moreover, adjusting the supply of cotton to the demand protects the price.

As you know, the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as written into the very title page of the act itself, is to increase agricultural purchasing power. The declared policy, simple, definite, and direct, is to establish and to maintain such a balance between the production and the consumption of agricultural commodities and such marketing conditions therefor as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period. In keeping with this policy the cotton adjustment program has been designed to return to farmers the largest possible net income from the production of cotton. The data enclosed will show the progress of the cotton adjustment program through August 14, 1935.

This Division will take pleasure in supplying you with any additional information you request pertaining to the cotton adjustment program.

Sincerely yours,

C. A. COBB,
Director Division of Cotton.

COTTON PRODUCTION ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM PROGRESS REPORT AS OF AUGUST 14, 1935

In 1933 there were about 2,000,000 cotton farms, including tracts of land worked by share tenants and croppers who were in that year eligible to enter into contracts. About 50 percent of such farms were covered and 1,032,000 contracts were in force. In 1934 tracts of land worked by share tenants and croppers could not be covered by separate contracts but had to be included in the contract of the owner or operator which reduced the number of cotton farms for that year to 1,500,000. About 67 percent of these farms were covered and 1,004,000 contracts were in force. In 1935 it is estimated that 1,300,000 contracts will be in force covering about 87 percent of the 1,500,000 farms.

In 1933 cotton producers plowed up 10,497,000 acres of growing cotton or about 26 percent of the acreage in cultivation on July 1. In 1934 they rented 14,547,000 acres or 38.2 percent of their base cotton acreage, with 45 percent as the maximum an individual with a base of over 5 acres could rent and 40 percent as the maximum for a county. In 1935 it is estimated that approximately 14,000,000 acres will be rented, amounting to about 33 percent of the base, with 35 percent as the maximum an individual with a base of over 5 acres can rent.

In 1933 cotton producers received $175,500,000 in cash and cotton option benefit payments; in 1934 they received approximately $115,000,000 in rental and parity payments; and in 1935 they will receive approximately $125,000,000.

Farm values of lint and seed calculated from Bureau of Agricultural Economics data; rental payments for 1933–34 from contract records; option payments, Cotton Pool, Office of the Administrator; 1934–35 payments, Division of Cotton.

The average value of a bale of cotton and the seed was $37.42 in 1932, $55.35 in 1933, and $80.02 in 1934.

The farm value of the cotton crop, including the value of seed, in 1932 was $483,913,000, and including rental and benefit payments was $893,632,000 in 1933 and $882,772,000 in 1934, with one of the worst droughts in history in the western part of the Cotton Belt.

The world carry-over of American cotton was 12,960,000 bales on August 1, 1932, 11,588,000 bales on August 1, 1933, 10,634,000 bales on August 1, 1934, and is estimated at 9,000,000 for August 1, 1935.

The world supply of American cotton was 25,961,000 bales in the 1932–33 season, 24,635,000 bales in the 1933–34 season after 4,500,000 bales had been taken out of production, 20,270,000 bales in the 1934–35 season, and is estimated at 20,700,000 for the 1935–36 season.

The world supply of all growths of cotton has been reduced from a potential supply of 47,000,000 bales before the plow-up program in 1933 to 39,282,000 bales for the 1934–35 season. This is a decrease of 7,718,000 bales.

DIVISION OF COTTON, August 14, 1935.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1874. An act to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, the captains and members of the crews of certain fishing and pleasure boats, and to others; and

S. 3434. An act to provide for the appointment of one additional judge for the district of Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3210. An act to refer the claim of the Menominee Tribe of Indians to the Court of Claims with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and

S. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

REVENUE FROM DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8870) to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and to enforce the postal laws with respect to the enforcement of the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the statement may be dispensed with. I think everybody knows its contents.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think somebody should explain the changes in detail, for they are very important.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I want to be heard on the conference report.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have the conference report explained.

The SPEAKER. This is not a question of explaining the report, it is a question of whether the House will dispense with the reading of the report.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8870) to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, to enforce the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 76, 77, 78, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 87½, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 134, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 145, 148, 149, 152, 154, 155, 156, and 157.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 26, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 49, 55, 57, 73, 75, 93, 104, 111, 121, 133, 137, 143, 144, and 147, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) The Administrator shall make a report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, of the administration of the functions with which he is charged, and shall include in such report the names and compensation of all persons employed by the Administration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "the date upon which the Administrator first appointed under this Act takes office"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "the date upon which the Administrator first appointed under this Act takes office"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, and on page 22 of the House bill, after line 23, insert the following:

"In the case of malt beverages, the provisions of subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) shall apply to transactions between a retailer or trade buyer in any State and a brewer, importer, or wholesaler of malt beverages outside such State only to the extent that the law of such State imposes similar requirements with respect to similar transactions between a retailer or trade buyer in such State and a brewer, importer, or wholesaler of malt beverages in such State, as the case may be. In the case of malt beverages, the provisions of subsections (e) and (f) shall apply to the labeling of malt beverages sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in any State from any place outside thereof, or the advertising of malt beverages intended to be sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in any State from any place outside thereof, only to the extent that the law of such State imposes similar requirements with respect to the labeling or advertising, as the case may be, of malt beverages not sold or shipped or delivered for shipment or otherwise introduced into or received in such State from any place outside thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein nor any decision, ruling, or regulation of any Department of the Government shall deny the right of any person to use any trade name or brand of foreign origin not presently effectively registered in the United States Patent Office which has been used by such person or predecessors in the United States for a period of at least five years last past, if the use of such name or brand is qualified by the name of the locality in the United States in which the product is produced, and, in the case of the use of such name or brand on any label or in any advertisement, if such qualification is as conspicuous as such name or brand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "The prohibitions of this subsection and regulations thereunder shall not apply to the publisher of any newspaper, periodical, or other publication, or radio broadcaster, unless such publisher or radio broadcaster is engaged in business as a distiller, brewer, rectifier, or other producer, or as an importer or wholesaler, of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, or as a bottler, or warehouseman and bottler, of distilled spirits, directly or indirectly or through an affiliate."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the fifth line of said amendment strike out "commission" and insert "Administrator"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DISPOSAL OF FORFEITED ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

"SEC. 9. (a) All distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages forfeited, summarily or by order of court, under any law of the United States, shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury to be disposed of as hereinafter provided.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall dispose of all distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages which have been delivered to him pursuant to subsection (a)—

"(1) By delivery to such Government agencies as, in his opinion, have a need for such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages for medicinal, scientific, or mechanical purposes; or

"(2) By gift to such eleemosynary institutions as, in his opinion, have a need for such distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages for medicinal purposes; or

"(3) By destruction.

"(c) No distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages which have been seized under any law of the United States, may be disposed of in any manner whatsoever except after forfeiture and as provided in this section.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. Section 610 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1310), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The provisions of the internal-revenue laws applicable to natural wine shall apply in the same manner and to the same extent to citrus-fruit wines which are the product of normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound ripe citrus fruit (except lemons and limes), with or without the addition of dry cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per centum of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) for the purpose of perfecting the product according to standards, but without the addition or abstraction of other substances, except as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying or aging.'

"SEC. 12. Section 612 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1310), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 612. That under such regulations and official supervision and upon the giving of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, any producer of wines defined under the provisions of this title may withdraw from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse grape brandy, or wine spirits, for the fortification of such wines on the premises where actually made, and any producer of citrus-fruit wines may similarly withdraw citrus-fruit brandy for the fortification of citrus-fruit wines on the premises where actually made: Provided, That there shall be levied and assessed against the producer of such wines or citrus-fruit wines a tax (in lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law) of 20 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy, citrus-fruit brandy, or wine spirit whenever withdrawn and hereafter so used by him in the fortification of such wines or citrus-fruit wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within ten months from the date of notice thereof: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as exempting any wines, citrus-fruit wines, cordials, liqueurs, or similar compounds from the payment of any tax provided for in this title.

"'Any such wines or citrus-fruit wines may, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, be sold or removed tax free for the manufacture of vinegar, or for the production of dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol by volume.

"'The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol by volume.'

"SEC. 13. Section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (2)), is amended by inserting after 'grape brandy' a comma and the following: 'or containing citrus-fruit wine fortified with citrus-fruit brandy.'

"SEC. 14. Section 42 of the Act entitled 'An Act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes' approved October 1, 1890, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1302 (a)), is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The provisions of this section and section 43 shall apply to the use of citrus-fruit brandy in the preparation of fortified citrus-fruit wines in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply to the use of wine spirits in the fortification of sweet wines, except that no brandy (other than a citrus-fruit brandy) may be used in the fortification of citrus-fruit wine and a citrus-fruit brandy prepared from one kind of citrus fruit may not be used for the fortification of a citrus-fruit wine prepared from another kind of citrus fruit or for the fortification of a wine prepared from any fruit other than citrus fruit.'

"SEC. 15. Section 3255 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 26, sec. 1176), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, oranges, pears, pineapples, apricots, berries, plums, pawpaws, persimmons, prunes, figs, cherries, dates, or citrus fruits (except lemons and limes) from any provision of the internal-revenue laws relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: Provided, That where, in the manufacture of wine or citrus-fruit wine, artificial sweetening has been used, the wine, or the fruit pomace residuum thereof, or the citrus-fruit wine may be used in the distillation of brandy or citrus-fruit brandy, as the case may be, and such use shall not prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, from exempting such distiller from any provision of the internal-revenue laws relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: And provided further, That the distillers mentioned in this section may add to not less than five hundred gallons (ten barrels) of grape cheese not more than five hundred gallons of a sugar solution made from cane, beet, starch, or corn sugar, 95 per centum pure, such solution to have a saccharine strength of not to exceed 10 per centum, and may ferment the resultant mixture on a winery or distillery premises, and such fermented product shall be regarded as distilling material.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 16. (a) Section 1 of the act of March 3, 1877, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 1250), is amended by striking out 'not exceeding 10 in number in any one collection district', and by inserting at the end of such section the following new paragraph:

"'The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such regulations as he may promulgate from time to time with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, in his discretion, establish such warehouses adjacent to distilleries, and may, in his discretion, permit the removal of brandy directly from the distillery to such warehouses, and from such warehouses to the distillery warehouse of the producing distiller.'

"(b) Section 51 of the act of August 27, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 1265), is amended by striking out 'not exceeding 10 in number in any one collection district', and by inserting at the end of such section the following new paragraph:

"'The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such regulations as he may promulgate from time to time with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, in his discretion, establish such warehouses adjacent to distilleries, and may, in his discretion, permit the removal of spirits directly from the distillery to such warehouses, and from such warehouses to the distillery warehouse of the producing distiller.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 153: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "17"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8870) to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, to enforce the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: This amendment changes the short title of the act. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 2: The House bill created the Federal Alcohol Administration as a division in the Treasury Department. The Administration was to be headed by an Administrator appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointments of officers and employees by the Administrator were to be made without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, but their compensation was subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. All rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator were subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate amendment establishes in lieu of the Federal Alcohol Administration provided in the House bill an independent agency to be known as the "Federal Alcohol Commission", to be composed of three commissioners appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It provides that not more than two members of the Commission shall be members of the same political party. The amendment further provides that one of the Commissioners shall be chairman of the Commission and shall be its chief executive officer; another Commissioner shall be vice chairman of the Commission; and a third Commissioner, who shall be a lawyer, shall be general counsel of the Commission. Under the Senate amendment, appointments by the Commission are made without regard to the civil-service laws but subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and any officer or employee receiving a salary at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum is required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All officers and employees of the Commission receiving less salary are to be appointed by the Commission, and the Commission is to prescribe the duties of all its officers and employees irrespective of their method of appointment. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17, 21, 23, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 76, 77, 87, 95, 96, 107, 110, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 120, 122, 124, 125, 131, 134, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 145, 148, 149, and 154: These amendments are clerical amendments made necessary by reason of Senate amendment no. 2. The Senate recedes in conformity with the action on amendment no. 2.

On amendment no. 4: This is a clerical amendment, and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 13: The Senate amendment authorizes the Commission to make investigations and studies with respect to various phases of the alcoholic-beverage industries, or with respect to matters necessary for the performance of its powers and duties, and to report thereon to the President and the Congress from time to time, together with its recommendations. The House bill had no similar provision. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 14: The Senate amendment provides that the Commission shall make an annual report to Congress and include therein the names and compensation of all persons employed by the Commission. The House bill had no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment placing such duties on the administrator.

On amendments nos. 15, 16, 18, 19, 24, 25, 37, 39, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 97, 101, 102, 106, 108, 109, 112, 114, 119, 123, 126 155, and 157: The House bill covered beer and other malt beverages and its provisions applied to brewers and importers and wholesale distributors of such malt beverages, except that brewers were exempt from the provisions of the House bill requiring basic permits. The effect of these Senate amendments is to exempt brewers, importers, and wholesale distributors of malt beverages from all provisions of the bill.

The conference agreement retains the provision of the House bill under which importers and wholesalers of malt beverages are required to have permits. The conference agreement applies the trade-practices provisions of the bill to malt beverages with a modification under which such provisions are to apply to transactions between a brewer or other distributor outside a State and a retailer or trade buyer in a State only to the extent that the State imposes similar requirements on the same classes of persons and with respect to the same transactions within the State and under which the requirements of the bill with respect to labeling and advertising are to apply to persons outside the State in respect of their products shipped into or advertised in a State only to the extent that the State imposes similar requirements in similar cases within the State. The conference action to accomplish this result consists of the House receding with an amendment on amendment no. 79 and the Senate receding on all the other amendments.

On amendments nos. 20 and 22: Under the House bill the requirement that importers and persons engaged in the business of distilling spirits, producing wine, rectifying, or blending distilled spirits or wine, or bottling or warehousing, and bottling distilled spirits must have a basic permit to engage in operations, became effective 60 days after the enactment of the act. The Senate amendment provides that these requirements shall be effective 60 days after such date as the majority of the Commission first appointed takes office. The House recedes on both amendments with amendments changing "Commission" to "Administrator."

On amendment no. 26: The House bill provided that the requirement that wholesale distributors must have a basic permit to engage in operations should take effect January 1, 1936. The Senate amendment provides that this requirement shall take effect March 1, 1936. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 28: The House bill provided that applicants for a basic permit (other than those entitled thereto as a matter of right) should not be entitled to the permit if it were found that the applicant had within 5 years prior to the date of application been convicted of a felony. The Senate amendment adds an additional requirement that the applicant must not have been convicted, in such period, of a violation of a Federal law relating to liquor, including the taxation thereof, irrespective of whether the violation constituted a felony. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the applicant must not have been convicted, within a period of 3 years prior to date of application, of a misdemeanor under any Federal law relating to liquor, including the taxation thereof.

On amendments nos. 38, 40, 41, 42, and 132: The House bill provided that distilled spirits could be distributed without restriction in barrels, casks, or kegs made of wood, if the container had a capacity of 1 wine-gallon or more. This authority was, however, subject to an exception in the case of distribution into those States in which the use or sale of any such barrel, cask, or keg is prohibited by the law of the State. The House bill further provided that a recipient of bulk goods should not be entitled to package or repackage the bulk distilled spirits for sale or resale in bottles or other containers intended to reach the consumer unless the bottler was a distiller, rectifier of distilled spirits, a person operating a bonded warehouse qualified under the internal-revenue laws, or a class 8 bonded warehouse qualified under the customs laws, holding a basic permit, or was a proprietor of an industrial-alcohol plant, or was an agency of a State or any political subdivision thereof. The House bill further provided that a recipient of bulk distilled spirits should not dispense the distilled spirits for sale unless such person was a bona fide hotel or club. Specific provision was also made in the House bill recognizing that a wholesaler of distilled spirits could qualify as a rectifier, but prohibiting a retailer from so qualifying.

Senate amendments nos. 40, 41, and 42 strike out the House provisions. Senate amendment no. 132 makes it unlawful for any person to sell or offer to sell, contract to sell, or otherwise dispose of distilled spirits in containers having a capacity in excess of 1 gallon, except under regulations of the Commission for export, or to a distiller or rectifier (including a wholesaler who qualifies as a rectifier) of distilled spirits, person operating a bonded warehouse under the internal-revenue laws or a class 8 bonded warehouse qualified under the customs laws, a wine maker for the fortification of wines, a proprietor of an industrial-alcohol plant, or an agency of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof. The Senate amendment also makes it unlawful for any person to import distilled spirits in bulk unless he is one of the list above specified or unless for sale to or use by one of such persons. The Senate amendment further makes unlawful transactions in warehouse receipts covering spirits in bulk unless the particular receipt includes among its terms a requirement that the warehouseman shall, before delivery of the distilled spirits, pursuant to the delivery of the receipt, package them in bottles labeled and marked in accordance with law, or deliver them in bulk only to persons to whom it is lawful to sell or otherwise dispose of distilled spirits in bulk, i. e., the persons in the list above specified. The Senate amendment further provides that it is unlawful for any person to bottle distilled spirits, or package or repackage distilled spirits in bottles, unless the bottler is a person to whom it is lawful to sell or otherwise dispose of distilled spirits in bulk, i. e., a person in the list above specified. A criminal penalty of $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, is provided for the violation and all distilled spirits and the containers thereof with respect to which a violation occurs are forfeited to the United States.

Senate amendment numbered 38 makes observance of the bulk sales requirements as set forth in Senate amendment numbered 132 a condition of a basic permit issued under the bill. The House recedes on amendments numbered 38, 40, 41, and 42, and recedes with an amendment on 132 changing "Commission" to "Administrator."

On amendments nos. 43, 49, 55, 57, and 75: These are clerical amendments changing paragraph letters. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 73: This is a clarifying amendment, and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 84: This amendment excepts from the tied-house prohibitions signs not exceeding $100 in aggregate value to any retailer in any calendar year. This is no corresponding exception in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 85 and 86: Amendment numbered 85 excepts from the tied-house prohibitions "advertising specialties and graphic arts advertising items of paper or paperlike substance." Amendment numbered 86 makes a clerical amendment in connection with amendment numbered 85. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 87½: The House bill provided in the tied-house prohibition that credit in excess of the period usual and customary to the industry for the particular class of transactions could not be extended to the retailer. The Senate amendment strikes out "to the industry." The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 88: The House bill provided that the tied-house prohibition against excessive credits to retailers should be subject to regulations of the enforcement agency. The Senate amendment strikes out the requirement as to regulations. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 93: This amendment provides that the restrictions in the "consignment sales" subsection shall not apply to transactions involving solely the bona fide return of merchandise for ordinary and usual commercial reasons arising after the merchandise has been sold. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 98: The House bill provided that the regulations of the enforcement agency as to informative labeling should provide the consumer with adequate information as to the manufacturer or bottler or importer of the particular product. The Senate amendment provides that in case of domestically bottled goods the regulation shall require the label to show the name of the manufacturer or bottler or distributor, and, in the case of imported products, show the name of the foreign manufacturer and the domestic importer. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 99, 100, 105, 127, 128, and 129: The House bill provided that the regulations of the enforcement agency with regard to the informative labeling and advertising of distilled spirits provide that in the case of distilled spirits (other than cordials, liqueurs, and specialties) there be stated on the label or in the advertisement, as the case might be, the percentage of the neutral spirits used in the production thereof and the name of the commodity from which the neutral spirits were distilled. The provision applied to distilled spirits produced by blending or rectification and to gin, whether produced by blending or rectification or by process of continuous distillation. The provisions did not apply to straight neutral spirits or alcohol produced by process of continuous distillation. The Senate amendments incorporate clarifying provisions making it certain that the informative requirements apply to gin produced by process of continuous distillation, as well as by blending or rectification and also extend the requirements to straight neutral spirits or alcohol produced by process of continuous distillation. In addition, the Senate amendment makes it clear that it is mandatory upon the enforcement agency to issue regulations of this informative character and that in case neutral spirits made from two different commodities are included in the product then the percentage made from each such commodity shall be stated.

Senate amendment no. 105 further provides that the regulations of the commission with respect to labeling and standards of identity shall prohibit the designation of any product as neutral spirits or as any type of whisky or gin, for nonindustrial use, if the neutral spirits used in making the product are distilled from materials other than grain. This requirement applies to neutral spirits, whisky, and gin produced by a process of continuous distillation, as well as to gin or any type of blended or other whisky produced by blending or rectification. The Senate amendment further provides by definition that the term "neutral spirits", where used throughout the act, is synonymous with ethyl alcohol.

The Senate recedes on amendments nos. 105 and 129 which make the regulations mandatory and which prohibit designation of whisky, neutral spirits, or gin, as such, unless produced from grain. The Senate recedes on amendments nos. 100 and 128 which make changes in numbers in connection with amendments nos. 105 and 129. The effect of the conference agreement is to insert the substance of the House provisions with the addition thereto of provisions similar to those in Senate amendments nos. 105 and 129 under which the requirement is imposed that there be a statement of the commodity from which neutral spirits or gin produced by continuous distillation is produced.

On amendment no. 103: This amendment provides that nothing in the act or any decision, ruling, or regulation of any department of the Government shall deny the right of any person to use any trade name or brand of foreign origin not presently effectively registered in the United States Patent Office which has been used by such person or predecessors in the United States for a period of at least 5 years last past. The House bill had no corresponding provision. The House recedes with an amendment inserting the substance of the Senate provision but adding a limitation that if such a name or brand is used its use must be qualified by the name of the locality in the United States in which the product is produced and on labels and in advertising this qualification must be as conspicuous as the name or brand itself.

On amendments nos. 104 and 146: The House bill provided that no person should remove from Government custody after purchase at a Government sale any distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages in bottles to be held for sale, until such bottles are packaged, marked, branded, and labeled in conformity with the labeling requirements of the bill. Senate amendment no. 104 strikes out these provisions. Senate amendment no. 146 provides that distilled spirits and wine forfeited or condemned shall not be sold, or otherwise disposed of, but shall be destroyed; except that any such distilled spirits and wine certified by Government chemists to be of a quality equivalent to United States Pharmacopoeia quality or suitable for medicinal purposes shall be disposed of by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to hospitals operated or maintained in whole or in part by the United States, for use by them for medicinal purposes only.

The conference agreement on amendment no. 146 inserts a provision under which distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages forfeited summarily or by order of court are to be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury. He is to dispose of them by delivering them to Government agencies for medicinal, scientific, or mechanical purposes, but if they have no need for them, by giving them to charitable institutions for medicinal purposes. Any articles which are not so disposed of are to be destroyed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Previous contrary authorizations are repealed and the Secretary is given power to prescribe rules and regulations to carry out the section.

The House recedes on amendment no. 104 relating to labeling after Government sale in view of the insertion of the provision prohibiting Government sales.

On amendment no. 111: The House bill provided that the requirements for certificates of label approval should become effective not later than January 1, 1936. The Senate amendment provides that these requirements shall become effective not later than March 1, 1936. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 121: This is a clerical amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 130: This is a clarifying amendment and makes certain that the prohibitions with regard to false advertising and the requirements as to informative advertising shall not apply to the publisher of any newspaper, periodical, or other publication, or radio broadcaster unless such publisher or radio broadcaster is engaged in publishing the newspaper, periodical, or other publication, or in transmitting radio broadcasts, is engaged in the distilled spirits or wine industry, directly or indirectly. The House recedes with an amendment applying similar provisions in the case of malt beverages.

On amendments nos. 133, 137, 147, and 153: These are clerical amendments changing section numbers. The House recedes on 133, 137, and 147, and with an amendment making a further change in the number on 153.

On amendment no. 135: The House bill provided that violations of the act could be compromised by the enforcement agency at any time prior to the commencement of court proceedings with respect to the violation. The Senate amendment provides this power of compromise can be exercised either before, pending, or after completion of court proceedings. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 143 and 144: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 150: The Senate amendment applies to citrus-fruit wines the provisions of internal-revenue laws applicable to "natural" grape wine. It also permits the withdrawal of citrus-fruit brandy and use of it for the fortification of citrus-fruit wine—applying in such case the same tax (20 cents a proof gallon) as in the case of grape brandy for fortification of grape wine. The amendment makes the necessary amendment to the provisions of law under which liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds are taxed if grape brandy is used therein so that these provisions will apply with respect to citrus-fruit wines fortified with citrus-fruit brandy. The amendment makes applicable to the fortification of citrus-fruit wines with citrus-fruit brandy the provisions of law relating to fortification of grape wines with grape brandy but limits the provision so that a citrus-fruit brandy may be used only for the fortification of a citrus-fruit wine produced from the same fruit; e. g., orange brandy may be used only for fortification of orange wine. Citrus-fruit-brandy distillers and date-brandy distillers may be exempted by the Secretary of the Treasury from certain provisions of law relating to the manufacture of such brandies as in the case, under present law, of distillers of apple brandy and other fruit-brandy distillers.

The amendment also exempts citrus-fruit wine makers and other wine makers (in the same manner as in the case of grape wine makers) from the special tax upon wine makers if they sell wines of their own production where they are made or at the wine maker's general business office.

The amendment also makes clear that where manufacturing chemists or flavoring extract manufacturers use recovered alcohol or spirits, they may be again used only in the making of medicines or flavoring extracts of the same kind in which they are first used.

The House recedes with an amendment which makes clarifying changes and which excepts lemons and limes from the application of the Senate provision. The conference agreement also omits the provisions relating to business offices of a wine maker and to the use of recovered alcohol in flavoring extracts and medicines.

On amendment no. 151: This amendment strikes out the limitation on the number of warehouses which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may establish in any one collection district for the storage of fruit brandies and spirits distilled from materials other than fruit. It also provides that in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue such warehouses may be established adjacent to distilleries, and further that he may in his discretion permit the removal of brandies and spirits, as the case may be, directly from the distillery to such warehouses, and from such warehouses to the distillery warehouse of the producing distiller. The House recedes with an amendment which omits the preamble and makes clerical changes.

On amendment no. 152: This amendment changes the method of levying and collecting the tax on distilled spirits. Under the present law, the tax is paid by the distiller or importer. The amendment imposes the tax on the retailer and provides that it shall be collected at the time of its first retail sale. The retailer is required to affix to the bottle or other container of distilled spirits stamps denoting the quantity contained therein and evidencing payment of all internal-revenue taxes, and of all customs duties. The amendment further provides that no person shall manufacture, distill, import, or sell at wholesale or retail any distilled spirits unless such person furnishes a bond guaranteeing the payment of all taxes and customs duties imposed thereon. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 156: This is a clerical amendment changing the paragraph number. The Senate recedes.

The Senate amended the title of the bill to conform to the Senate amendment eliminating malt beverages from the bill. The Senate recedes.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAMUEL B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
ISAAC BACHARACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I know it is useless to seek to kill a conference report in the closing hours of a session, but I think in this case the House conferees have made an absolute surrender. It is an instance in which the voices of the majority of the members on the committee were not taken into consideration as well as the sentiment of the House. This bill, as it passed the House, was not the same instrument now pending before us. It is a surrender to the liquor and to the glass-bottle lobby of the United States as well as to the brewers.

We seek to have an alcohol control board created to regulate the liquors of this country, including whisky and beer, but the brewers with their influence and power are exempted from this bill. The brewers, as everyone knows, are the ones who have caused the greatest trouble in the past. It is common knowledge that in the old days on almost every street corner in the big cities the brewers equipped saloons, and dominated them. Under this law they cannot be regulated at all. According to the Senate amendment, which the House agreed to in conference, they cannot be regulated.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield, but I do not want you to take very much time.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman spoke about the yielding of the House conferees. There was a rumor on the floor last night that the House conferees had yielded to the Senate in regard to the provision which takes out from under the Civil Service and the Classification Act appointees of the Liquor Control Board or Commission, but in looking over the report of the conferees this morning I found that was not true and that the conference report retains the House provision taking these employees from under the Civil Service and the Classification Act.

Mr. FULLER. I do not know about that; I have not seen the report.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman cannot answer that question?

Mr. FULLER. No. I have never seen the report. It was recently printed and I have had no opportunity to see it.

Mr. MAPES. It is in the RECORD this morning, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Do I understand from this conference report that the brewers are not going to be regulated, that they may continue their system of "tied houses"?

Mr. FULLER. Absolutely.

Mr. CELLER. That is wrong.

Mr. FULLER. They concurred in the Senate amendment. They say that "tied houses" may be regulated in the various States. If the States are to regulate breweries, why not the States also regulate the distillers in their unfair practices and save the Federal Government the expense? Why separate them when one needs regulation as much as the other? In other words, if New York wants to buy Milwaukee beer, the Federal control can regulate that interstate transaction. Eighty percent of the beer is sold in the States where brewed.

Mr. CELLER. There are only a few interstate sales.

Mr. FULLER. Yes; just a few. This bill ought to be branded and known as the "brewery bill from Milwaukee." That is how it ought to be known. If there is any use for the maintenance of alcoholic control in the United States, the Board ought to have something to do, but under the terms and provisions of this bill the employers will have absolutely nothing to do. It simply means the continuation of jobs for two or three hundred people with nothing to do under the terms and provisions of this bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. The platform provides—

> We urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance and effectively prevent the return of the saloon.

Does this bill do that?

Mr. FULLER. No.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will not this bill tend to put an open saloon on every street corner?

Mr. FULLER. It will have a tendency toward the days before prohibition.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOEPPEL. May I state that I am going to support the gentleman's argument, because only last Monday there were 225 drunks arraigned in the courts of the District of Columbia. I concur with the gentleman's views on temperance, but fear the liquor business, controlled as it appears to be by the Whisky Trust and the brewers, will ultimately lead to the preprohibition excesses. The Government should exercise positive and complete control of the liquor business in the interests of morals and the elimination of political dominance by the whisky interests.

Mr. FULLER. Some of the Members of this House may not be well enough informed to know the powerful influences of the liquor organization in this country. This powerful organization is absolutely controlling and dictating the terms and provisions of this bill, as well as all legislation and all rules and regulations which come out of the Alcohol Control Division of the Treasury Department affecting liquor. The Board and this Division are controlled absolutely, lock, stock, and barrel, by the biggest monopoly that has ever been known in this country. If we do not stop this we will go back to the time before prohibition.

Mr. CELLER. I will be happy to cooperate, as will many Members of the House, in any kind of legislation to come out of the Ways and Means Committee controlling the breweries. Will the gentleman cooperate?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly I will. The House Ways and Means Committee put the breweries under control just like the distilleries; one of them violates the law no more than the other. The "tied houses" will be tied to the breweries the same as before prohibition, with no Federal regulation. Such a compromise is a shame and brought about by the powerful influence of the brewers and distillers.

Mr. Speaker, I have no distilleries in my State, nor have I any breweries. This lobby is influencing newspapers by advertising and propaganda. Why, they are even making the good women of the W. C. T. U. believe they are pulling strong for prohibition in this country. If we follow them we will go back to the old bootleg policies and they will be running the temperance cause of this country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is there anything in this bill that would permit the buying of liquor in bulk?

Mr. FULLER. No.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That has been eliminated?

Mr. FULLER. That has been eliminated, notwithstanding the fact that the sentiment of the Ways and Means Committee of the House is overwhelmingly for modification of the regulation of the Treasury Department to permit the use of barrels. I attended a meeting 2 days ago of the Ways and Means Committee at which we took a vote whether or not we would stand for the House bill and whether or not we would have no bill or one with barrels in it. Seventeen Democrats voted for this motion. All the Republicans except three voted for it. The vote stood 20 to 4. The House bill for barrels was reported on that issue by a committee vote of 23 to 2. But there has been a change in the last few hours. There has been influence brought to bear of which I am well aware; there has been a change of opinion, and many members of the Ways and Means Committee have absolutely surrendered to the Senate conferees.

Mr. DRIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DRIVER. The Treasury Department said if permission to use barrels is granted that the bootleggers would take the pints out of their pockets and bootleg by the barrel.

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman any information that would lead him to believe that we have ever anywhere, any place, or any time been able to control the liquor traffic, either the Whisky Trust or the Beer Trust? If so, I should be glad if he would advise us fully when, where, and how?

Mr. FULLER. I do not know about that.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have never heard of our ever being able to control or regulate the liquor traffic.

Mr. FULLER. I think there is no question but that we can do so.

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a provision that I want to especially call attention to. This provision, written in by the Senate, provides no liquor can be taken out of a bonded warehouse unless it is bottled. In other words, only distillers, rectifiers, and bonded warehouses may bottle the liquor. There are hundreds and thousands of people over the United States who own liquor stored in these warehouses, which liquor was bought legitimately before prohibition. They have carried this liquor all of these years. The provision in this bill provides that those individuals cannot get a barrel out unless they allow the warehouseman who has it stored to bottle it.

Do you know what they charge for bottling that liquor? They charge $150 a barrel to bottle the whisky that a man legitimately and honestly owns under the laws of the Nation. It is not only a monopoly but a racket. A few powerful, large corporations own practically all the distilleries, and others have not been able to get permits. They are selling 4-year-old whisky for $24 per gallon which cost only $1 to make and carry for 4 years, shrinkage and evaporation included. Add to this $2 for Federal tax and $1 for bottling, and observe the enormous $20 per gallon profit.

This is the powerful lobby with accumulated wealth making Members and endeavoring to make the country believe they stand for temperance. What do you think? This is the crowd which says the store people, the farmers, have a powerful influence and are seeking to break down the enforcement laws. Shame on such an argument! It is not an argument but a deliberate misstatement. It is a well-known fact that the big distillers have interlocking directorates with the Illinois Owen Glass Co. that manufactures 80 percent of the glass of this country. They maintain a lobby here. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the man who is at the head of these distillers is Dr. Doran, who, everyone thought, was such a great prohibition advocate. He was in the Treasury for 30 years. He built up the personnel in the Treasury that exists today in the Alcohol Unit. He resigned to accept a position at $36,000 a year as the head of the Distillers Institute in the United States, which is composed of the lobby or trust that is fighting this bill and dictating every rule and regulation that the Alcohol Unit advocates. He even served as chairman of the committee appointed by the President to form the rules and regulations of the code for alcohol control.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it not true that Dr. Doran, on account of his position with respect to being commissioner of prohibition enforcement for several years, is intimately acquainted with the personnel of the Alcohol Control Unit and this gives him an entree into the Alcohol Control Department as well as other departments?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly. He is the spokesman for it. They do not do anything without his O. K.; and a few days ago the most influential man who was left in the Treasury Department resigned and accepted a position as the Washington representative of the distillers of the United States.

This is the kind of proposition we are up against; and they refer to the fact that I come from a country where they want barrels used, although I represent only 1 State out of the 20 in the Union that have this great industry which is now absolutely prostrate. These men are ruining the cooperage industry of the United States by their rules and regulations, and they made these rules and regulations entirely without any authority of law; but under the terms and provisions of this bill they have affirmatively written them into law, and the conferees have agreed to them, and now they are going to force this measure through the Congress.

It seems it does not make much difference how meritorious a case you have or how strongly you go along with them, if it does not suit some of them, even though they have passed upon it favorably by an overwhelming vote time and time again, if you do not go down the line every time, they are inclined to forget you in the closing hours. I seek and ask no favors, and know those sharing my views will at this late hour of the session vote for this unjust, unconditional surrender—and to this I have no protest.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in my district alone in the stave industry over $1,000,000 is to be lost by reason of this law, and the same condition prevails generally all over the country. Who are the stave people who are concerned about this matter? They are the farmers up at the forks of the creeks, who take their oak and make it into barrel staves and sell them. This is their tax and pin money. These men are to be driven out of business by reason of this powerful lobby.

I am disgusted that the conferees bow to an unholy powerful lobby as against the poor and unorganized poor. You do not have to go further than outside of the doors of this House to find influential ex-Members of Congress down here working for these concerns, the breweries and the liquor people of this country; and yet they tell you this is a measure in the interest of temperance. This is a measure in the interest of the lobbyists of this country and the lobby investigating committee ought to investigate them. The bill is in the interest of one of the biggest monopolies we have ever seen, and mark my prediction, there are dozens of men listening to my voice now who will live to see the time, if the time is not here now, when we will have a worse whisky scandal than ever occurred in the distant past in Pennsylvania under the Grant administration. This is not the last battle. A resolution is now pending seeking an investigation of this whisky lobby.

I realize that in the closing hours of the Congress there is no use to butt your head against a wall and try to get this conference report rejected, but I want to tell you that it is a travesty on justice to abjectly surrender what the House and the Ways and Means Committee stand for at heart, simply for the purpose of agreeing to Senate amendments which mean nothing in the world but a continuation of the Alcohol Control Board, the duties of which are nil as provided under the terms and provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the alcohol-control bill had the unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means. It passed the House by a vote of nearly two and a half to one. The Senate put on about 144 amendments. Of that 144 amendments by the Senate, the Senate yielded on 122 and the House yielded on 22.

Many of these amendments were of a minor character—mainly clerical changes.

Of the important amendments the Senate yielded on five and the House yielded on two.

The setting up of an independent agency was one of the important changes made in the bill by the Senate. The House put the administration of the law in the Treasury Department, and the Senate put it under an independent agency. That was one provision in the House bill that the House conferees insisted on. Every member of the Committee on Ways and Means was insistent on that provision. The Senate very reluctantly yielded on that vital amendment.

Then, the question of signs was in dispute. The House provided for striking out all signs by brewers and distillers, and the Senate insisted on that provision in the bill. We had a half a dozen meetings of the conferees, the Senate insisting on their provision and the House insisting on its provision, and finally the Senate receded on that.

Then came the question of advertising. That was a controversial amendment. The House was very insistent on it, and the Senate receded.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Regarding the signs, will the gentleman explain how that agreement was reached—are they allowed to put up signs?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The provision in the House bill was adopted. If the gentleman will read the House bill, he will know the result of the agreement.

Then we come to the bulk sales. The majority of the Committee on Ways and Means was in favor of bulk sales, and that provision was written into the bill, although it was strongly opposed by some Members for the reason they said that if liquor was to be permitted to be sold in bulk to hotels and clubs it would be very difficult of enforcement.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. Is it not a fact that the committee voted 20 to 4 to eliminate that provision?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not recall about that. The vote of 20 to 4 was on a motion to further insist. It became manifest that if the Senate did not recede we would have no bill.

It was realized that we could not have our own way about everything, and after it was finally realized that we must either yield on the bulk sale or have no bill, not only a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, but practically all majority members of the committee, outside of my good friend from Arkansas, Mr. FULLER, realizing the situation and how serious it would be to have no bill and how vital it was to have some bill, decided we would better recede on that.

Mr. CELLER. Is it the purpose of the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to adopt some measure at the next session of the Congress which would put brewers under the same sort of regulation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That was the understanding, so far as you could have an understanding. We cannot bind the Congress. The Committee on Ways and Means cannot determine what this Congress will do at the next session, but we all felt that brewers should be under more rigid control. But we do feel this, that on the question of brewers, we got a reasonably fair compromise. The Alcohol Control Administration and those in control—my good friend FULLER to the contrary notwithstanding, who says we got nothing—say that the regulation of the breweries under the Senate amendment will be helpful, that it is not a complete surrender. Moreover, so far as beer is concerned, we put it under the same control in every State that the State law imposes at the present time. Further, 80 percent of the business is intrastate and cannot be controlled by the Federal Government at all.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman does not mean to tell the House that the Alcohol Board of Control can regulate 80 percent of the beer that is sold inside the State?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no; I do not, but if the State does not want control, why should the Federal Government want control? I thought the gentleman believed in State rights.

Mr. FULLER. Why control distilleries when you cannot reach the breweries?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is an entirely different matter. So far as the breweries are concerned, it was testified by the head of the Alcohol Control Administration that the breweries, since the Alcohol Administration had been set up under the N. R. A., have conducted themselves in a commendable manner. I was in favor of the breweries being licensed, but we could not get that in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How does this bulk-sales proposition work? Does it mean that a hotel or a restaurant or club can sell beer by the keg or whisky by the barrel?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; they cannot. In the House bill bulk sales were permitted to bona fide hotels and clubs.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is, the wholesaler could sell to them in bulk?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; and they could retail out of barrels. But the Alcohol Control Administration say that if that provision remained in the bill, it would cost five or six million dollars more to enforce the law and would entail a large loss of revenue.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman knows that a number of us felt that the provision in the House bill placing breweries under section 5, the section that deals with unfair-trade practices, should have been retained in the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. On the ground that those unfair-trade practices and their prevention would keep the breweries from getting back into the evils of the preprohibition days. As I understand it, from what has taken place, it will be the purpose of the gentleman from North Carolina, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House, to consider in the early days of next session, in January 1936, a bill that will place the breweries under the unfair-trade practices section, section 5, without the limitation placed therein by the Senate, looking toward preventing the recurrence of the admitted abuses of the old days.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That was clearly and distinctly understood and agreed to in a conference yesterday afternoon by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means. If bulk sales were permitted, instead of having to inspect 700 places where liquor and beer are sold, the Treasury Department say that they would have 20,000 places to supervise, and that with the increased number of hotels and clubs that would be set up purposely for retailing liquor, thought the number would reach probably 50,000.

The expense of policing those places, seeing that liquor is not being illegally dispensed, would entail enormous expense. I do not think everyone or anyone connected with the administration of the Alcohol Control Board or the Treasury Department has sold out to the liquor interests. We have had no evidence of it. That is mere rumor floating around. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER], for whom I have the highest regard, is so emotional that when he sets his desire on something, and if it does not go his way, he thinks there is only one side to it. The Committee on Ways and Means believed we should adopt this conference report. As it stands now, we would have no control at all. The Senate insisted on this. They are sincere in their views and they are entitled to some consideration. In the conference report submitted to the House on the points of disagreement we got a splendid break. We got more than they on the disputed points. To say now, because you cannot have your own way about barrels, that the whole thing should be defeated, I do not think is right. The lumber industry is quite an industry in the district I represent, but still I am here trying to do what I can for the whole people of the country, regardless of what effect it may have on some industry in my district. As far as the barrel question is concerned, and whether or not we have bulk sales or whether or not it is prohibited from being sold in bulk, is not vital to this law. If we make a mistake, Congress will be here next January. There will be another Congress. It does not mean the country has gone to ruin, gone to the "bowwows", if any one provision is left in or taken out of this bill. The main thing is to get a bill; get something that will still keep liquor under control, because if we do not we will go back to the old preprohibition conditions.

You all know how serious conditions were then. If this thing is turned absolutely scotfree the people of this country will say, "You promised, if the eighteenth amendment were repealed, that you would put liquor under control and under regulation. Now you have thrown off all restrictions and absolutely turned it over with all of its iniquitous practices." It is serious to think about. With this bill we have something left to build upon. And that the majority believe is worth while; that is real and which will be helpful. There is no one provision in this bill that is so vital to me as to justify killing the bill. If the majority of opinion is against me, I can complacently surrender. The vital thing about this, the essential thing, judging by what the administration has to say about it and the Treasury Department has to say about it and the Alcohol Control Board has to say about it, and their experience is worth something, is that we should have some control. If what they say is to be absolutely ignored and disregarded, then how could we legislate here at all? The only way we can intelligently legislate is to get what information, facts, and evidence we can from those in authority, and then weigh it in the light of our own judgment and legislate accordingly.

I hope this conference report will be adopted, and if we have made mistakes or if it is shown by the administration of the law that it has defects, as all laws have, in the light of experience, we can remedy those defects.

Moreover, we now have a splendid organization set up under Mr. Choate, a Republican. He has a splendid organization there. We all know that is dead, under the N. R. A., and if we enact no legislation at all, then we are right back at the foot of the ladder, with all the ills incident to preprohibition days. That is intensified and accentuated by the fact that the liquor business is much more intelligently managed and much more highly financed today than it was then. They know better how to beat the Government and if we do not do anything to control it, then we must take the consequences.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this conference report will be unanimously adopted.

I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does not the gentleman recall that there was an opportunity offered by several different amendments in this House when the bill was being considered, to retain the use of kegs and barrels, provided the House would deny to hotels and clubs the right to retail out of those barrels?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and we agreed to that. I agreed to it and the committee agreed to it.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think the gentleman from Arkansas voted against that.

Mr. FULLER. I mean in the conference or in the committee, after we passed the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If they will take out licenses as rectifiers, they can bottle. There is no monopoly on the bottling industry.

There is, however, almost a monopoly in the barrel industry for the reason that all liquor that is to be aged—every gallon of it—must go into barrels. Of course, that liquor which is sold green and raw—and very little of that kind of liquor will be sold as we approach the condition where we manufacture a quantity of liquor more nearly equal with the demand—nearly all of it will go in barrels. I say so far as the barrel industry is concerned that this is sufficient recognition of the barrel and stave industry. I understood the gentleman went along with the bill until he could not have his way about barrels and bulk sales. That is his privilege, and I shall not fall out with him about that. I think he is one of the valuable men in the House. Almost all legislation is the result of compromise.

Realizing that something necessarily must be done to save the situation, the adoption of this report is the only thing that can be done at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Briefly, without discussing anything, will the gentleman state the real controversial question about which he is talking?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Arkansas mentioned beer, I believe, and bulk sales.

Mr. MICHENER. The House is ready to vote on it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman and call for a vote. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a divison (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE) there were—ayes 96, noes 8.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently a quorum is not present. The call is automatic. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 279, nays 23, not voting 128, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STAY DEPORTATIONS—HOUSE RESOLUTION 337

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain statements made by Col. D. W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, Department of Labor, in connection with House Resolution 337.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend and revise my remarks, I insert in the RECORD, as supporting House Resolution 337, certain excerpts from the statement made by Col. Daniel W. MacCormack, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, during public hearings April 9 to 11, 1935, conducted before the House committee on H. R. 6795, as follows:

Mr. MACCORMACK. * * * We have, however, the right to determine when deportation shall take place. That is a right that has been established and exercised through all the years the immigration acts have been in existence.

We set aside cases that at first appeared to us to be appealing, and fixed a date for deportation as of July 1 of last year; to enable our presenting these cases to Congress for its consideration.

Congress failed to act favorably upon the first of the bills presented, as those of us who were present are painfully aware, but directly thereafter the gentleman who had led the battle on them came to us and urged us to continue the stay of the cases already stayed, and to continue the stay of such similar cases as might arise in the interval between Congress' departure and its return.

I refused to continue with the stay of these cases until I could have some definite proof that that was the intention, if not of the Congress as a whole, at least of the committee which was responsible for its immigration and naturalization activities.

Your committee passed a resolution unanimously, which was communicated to the Secretary of Labor and to myself, as Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. In that resolution, you asked us to continue the stay of the cases already stayed, and of such other cases as might arise in the interval before Congress again convened.

A bill was introduced into the Congress, with the same sort of a preamble to it. We considered these actions as evidence of an intention to seriously consider the proposals we had submitted and stayed the deportation of those cases, and of the new cases that have arisen.

Now—and I wish to say this most seriously—I would not have felt that I was entitled to my own self-respect had I failed to stay the deportation of the cases which have been stayed, or had I failed to use every effort to present the facts I have given to you today, to the Congress. We have been, of course, attacked for having stayed these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not talking about criminals?

Mr. MACCORMACK. No.

The CHAIRMAN. You are only talking about people who have been convicted of no crime at all?

Mr. MACCORMACK. Absolutely, sir; but I wish to make it entirely clear that, unless this Congress gives us a mandate which is clear and unmistakable, as to what we shall do, I must and will proceed with the deportation of these cases, before Congress has departed.

There is no reason in the world why Congress should depart and I be left behind to take the burden of doing this thing—this abominable thing, that should not be done. The responsibility is yours, gentlemen, and you have got to carry it.

Now, as to the stayed cases. During a period of approximately 22 months, there have been stays of deportation in the cases of 2,355 aliens. That is an average of 107 cases a month. Now, that is a comparatively small number, and certainly not important; but, gentlemen, it means 107 cases a month in which there will be a separation, and perhaps a permanent separation, of families, if these people, who are of good character, are forced to depart.

Of these 2,355 cases, 1,569 have been stayed by the central office. The balance have been stayed in the field. We have analyzed the 1,569 cases in the central office.

With reference to the present group of cases we have given them a careful preliminary study. The 1,569 cases are classified as follows: There are 79 that are distinctly above average. They are exceptional people. There are 1,085 that may be considered as average cases; these are cases in which in all probability we would exercise discretion if granted. There are 312 cases that are listed as questionable, in which there is a decided question as to whether discretionary power should be exercised; and there are 93 cases which are rated as "poor", in which almost certainly there would be deportation without any question. I have not the calculation here, but I believe that in approximately 74 percent of the cases we now have it is likely the discretion would be used, 26 percent that would, in almost certainty be deported.

In considering lenient treatment for such people there must be some consideration as to the effect upon their families and the effect upon the United States should they be forced to leave the country. In these 1,569 cases there are 4,066 American-citizen or legal-resident wives, husbands, children, brothers, sisters, or parents in this country. Approximately two and a half times the number of people deported would be left behind.

Of this 4,066, there are 2,012 American citizens, and 350 lawfully resident aliens who are dependent upon the prospective deportees for support, and who would become public charges in the event of their departure. That is, you deport 1,569, and you arrange that the United States shall thereafter care for 2,353.

Again, once and a half the number deported are forced to remain here as public charges.

Furthermore, of this group, 68 percent are, under existing law, permitted to return to the United States, in a preference, or in a nonquota status. Thus, in the class of case for which we recommend lenient treatment nothing is to be gained by deportation. Sixty-eight percent of them can return to the country, anyway, in the course of time. Then, you are leaving two and one-half times the number of relatives here as compared to the number deported. You are leaving once and a half times the number of relatives here, to become charges on the State, as compared to the number deported. So you have here a law which is not only cruel but foolish, one which imposes unbearable hardships upon the alien and upon his innocent family, and very serious and useless financial charges upon the United States.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I would like to point out and to have you bear in mind that here you have a law that in its liberal aspects, this section 4, can possibly affect a maximum of 107 people a month.

Mr. STARNES. You say that is the number it can affect?

Mr. MACCORMACK. That is the maximum. Of that 107, as we have rechecked the cases, we are convinced that not more than 74 percent would be actually beneficiaries, so that you have approximately 80 people a month who would be affected favorably by this law. That is a very small number perhaps you will say for all this fuss.

Mr. STARNES It could be abused, we know that. That is where the fuss comes.

Mr. MACCORMACK. I think we have eliminated any possibility of abuse. We have devcted now 2 years to this thing, to take care of about 80 people a month. Now, why have we done that? Not because we want to keep 80 aliens in the country who have entered illegally or who have become subject to deportation in one way or another, but because that means 80 families broken up each month and for the most part irrevocably broken up. That is something for us to have in mind.

Mr. STARNES. In other words, it is just simply a more humane exercise of the law?

Mr. MACCORMACK. And an exceedingly restricted one.

The aliens who would escape the penalty of deportation under this act should not exceed, by an actual test carried on over a period of 22 months, 107 persons per month. We have deported or forced to leave voluntarily in the last year 16,000 aliens. One hundred and seven stayed cases per month would be, roughly, 1,284 a year, or a total of seventeen-thousand-and-some-odd possible total deportations. Of the 1,284 per annum who could possibly benefit by this act, we find upon examination that not more than 74 percent of them would actually be beneficiaries. That is, of all the persons who fall within the scope of the act, approximately 74 percent would actually be given the benefit of discretionary power, or approximately 950 persons a year. Nine hundred and fifty a year out of more than 17,000 possible deportations and voluntary departures is approximately 5 percent.

WILL ROGERS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a tribute to the late Will Rogers, of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am presenting a very splendid tribute to the late Will Rogers, the famous humorist and philosopher. This was written by Waldo Wettengel, a brilliant young newspaperman of Rush Springs, Okla., and has been published in a number of leading newspapers, as follows:

"AW, SHUCKS—"

Ambling along, his shrewd kindly eyes
Shyly viewing the beauties
Of a new land—
Seizing the hand of an old crony,
Or of a president, fellow-ambassador, Senator, or prince—
Grinning wistfully—and humbly before his Creator
Perhaps saying, whimsically:
"Y'know, Lord, all I know is what I've read
In the papers
'N' picked up as I gadded around
Hither 'n' yon;
But all this stuff that's in the papers
Just now.
Page on page—'n all the pictures—
Aw, shucks, Lord,
I wish I coulda earned
A little mite of it.
They mean well, Lord—don't hold it against 'em,
Let's just call it good-intentioned
Exaggeration;
They're just bein' kind
To an ignor'nt ol' cowhand
From Ologah.
Y'know, Lord, that's a great bunch
You've got down there,
Senators 'n all;
I'm gonna miss 'em for a while,
But they'll be comin' along.
I had no idy
They felt—that way—about—aw, shucks, Lord—
After the way I've kidded 'em,
'N all—
But I've never hurt 'em till now
An' I'm just wonderin', Lord,
If there ain't some way
You can ease it up for 'em?
Just tell 'em that—shucks—it ain't bad like that a'tall—
An' that this round-up's just fine an'
Prettier than the song.
Y'see, Lord, that down there gets right next to me, an'
Shucks, there ain't nothin'
I c'n do about it;
So do what you can, won't You, Lord?
I've got lots of confidence in Your ability
Along that line.
Well, there goes those bells—my time's up,
So I'll be moseyin' along.
Say, Lord! Ain't that ol' boy over there
From Claremore?"

—Waldo Wettengel, Rush Springs, Okla.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that privilege.

FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF EXPEDITION OF HERNANDO DE SOTO

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House Joint Resolution 265 pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recedes from its amendments.

KENT E. KELLER,
ROBT. SECREST,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
PETER NORBECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

That the Senate recedes from its amendments.

KENT E. KELLER,
ROBT. SECREST,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
BERT LORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the conference report?

Mr. KELLER. The Senate recedes from its amendments.

Mr. TABER. How much money is involved?

Mr. KELLER. Five thousand dollars.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTRA LABOR AT CERTAIN NAVY YARDS AND SHORE STATIONS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 872) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 872), an act for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the numerals stricken out by the said House amendments, and on page 5, line 14, of the engrossed bill, after the word "pay", insert the following: "one-half of"; on page 5, line 17, after the word "aforesaid", insert the following: ", and pay the other one-half of the same to the attorney or attorneys who performed services toward securing provision for the payment herein of the amounts so found"; on page 5, line 17, after the words "death of", insert the following: "any of"; on page 5, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "of such fee" and insert the following: "for such services"; and the House agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
U. S. GUYER,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
Managers on the part of the House.
DAVID I. WALSH,
WM. E. BORAH,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 872) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon.

In principle, there were only two House amendments on the Senate bill in disagreement, as follows:

(1) The proforma amendment in section 1 of the bill, which provides that the money appropriated shall be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and which amendment was agreed to by the managers on the part of the Senate.

(2) The House amendments to section 3 of the bill had changed the figures "20 percent" to "10 percent." These amendments were receded from by the managers on the part of the House upon the acceptance by the managers on the part of the Senate of certain amendments in the form of limitations as to the payment of said 20 percent to the attorneys. The allowance of said 20 percent to attorneys, both for services in the Court of Claims in securing findings, and for services in securing payment of the amounts so found, is based upon long-established precedents.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
U. S. GUYER,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the conference report?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed this bill with a provision limiting attorneys' fees to 20 percent. The House amended the bill limiting the attorneys' fees to 10 percent. The agreement reached in conference divides the attorneys' fees, allowing 10 percent for attorneys who appeared in the Court of Claims and an additional 10 percent if they followed the matter to Congress and represented the claimants there.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of this session of Congress it shall be in order to suspend the rules notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1 of rule XXVII.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is rule XXVII?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, rule XXVII pertains to suspension of the rules being in order on the first and third Mondays of each month.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we expect to adjourn, as I understand it, tonight; therefore, the gentleman from New York or the Speaker must have in mind the suspensions which will be recognized. If the gentleman will give the House a list of these suspensions, it will expedite matters and we will know what we are voting on. Certainly there will be no objection to the request under those circumstances.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I have a rule here in case objection is made. I am trying to save time.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has a rule to do that, but can he not tell the House now, and take the Members into his confidence, the suspensions that will be brought up?

Mr. O'CONNOR. At this moment the only two possibilities I know of are the oil compact and the ocean-mail contract proposition.

Mr. MICHENER. I have no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention to adjourn tonight sometime?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know no more about that than does the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Somebody connected with the leadership of this House should know something about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is our hope and desire that we may get out of here tonight, as far as I know. It depends on another body, and if there is a hold-up, there on the deficiency bill, for instance, we may not get through.

Mr. SNELL. The leader in the other body stated publicly in the papers, as he is quoted, that the House was holding up adjournment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, the gentleman knows that is not correct.

Mr. SNELL. I did not think so, but I wanted to get the Chairman of the Rules Committee to assert himself in order to bring this session to a close.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have not had a conference on the deficiency bill as yet.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I make this comment at the present time. I presume I have given the Speaker of the House as much trouble as any Member of the House in asking recognition on the floor. I want to say that I have the highest regard for Speaker BYRNS. I honor and respect the Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Applause.] I believe he is one of the most fair, honest, and conscientious men in the House. He has made a fine presiding officer, and notwithstanding the trouble I have given him, I honor, I respect and regard him as a fine Christian gentleman. He is in every sense a man. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman what effect his request will have on the ship-subsidy legislation, which is covered by Senate Joint Resolution 175?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is one of the possibilities that may come up under suspension.

Mr. WEARIN. It will come up under suspension of the rules rather than under a rule?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution:

House Resolution 371

Resolved, That during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress it shall be in order for the Speaker to entertain motions to suspend the rules notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1 of rule XXVII.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution making in order the suspension of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER. When the House took a recess last night there was under consideration the bill (S. 3286) to abolish the oath required of customs and internal-revenue employees prior to the receipt of compensation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the two amendments be read again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Daly amendment and the Celler substitute amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to explain this amendment again. Although it was explained last night, most of the Membership were not present. We had only a small number present in the House at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to offer another explanation of this amendment, and I only do so because I want to be sure that the Members will vote intelligently on it. Most of those present this morning were absent at midnight last night when my amendment was offered, and a brief explanation in support thereof was made.

This simply provides that the investigation which the Treasury Department might inaugurate into the activities of any customhouse broker shall be limited—limited as to time and scope. The amendment seeks to limit in a reasonable way the investigational powers of the Treasury Department of customs agents. That is all it does. Under the bill as it is now drawn, at the bottom of page 5 and the upper part of page 6, the Treasury Department has plenary powers to do any and all kinds of investigating. They may investigate all the correspondence of a customhouse broker with no limit of time being set. They could go back 100 years. Such private correspondence as letters to his wife or family could be investigated under this broad power. I think this would be unfortunate and if you could be assured——

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from New York does not want to convey the information to the House that is implied by his last statement. Certainly, the private correspondence of these people is in no way involved in the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CELLER. If I am wrong I want to be corrected, but I do not think I am wrong, because the bill is very broad, its language is broad. It should be clarified so as to avoid all doubt.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that the very clear and definite language of the bill itself is "information relating to the business." It involves no private correspondence with a man's family or anything of that sort.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think the language of the bill is so restricted as to limit it to merely the business correspondence. I think in its general tenor it is broad enough to cover almost anything he may have in his desk or his cabinet or office or wherever he may transact his business.

Furthermore, there is no limitation as to time. All my amendment does is to limit the investigation to the particular merchandise that is under consideration as to its value and as to its classification, and the amendment also limits it to 1 year.

It is very significant that nowhere do we give powers as broad as this to the Treasury Department to investigate any class of men. As a class I think the customhouse brokers are honest. Like every other class they are entitled to have their crooks and thieves. There are some crooks and thieves in all segregated groups of men.

Take, for example, those who practice before the Treasury Department and its bureaus like Internal Revenue, Alcohol Tax, Income Tax, and so forth. I understand from the report there are 35,000 accountants and attorneys enrolled in the Treasury Department to practice before its various bureaus. There is no attempt made to inflict these broad powers upon these 35,000 accountants and attorneys. The Treasury Department cannot go into their offices and examine almost everything in sight. If those who practice before the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the Income Tax Bureau, as well as the other bureaus of the Treasury are not subjected to this inquisitorial power, why should we apply this power to the customhouse brokers because a few of them may be renegades?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I cannot see any objection to the part of the amendment that limits the time in which they act. They can make any investigation necessary in regard to Government business within 1 year, but I do not believe we ought to limit them in any other way. It seems to me if they can go back 1 year that is far enough.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman as to the time element.

Mr. SNELL. But I would not limit it in any other way and would let them look into Government business as far as they want to.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman will find my amendment satisfactory, if he examines it carefully.

Mr. SNELL. I inferred from the gentleman's statement there were some limitations other than the limitation with respect to time.

Mr. CELLER. The only other limitation is with respect to classification and value.

Mr. SNELL. I would not do anything but limit it to 1 year.

Mr. CELLER. Judging from what the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee intimates, anyone who espouses restrictions on these broadest inquisitorial powers wants to block the bill. That argument is fallacious as it is unfair and ridiculous. If an amendment successfully made forces a conference with the Senate, that is unfortunate. A conference could be quickly had, and the bill could be passed in both Houses without much ado. And if a conference could not be held, that would be unfortunate. But we should not rush bills through without our proper consideration and amendment, just because it is the last day of the session. The bill should have been brought in sooner.

Furthermore, the chairman of the committee is in bad taste in accusing the supporters of this amendment of aiding the brokers who fear investigation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is adopted it means absolutely no legislation whatever. I do not question the motive of any Member of this House with respect to anything he may do, but whether this is intended or not, the result will be the same as an ingenious effort to defeat or prevent any legislation at this session of the Congress.

In the first place, we are considering the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill, and they are identical bills. The reason for this was that we knew if we adopted the House bill and it had to go to the Senate for concurrence, at this late hour, it would prevent any legislation whatever, and if this amendment is adopted it means absolutely no legislation whatever. There is no doubt about it. If we adopt the amendment at this late hour we all know it will not be taken up in the Senate, and that means no legislation.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. If we may assume there is an unfair provision in the House bill and a conference is necessary, I do not think the gentleman should object to eliminating it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is absolutely nothing unfair in the bill. The gentleman's amendment is nothing but an attempt to kill the legislation.

Mr. CELLER. I do not attempt to kill the legislation. I stated I was in favor of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman does not intend to kill the legislation, do not insist on the amendment. How could the gentleman be in favor of the bill when he knows it could not be passed if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. CELLER. That is entirely another matter.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the statement should be made to the House that the hearings show that revenue in material sums is lost yearly through the chicanery of certain customhouse brokers.

Gentlemen representing the customhouse brokers want legislation of this character in order to protect them from the dishonest customhouse brokers. That is a fair statement.

A recent investigation by the Treasury Department disclosed that unlimited frauds on the Government are being committed. Some men under investigation and likely to be indicted are down here lobbying. They are suspected of these frauds and are down here lobbying against this bill.

(The time of Mr. DOUGHTON having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I am sure the chairman will recall that in the hearings held on this bill by the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] was chairman, this whole matter was thoroughly gone into. The distinguished gentleman from New York, Dr. CROWTHER, took a very active interest in it, and all questions raised during the hearings were worked out in this bill. Three hundred million dollars in customs duties were involved in transactions handled by customs brokers in 1934. This bill is to protect the rights and interests of the importers and to protect the legitimate and honest customhouse brokers and to protect the revenue of the Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is no question about that.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. All the members of the Ways and Means Committee were in favor of this bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; it is a unanimous report. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] states, it involves $300,000,000. The Government is being cheated out of revenue, and the honest broker has no objection to the bill. The truth is they want the bill postponed until January or some future time so they can cover up their misdeeds. No honest broker has any objection to it, because it is a protection to him.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The bill provides that the investigation may be conducted by a duly accredited agent of the Government. I am a little confused as to why you did not say agent of the customhouse.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. MCCORMACK] introduced this bill and it was carefully considered by a subcommittee of which he was chairman. He went into every phase of it. He was called away on urgent business and could not be here this morning. He knows 10 times more about it than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to know the reason why this language was used.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill had the most careful consideration. All interested parties had a full opportunity to be heard. I do not know of any bill that has had more careful consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means than this bill. What the chairman said is right—frauds are running rampant—and the purpose of this bill is an endeavor on the part of Congress to save revenue for the Government. I cannot see for the life of me how any reputable firm of brokers can object to the provisions of this bill. I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. I think the answer to this proposition is the fact that this bill will not hurt any reputable customs broker and no reputable customs broker could object to it at all. Study the bill, after reading the report by the customs authorities, as to the racket that is going on, and anyone will conclude that what I say is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. As my colleague, Mr. REED, has stated, this bill was given most careful consideration by the subcommittee. I was not a member of the subcommittee, but through the courtesy of Mr. MCCORMACK I attended the meetings. Section 641 of the 1930 Tariff Act was first suggested in 1922, by the customs brokers. They attempted to set up a standard for themselves; in fact, they wrote a sort of code. They provided for examination by the collector of customs, and there was provision for appeal on revocation of license. These customs brokers occupy a peculiar relation to the United States Government. They are pseudo Federal officers in the sense that they handle the customs revenue as between the Government and the importer. They have a peculiar relation to the Government of the United States through the customs department and it seems to me, in the light of information that comes to us in this report, that the Government ought to have complete authority for a thorough examination of their transactions in order to end this racketeering and depleting of the revenue of the Government of the United States. The bill, as I say, will not hurt a single reputable customs broker. Some of those who have their office under their hat may be disturbed by this proposed legislation. I do not think the amendment is necessary. I do not believe that my colleague from New York, Mr. CELLER, can look forward to the Treasury of the United States cracking down on or snooping into the books of any customs brokers who are not involved in some shady transactions of this character. I am sure that the Treasury would never so offend, but the Treasury ought to have the power to go into the records, and ought to have the power to compel these men who have a license, and on whom the Treasury has put its stamp of approval, to submit to this examination. The Treasury in effect says to the importer, "Here is a United States employee whom I have licensed and given my stamp of approval." It seems to me that the Government ought to have some control over them.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from New York, who has given such intensive study and consideration to this measure, will agree that both of these pending amendments should be voted down to protect this very worthy measure.

Mr. CROWTHER. There is no question about that.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. One of the large customs districts is in the northern part of New York. The men in charge there have been in consultation with me about this bill from its beginning, and the best information I can get is that there is nothing in the bill, even at the present time, that will in any way interfere with an honest customs broker conducting his regular business. Personally, I do not see any objection to the amendment of my friend from New York, but I would not want to defeat the bill, if the adoption of the amendment would do that.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Any man who heard me speak last night knows that I stated this: I went as far as it was possible to go when I stated that every regulation required, I approved of. When it came to the inspection of customhouse brokerage books I approved of it. I think it was a proper regulation. Every Member that heard me knows I stated that I subscribed to everything in the bill, including an examination of all books, but I did object to any department having the right to go into the private correspondence between a quasi-legal officer and a client on business. On that I stand flat. I do not believe there is a lady or gentleman in this House that can disapprove of that.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in a customhouse broker's case in Boston last spring when there was a suspicion of wrongdoing, an inspector from the Treasury Department went into that broker's office and examined everything in it and made a report to the Treasury Department which read:

I regret to state I can find nothing wrong.

I want to ask every one of you if you think in your own business, in confidential business between attorney and client, a doctor and his patient, a quasi-legal officer, a customhouse broker and his client, there should be snoopers. That is the word I used, and I repeat it. When a snooper went into that office and made a report of this kind I would be justified in impugning the motives of the Treasury Department. But I do not. I made an appeal last night, and I repeat it today, everything in that bill I stand for—regulations, rules, books, accounts, examination of them, in order that any fraud could be pursued and exposed at this moment, but when you go so far as to allow a man of that character to go into an office, it is, as I said last night, going too far. The Department of Justice, would be just as logical in having legislation passed providing that they could send an investigator into an attorney's office and examine his private correspondence with every client he had. That is unconscionable. Therefore I ask for the adoption of my amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY].

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. DALY) there were ayes 52 and noes 93.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALY. A vote of "aye" on this question is a vote in favor of my amendment, and a vote of "no" is against the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 233, answered "present" 4, not voting 113, as follows:

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF COINS AND CURRENCIES AND IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF GOLD-CLAUSE SECURITIES BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House Joint Resolution 348, authorizing exchange of coins and currencies and immediate payment of gold-clause securities by the United States; withdrawing the right to sue the United States on its bonds and other similar obligations; limiting the use of certain appropriations, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 348) authorizing exchange of coins and currencies and immediate payment of gold-clause securities by the United States; withdrawing the right to sue the United States on its bonds and other similar obligations; limiting the use of certain appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out ", or which may be commenced within six months after the effective date of this joint resolution" and insert "or which may be commenced by January 1, 1936, or to any proceeding referred to in this section in which no claim is made for payment or credit in an amount in excess of the face or nominal value in dollars of the securities, coins or currencies of the United States involved in such proceeding"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the preamble and the title of the resolution, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 348) authorizing exchange of coins and currencies and immediate payment of gold-clause securities by the United States, withdrawing the right to sue the United States on its bonds and other similar obligations, limiting the use of certain appropriations, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments nos. 1 and 2: The House resolution authorized lawful holders of coins and currencies of the United States to exchange them dollar for dollar for other coins or currencies which may be lawfully acquired and are legal tender for public and private debts, and provided that the owners of gold-clause securities of the United States should be entitled to receive immediate payment of the stated dollar amount thereof, with interest to the date of payment or to prior maturity or prior redemption date, whichever is earlier. The period within which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make such payment with respect to gold-clause securities was limited to September 1, 1935, or such later date not after January 1, 1936, as might be fixed by the Secretary. Senate amendments nos. 1 and 2 extend these dates to January 1, 1936, and July 1, 1936, respectively; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 3: The House resolution provided in section 2 for withdrawing the consent of the Government to be sued upon any bond, note, certificate of indebtedness, Treasury bill, or other similar obligation for the repayment of money or for the interest thereon, or upon any coin or currency of the United States, or any claim or demand arising out of the surrender, requisition, seizure, or acquisition of any such coin or currency, or any gold or silver. This Senate amendment limits the withdrawal of consent to gold-clause securities of the United States and interest thereon, to coins or currencies of the United States, and to claims and demands arising out of the surrender, requisition, seizure, or acquisition of any such coin or currency or of any gold or silver involving the effect of the validity of any change in the metallic content of the dollar or other regulation for the value of money. A proviso is added to the effect that the provision should not apply to any suit heretofore commenced or which may be commenced within 6 months after the effective date of the resolution. The conference agreement provides for the withdrawal of consent in the cases enumerated in the Senate amendment except that the proviso is modified so that such withdrawal will not apply to suits heretofore commenced or which may be commenced by January 1, 1936, or to any proceeding referred to in the section in which no claim is made for payment or credit in an amount in excess of the face or nominal value in dollars of the securities, coins, or currencies of the United States involved in such proceeding.

On amendment no. 4: The House resolution provided that no appropriation heretofore or hereafter made should be available for payment upon securities, coins, or currencies of the United States, except on an equal and uniform dollar for dollar basis. This amendment modifies the provision of the House resolution so as to make such appropriations available in cases where consent to be sued is not withdrawn. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment eliminates from the definition of "gold clause" ccntained in the House resolution the reference to any obligation being payable "in money of the United States". The House recedes.

On amendment no. 6: This amendment extends the definition of "securities of the United States" contained in the House resolution so as to include "other obligations for the repayment of money, or for interest thereon, made, issued or guaranteed by the United States". The House recedes.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the preamble and the title of the resolution.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
M. K. REILLY,
JOHN B. HOLLISTER,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the House bill provided for a bar to all suits on Government obligations, coins, and currency, whether payable in gold or otherwise. The substantial difference between the House bill and the Senate bill was that the Senate bill would permit suits in future on Government obligations, but after the expiration of a period of 6 months, no suit would be permitted by the holder of obligations payable in gold. The bill agreed upon in conference fixed January 1, 1936, as the limit of the time within which suits upon gold obligations may be instituted.

The House agrees to a provision which would permit suits in future upon obligations payable in gold, where no enrichment is sought because of the devaluation of gold. So that the bill before the House bars all suits on gold contracts after the 1st of January 1936 if recovery is sought for more than the value of such obligations in dollars and cents, but would permit suits on any obligations for full value in lawful money. Only two suits have been begun. No one seems to believe that the suits that have been instituted can be sustained within the ruling of the Supreme Court requiring evidence showing damages. This, Mr. Speaker, I think is the substance of the matter before the House now.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. Is the time within which exchanges may be made extended from September?

Mr. STEAGALL. Exchanges may be made at any time.

Mr. BLAND. Up until January?

Mr. STEAGALL. They may be made at any time.

Mr. BLAND. Under the House bill it was limited to September, as I recall it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The provision now before us would permit anybody to exchange any gold bonds for regular obligations of the Government, or for lawful money.

Mr. BLAND. Or for payment?

Mr. STEAGALL. Or for payment in lawful money.

Mr. BLAND. Whether they are past due or not?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. Of course nobody ever dreamed that the Government would ever deny payment to any holder of any obligation, provided payment is accepted in the lawful money of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was presented to the House for consideration we took the position that the legislation was wholly unnecessary and unwarranted, and that there was potential danger to the credit of the United States in it.

The bill as it passed the House barred all suits of whatever nature or kind on all obligations, whether they were currency obligations or gold securities of the Federal Government. We felt that anyone should have the right to start suit against the Treasurer or against the Government to interpret the provisions of his bond. It was brought out at that time that industrial and commercial bonds carried the terms and conditions of the bond fully upon the face. Government obligations are referred to sometimes as reference bonds, because the terms and conditions are found in the organic act authorizing the issue, and the bond merely asserts on its face that it has been issued in accordance with the provisions of certain legislation which has passed the Congress; and under the provisions of the House bill we denied to the bondholder the right to come into court and have his bond interpreted in the light of the acts of Congress authorizing the issue. We felt that the House had gone ever so much further than the request of the President in asking for legislation which would prevent unjustified enrichment because of devaluation of gold. He said in his message which was sent to us on June 27:

> Before the termination of this session of Congress I believe that it is important that definite action be taken to eliminate any uncertainty with respect to the right of holders of gold-clause bonds of the Government to sue for payment either for gold or else in legal tender with an additional sum of 69 cents on every dollar.

The House bill went ever so much further and denied each bondholder the right to bring suit on any security for any purpose.

The Senate was amazed that the House consciously wrote into the law any such provision; so they would not yield to the conferees on the part of the House that the bill be enacted as written in the House.

At the present time the bill provides that all suits of whatever nature or description, excepting suits which would tend to enrich the holders of gold-clause securities for the difference between the value in terms of dollars previous to devaluation and the value in terms of dollars since then, may be brought; and even suits may be brought for the purpose of proving damages because of devaluation of the gold securities up to January 1, 1936.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. That would apply only to bonds that come due between now and January 1, 1936.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; it might apply to any gold bond because authorization is given in the bill to exchange any gold-clause bond for any other bond. Personally, I do not think it would jeopardize the right of the holders to sue if they were forced into the situation preparatory to suit where they had to exchange the bonds.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. But by the terms of this act in exchanging he would get bonds payable in dollars as they are now, not in gold dollars as they were at the time he purchased the gold clause bonds.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I cannot, therefore, follow the gentleman. It seems to me I see a situation where you extend a right which already exists to holders of bonds that are due before January 1, 1936, but take away that right as to bonds that are due after January 1, 1936. It seems to me it is a totally illogical provision.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that the whole bill is illogical and unnecessary; but the President wants an act on this subject and this side of the House has never been so stubbornly opposed to any legislation which the President has asked for that we would not go along with any reasonable compromise.

I may say so far as this side of the committee is concerned, we brought that out in the debate on the floor the time the bill was under consideration here; and this compromise with that exception puts the bill right back where we originally wanted it and where I think the gentleman from Michigan wanted it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Since there will not be a chance for a record vote, I would like to have the gentleman bear me out when I say that I voted against the gold-clause resolution 2 or 3 years ago and I did not favor this resolution in the committee. I favored the elimination of the gold clause in private contracts, but as to Government bonds the holders should not be deprived of their rights as they now exist, and I have always so contended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe the gentleman did and did so consistently and with a great deal of logic.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill as it was passed denied to the holders of gold-clause securities the right to bring interpretative suits after the expiration of 6 months following the enactment of the bill. We agreed to reduce the time within which suits might be brought to January 1, 1936, provided they followed the advice of the President with respect to putting all of these currency bonds and gold bonds on an equal basis. He told us in his message that one of the purposes of this legislation was to continue and treat the bondholders of all of our securities equally and uniformly. For this reason we insisted upon a provision which allowed the holders of gold-clause securities to bring suits of the same nature after January 1, 1936, as holders of currency securities. Those were the material changes in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have a bill which is very much better than the bill that left the House and much better than the bill which passed the Senate. We have had innumerable compromises and conferences on this bill. I think we probably have about the best bill that could be obtained under the circumstances and a bill which is in keeping with the President's message, but does not go beyond that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the gentleman from Michigan, this report represents a compromise. Speaking for myself and other majority members of the Banking and Currency Committee, we are not in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Michigan. We do not believe suit should be allowed upon any direct financial obligation of the Government. In this connection I wish to call attention to the fact that our original Government obligations were plain debts evidenced by bonds, such as are now being issued by the Government. Later those bonds were made payable in coin. The bondholding class who now complain about this legislation demanded of the Treasury of the United States that those obligations be paid in gold. Of course, the holders of those bonds had no more right to demand payment in gold than they did to demand silver.

The Treasury listened to the appeals of the bondholders and proceeded to discharge those obligations in gold. This is history that would make too long now to review at this time, but it was an unhappy history for the administration which permitted that practice. That administration was repudiated by the people of the Nation. No obligation of the Government should ever have been allowed which permitted one class of citizens to demand a discharge of their obligations in a kind of currency different from that which every other citizen of the land was required to accept in discharge of Government debts. Some of us regret that this bill should pass in a form which will permit any citizen to sue the Government upon any direct financial obligation. There is no necessity for a suit to settle such an obligation. It involves a surrender of sovereignty. But your conferees did the best that could be done—we have a bill that will prevent harassment of the Government by holders of gold bonds after the 1st of January 1936, if recovery is sought penalizing the Government because of its action in changing the content of the gold dollar.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 363

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, not to exceed $25,000 for the expenses of the select committee appointed under authority of House Resolution 374, to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various candidates for the House of Representatives in both parties.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4, strike out the figures 374 and insert in lieu thereof the figures 347.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain whether this is the same amount that is usually carried in this legislation?

Mr. WARREN. This is the same amount that has always been carried, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts. This is one investigating committee that has rarely ever used all of its appropriation in years past.

Mr. RICH. Does this cover the campaign that is to come up in 1936?

Mr. WARREN. It covers the entire 1936 campaign.

Mr. RICH. How far will the committee go into an examination of things that may happen in particular districts? I am interested to know whether they are going to be interested in this $4,880,000,000, and the influence that might have on people all over the country to elect certain candidates for office next year?

Mr. WARREN. I am quite sure that the Speaker today will announce the personnel of that committee. I would refer the gentleman to them after they are appointed.

Mr. RICH. I will say that if the Speaker is going to appoint the committee, no doubt he will appoint a good one.

Mr. WARREN. I am sure he will.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOAD LINES OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN COASTWISE TRADE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 357.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 357

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6036, a bill to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the so-called "load-line bill", which pertains to safety at sea. There is a similar Senate bill, I understand, and I offer an amendment, on page 1, line 4, striking out "H. R. 6036" and inserting in lieu thereof "S. 2002."

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 1, line 4, strike out "H. R. 6036" and insert in lieu thereof "S. 2002."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the adoption of the rule and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, before we consider this bill in Committee of the Whole I think some explanation ought to be made of it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It will be read for amendment.

Mr. McFARLANE. We may want to raise a few objections in the House that we could not raise so well in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have asked that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 2002), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That load lines are hereby established for merchant vessels of 150 gross tons or over, loading at or proceeding to sea from any port or place within the United States or its possessions for a coastwise voyage by sea. By "coastwise voyage by sea" is meant a voyage on which a vessel in the usual course of her employment proceeds from one port or place in the United States or her possessions and passes outside the line dividing inland waters from the high seas, as defined in section 2 of the act of February 19, 1895.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed in respect of the vessels defined above to establish by regulations from time to time the load water lines and marks thereof indicating the maximum depth to which such vessels may safely be loaded, and in establishing such load lines due consideration shall be given to, and differentials made for, the various types and character of vessels and the trades in which they are engaged: Provided, That the load-line provisions of this act shall apply to the Great Lakes and that no load line shall be established or marked on any vessel which load line gives a lesser freeboard and less buoyancy than the load line established by the International Treaty on Load Lines of September 30, 1930, and that the regulations established under this proviso shall have the force of law.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the owner and of the master of every vessel subject to this act and to the regulations established thereunder to cause the load line or lines so established to be permanently and conspicuously marked upon the vessel in such manner as the Secretary of Commerce shall direct, and to keep the same so marked. The Secretary of Commerce shall appoint the American Bureau of Shipping, or such other American corporation or association for the survey or registry of shipping as may be selected by him, to determine whether the position and manner of marking on such vessels the load line or lines so established are in accordance with the provisions of this act and of the regulations established thereunder: Provided, however, That, at the request of the shipowner, the Secretary of Commerce may appoint, for the purpose aforesaid, any other corporation or association for the survey or registry of shipping which the Secretary of Commerce may approve; or the Secretary of Commerce may appoint for said purpose any officer of the Government, who shall perform such services as may be directed by the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce may, in his discretion, revoke any appointment made pursuant to this section. Such corporation, association, or officer shall, upon approving the position and manner of marking of such load line or lines, issue a certificate, in a form to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, that the same are in accordance with the provisions of this act and of the regulations established thereunder, and shall deliver a copy thereof to the master of the vessel. It shall be unlawful for any vessel subject to this act and to said regulations to depart from any port or place designated in section 1 without bearing such mark or marks, approved and certified by such corporation, association, or officer, and without having on board a copy of said certificate.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any vessel subject to this act and to the regulations established thereunder to be so loaded as to submerge the load line or lines marked pursuant to this act and to regulations established thereunder applicable to her voyage; or to be so loaded as to submerge under like conditions the point where such load line or lines ought to be marked pursuant to the provisions of this act and the regulations established thereunder; or to be so loaded as in any manner to violate the said regulations.

SEC. 5. Whenever the Secretary of Commerce shall certify that the laws and regulations in force in any foreign country relating to load lines are equally effective with the regulations established under this act, the Secretary of Commerce may direct, on proof that a vessel of that country has complied with such foreign laws and regulations, that such vessel and her master and owner shall be exempted from compliance with the provisions of this act, except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the vessels of any foreign country which does not similiarly recognize the load lines established under this act and the regulations made thereunder.

SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the master of every vessel subject to this act and to the regulations established thereunder and of every foreign vessel exempted pursuant to section 5, before departing from her loading port or place to provide a ship's record or log book and enter therein a statement of the position of the load line marked applicable to the voyage in question and the actual drafts forward and aft at the time of departing as nearly as the said drafts can be ascertained.

SEC. 7. If any collector of customs has reason to believe on complaint or otherwise that a vessel subject to the provisions of this act is about to proceed on a voyage from a port in the United States or its possessions within his district without conforming to the provisions of section 3 hereof, or when loaded in violation of section 4 hereof, or that any vessel exempted pursuant to section 5 hereof is about to proceed on a voyage from such port when loaded in violation of the laws and regulations of her country with respect to load line, he may serve on the master or officer in charge of such vessel a written order detaining the vessel for the purpose of being surveyed to determine whether or not the provisions of this act are complied with. Where the detention is on the ground that the vessel does not conform to the provisions of section 3 hereof, the collector shall cause an examination of the vessel to be made, and if from such examination it appears that the vessel is not marked with the load line established in conformity with the provisions of this act, the collector shall so notify the master or officer in charge of such vessel and shall detain her until a load line shall have been duly established in accordance with section 3 hereof, provided that in cases of exceptional hardship, subject to regulations issued by the Secretary of Commerce, the collector may cause a proper load line to be provisionally established by one of the agencies or persons designated under section 3 hereof, which provisional load line shall constitute a compliance with the provisions of this act only until completion of the particular voyage in which the vessel is at the time engaged. After such establishment or provisional establishment of a load line the collector shall appoint three disinterested surveyors to examine the loading of the vessel and to report to him whether such vessel is so loaded as to submerge said provisional load line and if from such report it appears that the vessel is so loaded, the collector may by written order served on the master or officer in charge of said vessel detain the vessel until she has been reloaded in whole or in part so as not to submerge said provisional load line or lines. Where the detention is on the ground of a supposed violation of section 4 or section 5 hereof, the collector shall appoint three disinterested surveyors to examine the vessel and her loading and to report to him, and if from such report it appears that the vessel is loaded in violation of the provisions of sections 4 or 5 hereof, the collector shall so notify in writing the master or other officer in charge of such vessel and detain the vessel until she has been reloaded in whole or in part so as to conform to the provisions of sections 4 or 5 hereof. If a vessel is ordered detained by a collector acting under the provisions of this section, the master may within 5 days appeal to the Secretary of Commerce, who, if he so desires, may order a further survey and may affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the collector. Clearance shall be refused to any vessel which shall have been ordered detained.

SEC. 8. (a) If the owner or master of any vessel subject to this act and to the regulations established thereunder shall permit her to depart from any port or place designated in section 1 without having complied with the provisions of section 3, he shall for each offense be liable to the United States in a penalty of $500. If the owner or master of any vessel exempted pursuant to section 5 shall permit her to depart from any port or place designated in section 1 without having the load line or lines required by the laws and regulations of the country to which she belongs marked upon her as required by said law and regulations, he shall for each offense be liable to the United States in a penalty of $500. The Secretary of Commerce may, in his discretion, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this paragraph, or discontinue prosecution therefor on such terms as he may deem proper.

(b) If the master of any vessel subject to this act, or of any foreign vessel exempted pursuant to section 5, shall fail, before departing from any port or place designated in section 1, to enter in and make a part of the ship's record or log book the statement required by section 6, he shall for each offense be liable to the United States in a penalty of $100. The Secretary of Commerce may, in his discretion, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this paragraph.

(c) If any person shall knowingly permit or cause or attempt to cause any vessel subject to this act to depart or arrive, or if, being the owner, manager, agent, or master of such vessel, he shall fail to take reasonable care to prevent her from departing from or arriving at any port or place designated in section 1 when loaded in violation of section 4, or if any person shall knowingly permit or cause or attempt to cause a foreign vessel exempted pursuant to section 5 to depart or arrive, or if, being the owner, manager, agent, or master of such vessel he shall fail to take reasonable care to prevent her from departing from or arriving at any port or place designated in section 1 when loaded more deeply than permitted by the laws and regulations of the country to which she belongs, he shall, in respect of each offense, be liable to the United States, in a penalty of $500 unless the vessel's departure or arrival was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable. The Secretary of Commerce may, in his discretion, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this paragraph.

(d) If the master of any vessel or any other person shall knowingly permit or cause or attempt to cause any vessel to depart from any port or place in the United States or its possessions in violation of any order of detention made pursuant to section 7, he shall, in respect of each offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $500 or by imprisonment not to exceed 3 months, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

(e) If any person shall conceal, remove, alter, deface, or obliterate or shall suffer any person under his control to conceal, remove, alter, deface, or obliterate any mark or marks placed on a vessel pursuant to this act or to the regulations established thereunder, except in the event of lawful change of said marks, or to prevent capture by an enemy, he shall in respect of each offense be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

(f) Whenever the owner, manager, agent, or master of a vessel shall become subject to a fine or penalty by way of money payment pursuant to the provisions of this act, the vessel shall also be liable therefor and may be seized and proceeded against in the district court of the United States in any district in which such vessel may be found.

SEC. 9. The provisions of this act shall become effective as to vessels of 4,000 gross tons and upward, not later than 3 months, and as to all other vessels subject hereto, not later than 12 months from and after the date of approval thereof. This act may be cited as the "Coastwise Load Line Act, 1935."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of explaining the bill, as requested. The bill establishes the right to mark load lines on vessels in the coastwise trade. We passed several years ago a bill making it lawful to mark the load lines on vessels in foreign trade. These load lines are lines of safety, above which the vessel shall not be loaded. If she is loaded above this line of safety she shall not be permitted to go to sea. We make this now applicable to the coastwise trade, because vessels in the coastwise trade often go in waters just as dangerous as in the foreign trade.

The House bill excepted the Great Lakes. The Senate bill changed the House bill to make it applicable to the Great Lakes, and referred to the International Load Line Treaty of 1930. This was objectionable to the Great Lakes, and my committee has authorized an amendment which is acceptable to the Great Lakes. I may say also that the amendment has been seen by Mr. Andrew Furuseth and has been submitted to Senator LA FOLLETTE, who proposed the amendment in the Senate. It is agreeable to them. So there is no question about the amendment.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Does the Great Lakes Carriers' Association agree to it?

Mr. BLAND. I do not know that the Great Lakes Carriers' Association, as a carriers' association, has agreed to it.

Mr. CULKIN. If the gentleman will permit, I shall speak on that briefly in just a moment.

Mr. BLAND. But it is certainly acceptable to all the men here in the House. I have an understanding with them that if the Senate does not concur in this amendment, which Mr. Furuseth says they will concur in, or if it is not in this language, I shall stay there as long as necessary to get a concurrence or to bring it back and give the Members an opportunity of voting upon it.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is there a size limit on these boats?

Mr. BLAND. One hundred and fifty gross tons or over.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 2, line 17, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Provided further, That in applying the load lines to vessels on the Great Lakes the Secretary of Commerce is vested with discretion to vary the load-line marks from those established by said treaty when in his opinion the changes made by him will not be above the actual line of safety."

On page 2, line 15, strike out "September 30."

Mr. BLAND. I may say that the reference to the page and line refers to the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this load-line legislation has been thoroughly considered by the Merchant Marine Committee of the House. Originally this application of the load-line law, as stated by the chairman, related to the high seas or to the ocean. The bill is now extended to the Great Lakes, and the amendment just offered makes the application of the law subject to some discretion by the Secretary of Commerce. This discretion is necessary, as the Members probably know, especially those from the Great Lakes, on account of the varying depths of the channels and by reason of these depths limiting the load capacity; in other words, in the Great Lakes area the channels themselves provide a reasonable factor of safety.

This amendment will perfect the bill and put it in the happy situation where all concerned, the sailors on the Lakes, their representatives, the shipowners of the high seas, as well as the Great Lakes Carriers' Association, which is a voluntary organization of shipowners on the Great Lakes, will be in favor of the amendment. I therefore urge your support of the measure as amended. It will protect the traveling public, the sailors who go on the Lakes and high seas, and insure rational application of the law. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Members of the House from the Great Lakes territory have been very much interested in this legislation and a little concerned about the provision in the bill as it passed the Senate which made the same law applicable to ships on the Great Lakes as is applicable to those on the ocean.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], who are members of the committee reporting the legislation, working with the chairman of the committee, have been very diligent in looking after the interests of the Great Lakes and in working out this amendment offered by the chairman of the committee. My understanding is that the amendment is satisfactory to the Great Lakes shipping interests and satisfactory to the proponents of the legislation in the Senate.

With the statement of the chairman of the committee in regard to the amendment and the probable adoption of it by the Senate, I know of no opposition to the legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 38

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday the 24th day of August 1935, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

RECESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess for 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess for 15 minutes.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF ACKIA, MISSISSIPPI

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3003) to provide for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Ackia, Mississippi, and the establishment of the Ackia Battleground National Monument, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out all after "established" down to and including "and" in line 3, page 2.

Page 2, line 5, after Ackia.", insert "That said commissioners shall receive no compensation for their services."

Page 2, strike out lines 6 to 9, inclusive.

Page 2, line 13, strike out all after "buildings" down to and including "Commission" in line 15, and insert "not to exceed 50 acres."

Page 2, line 21, strike out "or areas."

Page 2, line 25, strike out all after "$15,000" down to and including "and" in line 2, page 3.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

AUTHORITY TO SPEAKER AND PRESIDENT OF SENATE TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 39

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolution duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of each House and found truly enrolled.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly this is exactly the same resolution that we passed last session, and several times before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 407, consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas, and ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the joint resolution and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the resolution in the exact terms of the first section of the bill known as the Cole bill, H. R. 9053?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. It is in identical language with the first section of that bill.

Mr. MAPES. And contains nothing else except the provision relating to the State compact?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. That is all.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I intend to demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. McFARLANE. I reserve the right to object. What is the measure?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. It is a ratification of the State oil compact, to which the gentleman's State is a party.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland if this is the measure to which so many of the independent marketers object, because of the fact that they claim it enlarges the monopoly which the big oil companies have on the distribution of their product.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I have no knowledge of any objection. I think what the gentleman has reference to are two bills, one in the House and one in the Senate. It is quite apparent that neither can be passed at this session. What this resolution does is to ratify the compact signed by eight of the producing States of the country, which has been transmitted by the President, with a message requesting its ratification, just as we have done in the case of many other compacts. It leaves to the States the problem which, in the compact, they feel they can solve. There is no supplementary legislation of any kind.

Mr. DOBBINS. It is the gentleman's opinion that this is not the controversial bill to which the independent marketers object?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am sure of that.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman made the statement that seven States had subscribed to this. What States are they?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The States of California, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Kansas, Colorado, Illinois, and Arkansas.

Mr. FADDIS. Does it affect any other States?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. No.

Mr. LANHAM. This measure does not set up a Federal bureau, does it?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland to dispense with the reading of the bill and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to know the nature of the compact and what its purpose is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls for the regular order. If gentlemen object, the bill will be read.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 407

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to an interstate compact to conserve oil and gas, executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., the 16th day of February 1935 by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California, and New Mexico, and there recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan, and since ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, and Texas, which compact has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"This agreement may become effective within any compacting State at any time as prescribed by that State, and shall become effective within those States ratifying it whenever any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico have ratified and Congress has given its consent. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE II

"The purpose of this compact is to conserve oil and gas by the prevention of physical waste thereof from any cause.

"ARTICLE III

"Each State bound hereby agrees that within a reasonable time it will enact laws, or if laws have been enacted, then it agrees to continue the same in force, to accomplish within reasonable limits the prevention of:

"(a) The operation of any oil well with an inefficient gas-oil ratio.

"(b) The drowning with water of any stratum capable of producing oil or gas, or both oil and gas in paying quantities.

"(c) The avoidable escape into the open air or the wasteful burning of gas from a natural-gas well.

"(d) The creation of unnecessary fire hazards.

"(e) The drilling, equipping, locating, spacing, or operating of a well or wells so as to bring about physical waste of oil or gas or loss in the ultimate recovery thereof.

"(f) The inefficient, excessive, or improper use of the reservoir energy in producing any well.

"The enumeration of the foregoing subjects shall not limit the scope of the authority of any State.

"ARTICLE IV

"Each State bound hereby agrees that it will, within a reasonable time, enact statutes, or if such statutes have been enacted then that it will continue the same in force, providing in effect that oil produced in violation of its valid oil and/or gas conservation statutes or any valid rule, order, or regulation promulgated thereunder, shall be denied access to commerce; and providing for stringent penalties for the waste of either oil or gas.

"ARTICLE V

"It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

"ARTICLE VI

"Each State joining herein shall appoint one representative to a commission hereby constituted and designated as 'The Interstate Oil Compact Commission', the duty of which said commission shall be to make inquiry and ascertain from time to time such methods, practices, circumstances, and conditions as may be disclosed for bringing about conservation and the prevention of phyical waste of oil and gas, and at such intervals as said commission deems beneficial it shall report its findings and recommendations to the several States for adoption or rejection.

"The commission shall have power to recommend the coordination of the exercise of the police powers of the several States within their several jurisdictions to promote the maximum ultimate recovery from the petroleum reserves of said States, and to recommend measures for the maximum ultimate recovery of oil and gas. Said commission shall organize and adopt suitable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.

"No action shall be taken by the commission except: (1) by the affirmative votes of the majority of the whole number of the compacting States, represented at any meeting, and (2) by a concurring vote of a majority in interest of the compacting States at said meeting, such interest to be determined as follows: Such vote of each State shall be in the decimal proportion fixed by the ratio of its daily average production during the preceding calendar half-year to the daily average production of the compacting States during said period.

"ARTICLE VII

"No State by joining herein shall become financially obligated to any other State, nor shall the breach of the terms hereof by any State subject such State to financial responsibility to the other States joining herein.

"ARTICLE VIII

"This compact shall expire September 1, 1937. But any State joining herein may, upon 60 days' notice, withdraw herefrom.

"The representatives of the signatory States have signed this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States, and a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"This compact shall become effective when ratified and approved as provided in article I. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto by affixing its signature to a counterpart to be similarly deposited, certified, and ratified.

"Done in the city of Dallas, Tex., this 16th day of February 1935."

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of section 1 is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 407. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan to 20 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman from Maryland please explain this bill?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. In the last Congress a resolution directing an investigation of the petroleum industry was passed. The committee conducting that investigation consisted of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON], the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLY], and I was chairman of the committee, all appointed as a subcommittee by the distinguished Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee [Mr. RAYBURN]. I cannot in this brief time pay ample tribute to each of them for the great service they rendered this House and the country in that work.

Following the report of the committee last February oil legislation, known as "S. 1190", was passed. Since that, H. R. 9053 was reported by the committee as expressing our views on oil legislation, which bill and report thereon for the information of the House are as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO STATE OIL AND GAS COMPACT OF FEBRUARY 16, 1935

SECTION 1. The consent of Congress is hereby given to an interstate compact to conserve oil and gas, executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., the 16th day of February 1935, by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California, and New Mexico, and there recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan, and since ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, and Texas, which compact has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States, and reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"This agreement may become effective within any compacting State at any time as prescribed by that State, and shall become effective within those States ratifying it whenever any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico have ratified and Congress has given its consent. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE II

"The purpose of this compact is to conserve oil and gas by the prevention of physical waste thereof from any cause.

"ARTICLE III

"Each State bound hereby agrees that within a reasonable time it will enact laws, or if laws have been enacted, then it agrees to continue the same in force, to accomplish within reasonable limits the prevention of—

"(a) The operation of any oil well with an inefficient gas-oil ratio.

"(b) The drowning with water of any stratum capable of producing oil or gas, or both oil and gas in paying quantities.

"(c) The avoidable escape into the open air or the wasteful burning of gas from a natural-gas well.

"(d) The creation of unnecessary fire hazards.

"(e) The drilling, equipping, locating, spacing, or operating of a well or wells so as to bring about physical waste of oil or gas or loss in the ultimate recovery thereof.

"(f) The inefficient, excessive, or improper use of the reservoir energy in producing any well.

"The enumeration of the foregoing subjects shall not limit the scope of the authority of any State.

"ARTICLE IV

"Each State bound hereby agrees that it will, within a reasonable time, enact statutes, or if such statutes have been enacted then that it will continue the same in force, providing in effect that oil produced in violation of its valid oil and/or gas conservation statutes or any valid rule, order or regulation promulgated thereunder, shall be denied access to commerce; and providing for stringent penalties for the waste of either oil or gas.

"ARTICLE V

"It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

"ARTICLE VI

"Each State joining herein shall appoint one representative to a Commission hereby constituted and designated as 'The Interstate Oil Compact Commission', the duty of which said Commission shall be to make inquiry and ascertain from time to time such methods, practices, circumstances, and conditions as may be disclosed for bringing about conservation and the prevention of physical waste of oil and gas, and at such intervals as said Commission deems beneficial it shall report its findings and recommendations to the several States for adoption or rejection.

"The Commission shall have power to recommend the coordination of the exercise of the police powers of the several States within their several jurisdictions to promote the maximum ultimate recovery from the petroleum reserves of said States, and to recommend measures for the maximum ultimate recovery of oil and gas. Said Commission shall organize and adopt suitable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.

"No action shall be taken by the Commission except: (1) By the affirmative votes of the majority of the whole number of the compacting States, represented at any meeting, and (2) by a concurring vote of a majority in interest of the compacting States at said meeting, such interest to be determined as follows: Such vote of each State shall be in the decimal proportion fixed by the ratio of its daily average production during the preceding calendar half-year to the daily average production of the compacting States during said period.

"ARTICLE VII

"No State by joining herein shall become financially obligated to any other State, nor shall the breach of the terms hereof by any State subject such State to financial responsibility to the other States joining herein.

"ARTICLE VIII

"This compact shall expire September 1, 1937. But any State joining herein may, upon 60 days' notice, withdraw herefrom.

"The representatives of the signatory States have signed this agreement in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States, and a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

"This compact shall become effective when ratified and approved as provided in article I. Any oil-producing State may become a party hereto by affixing its signature to a counterpart to be similarly deposited, certified, and ratified.

"Done in the city of Dallas, Tex., this 16th day of February, 1935."

(b) The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of subsection (a) is hereby expressly reserved.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

SEC. 2. There is hereby established a Petroleum Administrative Board (referred to in this act as the "Board") to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No member of the Board shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as such member, nor shall any member of the Board participate directly or indirectly in any operation or transaction of a character subject to regulation by the Board under any provision of law. Each member of the Board shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year and shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that (1) any member of the Board appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the members of the Board first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, 1 at the end of 1 year, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 3 years, 1 at the end of 4 years, and 1 at the end of 5 years, after the date of the enactment of this act.

POWERS, DUTIES, AND FUNCTIONS OF THE BOARD

SEC. 3. (a) The Board is authorized and empowered, when in its judgment it is necessary for the purpose of administering the provisions of this act, to make investigations and collect data from the petroleum industry, and to this end it may require periodical and special reports from persons in the petroleum industry and conduct examinations and inspections for the purpose of verifying such reports and ascertaining the facts. The Board may cooperate with the executives, officials, and agencies of the several States and with any agency created under the interstate compact to which the consent of Congress is given by this act, in the study and investigation of matters relating to the petroleum industry, and may hold joint hearings upon such matters with any duly authorized State agency. The Board is authorized and directed to study and investigate, and in doing so to cooperate with, and when deemed advisable to hold joint hearings with, executives, officials, and agencies of the several States and with any agency created under the interstate compact to which the consent of Congress is given by this act, the status of petroleum reserves and sources of supply, the discovery and orderly development of sources of supply, improved methods of production, the possibility and expense of repressuring existing fields, and related matters pertaining to the petroleum industry. The several departments and independent establishments of the United States Government shall, at the request of the Board, provide it with all records and information which they may have available pertaining to the petroleum industry.

(b) The Board shall determine periodically (1) the reasonable market demand for petroleum to be produced in the United States, and (2) that part of such demand which constitutes the reasonable market demand of petroleum to be produced in each producing State, specifically determining the quantity required from current production to supply such demand for petroleum from each producing State. The demand for petroleum as so periodically determined by the Board shall be within such limit as is consistent with the prevention of physical waste, and determined after fair and impartial consideration of pertinent information submitted by any commission, officer, or other agency established or designated under State law for the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the physical waste thereof in any State, the systematic analysis of appropriate statistical data, and consultation with such sources of information within the petroleum industry as it may be necessary, and consultation with any agency created under the interstate compact to which the consent of Congress is given by this act. The Board shall inform any duly constituted State authority charged under State law with the duty of regulating or restricting the production of petroleum, or the Governor of any oil-producing State having no such State authority, of its determinations, and shall also give public notice of such determinations.

(c) The President may, at any time, by Executive order, transfer to the Board the whole or any part of any office, bureau, or division in the executive branch of the Government engaged in statistical, economical, legal, scientific, or administrative work affecting or related to the production, refining, transportation, or marketing of petroleum or petroleum products, and in the case of any such transfer (1) all powers, duties, and functions imposed upon or vested in the department or agency from which such transfer is made or upon the secretary or chief executive officer thereof, in relation to the office, bureau, or division or part thereof so transferred, shall be imposed upon and vested in the Board, (2) all employees, property, and records of such office, bureau, or division, or part thereof, shall be transferred to the Board, and (3) unexpended balances of appropriations used by or available to such office, bureau, or division, or part thereof, shall be available for expenditure by the Board.

AMENDMENTS PLACING ADMINISTRATION OF ACT OF FEBRUARY 22, 1935, IN PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) Section 2 of the act of February 22, 1935, entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"(5) The term 'Board' means the Petroleum Administrative Board created by the Petroleum Act of 1935."

(b) Section 5 of such act of February 22, 1935, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (a) The Board shall prescribe such regulations as it finds necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including but not limited to regulations requiring reports, maps, affidavits, and other documents relating to the production, storage, refining, processing, transporting, or handling of petroleum and petroleum products, and providing for the keeping of books and records, and for the inspection of such books and records and of properties and facilities.

"(b) Whenever the Board finds it necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act it shall require certificates of clearance for petroleum and petroleum products moving or to be moved in interstate commerce from any particular area. A certificate of clearance shall be issued by the Board in any case where it determines that the petroleum or petroleum products in question do not constitute contraband oil. Denial of any such certificate shall be by order, and only after reasonable opportunity for hearing. Whenever a certificate of clearance is required for any area in any State, it shall be unlawful to ship or transport petroleum or petroleum products in interstate commerce from such area unless a certificate has been obtained therefor.

"(c) Any person whose application for a certificate of clearance is denied may obtain a review of the order denying such application in the United States District Court for the district wherein the Board is sitting by filing in such court within 30 days after the entry of such order a written petition praying that the order of the Board be modified or set aside, in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Board, and thereupon the Board shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript, such court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Board shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Board. The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347)."

(c) Subsection (b) of section 7 of such act of February 22, 1935, is amended by striking out the words "a board created under authority of section 5" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the Board."

(d) Section 8 of such act of February 22, 1935, is amended by striking out the words "a board created under authority of section 5" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the Board."

(e) Section 9 of such act of February 22, 1935, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. The Board, and any agency, officer, or employee designated under authority of section 11, may hold and conduct such hearings, investigations, and proceedings as may be necessary for the purposes of this act, and for such purposes those provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 relating to the administering of oaths and affirmations, and to the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence (including penalties), shall apply."

(f) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 10 of such act of February 22, 1935, are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) Upon application of the Board, by the Attorney General, the United States District Courts shall have jurisdiction to issue mandatory injunctions commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any regulation issued thereunder.

"(b) Whenever it shall appear to the Board that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices that constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this act or of any regulation thereunder, it may in its discretion, by the Attorney General, bring an action in the proper United States District Court to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond."

(g) Section 11 of such act of February 2, 1935, is amended by striking out the word "President" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Board."

(h) All orders, certificates, findings, determinations, requirements, or regulations which have been issued, made, or granted prior to the enactment of this act, under authority of any provision of such act of February 22, 1935, which after the enactment of this act is to be administered by the Board, and which are in effect at the time of the enactment of this act, shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded or repealed by the Board or by operation of law. Any hearing, investigation, or proceeding pending under such act of February 22, 1935, at the time of the enactment of this act, shall be continued by the Board in the same manner as though originally commenced by or before the Board. No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer in relation to the exercise or discharge of powers or duties under authority of any provision of such act of February 22, 1935, which after the enactment of this act is to be administered by the Board, shall abate by reason of the transfer of such powers or duties, but the court may allow such suit, action, or proceeding to be maintained by or against the Board. There are hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of the Board all records of any agency heretofore designated by the President for the execution of any powers or duties under such act of February 22, 1935, insofar as such records pertain to matters to which such act relates.

IMPORTS

SEC. 5. The importation of petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt is hereby limited so that whenever the Board has reason to believe that petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, are being imported or are likely to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken under this act, under the interstate compact to which the consent of Congress is given by this act, or under the act of February 22, 1935, hereinbefore referred to, the Board shall cause an immediate investigation to be made to determine such facts. Such investigation shall be made after such notice and hearing, and subject to such regulations as the Board shall specify. If, after such investigation, the Board finds the existence of such facts, it shall certify all records pertaining thereto to the President and if after such report, findings, and recommendations by the Board, the President finds the existence of such facts he shall by order direct that the entry into the United States of such petroleum and its products, including asphalt, shall for such time as may be specified by him, be permitted subject to (1) such terms and conditions, and (2) such limitations on the total quantities thereof, as may be necessary to prevent the occurrence or continuance of the conditions above referred to. Any decision of the President as to facts under this section shall be final. The decision of the President shall be certified to the Board and upon information of any such order of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury shall permit entry of any petroleum, or its products, including natural asphalt, specified therein only in conformity with such order. After investigation, report, and finding in the manner provided in the case of an original order, any order or provision thereof shall be suspended or revoked by the President wherever he finds the circumstances requiring the order or provision thereof no longer exist, or shall be modified by the President whenever he finds that changed circumstances require such modification to carry out the provisions of this section.

VOLUNTARY INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS

SEC. 6. The Board is authorized to provide for the holding of meetings and conferences and to assist otherwise in the formulation of voluntary agreements between members of the petroleum industry whereby (1) the production of crude petroleum in such manner, in such amount, or under such conditions as to constitute waste may be avoided; or (2) the orderly, systematic, and scientific development of oil fields or pools may be accomplished; or (3) petroleum refineries may be operated in such manner that nonintegrated or semi-integrated refineries may compete on a fair basis with the refining units of integrated organizations in the oil industry, the processing of crude petroleum may conform with and support the crude petroleum production orders issued by State conservation authorities or conform with agreements which may be entered into under clause (1) of this section, and that equitable access to sources of crude petroleum supply may be achieved; or (4) nonintegrated or semi-integrated producers, refiners, and marketers may be assured fair access to markets. If the President, after investigation and report by the Board, finds that any such agreement will accomplish one or more of the purposes above specified and that the same is in the public interest, he shall by order approve such agreement and upon such approval such agreement shall be valid and effective, and such agreement and action taken thereunder while such agreement is in effect shall be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States. The President, after investigation and report by the Board, shall by order withdraw his approval of any such agreement, and such agreement shall thereupon cease to be in effect, whenever he finds that such agreement or operations thereunder fail to accomplish one or more of the purposes above stated or is not in the public interest.

In any such investigation reasonable opportunity for hearing shall be afforded interested parties. No such agreement shall be approved unless it provides for the payment of adequate minimum wages to employees, and for the maintenance of fair maximum hours of labor for employees.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 7. (a) Wherever reference is made in this act to the Board, such reference shall be held to include, in addition to the Board, any agency, officer, or employee who may be designated by the Board for the execution of any of the powers and functions vested in the Board under this act.

(b) The Board, and any agency, officer, or employee designated under authority of subsection (a), may hold and conduct such hearings, investigations, and proceedings as may be necessary for the purposes of this act, and for such purposes those provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 relating to the administering of oaths and affirmations, and to the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence (including penalties), shall apply.

(c) The Board shall have power to perform any and all acts, and to prescribe, issue, make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as it may find necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act.

(d) The Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and experts as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act or under any other provision of law, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, and the Board may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary in the execution of such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 8. The Board shall make an annual report to Congress regarding the operations of the Board; and there shall be included in such report such information and data collected by the Board as may be of value in the determination of matters relating to the petroleum industry, and such recommendations for additional legislation as the Board deems advisable relating to such matters.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 9. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 10. This act may be cited as the "Petroleum Act of 1935."

[H. Rept. 1801, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

Mr. COLE of Maryland, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 9053:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9053) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products, to establish the Petroleum Administrative Board, and for other purposes, having considered and amended the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

Amend the bill as follows:

Page 6, line 16, change "$12,000" to "$10,000."

Page 17, line 7, after the word "specified", insert "and that the same is in the public interest."

Page 17, line 17, after the word "stated", insert "or is not in the public interest."

H. R. 9053 is the recommendation of the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, which subcommittee in the last session of Congress investigated the petroleum industry.

House Joint Resolution No. 441 of the Seventy-third Congress, directing the investigation of the petroleum industry aforesaid provided for report to the Seventy-third Congress. Because of the preliminary character of the report submitted as hereinafter discussed, there is no authority for the subcommittee, in response to the said resolution, to file what might be considered a final report. H. R. 9053 might be accepted therefore as the final report of the subcommittee with reservations on the part of one member of the subcommittee as hereinafter presented, which reservations are also the views of three other members of the full committee.

In the preliminary report filed January 2, 1935, pursuant to House Resolution No. 441 (73d Cong.), the subcommittee had the following to say:

"We have not deemed it advisable at this time to set forth in this report or to prepare for introduction when Congress convenes on January 3 a bill or bills embodying our conception of what permanent and/or temporary legislation should be enacted by the Seventy-fourth Congress dealing with the petroleum industry. There are numerous reasons for our taking this position. In the first place the National Industrial Recovery Act, though temporary, has through its provisions, and rules and regulations passed thereunder, helped the petroleum industry to some extent. At this time, for instance, the operation of the Federal Tender Board is given a great deal of credit for production being fairly in line with the demand established by the Federal Government. We anticipate that some of the pending temporary legislation will become permanent. Because of the constitutional difficulties which have arisen in the last 18 months in the administration of the Petroleum Code and other provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act pertaining to petroleum, we feel that the decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Amazon and Panama cases should be very helpful to Congress in drafting legislation. The National Resources Board appointed by President Roosevelt early last summer to make a study of national, including natural, resources has just submitted an exhaustive report, volume 1 thereof being the only one available to the subcommittee at this time. Volume 5 evidently will deal with our natural resources and it is important that the information and recommendations therein be known to Congress before definite legislation is considered.

"Another reason for not submitting legislation with this report is the pending effort of the Governors of the oil-producing States to effect an interstate compact. We have made reference to the first meeting of the Governors' conference on December 3 last. A second meeting will be held simultaneously with the convening of the Seventy-fourth Congress. We strongly urge upon the oil-producing States the adoption of State compacts to deal with the problems of the production of petroleum with which individual States are powerless to cope. The subcommittee clearly recognizes the principle of State compacts for the purpose of effecting a common end of State interests. Other plans for dealing with the problems of petroleum production outside of State lines are full of constitutional questions. State compacts, flexible in operation and over which the President of the United States or a Federal agency in the interest of the consuming masses of the Nation, may hold some veto power, is a solution of those problems of petroleum production which cannot be solved by modification of the "law of capture" and other legislation operating within State boundaries. We are confident that the Governors of the oil-producing States and the majority of the industry within those States, are cognizant of the common-sense theory that waste of petroleum resources must be prevented. Huge waste, such as the subcommittee has witnessed in the panhandle of west Texas should not be permitted to continue. Waste of many kinds in other fields, both past and present, shock anyone possessing familiarity therewith.

"At the meeting of the Governors and Governors-elect and representatives of Governors, held on December 3, various important resolutions looking to the formation of an interstate compact were offered. It is the understanding of the subcommittee that these resolutions will be before the second meeting on January 3, 1935. This discussion and consideration by the Governors of our oil-producing States coming at this time when the legislatures of all of these States are either in session or about to convene presents ample opportunity for the oil-producing States through actual agreement and approval to present to the Seventy-fourth Congress before its adjournment a definite, specific compact for its consideration. It will not take many weeks after January 3 for the Congress to decide whether the effort of the Governors of the oil-producing States promises worth-while results. We believe they should be given the opportunity to take the initiative in drafting definite proposals without the Congress setting forth in a permissive way something in advance for the States to adopt. Something real and substantial may grow out of the pending effort. If it does not, the Seventy-fourth Congress will have ample time to pass such legislation as may be necessary.

"The determination of the necessity, extent, and character of possible legislation depends in part upon the question of whether an excessive supply of petroleum exists. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether excessive supply of petroleum and its products means supply available to meet current demand, or reserves available to meet future demand.

"We recommend, therefore, that any legislation establishing permanently the interest of the Federal Government in the petroleum industry should provide for an agency, commission, or board, as it might be designated, to absorb some of the activities in various departments of the Federal Government as now constituted. The Bureau of Mines might very easily be revamped for the purpose.

"The subcommittee feels that such an agency should have sufficient personnel and authority to study continuously the status of the petroleum reserves; encourage discoveries of new pools; assist in improving present-day methods of production; study the possibility and expense of repressuring in various existing fields; systematically determine the total demand for petroleum and its products, both domestic and foreign; have jurisdiction over the management of oil-producing public and Indian lands; be given jurisdiction to establish pipe-line rates, unless the Interstate Commerce Commission is given greater appropriation to handle more expeditiously this subject now before it; and to study and make report as to the advisability of divorcing pipe lines; recommend at regular intervals to the President of the United States—the President being given authority by Congress to approve—limitations upon the importation of petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, so as to prevent importation thereof from interfering with current domestic production by supplying an undue proportion of the domestic consumption and export demand therefor; to represent the Federal Government, if need be, in any cooperative interstate compact, agreed upon and approved by the Congress; and, in general, to possess all other necessary authority so as to present that dignity, from a national standpoint, to which the subcommittee believes the petroleum industry is entitled.

"Coal, timber, and other natural resources, might properly also be included under the jurisdiction of this agency.

"We are convinced that not sufficient attention is being paid to the interest of consumers of petroleum products. Settlements of so-called 'price wars', which result in some cases in an increase of 100 percent in the cost of gasoline, strain the credulity of the observer on the theory that they just happened without prearrangement in view of the fact that the Sherman Antitrust Act is still the law of the land, except insofar as temporarily it may be suspended by the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, we think that the fixing of gasoline prices is a matter worthy of close and constant scrutiny by the Department of Justice.

"It is the purpose of the members of this subcommittee, all of whom have been reelected to the Seventy-fourth Congress, to ask the permission of the Seventy-fourth Congress to file a supplemental report when the decision of the Supreme Court in the Panama and Amazon cases shall have been rendered, the result of the Governors' conference, now in session with respect to an interstate compact, shall have been concluded, and the full report of the National Resources Board shall have been published."

Following the decision of the Supreme Court in the Panama and Amazon cases (the opinion printed in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Jan. 7, 1935), S. 1190 seeking to enact new legislation which would be constitutional, accomplishing the same purpose as section 9–C of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which section was declared unconstitutional in the aforesaid case, was introduced. S. 1190 was reported out by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House and in reporting that bill and advocating its passage, the report contained the following statement:

"It is only fair to state that this bill does not wholly represent the views of the members, both of the committee and the subcommittee, as to the proper legislative remedy for the ills of the petroleum industry. This bill is essentially stopgap legislation to meet the objections pointed out by the Supreme Court in the 'hot oil' cases to the constitutional validity of section 9 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. If it is enacted, it will again check the movement of 'hot oil' until the entire question can be more thoroughly considered."

In the early part of the session a bill dealing with control and regulation of the petroleum industry was introduced by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, and subsequently a new bill in the form of amendments to the original was also introduced by Senator THOMAS. In anticipation of this bill, which has been the subject of hearings before the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining and reported out, and now on the Senate Calendar being passed by the Senate in some form and later being referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House for consideration, no legislation was recommended by the subcommittee dealing with this subject other than the Connally bill referred to.

The subcommittee now feels, in view of the investigation conducted pursuant to House resolution aforesaid and the reasons stated in the report of January 2, 1935, for not recommending at that time concrete legislation, now no longer existing, it is to be expected, in fact it is their duty, to give some final expression to their views on this very important subject. As the initial report of the subcommittee will disclose, they gave during the investigation considerable encouragement to the formation of the interstate compact and are glad to state in this report that which is known to many Members of the House, that through the efforts of many progressive Governors of a number of the oil-producing States, and we feel to some extent as a result of the encouragement of the subcommittee, such a compact has been entered into.

Gov. E. W. Marland, of Oklahoma, acting in behalf of the representatives of those signatories to the compact, transmitted the compact to the President of the United States and the chairman of the aforesaid subcommittee, with the request that such legislation as may be appropriate to ratify the compact might be passed at this session. The compact is set forth in full in section 1 of H. R. 9053.

It will be noted the great States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, New Mexico, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, and Michigan are parties to the compact and that the Legislatures of the States of New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Texas, and Illinois have to date ratified.

The delay in the present Congress in requesting ratification of the aforegoing compact might be attributed to an honest desire and effort on the part of the President and others, including many Members of Congress to work out in some agreeable way a bill ratifying said compact and at the same time including advisable suppiemental legislation. Many conferences, many letters and telegrams, looking to this have occupied the interim between the receipt of the compact and the present time. It is fair to state that some Members of the House have intended to introduce oil legislation at this session but have deferred such action with the hope that a report of the subcommittee aforesaid might be submitted. Following the introduction of H. R. 9053, Representative DISNEY, of Oklahoma, who introduced the bill in the Seventy-third Congress which brought about the investigation aforesaid, introduced an identical bill.

H. R. 9053 differs in many respects from the original Thomas-Disney bills but it is, in the judgment of the committee, as far as Congress should go on this subject, and includes all legislation necessary to meet the problem as it exists today and we hope for all time.

This bill in detail does the following:

It provides for ratification of the interstate compact, realizing that the compact itself is not the strongest document of the kind that could be drawn, but that it is an initial effort on the part of the oil-producing States to meet, in a constitutional way, the prevention of waste of this great resource and in that way the conservation thereof. The compact bespeaks an effort on the part of a number of States to meet a great problem which is peculiarly a State one and yet the magnitude of which flows over into every State of the Union, thereby making it one of real national interest. The right of the States to handle and control the production end of this industry is one that the committee recognized and wants to encourage. The problem is not too big for the States if they sincerely want to solve it; at the same time it is not one which will tolerate abandonment or trifling by the States. The country as a whole has the right to demand that petroleum, a great God-given resource belonging as a whole to no State or individual, but a natural national resource, must be conserved and must not be wasted. Petroleum has admittedly become an integral, indispensable part of almost every activity of our country, both private and public. It presents a problem which the committee recognizes as belonging in a large measure to the States for solution, but in order for the States to succeed in such an effort they must have the cooperative help of the Federal Government.

If many other problems, involving production, peculiar to a known number of States, had been handled through the compact procedure as a real and genuine effort on the part of the interested States to solve such problem, and that, approved by Congress, much legislation heretofore passed by Congress dealing with production of many commodities would have been unnecessary. When Congress gives approval, however, to a compact of the type set forth in section 1 of this bill, giving to the principal oil-producing States control of production of petroleum, supplemental legislation is necessary and advisable to the extent included in this bill. Section 2 provides for a Petroleum Administrative Board, an independent agency of the Federal Government. The members of this Board are to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The duties of the Board make it advisable in our judgment for a separate agency instead of some bureau chief, or agency appointed by a Cabinet member without the approval of the President or the Senate to administer its provisions. The petroleum industry is our third largest industry, railroads and agriculture being the only two exceeding it in investment. Since the World War this industry has been the subject of ever-recurring investigation and study on the part of the Federal Government. President Coolidge sensed the importance of the President and Congress knowing at all times, if possible, the status of our petroleum reserves, and of the necessity for rigid waste-prevention measures and in general, the preservation as long as might be possible, of a resource of almost immeasurable value, admittedly indispensable at this time to enumerate activities and yet of a limited quantity. President Hoover and President Roosevelt have likewise expressed their keen interest in a similar way. The quantity of petroleum in the country today is pretty well known and no one will deny that while there is more than is necessary to meet current demand it is shockingly low to meet future demand. New discoveries it is true will be made, but such new discoveries should be accompanied by a greater respect on the part of developers of such fields looking to ultimate recovery from such fields, or pools, than has been the experience of the past in the shocking conduct of operators in the larger fields of the country.

Section 3 covers the powers, duties, and functions of the Board. Such duties present no encroachment whatsoever by the Federal Government upon the prerogatives of the States. The Board is the agency of the entire country and not the agency of the producing States alone, which agency however is to cooperate in every helpful way with the interstate compact group in carrying out the purposes and objects set forth in the compact. The proposed Board is to know, as near as possible, at all times, the status of petroleum reserves and sources of supply. It is to study and investigate the discovery and orderly development of all sources of supply and improved methods of production, as well as the possibility and the expense of repressuring existing fields. All of these subjects, as well as many others of a technical, geological, and engineering character, are known to the lay mind, not to say anything of one who is familiar with the industry and its ramifications. The importance of such information being in the possession of the Federal Government is too important to need any elaboration in this report. The Board has the important function of determining the total demand for petroleum to be produced in the United States, including domestic consumption, additions to storage, and export requirements. This aggregate figure is then divided and each producing State informed by the Board of the division, after the Board has taken into consideration all pertinent information necessary in order to make a fair allocation or determination. Such pertinent information will necessarily include limitation upon production from any pool to the point that waste will be prevented. It will take into consideration also the potential of such pools, the investments therein, the refining, transportation, and marketing activities associated therewith. Bear in mind this finding by the Board is not imposed upon the States in any mandatory fashion whatsoever. It is totally advisory and can be accepted by the States as a limitation upon the production therein, in any way the State might determine. This finding by a Federal agency has been pretty generally conceded by witnesses in the hearings before the subcommittee as advisable. It is our belief that the producing States will give serious consideration to this finding, in determining through the State conservation boards the production allowables in the respective States.

Further justification for an independent board might be requested. This Congress passed in the early part of the session S. 1190, which legislation provides for tender boards to be set up to administer the provisions of that law. These boards, without any limitation upon the number, depending entirely upon the necessity therefor, are paid salaries of $5,000 to each member. One board is now in existence in east Texas. The board created under H. R. 9053 takes over completely the administration of S. 1190 (the so-called "Connally bill") and makes unnecessary the appointment of tender boards as therein provided. The administration of the Connally bill will be carried out by the board created in this act through the employees of the board just the same as other comparable functions of the Federal Government under other boards. This bill provides for limitation upon imports of petroleum and voluntary industrial agreements within the industry, all of which come under the duties of this board.

The program lodged within the four corners of this bill is too important to be vested, as to its administration, in the hands of a bureau head, or a subordinate agency of some Cabinet official. It should be dignified in the way this great industry deserves, with the appointment of a board by the President, with the approval of the Senate, so that with all the duties it has upon it, it will reflect that dignity, and that position which other great industries of the country enjoy in the distinction they have so far as Federal interest in their problems is established. This provision of the bill establishing a separate board and imposing the very important duties thereon has had the most serious and careful attention of the committee and the large majority of the committee feel very strongly that it is most important that it be retained substantially in the form we have recommended.

Section 4 of the bill places the administration of the Connally Act, passed on February 22, 1935, under the new board and transfers all appropriations given to provide for the administration of the Connally Act to the new board. This includes, as we expect, the $500,000 recently provided in the deficiency bill for the administration of the Connally Act.

Section 5 provides for regulation of imports and is quite similar in language to the import provisions of the recent amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It says that the President upon factual finding by the board shall limit importation of petroleum whenever it is found that the importation of petroleum, including natural asphalt, into the United States is in such quantities as to render ineffective or materially interfere with the program undertaken in this act. That means in brief this: This bill sanctions production control by the States to the extent that such control can be regulated under waste-prevention statutes as a legal exercise of the police power of the States, and it is fair to the producing States that they should enjoy the market or the maximum production the reserves of such States will permit so long as such production is in keeping with proper conservation laws. It is folly to say that the greatest ultimate yield of petroleum will be enjoyed by the producing States and come to the great consuming portion of this country from our own markets if production is permitted under scientific engineering advice, so as to not include shocking waste such as we have known to exist in the past, and in the same breath say that there shall be no protection to the producing States from the markets of foreign countries. This is true conservation, and this is what is best for our country as a whole. The provisions work both ways. If there is an unnecessary curtailment, or if there is a curtailment, of production below what there should be produced then the importation of the product can be permitted to a larger extent than otherwise.

Section 6 provides for voluntary industrial agreements. When the subjects to be covered in such agreements are read, it is hard to conceive of anyone objecting to any of it. They all suggest very pertinent and important phases of the petroleum industry in which the entire country is interested. As has been aptly said by one prominent member of our committee, this provision adopts, to an extent, the theory of the National Recovery Act, but brings about the genuine purposes thereof through voluntary action instead of by Government fiat. It is true that such agreements, when approved, shall exempt the parties thereto from the provisions of the antitrust laws. The agreements must cover the subjects set forth in section 6 and be in the public interest, and furthermore have the approval, with the right of withdrawal thereof, of the President of the United States. The agreements must provide for adequate maximum wages for employees and for the maintenance of fair maximum hours of labor for employees. They are totally voluntary with no penalties for the violation thereof to be imposed by the Federal Government.

The remainder of the bill briefly embodies necessary administrative provisions and for an annual report of the Board to Congress.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce respectfully recommend that H. R. 9053, as amended by the committee, do pass.

MINORITY VIEWS

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, are opposed to the provision in the bill H. R. 9053 relating to the establishment of a Petroleum Administrative Board. It means another board with the usual consequences and additional expense and is, in our opinion, wholly unnecessary. All necessary work that the bill proposes to have the Board do is now done by the Bureau of Mines in the Department of the Interior, or can be done by it with little, if any, addition to its personnel.

We are opposed also to the provisions of the bill relating to voluntary agreements between those in the industry and making such agreements, when approved by the President, exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States. Our experience with a similar provision in the National Industrial Recovery Act and its application to the codes was not such as to commend its application to the petroleum industry.

JOHN G. COOPER.
CARL E. MAPES.
PEHR G. HOLMES.
SCHUYLER MERRITT.

Senate bill 2027 passed the Senate and has been referred to the committee, while the House bill, reported out by the committee, is on the calendar. Both bills include, in section 1, in identical language, the interstate compact asking for its ratification, along with supplementary legislation. We have become convinced very definitely that neither of the bills can be gotten through at this session. We feel that in fairness to the States entering into these compacts, trying to conserve this resource and prevent the waste of it, they should certainly have the approval of that effort by Congress, such as the compact requires. The eight States entering into the compact are the main producing States of the country. Six of those States have ratified, through their State legislatures, two still remaining to act.

All this resolution does is to give approval to that effort of a compact which expires in September 1937, and nothing else.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does this resolution authorize the various States to enter into compacts, or to ratify a compact which has already been entered into?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. To ratify a compact which has already been entered into by the various States and approved by the required number of legislatures.

Mr. BOILEAU. Did the Congress at some previous time authorize the States to negotiate this compact?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. No. The committee investigating this industry under the resolution to which I have referred, attended the initial meeting of the governors. We gave some encouragement to a compact being drawn up.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman will recall there was a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] authorizing the State of Massachusetts to enter into compacts with reference to labor questions.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. That is correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. And they took the position at that time that the Congress must authorize the negotiation of the compacts before the State could legally go ahead and enter into them. It did not seem to me that was necessary. Is the gentleman convinced that it is not necessary that Congress should first authorize the States to negotiate such compacts?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am so convinced.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to the Members of the House the hearings before and the report of our subcommittee conducting the investigation referred to, also the report submitted with S. 1190. All of it will be useful to you in preparing for further discussion of the important question in the future. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, may I be notified when I have used 10 minutes?

Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, there is no particular opposition to this resolution ratifying the compact entered into between certain oil-producing States. Personally, I think it is more or less of an idle gesture. I do not think the resolution contains anything which needs to make anybody very enthusiastic either for or against it. As an indication of that is the fact that there is no opposition to it. Anything relating to the oil business that creates no division among those in the industry you may put down in your notebook as not amounting to much. In my judgment, that is the situation as far as the ratification of this compact is concerned.

The real fundamental issue in the oil problem, as I see it, is whether there is going to be real Federal supervision and control over the production and distribution of oil, or whether the States are to continue to have a free hand in that respect. This resolution does not touch that question. It does not attempt to go into that question in any way. The question which the gentleman from Illinois raised is not involved in this resolution, which is confined entirely to ratifying the compact.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The object of the compact is to reduce the amount of oil produced; is that the idea?

Mr. MAPES. I do not think so. Personally, I think one of the chief reasons for the compact was to head off any real legislation relating to oil on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The idea is to reduce the amount of oil produced? In other words, so that they can increase the price?

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman from New York will read this resolution he will find there is nothing in the resolution or in the compact which has any restraining influence upon any State, whether it is a member of the compact or not, as far as the production of oil is concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, then, what is the object of the compact?

Mr. MAPES. I believe that one purpose of it is to head off Federal regulation, as I have stated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is very important.

Mr. MAPES. The most that can be said of it is that it is the expression of a pious hope. It expresses the hope that the different States will pass legislation preventing unnecessary or unreasonable waste in the production of gas and oil. Whether the States do it or not is left entirely to their own volition. They have the same discretion in that respect whether they join the compact or whether they do not. As for me, I see no particular good that the compact will accomplish or any particular harm that it will do.

As far as I have been able to ascertain, the State of Michigan, which produces some oil, has no particular enthusiasm for the compact. If anybody will read the resolution, he will see that there is nothing binding upon anybody, nothing binding upon any State in it. After a State enters into the compact there is nothing binding upon it except, perhaps, the moral responsibility of passing some legislation within a reasonable time which will attempt to prevent undue waste of the oil and gas resources within the boundaries of the particular State, and the most, if not all of them, have done that already.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why is it necessary, then, to pass it?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that no proposal of this kind to be entered into could begin to raise the price of oil like the companies that own the wells, that own the pipe lines, that own the tanks, and that own practically all the oil in the United States. They are the ones who can raise the price without the help of anything of this kind.

Mr. MAPES. As the gentleman from Maryland, who introduced the bill to which he has referred, has indicated, I dissented from some of its provisions, including that to which the gentleman from Illinois referred, and to which the independents object. That provision is not in this bill. This bill contains only the fore part of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Maryland relating to the State compact, and confines itself strictly to the ratification of the State compact. If anyone will carefully read the resolution, I think he will see that the compact does not actually bind any State. It may perhaps lead to some good results by encouraging more cooperation between the several States. It provides for a commission made up of representatives of the States which enter into the compact to study the problems connected with the industry and to report the results of such study to their respective legislatures. So far as I can see, this is the only affirmative thing in the compact. It still leaves the whole problem of regulation and control of the oil industry open the same as it has been, and leaves the main controversial subject as to whether the Federal Government shall step in and attempt to regulate the production and distribution of oil in the several States as it now is, undecided.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. How does this compare with the Connally bill, briefly?

Mr. MAPES. The Connally bill contained this provision and a provision making permanent the so-called "Connally 'hot oil' amendment." It also had a provision relating to imports. The provisions relating to imports and to the extension of the Connally amendment are eliminated from this resolution. It contains a simple provision providing for the ratification of the State compact.

Mr. MILLARD. Has this bill passed the Senate, has the Connally bill passed the Senate, or have both passed the Senate?

Mr. MAPES. The Connally bill has passed the Senate and has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MILLARD. This bill as I understand has not passed the Senate.

Mr. MAPES. This is a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], and simply ratifies the State compact.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. If the States under the powers conferred upon them and ratified by this resolution should go into the field of entering into interstate agreements controlling marketing, would this resolution ratify and confirm such action on the part of the States?

Mr. MAPES. Not at all; not in my judgment.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. What is the necessity for the Federal Government setting up a petroleum administration board for this compact between the States, a board which will cost $50,000 a year?

Mr. MAPES. That is not in the resolution before the House. The resolution before the House simply contains the first provision of the bill the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. COSTELLO. The resolution concerns only the first part of that bill?

Mr. MAPES. It relates only to the State compact.

Mr. COSTELLO. What will be the effect of the State compacts, to benefit the large companies or will it help the independent producers?

Mr. MAPES. I do not think it will affect them one way or the other. I discussed that subject earlier in my remarks, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. COSTELLO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. WOLVERTON.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to be a member of the special committee appointed at the last session of Congress to study proposed legislation affecting the production, refining, transportation, and marketing of oil. We were very fortunate in having as our chairman the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, Mr. COLE. The committee made a very careful, complete, and comprehensive study of the subject. The result of the study made by the committee will be found in several volumes of printed hearings. It has been acknowledged to be the most comprehensive and worthwhile study that has ever been made of the oil industry. The information gathered by the committee is so worth while in character and scope that it should receive careful study and consideration as a basis of any legislation affecting the oil industry.

After considerable consideration given to the matter, the bill known as the "Cole bill" was introduced. A controversy has arisen with respect to some of its provisions which makes it impossible to obtain its consideration at this session. A compromise has been entered into by which the first section of the bill is to receive consideration, ratifying a compact which has been entered into by some of the oil-producing States. As has been so well stated by the gentleman from Michigan, the compact does nothing either helpful or harmful to anyone.

Members of the committee have been of the opinion that no legislation should be passed affecting the oil industry that was not comprehensive in character. In my opinion, it was unfortunate that earlier in the session we passed legislation known as the "Connally bill", which dealt with only one feature of this great and intricate subject. I do not mean to infer that the legislation referred to was improper, but merely that it should not have been passed until every other feature that had a direct relationship to the subject had been considered and provided for by accompanying legislation. The Connally bill was piecemeal legislation. It is fortunate, however, that a time limitation was placed upon it. This will give opportunity to study its effect and again require its consideration at a future day not far distant.

The resolution now before the House likewise only deals with one feature of the subject. It is important, not because of the terms of the compact entered into between the several oil-producing States which have signed and now seek congressional ratification but because it indicates a tendency upon the part of such States to act jointly. There is much to be done by the States themselves. There is a realm in which they alone can act. Likewise, there is an important part that must be taken by the Federal Government, particularly in protecting the interests of the consuming public.

The compact which is the subject of the present resolution is not complete or comprehensive—as I have already said it will neither help nor harm in any serious way. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] asked as to the purpose of the compact, if it is as ineffective as previous speakers have indicated. His question could have been properly answered by saying that it was a "face-saving" proposition—no more, no less. The governors of some of the oil States, or their representatives, met in answer to a call from the Governor of Oklahoma. They were unable to agree upon the terms of an effective compact. They were about to adjourn without an agreement. Thereupon the compact contained in the resolution now before the House was proposed and entered into because it did not seek to bind any State in any way that it did not wish to be bound. Thus it became possible to announce an agreement had been entered into and that the governors' conference was not a complete failure.

I am certain that if any genuinely effective terms had been sought there would have been no agreement. I regret to say it. However, even though the compact is not important from the standpoint of its terms, yet it is important in that it has a tendency to keep the several oil-producing States upon speaking terms at least.

The compact was entered into by the States which signed it with full knowledge that it did not do anything. It does, however, preserve an opportunity or a duty on their part to come back and meet together again at some future time. It was merely a step, and a very small step, in the direction of oil control. I wish to again emphasize the thought that so far as I am personally concerned, I take the position that no legislation should be passed without a full, comprehensive, and complete treatment of the entire subject. We have not had such legislation presented to us for action as yet. While I shall vote for this resolution, I do so with the idea that no harm can be done by its adoption, and in the hope that some good may come out of it eventually.

In answer to the question that was raised as to whether the underlying purpose of the compact was to control production so that it would have an effect on price, may I say that I believe the bills that were originally introduced seeking, under the term of conservation, to control the production of oil really had for their purpose no other idea than stabilizing the price in a way that would be beneficial to the big oil-producing companies. Such legislation without adequate governmental supervision might prove highly detrimental to the consumers of this Nation. However, for the comfort of the gentleman who asked the question, may I say that there has been made a part of this proposed compact the following language, which appears in article V:

> It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then the gentleman believes that the Connally "hot oil" bill would reduce the production of oil and increase the price?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I would not want to give that as the reason for the bill being introduced, but I can readily understand that it could have that effect if there should be no Federal supervisory jurisdiction provided in the matter.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Do I understand that this Petroleum Administrative Board has been stricken from the bill?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes. The only matter now before the House for consideration is a resolution which embodies the first section of the bill, to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Article V of this compact states:

> It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States joining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof, or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but is limited to the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations.

Would not the very act of conservation bring about a reduction in oil and an increase in its cost?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I could not hear what the gentleman said. What was the question?

Mr. SIROVICH. Did the gentleman hear what I read?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes; but I did not hear the question which followed.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would not the conservation, which is the purpose of this compact, in itself bring about a reduction of oil and thereby increase its cost?

Mr. WOLVERTON. There is no doubt in my mind that whenever you reduce the availability of any commodity there is a natural tendency to increase the price to the consumer.

In that connection I wish to give a word of warning. No legislation should be passed under the guise of conservation which has for its purpose or effect an increased price to the consumer, or that permits under the guise of stabilization a loss of the beneficial effect of supply and demand and open competition. Care must be observed in all such legislation to adequately and effectively guard the interests of the consuming public.

There can be no controlled production without having a direct effect upon the price to the consumer. While it may be necessary at some time to conserve oil as against its possible exhaustion, yet at no time should it be possible under the cloak of conservation to limit its production so that there will result a stabilization of price to the detriment of the public. All too frequently the real purpose of conservation agitation has been to stabilize an increased price of oil to the consumer.

We must never overlook the fact in considering any legislation that has for its purpose the control or limitation of production that the price to the consumer is thereby affected, and if there is no governmental supervision or control the price will be an increased price to the consumer. Whenever the available supply of any commodity is reduced or limited the direct result is an increased price to the consumer. This is particularly true when applied to any natural resource such as oil.

Therefore, no legislation should ever be passed that will make it possible for either a combination of oil producing States or oil producers, large or small, to limit or restrict production to such an extent as to prove detrimental to the public interest.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, as between those in the oil industry who desired no legislation at all, on the one hand, and those who wanted complete regimentation of the oil industry on the other hand, I think the ratification of this State compact is, at least for the present, a happy medium and in the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, there was a draft of a bill presented a year ago known as the "Margold draft." That was never formally presented to the Congress, but it was understood to have the backing at that time of some rather important people in the Government. The Margold bill would have given the Federal Government the power to reach its long arm out from Washington and turn the valve at the head of every oil well in the Nation. It would have given the Federal Government the power to fix the price of petroleum products down to a gallon of gasoline sold anywhere in America. It would have given the Federal Government the power to determine what men should or should not enter the filling station business. That is one side of the argument. On the other side are those who want no regulation. They want the old ruthless system of individualism; that is, drain the oil reserves of the Nation as quickly as they can, make their fortunes as quickly as they can, and let the future take care of itself.

Mr. Speaker, the investigations of our committee of a year ago demonstrated that the known petroleum reserves of the Nation will last only from 10 to 15 years. Of course, it is anticipated that in the future we will find new oil wells the same as we have in the past; therefore, it is not likely that the oil reserves of the Nation will be exhausted in any such period of time. But, so far as the oil reserves of the Nation are known to exist, we have only enough oil to last this Nation 10 or 15 years. It is known that in the last 4 or 5 years we have been exhausting our petroleum reserves faster than we have been finding new supplies underground.

The question has been raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] with reference to whether the effect of the bill will be to gouge the consumer to the profit of the producer.

It is my judgment that nothing of that sort can happen under the State compact, not only on account of the limitation of article 5, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] read a moment ago, which expressly states, "It is not the purpose of this compact to authorize the States adjoining herein to limit the production of oil or gas for the purpose of stabilizing or fixing the price thereof or create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation", but also there are some practical reasons, I may say to my friend from New York, why I do not think it is possible that the oil-producing States of the Nation will unnecessarily restrict production. One of the reasons, I will say to my friend from New York, is that many States have what is called an "extraction" tax, or a production tax, so that the more oil produced the greater the revenues that go to the State governments, and in these days, when the burden of taxation is so great and the hand of the taxgatherer is so heavy over the land, I do not anticipate that State governments are going to unnecessarily restrict the production of oil so as to cut down the source of a large part of their revenue. Down in Texas, which is the greatest oil-producing State of the Nation today, they have a tremendous area of land that is publicly owned on which oil has been found, and the proceeds of the oil from these publicly owned lands in Texas go to the support of the public-school system of Texas and the University of Texas, and they are furnishing, as I recall, substantially the greater part of the school revenues of Texas. So it is not likely, in my judgment, not only on account of the tax but on account of the proceeds of the oil that is owned by the State, that they are going to severely and sharply curtail production for the purpose of unduly enhancing the price. In addition, there are hundreds of thousands of royalty owners who will protest any drastic curtailment of production.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would not this compact be instrumental in increasing the cost of oil in the non-oil-producing States?

Mr. PETTENGILL. It might have a slight effect in that direction, I will say to my friend, insofar as it prevents the flooding of the market with supplies from new fields, like the great east Texas oil field. There might be a new east Texas field come into the market and for a year or two oversupply the Nation, and then perhaps, in a very few years, we would regret we had wasted the petroleum reserves of the Nation.

The future of national defense, aviation, and the automobile industry for years to come is going to depend upon reasonable conservation of these great natural resources.

So I do not anticipate, Mr. Speaker, that there can be any reasonable fear of enhancing the price to the consumer, and then let me say this as an additional reason why this will be the fact: There are many oil-producing States of the Nation that are not in the compact.

Mr. SIROVICH. Which ones?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Pennsylvania, for example, and Michigan are outside the compact. California, which is the second or third largest oil-producing State in the Union, is outside of the compact.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. However, those States can come if they want to.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; they have that right.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And they are apt to come in at any time.

Mr. PETTENGILL. They may, but it has been very hard for these oil-producing States to agree on anything.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Do I understand that under article I, if the States of Oklahoma, Kansas, and New Mexico ratify it, then California would necessarily have to ratify it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. No; no State is bound unless it comes in, or, in other words, only the States that come in are bound.

Mr. FORD of California. The language in article I is, whenever any three of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, California, Kansas, and New Mexico have ratified and Congress has given its consent.

Mr. PETTENGILL. That makes the compact effective when any three of the States ratify it with respect to the States that do ratify it.

Mr. FORD of California. And only then.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the States can do this now without this resolution?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Do what?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Enter into this compact and conserve the oil without this resolution being passed?

Mr. PETTENGILL. No; not without the consent of Congress.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They have been doing that and they have already entered into a compact.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The States, under the Federal Constitution, cannot enter into any compact without the consent of Congress. It must be ratified by the Federal Government before it is effective.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. If this compact is established and you have stabilization and conservation of oil and higher prices, could Congress abolish the compact or could the antitrust laws be invoked against their compact?

Mr. PETTENGILL. There is nothing in the compact, I will say to my friend, that suspends the operations of the antitrust statutes of the Nation, and the compact is to endure only for 2 years or, in other words, it will expire on September 1, 1937.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. If the gentleman will permit, I may say for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, that section 2 of the resolution provides for rescinding this approval of the Congress.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; and those who are familiar with the production of natural gas, as in the Panhandle of Texas, where, during the past 2 or 3 years, we have been blowing every day, into the air, more natural gas than is consumed in the United States, can appreciate that unless there is a compact, this situation may continue. It is rather difficult in the competition by the States for the natural-gas market of America, for one State to effectively enforce legislation against the waste of natural gas unless the other States join in it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will this do away with the evil of "hot" oil, also?

Mr. PETTENGILL. It will tend to do that to some extent, because the resolution provides that the States may take such steps as may be necessary to deny to interstate commerce oil that is produced in violation of the provisions of the compact.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is this resolution sufficiently strong to take care of the waste of the natural gas in the Panhandle of Texas?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Of course, that is a matter that is entirely subject to the local jurisdiction of the State of Texas, but it will encourage Texas to do that if other States will also join in doing it.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. PETTENGILL. It is rather difficult for a State to find any reason for conserving its natural gas and losing the national market, if another State is flooding the market with its own gas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman think that any kind of a compact entered into between States is absolute protection?

Mr. PETTENGILL. The gentleman knows the Texas situation better than I do. I understand the Texas Legislature has passed a very strict and conservative act.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the gentleman think it good reasoning to prorate the oil fields without, at the same time, regulating the importation of oil and cutting down the oil that may come in from foreign countries?

Mr. PETTENGILL. The legislation with reference to the importation of oil remains on the statute books. There is nothing in this bill to disturb that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE UTILITY BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I hoped to have the conference report on the utility bill before this time. There is a print of the Government Printing Office available now. It is not correct copy in all its details. The delay is in the proofreading, but I hope that it will be here by half past 2. Gentlemen can get this print, which is in the main correct, but has not been proofread.

AMENDING INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION ACT OF 1934

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 175.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 175

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, as amended, be amended by striking out "October 31, 1935," and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1936": Provided, That the right of the United States to annul any fraudulent or illegal contract or to institute suit to recover sums paid thereon is in no manner affected by this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER Is the gentleman from New Jersey opposed to the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Iowa opposed to the bill?

Mr. WEARIN. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa to demand a second.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

The doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOLAND). Three hundred and twenty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes. This is a matter of supreme importance to the North, the South, the East, and the West. It is a question of whether chaos shall exist in the American merchant marine by reason of the expiration on October 31 of the power of the President to cancel ocean mail contracts. It will be remembered that in the independent offices appropriation bill of 1934, the President, after hearings were had, was given authority to modify or cancel ocean mail contracts whenever it appeared to him that the full performance of the contract was not required in the public interest and that modification or cancelation would result in substantial savings to the United States. Hearings were finished about the 1st of January, and later the Post Office Department made its report. The time for cancelation or modification was later extended from April 30 to October 31. In March the President sent a message to the Congress emphasizing the need for—shall I call it a shipping equalization fund, if subsidy sounds too bad to Members of the House, or, possibly, a processing tax? That message was referred to the House committee. That committee for 3 months proceeded earnestly and diligently to work out a policy, which it submitted to this House. The bill was passed. Since that time no bill has passed the Senate, through no fault of the Senate Commerce Committee. We find ourselves faced with a condition and not a theory. We are faced with a situation where, if these contracts are cut off on October 31, there will be nothing to offer instead, and our vessels must lower their flags. Some of the lines are now in receivership. Termination of these contracts will mean that the people of the East, West, North, and South cannot get the service they have been receiving in the past and are receiving now. It will mean that our connections made by these shipping interests will be broken. Our people will turn to foreign ships, and foreign companies will drive American companies out of business. The President would be embarrassed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 5 of the 1934 Independent Offices Appropriation Act, referred to and proposed to be extended by the Senate Joint Resolution 175 now under consideration, be incorporated in my remarks at this point. It will make the debate more intelligible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

SEC. 5. Whenever it shall appear to the President, in respect of any contract entered into by the United States prior to the date of enactment of this act for the transportation of persons and/or things, that the full performance of such contract is not required in the public interest, and that modification or cancelation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States, the President is hereby, upon giving 60 days' notice and opportunity for public hearing to the parties to such contract, authorized, in his discretion, on or before April 30, 1936, to modify or cancel such contract. Whenever the President shall modify or cancel any such contract, he shall determine just compensation therefor; and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the individual, firm, or corporation entitled to receive the same, such individual, firm, or corporation shall be entitled to receive such portion thereof as the President shall determine and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said portion so received, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by paragraph 20 of section 41 and section 250 of title 28 of the United States Code: Provided, That where any such contract makes provision for settlement in the event of modification or cancelation, the amount of just compensation as determined hereunder shall not exceed such amount as is authorized by said contract. Any appropriation out of which payments upon the said contract were authorized to be made is hereby made available for the payment of such just compensation.

Mr. MORAN. Section 5 has been briefly referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]. It grants discretionary power to the President to cancel these particular ocean mail contracts under the conditions specified in that section, such as, for example, 60 days' notice, opportunity for public hearing, substantial saving to the United States, and full performance of the contract not required in the public interest. That power was granted up to April 30, 1935. Subsequent to that, it was extended from April 30, 1935, to October 31, 1935; and the resolution now before us proposes to extend that permission still further, from October 31, 1935, to April 30, 1936. The question, therefore, before the House, is whether that discretionary power to cancel those contracts, which has been in effect all of that time should, in the public interest, be continued.

Let me briefly refer to some of the events which have occurred in the way of ship-subsidy legislation in this particular session of Congress. The President on March 4 of this year sent a message to Congress and I shall quote therefrom one sentence:

In setting up adequate provisions for subsidies for American shipping, Congress should provide for the termination of existing ocean-mail contracts as rapidly as possible, and it should terminate the practice of lending Government money for shipbuilding.

It will be noticed that even though the President then had the authority, and has had the authority for a long time, nevertheless he suggested in that message of March 4 of this year that Congress should provide for the termination of these contracts. At the present time roughly $100,000,000 has been paid out, and $200,000,000 remains to be paid out. Those figures are not exactly right. The exact figures are $110,000,000 paid out and $188,000,000 to be paid out. In other words, the continuation of those contracts to their respective expiration dates will cost nearly $200,000,000 more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true that a great many if not a majority of these contracts are fraudulent?

Mr. MORAN. Let me answer that in two ways. In the first place, we have the fact that a committee of the other body created to investigate these contracts, and which has already made its report, stated its opinion on the basis of evidence presented to it, that those contracts are fraudulent and should be canceled. Second, we have an official report from the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General having been commissioned to investigate these contracts—at which investigation these ocean mail contract holders had opportunity to be heard at length, and to be represented by counsel, and testimony to the extent of 40,000 words was taken, and it is all printed (parts 1, 2, and 3 of the Postmaster General's Report) and in that report the Postmaster General reported to the President that in his opinion all those contracts should be canceled, and that they were fraudulently obtained.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. As I remember the report of the Postmaster General, it held, in substance, that 42 of the 43 contracts were secured through fraud and should be canceled.

Mr. MORAN. Fraud and collusion.

Mr. McFARLANE. Fraud and collusion.

Mr. MORAN. And without competitive bidding, as required by law.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will any harm be done if this bill is defeated?

Mr. McFARLANE. It will save about $200,000,000.

Mr. MORAN. If this resolution is continued, to my mind, it is saying that, as far as Congress is concerned, these contracts should, in spite of all the information that has been brought before us, be continued and that we should ignore that information and go ahead on that basis. To my mind, instead of rendering that verdict, it is far better to express our condemnation of these contracts.

This is the main reason: I believe that the first time we will get a real merchant marine is when the people who are engaged in merchant marine have a real incentive for changing the status quo. They like the present conditions. While this is going on, $30,000,000 a year is rolling into their coffers. Bill after bill has been presented to this Congress. We remember the argument made on the floor of this House on the Bland ship-subsidy bill that passed by only 8 votes. You will remember we were given the impression—I do not mean intentionally, because I think it was a mistake—that that bill which this House passed was supported by the President. What was the result? It was made known within 24 hours after that bill passed this House that the President did not favor that bill, and the bill was buried in the Senate and is deader than a doornail right now and never can be passed.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Will they attempt to determine whether those contracts are illegal and fraudulent by a court proceeding or in some way that will give the one to have these contracts a legal hearing?

Mr. MORAN. I think the gentleman is proceeding on the wrong premise, that the effect of a vote "no" would be to cancel these contracts. That is not true.

Mr. RICH. I am interested in saving $190,000,000. I do not want to do what Mr. Farley did when he canceled the contracts and then would not give the people who had those contracts a legal opportunity to defend themselves.

Mr. MORAN. I want a real merchant-marine bill to come before this House. We have a Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I want a bill to come before that committee that is a real bill, in the public interest, that does not continue the system we now have. I do not think we will ever have a merchant-marine bill in the interest of the public as long as these people are permitted to continue the status quo. The reason for that is this: Bill after bill has been introduced. I have examined every one of them. There were not so many in the House but there a great many in the Senate. They were introduced 2 days apart; one bill and then another bill and then another bill. This multiplicity of bills has confused the issue, which was probably the object sought thereby.

On June 27 last the House of Representatives passed a ship-subsidy bill (H. R. 8555), by a margin of only 8 votes, after a 2-day legislative battle. The Members of the House will recall that the opposition to the bill was conducted by the distinguished and very able gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] and by me, our opposition consisting principally of the presentation of many amendments which we felt necessary to protect the public interest. Since that vote more than enough Members to have changed the result have assured me that if they had heard the debate, or if they had not been mistaken in believing it was an administration bill, that they would have voted against it. In my opinion, the passage of that bill was a disgrace to the House of Representatives; such an act was due only to the fact that many Members did not have the time to familiarize themselves with the bill.

I am informed on good authority that promptly after the House passed the bill the President expressed his opposition to it in that form, which has caused the Senate Committee on Commerce to rewrite the bill extensively. Feeling it will be valuable information to the House, and that it should be made a part of the RECORD to detail some of those changes, the following data is presented under the convenient headings of:

First. Amendments defeated by House but accepted by Senate Committee on Commerce.

Second. Amendments adopted by House but not accepted by Senate committee.

Third. Evils in bill as reported by Senate committee.

I. AMENDMENTS DEFEATED IN HOUSE BUT ACCEPTED BY SENATE COMMITTEE

It is presumably a source of gratification to my colleague, Mr. WEARIN, as it is to me, that nine amendments offered by us on the floor of the House, which the House defeated, were considered so meritorious by the Senate committee that they are included in the bill as reported by the Senate committee. They are as follows:

First. Elimination of the regional requirement in appointment of members of proposed new Maritime Authority.

Second. The requirement that no member of the Authority shall have been in employment of, or have held any relation to any carrier by water or cognate enterprise, within the 3 years immediately preceding appointment.

Third. Cancel the present ocean mail contracts.

Fourth. Abolish the construction-loan fund.

Fifth. Recapture of excessive ship builders' profits (sec. 505b2).

Sixth. Recapture of excessive ship operators' profits.

Seventh. Transfer of regulatory powers to Interstate Commerce Commission.

Eighth. Remove certain authorities from Department of Commerce.

Ninth. Elimination of the famous "Treasury penetration", section 1109.

The fact that these nine major changes, after being voted down by the House, are incorporated in the Senate bill, should serve to put the House on guard when merchant marine legislation again comes before the House for action.

II. AMENDMENTS ADOPTED BY HOUSE BUT NOT ACCEPTED BY COMMITTEE

The fact that the House, though in no mood to adopt amendments, did adopt two important ones which are not included in the Senate bill, shows that the House must have been convinced of their desirability; the Senate bill should be amended accordingly. They are:

First. Provision for minimum wages and manning scales—the so-called "Labor amendment", to be discussed later.

Second. Provision that the insurance and reinsurance should be placed either in American private insurance companies or in the existing American insurance fund, and not in foreign insurance companies. Reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD debate on this amendment will show reasons for its necessity.

Third. Prohibition of receipt of gratuities by members of the authority and other officials.

III. EVILS IN PRESENT BILL H. R. — AS REPORTED BY SENATE COMMITTEE

Even though the bill as reported by the Senate committee is improved by the adoption of the nine changes proposed to, but defeated by the House, it is still highly objectionable for the following reasons:

First. Under section 201, the term of members of the Authority is changed to 12 years—much too long.

Second. Under section 402 (a), Uncle Sam is still to be made a junk dealer; the taxpayers through their Government must buy and scrap old ships, whereas the scrapping should be done by the shipowner at his own expense as in England. The United States buys at "fair value" and scraps for junk value, entailing a great loss.

Third. Under section 502 (b), the construction-differential subsidy can still be 40 percent of the American cost of the vessel—$400,000 on a $1,000,000 ship—and the applicant has to pay a down payment of only 25 percent of the foreign cost—$150,000 on a ship which costs $600,000 to build abroad, or $1,000,000 to build in America. These terms, combined with the trade-in value of an obsolete ship, as allowed by section 402 (a), means it is entirely possible for a citizen to obtain a million-dollar ship for no down payment whatever, or at most, a down payment of $150,000. Even under the present law the down payment on a million-dollar ship is $250,000—25 percent of American cost.

Fourth. Section 503 (a) is ambiguous, but reads like the famous "nigger in the woodpile" which past experience has taught us to expect in a ship-subsidy bill. As I read this section, conditions are set up which conveniently fit the circumstances of most shipowners, and then provide new ships for no down payment whatever, the terms being 15 equal annual installments. If an obsolete ship can be turned in under this arrangement, and I see no reason why not, apparently the Government would owe money to a shipowner who is kind enough to accept, without any down payment whatever, a ship costing the American taxpayers a million dollars—or even more, there is no limit. Also, under this section, there seems to be nothing to prevent the operation under charter of any foreign flag vessel—a citizen merely needs to acquire any old junk—no limitation as to how long he has been operating. For example, take a ship costing $1,000,000 to build in a domestic yard; on the claim that it would cost only $600,000 to build abroad, the applicant would, under the 15-annual-installments provision, pay only one-fifteenth of $600,000, or $40,000 yearly; he would put up himself only 6⅔ percent of the foreign cost, or only 4 percent of the American cost. If a ship were traded in at a "fair price" of $100,000 in this case, it would be 2½ years before the applicant had to pay anything on his installment contract to pay $40,000 annually. The fact that such a barefaced, brazen raid on the Treasury is attempted, is ample evidence of impossibility of private operation; the operators simply do not have the money, or cannot, or will not, provide it. Would anyone contend that 96 percent Government ownership is private enterprise, and 100 percent Government ownership bolshevistic?

Fifth. In computing recapture of shipbuilders' profits, salaries of $25,000, apparently per person, and without limit as to number of persons, may be deducted. If that is the correct interpretation, it will be the shipbuilders, and not the Government, who will do the "recapturing." If that interpretation is not correct, the section should be amended to make the language clear.

Sixth. Under section 522 (a), 20-year contracts are still permissible, entirely too long a period.

Seventh. The construction differential subsidy is still based on difference between foreign and domestic construction costs, a figure impossible of accurate ascertainment.

Eighth. The operating-differential subsidy is still based on difference between foreign and domestic operating costs, impossible of accurate computation.

Ninth. Under section 522 (f), it is still possible to pay an operating subsidy on ships over 20 years of age; we will never get a merchant marine that way, as we need new, up-to-date ships that can compete.

Tenth. Under section 522 (g), we find a cleverly worded sentence which purports to eliminate subsidies to industrial carriers (concerns which carry their own products extensively), but as a matter of fact would probably not eliminate a single industrial carrier, due to the sly requirement of 50 percent of whole cargo carried "both inbound and outbound." To accomplish the proper result, change the word "both" to "either".

Eleventh. Under section 524 (b), (d), (e), and (f), the Government's right to readjust overpayments is hedged around by requirements which will cause extensive and prolonged litigation, but under section 525 (b) the owner receiving a subsidy can "slide out from under" by merely deciding himself that he wants to quit and giving 120 days notice of such intention. There should be developed some fair terms for cancelation, available to the operator and the Government alike on same terms, to be fair to the taxpayers.

Twelfth. Under section 530 (c), the term "true investment" is introduced, and it is most ambiguous. It is so impossible of ascertainment that it should never be used. To have the Government's right of recapture depend upon such a term will mean endless litigation instead of recapture of profits for Uncle Sam. This clause appears designed to admit that recapture of excessive profits is a necessary corollary of any subsidy system, but then proceeds to nullify it.

Thirteenth. Under section 533 (a), paragraph 1, the accounting protection is again, as in the Bland bill, limited by the words "relating to", which will enable concealment of pertinent information; the insistence on retaining these qualifying words leads to the conclusion that such is the purpose.

Fourteenth. Under section 535 (a), the word "competitive" will cause endless trouble and controversy. If capable of exact definition, it should be clearly defined in the act; otherwise it should be eliminated. Its retention means possibility of expenditure of taxpayers' money for lines which are in fact competing, but which, under the wording of the act, could be construed as not competing.

Fifteenth. Under section 536, as in the Bland bill, corporate surety is not required. The actual experience with personal surety should demand that the act be so worded as to require corporate surety, instead of making any type of surety discretionary with the Authority.

Sixteenth. Under section 702 (b), a useless organization known as the "Joint Transportation Board" is still provided. An aggressive Authority could easily assume the duties this Board is asked to perform.

Seventeenth. Section 804 of the Bland bill is eliminated from the Senate bill—this was the labor amendment adopted by the House. Although the difference in wages is held up as the major cause of the necessity for an operating subsidy, the "shipping boys" evidently object to a definite provision to provide that such difference, duly paid for by the taxpayers, shall actually go to the American seamen. Minimum wage and manning scale provisions are essential if seamen are to be raised from the slave status.

Eighteenth. Section 1101 reminds us that there is still no limit to the cost of this bill; no one can even approximately guess the burden to be placed on the American taxpayers.

Nineteenth. Under section 702 (b) we find the phrase "fair actual value" in connection with the terms of requisition of vessels in time of war. Why not at least provide that the Government will not have to pay more for a ship taken over in time of emergency than the Government received for that same ship when it was sold? There is a lot of complicated verbiage here which may cost the taxpayers dear in time of war.

Twentieth. Under section 1105, deferred rebates are legalized. Here is where the "little fellow" will suffer; he will not be the one who will receive these rebates.

CONCLUSION

The fact that the "shipping boys" merely throw one bad bill after another at this Congress leads to only one conclusion, and that is that they hope one of them will get by in the hasty consideration of legislation in the closing days, but in event that does not materialize they have the present status, which is not at all bad for them, as evidenced by the Black Senate Committee disclosures. Right now they are milking the Treasury of nearly $30,000,000 annually, and are using part of that very money to pay for a lobby to get more money from the American taxpayer.

The following constructive program is submitted to the American Congress, based upon the facts that (1) we must have a merchant marine, and (2) private interests cannot, or will not, provide such merchant marine as we need except upon a "steal" basis:

First, pass a resolution at this session of Congress which (a) cancels the existing ocean mail contracts as of some definite future date, as, for example, March 31, 1936, and (b) authorize the President to create a Maritime Authority or Commission to study the problem and present definite recommendations for legislation to Congress on the opening day of the next session; and second, Members of Congress could study H. R. 7981 during the recess, a bill presented by me which in my opinion will actually provide an American merchant marine.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman believe that our merchant marine could compete with other countries without a subsidy?

Mr. MORAN. I believe it is entirely possible to develop a system of financial aid to our merchant marine.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In what way?

Mr. MORAN. I want to restrict my remarks to this resolution. I refer the gentleman to H. R. 7981, a 60-page bill that I introduced, which gives my views on that subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be Government-operated steamships?

Mr. MORAN. No; it does not provide for Government operation, contrary to the statements made on the floor many times.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Suppose we vote for this resolution, does it give the President the power to cancel these contracts?

Mr. MORAN. The President now has discretionary power to cancel these contracts.

Mr. CONNERY. Suppose we vote down the resolution, would that take that power away from him?

Mr. MORAN. If you vote down the present resolution, to my mind, you have created a psychological condition whereby this House says that we should not continue the present status quo system—pushing on and on the present system.

Mr. CONNERY. Suppose we vote it down and the President did not cancel them, what happens then?

Mr. MORAN. The contracts continue until Congress enacts necessary legislation to change the present situation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. If we do vote it down it will be the same as writing a letter to the President and letting him know that we think he ought to cancel them now?

Mr. MORAN. I will say I think the gentleman is exactly correct. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest suggestion of partisan politics involved in this resolution. It is merely a simple question of policy which, when understood, permits of but one sensible answer. In the first place, the question of whether or not any of these contracts or all of these contracts were fraudulently initiated has nothing whatsoever to do with the question. If those contracts are fraudulent they are subject to cancelation because they are void ab initio, without any legislation, without any delegation of power to the President at all. But lest there be any question as to the right of canceling a fraudulent contract, this resolution, notwithstanding the President's discretion, over these ocean mail contracts, contains this proviso:

Provided, That the right of the United States to annul any fraudulent or illegal contract or to institute suit to recover sums paid thereon is in no manner affected by this joint resolution.

So you are not taking any right away from the Government of the United States to cancel a contract and recover whatever was received from the Government by reason of the fraud. The question is simply this: The President requested the right to deal, in his discretion, with these ocean mail contracts; to modify them, to cancel them, or to take any action with respect thereto which commended itself to him as conducive to the best interests of the United States.

The idea of the President, as stated in his message at the beginning of this session of Congress, was that some merchant marine bill extending Government aid on an equitable basis and eliminating opportunity for fraud or overreaching should be passed; that these ocean mail contracts, if they were valid, should be on equitable terms merged in the provisions of the proposed merchant marine bill. It is obvious that at this session no merchant marine bill can be passed. It is utterly idle to discuss the merits of the various merchant marine bills that have been under consideration.

The question now is, Shall the President continue to have in his control these contracts, to exercise his discretion with respect thereto, or shall this House deny to the President further right to deal with this question and force him against his will on the 31st of October either to cancel these contracts or to lose his right over the cancelation of them?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In this respect I, as a minority representative on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, am perfectly willing to trust the President with the further exercise of this discretion; and I have not heard from anyone opposing this resolution any valid reason why this discretion should now be withdrawn from the President and he be denied this right to keep the matter within his control.

If this resolution is not passed, he must either cancel the contracts before the 31st of October or lose his right to deal with them. If he cancels the contracts, in the absence of anything to substitute for them, every pound of mail emanating from the United States for an overseas destination anywhere in the world will be carried by foreign ships. The American flag will cease to fly on the high seas carrying American commerce to the ports of the world. Do not fool yourselves; this will be the result of such cancelation. The President knows it and he does not want to be forced to do it. If he cancels, our fleets are laid up, and it will initiate 45 of the most bitterly contested lawsuits in the courts of the United States. If, with this condition staring him in the face, he fails to exercise his option and cancels on or before the 31st of October, he will have taken from him his right to deal with and to control these contractors.

For what reason in the name of heaven do you want to deprive the President of the right to protect the interests of this country with respect to ocean mail contracts, which right you have heretofore given him? Why are you willing to deprive him of that right? I want to ask you why on earth at the eleventh hour of this session you show such utter lack of confidence in your Chief Executive?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield that I may answer the question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So as to help the foreign shipping companies get control of the seas. That would be the only reason for the cancelation of these contracts.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And it is inconceivable that anyone who wants to see the American flag on the high seas should be against this resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true that the Post Office Department, in an official report to the President of the United States, said that 44 of these contracts were fraudulent?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know; but if they said so, and anybody believes it, these contracts are cancelable without this resolution at all, because they are void ab initio.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If this resolution is passed, the President would, in effect, have the privilege of making new contracts which would not be fraudulent.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Surely. He can modify existing contracts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. So the House will get this clear, what we have got to do is to appreciate the fact that some contract has got to be made, and the President must be empowered to make contracts free of fraud. Is that what is sought?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Surely. This is the situation: The President now has within his control these contracts and the activities that are carried on under them.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But only to cancel; is not that so?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Unless this resolution is adopted, after the 31st of October he loses control of the situation. That is all there is involved in the resolution.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some little confusion here as to just what this resolution does and what will happen if it does pass or if it does not pass.

The situation is simply this: The President has the authority up until the 31st of October 1935 to cancel the mail contracts if he so desires. This resolution extends the time under which he may cancel these contracts to March 31, 1936.

But, let us analyze what is supposed to be the situation if this resolution does not pass. I would have the House remember that there is not going to be the chaotic condition that has been portrayed to the extent of destroying the American merchant marine and the removal of the American flag from the high seas. We have not witnessed any development of that institution under existing subsidy legislation. The President would have the authority to cancel these contracts if he wanted to up until October 31. That should be ample time. If he does not cancel them before October 31 of this year they can continue under existing law without this resolution. If they do continue under existing law, and he does not cancel them, they can be canceled by the Department of Justice or the proper authorities because of fraud in the negotiation of the contracts on the part of the authorities in the Post Office Department during the previous administration and the shipping companies.

That is the situation. The statement that the American merchant marine will be removed from the high seas if this resolution does not pass is idle talk. The President of the United States, in my judgment, should not have the buck passed to him by this House to the extent of urging him to cancel these contracts and assume the responsibility for the ballyhoo that was perpetrated upon the American people when these mail contracts were canceled in a justifiable manner. I want you to recall this fact in connection with the legislation and the cancelation of these contracts. In placing this responsibility on the shoulders of the President he is being compelled to assume it after he has expressed to the Congress his desire that we provide a method of terminating these contracts. In another legislative body a resolution was offered yesterday for the termination of them on March 31, 1936. If that had been adopted, it would have been acceptable, because in that length of time we should have had ample opportunity to draft the necessary legislation for the preservation of the merchant marine; but the shipping interests did not want that to pass. Oh, no. Then they would be forced to agree to some kind of bill—I hope a decent one—before that date. They wanted and have come in here with the same kind of a request they came in here with before. They want the President to assume the responsibility for the cancelation of these contracts. That is what they wanted to do. By so doing they place the responsibility upon his shoulders in place of on the Congress of the United States, as the President should prefer, if he wants to protect himself and his administration from the slime that shipowners with fraudulent contracts would drag him into.

If they do not get a measure that offers enough openings for graft they will come back in here again prior to March 31, 1936, and ask you to extend the time during which the President can cancel their contracts when it is the duty of the Congress to perform that act now that fraud has been discovered in their dealings with the Government. When this legislation was considered by the Congress during this session, it was represented to this body that the President desired the particular legislation offered, but we found after its enactment in the very next day or two that he did not desire some of the unfortunate features that were incorporated in the bill. We have no assurance now that he prefers the pending resolution to one that would set a specific date for cancelation sometime following the convening of the next session of Congress. Only a short time ago a measure incorporating the necessary safeguards for the American public was introduced to keep these people who had taken hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Treasury and who have brought back to our public not a sign of an adequate merchant marine in return for their raids on the taxpayers' money. The shipping interests did not like that bill. They wanted the Congress to enact a provision with plenty of loopholes so they could crawl into a few more millions, loopholes that we endeavored to plug when the Copeland-Bland bill was before the House and were defeated in it. This town was filled with their representatives, including Ira H. Campbell, who represents the American mercantile marine and the other associates of that group who have been instrumental in urging the passage of legislation that would permit them to take from the American public an additional consignment of tax money when they have already broken faith with the American public in addition to pillaging our merchant marine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true that one company started with $500 in capital and made profits totaling $4,640,204.42?

Mr. WEARIN. That is correct, and that is only one of the minor offenses that the Post Office Department brought out in its investigation and which another legislative body brought out in its investigation. That money had been taken out of the Treasury of the United States without the necessary American merchant marine being built. People are talking about the American flag being driven from the seas. We have scarcely more than the flag left at the end of a period of disgraceful performances under the 1928 act.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. If the merchant marine ship lobby that is back of this resolution prevails and this resolution is adopted, how much will it cost the American taxpayers?

Mr. WEARIN. It is apt to cost them another $188,000,000, if not more.

Mr. MORAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. Speaking about removing the American merchant marine from the sea, is it not being so practically and so effectively eliminated now that that was the reason for the Bland ship subsidy bill and that the only thing being removed was $300,000,000 from the Treasury for a proposition that does not provide for a merchant marine at all?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House that this resolution is not necessary to the preservation of the American merchant marine and it should be defeated. A resolution ought to be introduced in this House to provide a definite date not later than March 31, 1936, for the cancelation of these mail contracts that have been proved to be fraudulent by investigations under oath and by admissions of the men who have promoted the scandal in this country. They ought to be canceled on the basis of the fraud which has been disclosed in the investigations I have referred to.

If we pass this resolution today, which we should not do, it will, in effect, clothe this whole scandal that has been common talk throughout the land for months with the cloak of legality, and ask the President to assume the responsibility to cancel the contracts. For the reasons indicated, this resolution should be defeated in the United States Congress today and the country advised as a result of it that the Congress does not subscribe to the kind of practices that have been prevalent among shipping interests benefiting from subsidies under the 1928 act. Then we will come back at the next session of Congress knowing that we must pass some legislation of a constructive nature at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he did not want this bill defeated?

Mr. WEARIN. Oh, no; I made the statement that this resolution should fail. It should be defeated decisively.

Mr. McFARLANE. We should defeat this resolution. As I understand it, under the rules of the House this resolution is not subject to amendment. Therefore, it should be voted down.

Mr. WEARIN. Exactly. This resolution was brought up without being sent to the Committee on Merchant Marine. It is being brought up on the last day of the session of Congress under suspension of the rules, so that it will be impossible to offer amendments in order to take care of the various situations which I have described.

Mr. MORAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. Is it not true that an attempt was made to get a real ship subsidy bill through this Congress, the bill being presented to the Department of Commerce and presented also to the Post Office Department, and a plan worked out that resulted in a pretty fair bill, apparently, which was actually introduced into the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and 2 days later the bill was thrown in the wastebasket and a worse bill introduced.

Mr. WEARIN. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Has the President expressed himself one way or the other on this matter?

Mr. WEARIN. Not to anyone's knowledge, as far as this resolution is concerned. He has indicated that the Congress should provide a method for terminating existing ocean mail contracts and that does not mean an extension of time during which he will be compelled to cancel them in order to stop the racket as far as I am concerned. We have an opportunity here to hasten the procedure of throwing the ship subsidy racketeers—I use this term in a complimentary way—out of the Treasury in return for the manner in which they have raided it without delivering the merchant marine they pledged us in 1928.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, let us understand that the President now has the power to modify or cancel ocean mail contracts, and that he has had this power since the passage of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934. If you do not pass this resolution the present power expires on October 31. If you do not pass this resolution you are taking this power out of the President's hands after October 31, 1935.

If fraud existed or if the best interest of the country demanded that the President should cancel the contracts in the interest of the country, do you not believe the President would have canceled them? If you do not pass this resolution, are you not saying to the President of the United States, "We have no longer sufficient confidence in your judgment to leave this matter in your hands. We trust you no longer. The power given you must end on October 31, and you must make your election at that time."

The resolution which is before you extends the present power in the President, and then provides—

> That the right of the United States to annul any fraudulent or illegal contract or to institute suit to recover sums paid thereon is in no manner affected by this joint resolution.

The resolution comes up today because it was only passed in the Senate yesterday. Senator BLACK undertook to pass an amendment to this resolution whereby the termination of the contracts should be on March 31 next. This amendment was defeated. The vote on the passage of the resolution here was—yeas 45, noes 20.

Let me present to you the statements of a man who probably knows as much about these conditions as any man in the United States, Senator BLACK, of Alabama:

> Mr. TYDINGS. I suppose the reason why the President has not acted heretofore is that rather than throw the whole thing out of line he wanted some new legislation?
> Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.
> Mr. TYDINGS. So that, even though the things were irregular in some respects, it would have been a serious blow to our merchant marine to have canceled them overnight?
>
> Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.
>
> Mr. TYDINGS. Until he could find some other method of arranging the situation, the President did not want to act?
>
> Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Then Senator BLACK says about his resolution:

> I am not trying to throw this matter into a state of chaos.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the present speaker is quoting from the Senate proceedings.

Mr. BLAND. For heaven's sake, has the Senate gotten to the place where its Senators cannot be quoted, and Senator BLACK, the great apostle of these gentlemen, cannot have his views presented for your consideration?

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman is reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And is not referring to a Senator in any disparaging manner.

Mr. BLAND. Not in the slightest—I am commending him.

Mr. MORAN. If the Speaker will refer to the discussion of the Bland bill upon the floor of the House, he will find that the same point of order was made against me—that is how I recall it—and the point of order was sustained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reads from Jefferson's Manual, as follows:

> It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

Mr. BLAND. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed in order.

Mr. BLAND. The situation, Mr. Speaker, is that unless we continue these contracts, one of two things follows: Either the President will lose, after October 31, the right he has to modify or cancel, or he must modify or cancel these contracts and bring about chaos with nothing in place of the present situation.

I presume I may quote from the President's own message sent here in March, in which he asked that a subsidy bill be given him in order that he might be able to have something with which to trade, something to save the situation, something that would prevent the peril to the American merchant marine that you are bringing about now.

I submit that a vote against this resolution is a vote of no confidence in the President of the United States and his ability to work out these problems. I believe the matter should remain in his hands. He can cancel or modify now, he can cancel or modify in October, and if this is passed he can cancel or modify at any time up to March 30. As the gentleman from New Jersey has said, if fraud exists the contract is void ab initio, and no resolution of this kind is needed. Any lawyer in this House will confirm this statement.

I ask you to vote for this resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—91 ayes and 61 noes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

The doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms directed to notify absent Members, and the Clerk called the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 192, nays 126, not voting 112, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. McCORMACK] may have leave to extend his remarks and include therein a letter and an address by Franklin Hobbs.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, who is Franklin Hobbs?

Mr. CONNERY. He is a good Republican and has always been a good Republican.

Mr. RICH. On what subject?

Mr. CONNERY. An analysis of the situation today and a very short speech of one page or a little more, and a letter written to Mr. McCORMACK.

Mr. RICH. He ought to be a good Republican, but I will have to object.

THE PUBLIC-UTILITY BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That this Act may be cited as the 'Public Utility Act of 1935'.

"TITLE I—CONTROL OF PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

"NECESSITY FOR CONTROL OF HOLDING COMPANIES

"SECTION 1. (a) Public-utility holding companies and their subsidiary companies are affected with a national public interest in that, among other things, (1) their securities are widely marketed and distributed by means of the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce and are sold to a large number of investors in different States; (2) their service, sales, construction, and other contracts and arrangements are often made and performed by means of the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce; (3) their subsidiary public-utility companies often sell and transport gas and electric energy by the use of means and instrumentalities of interstate commerce; (4) their practices in respect of and control over subsidiary companies often materially affect the interstate commerce in which those companies engage; (5) their activities extending over many States are not susceptible of effective control by any State and make difficult, if not impossible, effective State regulation of public-utility companies.

"(b) Upon the basis of facts disclosed by the reports of the Federal Trade Commission made pursuant to S. Res. 83 (Seventieth Congress, first session,) the reports of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, made pursuant to H. Res. 59 (Seventy-second Congress, first session) and H. J. Res. 572 (Seventy-second Congress, second session) and otherwise disclosed and ascertained, it is hereby declared that the national public interest, the interest of investors in the securities of holding companies and their subsidiary companies and affiliates, and the interest of consumers of electric energy and natural and manufactured gas, are or may be adversely affected—

"(1) when such investors cannot obtain the information necessary to appraise the financial position or earning power of the issuers, because of the absence of uniform standard accounts; when such securities are issued without the approval or consent of the States having jurisdiction over subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued upon the basis of fictitious or unsound asset values having no fair relation to the sums invested in or the earning capacity of the properties and upon the basis of paper profits from intercompany transactions, or in anticipation of excessive revenues from subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued by a subsidiary public-utility company under circumstances which subject such company to the burden of supporting an overcapitalized structure and tend to prevent voluntary rate reductions;

"(2) when subsidiary public-utility companies are subjected to excessive charges for services, construction work, equipment, and materials, or enter into transactions in which evils result from an absence of arm's-length bargaining or from restraint of free and independent competition; when service, management, construction, and other contracts involve the allocation of charges among subsidiary public-utility companies in different States so as to present problems of regulation which cannot be dealt with effectively by the States;

"(3) when control of subsidiary public-utility companies affects the accounting practices and rate, dividend, and other policies of such companies so as to complicate and obstruct State regulation of such companies, or when control of such companies is exerted through disproportionately small investment;

"(4) when the growth and extension of holding companies bears no relation to economy of management and operation or the integration and coordination of related operating properties; or

"(5) when in any other respect there is lack of economy of management and operation of public-utility companies or lack of efficiency and adequacy of service rendered by such companies, or lack of effective public regulation, or lack of economies in the raising of capital.

"(c) When abuses of the character above enumerated become persistent and widespread the holding company becomes an agency which, unless regulated, is injurious to investors, consumers, and the general public; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this title, in accordance with which policy all the provisions of this title shall be interpreted, to meet the problems and eliminate the evils as enumerated in this section, connected with public-utility holding companies which are engaged in interstate commerce or in activities which directly affect or burden interstate commerce; and for the purpose of effectuating such policy to compel the simplification of public-utility holding-company systems and the elimination therefrom of properties detrimental to the proper functioning of such systems, and to provide as soon as practicable for the elimination of public-utility holding companies except as otherwise expressly provided in this title.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. (a) When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(1) 'Person' means an individual or company.

"(2) 'Company' means a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a business trust, or an organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not; or any receiver, trustee, or other liquidating agent of any of the foregoing in his capacity as such.

"(3) 'Electric utility company' means any company which owns or operates facilities used for the generation, transmission, or distribution of electric energy for sale, other than sale to tenants or employees of the company operating such facilities for their own use and not for resale. The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare a company operating any such facilities not to be an electric utility company if the Commission finds that (A) such company is primarily engaged in one or more businesses other than the business of an electric utility company, and by reason of the small amount of electric energy sold by such company it is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such company be considered an electric utility company for the purposes of this title, or (B) such company is one operating within a single State, and substantially all of its outstanding securities are owned directly or indirectly by another company to which such operating company sells or furnishes electric energy which it generates; such other company uses and does not resell such electric energy, is engaged primarily in manufacturing (other than the manufacturing of electric energy or gas) and is not controlled by any other company; and by reason of the small amount of electric energy sold or furnished by such operating company to other persons it is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that it be considered an electric utility company for the purposes of this title. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt such company (and the owner of the facilities operated by such company) from the application of this paragraph until the Commission has acted upon such application. As a condition to the entry of any such order, and as a part thereof, the Commission may require application to be made periodically for a renewal of such order, and may require the filing of such periodic or special reports regarding the business of the company as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to insure that such company continues to be entitled to such exemption during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke such order whenever it finds that the conditions specified in clause (A) or (B) are not satisfied in the case of such company. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Application under this paragraph may be made by the company in respect of which the order is to be issued or by the owner of the facilities operated by such company. Any order issued under this paragraph shall apply equally to such company and such owner. The Commission may by rules or regulations conditionally or unconditionally provide that any specified class or classes of companies which it determines to satisfy the conditions specified in clause (A) or (B), and the owners of the facilities operated by such companies, shall not be deemed electric utility companies within the meaning of this paragraph.

"(4) 'Gas utility company' means any company which owns or operates facilities used for the distribution at retail (other than distribution only in enclosed portable containers, or distribution to tenants or employees of the company operating such facilities for their own use and not for resale) of natural or manufactured gas for heat, light, or power. The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare a company operating any such facilities not to be a gas utility company if the Commission finds that (A) such company is primarily engaged in one or more businesses other than the business of a gas utility company, and (B) by reason of the small amount of natural or manufactured gas distributed at retail by such company it is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such company be considered a gas utility company for the purposes of this title. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt such company (and the owner of the facilities operated by such company) from the application of this paragraph until the Commission has acted upon such application. As a condition to the entry of any such order, and as a part thereof, the Commission may require application to be made periodically for a renewal of such order, and may require the filing of such periodic or special reports regarding the business of the company as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to insure that such company continues to be entitled to such exemption during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke such order whenever it finds that the conditions specified in clauses (A) and (B) are not satisfied in the case of such company. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Application under this paragraph may be made by the company in respect of which the order is to be issued or by the owner of the facilities operated by such company. Any order issued under this paragraph shall apply equally to such company and such owner. The Commission may by rules or regulations conditionally or unconditionally provide that any specified class or classes of companies which it determines to satisfy the conditions specified in clauses (A) and (B), and the owners of the facilities operated by such companies, shall not be deemed gas utility companies within the meaning of this paragraph.

"(5) 'Public-utility company' means an electric utility company or a gas utility company.

"(6) 'Commission' means the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"(7) 'Holding company' means—

"(A) any company which directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 10 per centum or more of the outstanding voting securities of a public-utility company or of a company which is a holding company by virtue of this clause or clause (B), unless the Commission, as hereinafter provided, by order declares such company not to be a holding company; and

"(B) any person which the Commission determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, directly or indirectly to exercise (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) such a controlling influence over the management or policies of any public-utility or holding company as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon holding companies.

The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare that a company is not a holding company under clause (A) if the Commission finds that the applicant (i) does not, either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons, directly or indirectly control a public-utility or holding company either through one or more intermediary persons or by any means or device whatsoever, (ii) is not an intermediary company through which such control is exercised, and (iii) does not, directly or indirectly, exercise (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) such a controlling influence over the management or policies of any public-utility or holding company as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that the applicant be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon holding companies. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith by a company other than a registered holding company shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a holding company, until the Commission has acted upon such application. Within a reasonable time after the receipt of any application hereunder, the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of, such application. As a condition to the entry of any order granting such application and as a part of any such order, the Commission may require the applicant to apply periodically for a renewal of such order and to do or refrain from doing such acts or things, in respect of exercise of voting rights, control over proxies, designation of officers and directors, existence of interlocking officers, directors and other relationships, and submission of periodic or special reports regarding affiliations or intercorporate relationships of the applicant, as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to ensure that in the case of the applicant the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application of the company affected, shall revoke the order declaring such company not to be a holding company whenever in its judgment any condition specified in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) is not satisfied in the case of such company, or modify the terms of such order whenever in its judgment such modification is necessary to ensure that in the case of such company the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order.

"(8) 'Subsidiary company' of a specified holding company means—

"(A) any company 10 per centum or more of the outstanding voting securities of which are directly or indirectly owned, controlled, or held with power to vote, by such holding company (or by a company that is a subsidiary company of such holding company by virtue of this clause or clause (B)), unless the Commission, as hereinafter provided, by order declares such company not to be a subsidiary company of such holding company; and

"(B) any person the management or policies of which the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, determines to be subject to a controlling influence, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) so as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon subsidiary companies of holding companies.

The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare that a company is not a subsidiary company of a specified holding company under clause (A) if the Commission finds that (i) the applicant is not controlled, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) either through one or more intermediary persons or by any means or device whatsoever, (ii) the applicant is not an intermediary company through which such control of another company is exercised, and (iii) the management or policies of the applicant are not subject to a controlling influence, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) so as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that the applicant be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon subsidiary companies of holding companies. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a subsidiary company of such specified holding company until the Commission has acted upon such application. Within a reasonable time after the receipt of any application hereunder, the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of such application. As a condition to the entry of, and as a part of, any order granting such application, the Commission may require the applicant to apply periodically for a renewal of such order and to file such periodic or special reports regarding the affiliations or intercorporate relationships of the applicant as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to enable it to determine whether in the case of the applicant the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke the order declaring such company not to be a subsidiary company whenever in its judgment any condition specified in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) is not satisfied in the case of such company, or modify the terms of such order whenever in its judgment such modification is necessary to ensure that in the case of such company the condition specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Any application under this paragraph may be made by the holding company or the company in respect of which the order is to be entered, but as used in this paragraph the term "applicant" means only the company in respect of which the order is to be entered.

"(9) 'Holding-company system' means any holding company, together with all its subsidiary companies, and all mutual service companies (as defined in paragraph (13) of this subsection) of which such holding company or any subsidiary company thereof is a member company (as defined in paragraph (14) of this subsection).

"(10) 'Associate company' of a company means any company in the same holding-company system with such company.

"(11) 'Affiliate' of a specified company means—

"(A) any person that directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 5 per centum or more of the outstanding voting securities of such specified company;

"(B) any company 5 per centum or more of whose outstanding voting securities are owned, controlled, or held with power to vote, directly or indirectly, by such specified company;

"(C) any individual who is an officer or director of such specified company, or of any company which is an affiliate thereof under clause (A) of this paragraph; and

"(D) any person or class of persons that the Commission determines, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, to stand in such relation to such specified company that there is liable to be such an absence of arm's-length bargaining in transactions between them as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon affiliates of a company.

"(12) 'Registered holding company' means a person whose registration is in effect under section 5.

"(13) 'Mutual service company' means a company approved as a mutual service company under section 13.

"(14) 'Member company' means a company which is a member of an association or group of companies mutually served by a mutual service company.

"(15) 'Director' means any director of a corporation or any individual who performs similar functions in respect of any company.

"(16) 'Security' means any note, draft, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement or in any oil, gas, other mineral royalty or lease, any collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, receiver's or trustee's certificate, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a 'security'; or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guaranty of, assumption of liability on, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.

"(17) 'Voting security' means any security presently entitling the owner or holder thereof to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a company, or any security issued under or pursuant to any trust, agreement, or arrangement whereby a trustee or trustees or agent or agents for the owner or holder of such security are presently entitled to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a company; and a specified per centum of the outstanding voting securities of a company means such amount of the outstanding voting securities of such company as entitles the holder or holders thereof to cast said specified per centum of the aggregate votes which the holders of all the outstanding voting securities of such company are entitled to cast in the direction or management of the affairs of such company.

"(18) 'Utility assets' means the facilities, in place, of any electric utility company or gas utility company for the production, transmission, transportation, or distribution of electric energy or natural or manufactured gas.

"(19) 'Service contract' means any contract, agreement, or understanding whereby a person undertakes to sell or furnish, for a charge, any managerial, financial, legal, engineering, purchasing, marketing, auditing, statistical, advertising, publicity, tax, research, or any other service, information, or data.

"(20) 'Sales contract' means any contract, agreement, or understanding whereby a person undertakes to sell, lease, or furnish, for a charge, any goods, equipment, materials, supplies, appliances, or similar property. As used in this paragraph the term 'property' does not include electric energy or natural or manufactured gas.

"(21) 'Construction contract' means any contract, agreement, or understanding for the construction, extension, improvement, maintenance, or repair of the facilities or any part thereof of a company for a charge.

"(22) 'Buy', 'acquire', 'acquisition', or 'purchase' includes any purchase, acquisition by lease, exchange, merger, consolidation, or other acquisition.

"(23) 'Sale' or 'sell' includes any sale, disposition by lease, exchange or pledge, or other disposition.

"(24) 'State' means any State of the United States or the District of Columbia.

"(25) 'United States', when used in a geographical sense, means the States.

"(26) 'State commission' means any commission, board, agency, or officer, by whatever name designated, of a State, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State which under the law of such State has jurisdiction to regulate public-utility companies.

"(27) 'State securities commission' means any commission, board, agency, or officer, by whatever name designated, other than a State commission as defined in paragraph (26) of this subsection, which under the law of a State has jurisdiction to regulate, approve, or control the issue or sale of a security by a company.

"(28) 'Interstate commerce' means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or between any State and any place outside thereof.

"(29) 'Integrated public-utility system' means—

"(A) As applied to electric utility companies, a system consisting of one or more units of generating plants and/or transmission lines and/or distributing facilities, whose utility assets, whether owned by one or more electric utility companies, are physically interconnected or capable of physical interconnection and which under normal conditions may be economically operated as a single interconnected and coordinated system confined in its operations to a single area or region, in one or more States, not so large as to impair (considering the state of the art and the area or region affected) the advantages of localized management, efficient operation, and the effectiveness of regulation; and

"(B) As applied to gas utility companies, a system consisting of one or more gas utility companies which are so located and related that substantial economies may be effectuated by being operated as a single coordinated system confined in its operations to a single area or region, in one or more States, not so large as to impair (considering the state of the art and the area or region affected) the advantages of localized management, efficient operation, and the effectiveness of regulation: Provided, That gas utility companies deriving natural gas from a common source of supply may be deemed to be included in a single area or region.

"(b) No person shall be deemed to be a holding company under clause (B) of paragraph (7) of subsection (a), or a subsidiary company under clause (B) of paragraph (8) of such subsection, or an affiliate under clause (D) of paragraph (11) of such subsection, unless the Commission, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, has issued an order declaring such person to be a holding company, a subsidiary company, or an affiliate, or declaring a class of which such person is a member to be affiliates. Such an order shall not become effective for at least thirty days after the mailing of a copy thereof to the person thereby declared to be a holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate; or, in the case of determination of affiliates by classes, until at least thirty days after appropriate publication thereof in such manner as the Commission shall determine. Whenever the Commission, on its own motion or upon application by the person declared to be a holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, finds that the circumstances which gave rise to the issuance of any such order no longer exist, the Commission shall by order revoke such order.

"(c) No provision in this title shall apply to, or be deemed to include, the United States, a State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any corporation which is wholly owned directly or indirectly by any one or more of the foregoing, or any officer, agent, or employee of any of the foregoing acting as such in the course of his official duty, unless such provision makes specific reference thereto.

"POWER TO MAKE PARTICULAR EXEMPTIONS REGARDING HOLDING COMPANIES, SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATES

"SEC. 3. (a) The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, shall exempt any holding company, and every subsidiary company thereof as such, from any provision or provisions of this title, unless and except insofar as it finds the exemption detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers, if—

"(1) such holding company, and every subsidiary company thereof which is a public-utility company from which such holding company derives, directly or indirectly, any material part of its income, are predominantly intrastate in character and carry on their business substantially in a single State in which such holding company and every such subsidiary company thereof are organized;

"(2) such holding company is predominantly a public-utility company whose operations as such do not extend beyond the State in which it is organized and States contiguous thereto;

"(3) such holding company is only incidentally a holding company, being primarily engaged or interested in one or more businesses other than the business of a public-utility company and (A) not deriving, directly or indirectly, any material part of its income from any one or more subsidiary companies, the principal business of which is that of a public-utility company, or (B) deriving a material part of its income from any one or more such subsidiary companies, if substantially all the outstanding securities of such companies are owned, directly or indirectly, by such holding company;

"(4) such holding company is temporarily a holding company solely by reason of the acquisition of securities for purposes of liquidation or distribution in connection with a bona fide debt previously contracted or in connection with a bona fide arrangement for the underwriting or distribution of securities; or

"(5) such holding company is not, and derives no material part of its income, directly or indirectly, from any one or more subsidiary companies which are, a company or companies the principal business of which within the United States is that of a public-utility company.

"(b) The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, shall exempt any subsidiary company, as such, of a holding company from any provision or provisions of this title, the application of which to such subsidiary company the Commission finds is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, if such subsidiary company derives no material part of its income, directly or indirectly, from sources within the United States, and neither it nor any of its subsidiary companies is a public-utility company operating in the United States.

"(c) Within a reasonable time after the receipt of an application for exemption under subsection (a) or (b), the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of such application. The filing of an application in good faith under subsection (a) by a person other than a registered holding company shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a holding company until the Commission has acted upon such application. The filing of an application in good faith under subsection (b) shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a subsidiary company until the Commission has acted upon such application. Whenever the Commission, on its own motion, or upon application by the holding company or any subsidiary company thereof exempted by any order issued under subsection (a), or by the subsidiary company exempted by any order issued under subsection (b), finds that the circumstances which gave rise to the issuance of such order no longer exist, the Commission shall by order revoke such order.

"(d) The Commission may, by rules and regulations, conditionally or unconditionally exempt any specified class or classes of persons from the obligations, duties, or liabilities imposed upon such persons as subsidiary companies or affiliates under any provision or provisions of this title, and may provide within the extent of any such exemption that such specified class or classes of persons shall not be deemed subsidiary companies or affiliates within the meaning of any such provision or provisions, if and to the extent that it deems the exemption necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers and not contrary to the purposes of this title.

"TRANSACTIONS BY UNREGISTERED HOLDING COMPANIES

"SEC. 4. (a) After December 1, 1935, unless a holding company is registered under section 5, it shall be unlawful for such holding company, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to sell, transport, transmit, or distribute, or own or operate any utility assets for the transportation, transmission, or distribution of, natural or manufactured gas or electric energy in interstate commerce;

"(2) by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to negotiate, enter into, or take any step in the performance of, any service, sales, or construction contract undertaking to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any public-utility company or holding company;

"(3) to distribute or make any public offering for sale or exchange of any security of such holding company, any subsidiary company or affiliate of such holding company, any public-utility company, or any holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or to sell any such security having reason to believe that such security, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, will be distributed or made the subject of a public offering;

"(4) by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to acquire or negotiate for the acquisition of any security or utility assets of any subsidiary company or affiliate of such holding company, any public-utility company or any holding company;

"(5) to engage in any business in interstate commerce; or

"(6) to own, control, or hold with power to vote, any security of any subsidiary company thereof that does any of the acts enumerated in paragraphs (1) to (5), inclusive, of this subsection.

"(b) Every holding company which has outstanding any security any of which, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, has been distributed or made the subject of a public offering subsequent to January 1, 1925, and any of which security is owned or held on October 1, 1935 (or, if such company is not a holding company on that date, on the date such company becomes a holding company) by persons not resident in the State in which such holding company is organized, shall register under section 5 on or before December 1, 1935, or the thirtieth day after such company becomes a holding company, whichever date is later.

"REGISTRATION OF HOLDING COMPANIES

"SEC. 5. (a) On or at any time after October 1, 1935, any holding company or any person purposing to become a holding company may register by filing with the Commission a notification of registration, in such form as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. A person shall be deemed to be registered upon receipt by the Commission of such notification of registration.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every registered holding company to file with the Commission, within such reasonable time after registration as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, a registration statement in such form as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such registration statement shall include—

"(1) such copies of the charter or articles of incorporation, partnership, or agreement, with all amendments thereto, and the by-laws, trust indentures, mortgages, underwriting arrangements, voting-trust agreements, and similar documents, by whatever name known, of or relating to the registrant or any of its associate companies as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers;

"(2) such information in such form and in such detail relating to, and copies of such documents of or relating to, the registrant and its associate companies as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers in respect of—

"(A) the organization and financial structure of such companies and the nature of their business;

"(B) the terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of their securities outstanding;

"(C) the terms and underwriting arrangements under which their securities, during not more than the five preceding years, have been offered to the public or otherwise disposed of and the relations of underwriters to, and their interest in, such companies;

"(D) the directors and officers of such companies, their remuneration, their interest in the securities of, their material contracts with, and their borrowings from, any of such companies;

"(E) bonus and profit-sharing arrangements;

"(F) material contracts, not made in the ordinary course of business, and service, sales, and construction contracts;

"(G) options in respect of securities;

"(H) balance sheets for not more than the five preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission, by an independent public accountant;

"(I) profit and loss statements for not more than the five preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission, by an independent public accountant;

"(3) such further information or documents regarding the registrant or its associate companies or the relations between them as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(c) The Commission by such rules and regulations or order as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, may permit a registrant to file a preliminary registration statement without complying with the provisions of subsection (b); but every registrant shall file a complete registration statement with the Commission within such reasonable period of time as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, but not later than one year after the date of registration.

"(d) Whenever the Commission, upon application, finds that a registered holding company has ceased to be a holding company, it shall so declare by order and upon the taking effect of such order the registration of such company shall, upon such terms and conditions as the Commission finds and in such order prescribes as necessary for the protection of investors, cease to be in effect. The denial of any such application by the Commission shall be by order.

"UNLAWFUL SECURITY TRANSACTIONS BY REGISTERED HOLDING AND SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES

"SEC. 6. (a) Except in accordance with a declaration effective under section 7 and with the order under such section permitting such declaration to become effective, it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly (1) to issue or sell any security of such company; or (2) to exercise any privilege or right to alter the priorities, preferences, voting power, or other rights of the holders of an outstanding security of such company.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue, renewal, or guaranty by a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof of a note or draft (including the pledge of any security as collateral therefor) if such note or draft (1) is not part of a public offering, (2) matures or is renewed for not more than nine months, exclusive of days of grace, after the date of such issue, renewal, or guaranty thereof, and (3) aggregates (together with all other then outstanding notes and drafts of a maturity of nine months or less, exclusive of days of grace, as to which such company is primarily or secondarily liable) not more than 5 per centum of the principal amount and par value of the other securities of such company then outstanding, or such greater per centum thereof as the Commission upon application may by order authorize as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. In the case of securities having no principal amount or no par value, the value for the purposes of this subsection shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. The Commission by rules and regulations or order, subject to such terms and conditions as it deems appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, shall exempt from the provisions of subsection (a) the issue or sale of any security by any subsidiary company of a registered holding company, if the issue and sale of such security are solely for the purpose of financing the business of such subsidiary company and have been expressly authorized by the State commission of the State in which such subsidiary company is organized and doing business, or if the issue and sale of such security are solely for the purpose of financing the business of such subsidiary company when such subsidiary company is not a holding company, a public-utility company, an investment company, or a fiscal or financing agency of a holding company, a public utility company, or an investment company. The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue, by a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, of a security issued pursuant to the terms of any security outstanding on January 1, 1935, giving the holder of such outstanding security the right to convert such outstanding security into another security of the same issuer or of another person, or giving the right to subscribe to another security of the same issuer or another issuer. Within ten days after any issue, sale, renewal, or guaranty exempted from the application of subsection (a) by or under authority of this subsection, such holding company or subsidiary company thereof shall file with the Commission a certificate of notification in such form and setting forth such of the information required in a declaration under section 7 as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(c) It shall be unlawful, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, directly or indirectly,—

"(1) to sell or offer for sale or to cause to be sold or offered for sale, from house to house, any security of such holding company; or

"(2) to cause any officer or employee of any subsidiary company of such holding company to sell or cause to be sold any security of such holding company.

As used in this subsection the term 'house' shall not include an office used for business purposes.

"DECLARATIONS BY REGISTERED HOLDING AND SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES IN RESPECT OF SECURITY TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 7. (a) A registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof may file a declaration with the Commission, regarding any of the acts enumerated in subsection (a) of section 6, in such form as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such declaration shall include—

"(1) such of the information and documents which are required to be filed in order to register a security under section 7 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; and

"(2) such additional information, in such form and detail, and such documents regarding the declarant or any associate company thereof, the particular security and compliance with such State laws as may apply to the act in question as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(b) A declaration filed under this section shall become effective within such reasonable period of time after the filing thereof as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, unless the Commisison prior to the expiration of such period shall have issued an order to the declarant to show cause why such declaration should become effective. Within a reasonable time after an opportunity for hearing upon an order to show cause under this subsection, unless the declarant shall withdraw its declaration, the Commission shall enter an order either permitting such declaration to become effective as filed or amended, or refusing to permit such declaration to become effective. Amendments to a declaration may be made upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe.

"(c) The Commission shall not permit a declaration regarding the issue or sale of a security to become effective unless it finds that—

"(1) such security is (A) a common stock having a par value and being without preference as to dividends or distribution over, and having at least equal voting rights with, any outstanding security of the declarant; (B) a bond (i) secured by a first lien on physical property of the declarant, or (ii) secured by an obligation of a subsidiary company of the declarant secured by a first lien on physical property or such subsidiary company, or (iii) secured by any other assets of the type and character which the Commission by rules and regulations or order may prescribe as appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors; (C) a guaranty of, or assumption of liability on, a security of another company; or (D) a receiver's or trustee's certificate duly authorized by the appropriate court or courts; or

"(2) such security is to be issued or sold solely (A) for the purpose of refunding, extending, exchanging, or discharging an outstanding security of the declarant and/or a predecessor company thereof or for the purpose of effecting a merger, consolidation, or other reorganization; (B) for the purpose of financing the business of the declarant as a public-utility company; (C) for the purpose of financing the business of the declarant, when the declarant is neither a holding company nor a public-utility company; and/or (D) for necessary and urgent corporate purposes of the declarant where the requirements of the provisions of paragraph (1) would impose an unreasonable financial burden upon the declarant and are not necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; or

"(3) such security is one the issuance of which was authorized by the company prior to January 1, 1935, and which the Commission by rules and regulations or order authorizes as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(d) If the requirements of subsections (c) and (g) are satisfied, the Commission shall permit a declaration regarding the issue or sale of a security to become effective unless the Commission finds that—

"(1) the security is not reasonably adapted to the security structure of the declarant and other companies in the same holding-company system;

"(2) the security is not reasonably adapted to the earning power of the declarant;

"(3) financing by the issue and sale of the particular security is not necessary or appropriate to the economical and efficient operation of a business in which the applicant lawfully is engaged or has an interest;

"(4) the fees, commissions, or other remuneration, to whomsoever paid, directly or indirectly, in connection with the issue, sale, or distribution of the security are not reasonable;

"(5) in the case of a security that is a guaranty of, or assumption of liability on, a security of another company, the circumstances are such as to constitute the making of such guaranty or the assumption of such liability an improper risk for the declarant; or

"(6) the terms and conditions of the issue or sale of the security are detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

"(e) If the requirements of subsection (g) are satisfied, the Commission shall permit a declaration to become effective regarding the exercise of a privilege or right to alter the priorities, preferences, voting power, or other rights of the holders of an outstanding security unless the Commission finds that such exercise of such privilege or right will result in an unfair or inequitable distribution of voting power among holders of the securities of the declarant or is otherwise detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

"(f) Any order permitting a declaration to become effective may contain such terms and conditions as the Commission finds necessary to assure compliance with the conditions specified in this section.

"(g) If a State commission or State securities commission, having jurisdiction over any of the acts enumerated in subsection (a) of section 6, shall inform the Commission, upon request by the Commission for an opinion or otherwise, that State laws applicable to the act in question have not been complied with, the Commission shall not permit a declaration regarding the act in question to become effective until and unless the Commission is satisfied that such compliance has been effected.

"ACQUIRING INTEREST IN ELECTRIC AND GAS UTILITY COMPANIES SERVING SAME TERRITORY

"SEC. 8. Whenever a State law prohibits, or requires approval or authorization of, the ownership or operation by a single company of the utility assets of an electric utility company and a gas utility company serving substantially the same territory, it shall be unlawful for a registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise,—

"(1) to take any step, without the express approval of the State commission of such State, which results in its having a direct or indirect interest in an electric utility company and a gas utility company serving substantially the same territory; or

"(2) if it already has any such interest, to acquire, without the express approval of the State commission, any direct or indirect interest in an electric utility company or gas utility company serving substantially the same territory as that served by such companies in which it already has an interest.

"ACQUISITION OF SECURITIES AND UTILITY ASSETS AND OTHER INTERESTS

"SEC. 9. (a) Unless the acquisition has been approved by the Commission under section 10, it shall be unlawful—

"(1) for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to acquire, directly or indirectly, any securities or utility assets or any other interest in any business;

"(2) for any person, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to acquire, directly or indirectly, any security of any public-utility company, if such person is an affiliate, under clause (A) of paragraph (11) of subsection (a) of section 2, of such company and of any other public utility or holding company, or will by virtue of such acquisition become such an affiliate.

"(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to—

"(1) the acquisition by a public-utility company of utility assets the acquisition of which has been expressly authorized by a State commission; or

"(2) the acquisition by a public-utility company of securities of a subsidiary public-utility company thereof, provided that both such public-utility companies and all other public-utility companies in the same holding-company system are organized in the same State, that the business of each such company in such system is substantially confined to such State, and that the acquisition of such securities has been expressly authorized by the State commission of such State.

"(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the acquisition by a registered holding company, or a subsidiary company thereof, of—

"(1) securities of, or securities the principal or interest of which is guaranteed by, the United States, a State, or political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any corporation which is wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by any one or more of the foregoing;

"(2) such other readily marketable securities, within the limitation of such amounts, as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as appropriate for investment of current funds and as not detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers; or

"(3) such commercial paper and other securities, within such limitations, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as appropriate in the ordinary course of business of a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof and as not detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

"APPROVAL OF ACQUISITION OF SECURITIES AND UTILITY ASSETS AND OTHER INTERESTS

"SEC. 10. (a) A person may apply for approval of the acquisition of securities or utility assets, or of any other interest in any business, by filing an application in such form as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and consumers. Such application shall include—

"(1) in the case of the acquisition of securities, such information and copies of such documents as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers in respect of—

"(A) the security to be acquired, the consideration to be paid therefor, and compliance with such State laws as may apply in respect of the issue, sale, or acquisition thereof,

"(B) the outstanding securities of the company whose security is to be acquired, the terms, position, rights, and privileges of each class and the options in respect of any such securities,

"(C) the names of all security holders of record (or otherwise known to the applicant) owning, holding, or controlling 1 per centum or more of any class of security of such company, the officers and directors of such company, and their remuneration, security holdings in, material contracts with, and borrowings from such company and the offices or directorships held, and securities owned, held, or controlled, by them in other companies,

"(D) the bonus, profit-sharing and voting-trust agreements, underwriting arrangements, trust indentures, mortgages, and similar documents, by whatever name known, of or relating to such company,

"(E) the material contracts, not made in the ordinary course of business, and the service, sales, and construction contracts of such company,

"(F) the securities owned, held, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such company,

"(G) balance sheets and profit and loss statements of such company for not more than the five preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by an independent public accountant,

"(H) any further information regarding such company and any associate company or affiliate thereof, or its relations with the applicant company, and

"(I) if the applicant be not a registered holding company, any of the information and documents which may be required under section 5 from a registered holding company;

"(2) in the case of the acquisition of utility assets, such information concerning such assets, the value thereof and consideration to be paid therefor, the owner or owners thereof and their relation to, agreements with, and interest in the securities of, the applicant or any associate company thereof as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; and

"(3) in the case of the acquisition of any other interest in any business, such information concerning such business and the interest to be acquired, and the consideration to be paid, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(b) If the requirements of subsection (f) are satisfied, the Commission shall approve the acquisition unless the Commission finds that—

"(1) such acquisition will tend towards interlocking relations or the concentration of control of public-utility companies, of a kind or to an extent detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers;

"(2) in case of the acquisition of securities or utility assets, the consideration, including all fees, commissions, and other remuneration, to whomsoever paid, to be given, directly or indirectly, in connection with such acquisition is not reasonable or does not bear a fair relation to the sums invested in or the earning capacity of the utility assets to be acquired or the utility assets underlying the securities to be acquired; or

"(3) such acquisition will unduly complicate the capital structure of the holding-company system of the applicant or will be detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers or the proper functioning of such holding-company system.

The Commission may condition its approval of the acquisition of securities of another company upon such a fair offer to purchase such of the other securities of the company whose security is to be acquired as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the Commission shall not approve—

"(1) an acquisition of securities or utility assets, or of any other interest, which is unlawful under the provisions of section 8 or is detrimental to the carrying out of the provisions of section 11; or

"(2) the acquisition of securities or utility assets of a public-utility or holding company unless the Commission finds that such acquisition will serve the public interest by tending towards the economical and efficient development of an integrated public-utility system. This paragraph shall not apply to the acquisition of securities or utility assets of a public-utility company operating exclusively outside the United States.

"(d) Within such reasonable time after the filing of an application under this section as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, the Commission shall enter an order either granting or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying approval of the acquisition unless the applicant shall withdraw its application. Amendments to an application may be made upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe.

"(e) The Commission, in any order approving the acquisition of securities or utility assets, may prescribe such terms and conditions in respect of such acquisition, including the price to be paid for such securities or utility assets, as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(f) The Commission shall not approve any acquisition as to which an application is made under this section unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Commission that such State laws as may apply in respect of such acquisition have been complied with, except where the Commission finds that compliance with such State laws would be detrimental to the carrying out of the provisions of section 11.

"SIMPLIFICATION OF HOLDING-COMPANY SYSTEMS

"SEC. 11. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to examine the corporate structure of every registered holding company and subsidiary company thereof, the relationships among the companies in the holding-company system of every such company and the character of the interests thereof and the properties owned or controlled thereby to determine the extent to which the corporate structure of such holding-company system and the companies therein may be simplified, unnecessary complexities therein eliminated, voting power fairly and equitably distributed among the holders of securities thereof, and the properties and business thereof confined to those necessary or appropriate to the operations of an integrated public-utility system.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the Commission, as soon as practicable after January 1, 1938:

"(1) To require by order, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that each registered holding company, and each subsidiary company thereof, shall take such action as the Commission shall find necessary to limit the operations of the holding-company system of which such company is a part to a single integrated public-utility system, and to such other businesses as are reasonably incidental, or economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of such integrated public-utility system: Provided, however, That the Commission shall permit a registered holding company to continue to control one or more additional integrated public-utility systems, if, after notice and opportunity for hearing, it finds that—

"(A) Each of such additional systems cannot be operated as an independent system without the loss of substantial economies which can be secured by the retention of control by such holding company of such system;

"(B) All of such additional systems are located in one State, or in adjoining States, or in a contiguous foreign country; and

"(C) The continued combination of such systems under the control of such holding company is not so large (considering the state of the art and the area or region affected) as to impair the advantages of localized management, efficient operation, or the effectiveness of regulation.

The Commission may permit as reasonably incidental, or economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of one or more integrated public-utility systems the retention of an interest in any business (other than the business of a public-utility company as such) which the Commission shall find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers and not detrimental to the proper functioning of such system or systems.

"(2) To require by order, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that each registered holding company, and each subsidiary company thereof, shall take such steps as the Commission shall find necessary to ensure that the corporate structure or continued existence of any company in the holding-company system does not unduly or unnecessarily complicate the structure, or unfairly or inequitably distribute voting power among security holders, of such holding-company system. In carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the Commission shall require each registered holding company (and any company in the same holding-company system with such holding company) to take such action as the Commission shall find necessary in order that such holding company shall cease to be a holding company with respect to each of its subsidiary companies which itself has a subsiduary company which is a holding company. Except for the purpose of fairly and equitably distributing voting power among the security holders of such company, nothing in this paragraph shall authorize the Commission to require any change in the corporate structure or existence of any company which is not a holding company, or of any company whose principal business is that of a public-utility company.

The Commission may by order revoke or modify any order previously made under this subsection, if, after notice and opportunity for hearing, it finds that the conditions upon which the order was predicated do not exist. Any order made under this subsection shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 24.

"(c) Any order under subsection (b) shall be complied with within one year from the date of such order; but the Commission shall, upon a showing (made before or after the entry of such order) that the applicant has been or will be unable in the exercise of due diligence to comply with such order within such time, extend such time for an additional period not exceeding one year if it finds such extension necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(d) The Commission may apply to a court, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (f) of section 18, to enforce compliance with any order issued under subsection (b). In any such proceeding, the court as a court of equity may, to such extent as it deems necessary for purposes of enforcement of such order, take exclusive jurisdiction and possession of the company or companies and the assets thereof, wherever located; and the court shall have jurisdiction, in any such proceeding, to appoint a trustee, and the court may constitute and appoint the Commission as sole trustee, to hold or administer under the direction of the court the assets so possessed. In any proceeding for the enforcement of an order of the Commission issued under subsection (b), the trustee with the approval of the court shall have power to dispose of any or all of such assets and, subject to such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe, may make such disposition in accordance with a fair and equitable reorganization plan which shall have been approved by the Commission after opportunity for hearing. Such reorganization plan may be proposed in the first instance by the Commission, or, subject to such rules and regulations as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, by any person having a bona fide interest (as defined by the rules and regulations of the Commission) in the reorganization.

"(e) In accordance with such rules and regulations or order as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, any registered holding company or any subsidiary company of a registered holding company may, at any time after January 1, 1936, submit a plan to the Commission for the divestment of control, securities, or other assets, or for other action by such company or any subsidiary company thereof for the purpose of enabling such company or any subsidiary company thereof to comply with the provisions of subsection (b). If, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the Commission shall find such plan, as submitted or as modified, necessary to effectuate the provisions of subsection (b) and fair and equitable to the persons affected by such plan, the Commission shall make an order approving such plan; and the Commission, at the request of the company, may apply to a court, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (f) of section 18, to enforce and carry out the terms and provisions of such plan. If, upon any such application, the court, after notice and opportunity for hearing, shall approve such plan as fair and equitable and as appropriate to effectuate the provisions of section 11, the court as a court of equity may, to such extent as it deems necessary for the purpose of carrying out the terms and provisions of such plan, take exclusive jurisdiction and possession of the company or companies and the assets thereof, wherever located; and the court shall have jurisdiction to appoint a trustee, and the court may constitute and appoint the Commission as sole trustee, to hold or administer, under the direction of the court and in accordance with the plan theretofore approved by the court and the Commission, the assets so possessed.

"(f) In any proceeding in a court of the United States, whether under this section or otherwise, in which a receiver or trustee is appointed for any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, the court may constitute and appoint the Commission as sole trustee or receiver, subject to the directions and orders of the court, whether or not a trustee or receiver shall theretofore have been appointed, and in any such proceeding the court shall not appoint any person other than the Commission as trustee or receiver without notifying the Commission and giving it an opportunity to be heard before making any such appointment. In no proceeding under this section or otherwise shall the Commission be appointed as trustee or receiver without its express consent. In any such proceeding a reorganization plan for a registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof shall not become effective unless such plan shall have been approved by the Commission after opportunity for hearing prior to its submission to the court. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any such reorganization plan may be proposed in the first instance by the Commission or, subject to such rules and regulations as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, by any person having a bona fide interest (as defined by the rules and regulations of the Commission) in the reorganization. The Commission may, by such rules and regulations or order as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, require that any or all fees, expenses, and remuneration, to whomsoever paid, in connection with any reorganization, dissolution, liquidation, bankruptcy, or receivership of a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, in any such proceeding, shall be subject to approval by the Commission.

"(g) It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or permit the use of his or its name to solicit, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, any proxy, consent, authorization, power of attorney, deposit, or dissent in respect of any reorganization plan of a registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof under this section, or otherwise, or in respect of any plan under this section for the divestment of control, securities, or other assets, or for the dissolution of any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, unless—

"(1) the plan has been proposed by the Commission, or the plan and such information regarding it and its sponsors as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers has been submitted to the Commission by a person having a bona fide interest (as defined by the rules and regulations of the Commission) in such reorganization;

"(2) each such solicitation is accompanied or preceded by a copy of a report on the plan which shall be made by the Commission after an opportunity for a hearing on the plan and other plans submitted to it, or by an abstract of such report made or approved by the Commission; and

"(3) each such solicitation is made not in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

Nothing in this subsection or the rules and regulations thereunder shall prevent any person from appearing before the Commission or any court through an attorney or proxy.

"INTERCOMPANY LOANS; DIVIDENDS; SECURITY TRANSACTIONS; SALE OF UTILITY ASSETS; PROXIES; OTHER TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 12. (a) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to borrow, or to receive any extension of credit or indemnity, from any public-utility company in the same holding-company system or from any subsidiary company of such holding company, but it shall not be unlawful under this subsection to renew, or extend the time of, any loan, credit, or indemnity outstanding on the date of the enactment of this title.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to lend or in any manner extend its credit to or indemnify any company in the same holding-company system in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to declare or pay any dividend on any security of such company or to acquire, retire, or redeem any security of such company, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate to protect the financial integrity of companies in holding-company systems, to safeguard the working capital of public-utility companies, to prevent the payment of dividends out of capital or unearned surplus, or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to sell any security which it owns of any public-utility company, or any utility assets, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding the consideration to be received for such sale, maintenance of competitive conditions, fees and commissions, accounts, disclosure of interest, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(e) It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or to permit the use of his or its name to solicit, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, any proxy, power of attorney, consent, or authorization regarding any security of a registered holding company or a subsidiary company thereof in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(f) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to negotiate, enter into, or take any step in the performance of any transaction not otherwise unlawful under this title, with any company in the same holding-company system or with any affiliate of a company in such holding-company system in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, maintenance of competitive conditions, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(g) It shall be unlawful for any affiliate of any public-utility company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or for any affiliate of any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce, or of any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to negotiate, enter into, or take any step in the performance of any transaction not otherwise unlawful under this title, with any such company of which it is an affiliate, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, maintenance of competitive conditions, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title.

"(h) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make any contribution whatsoever in connection with the candidacy, nomination, election or appointment of any person for or to any office or position in the Government of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing; or

"(2) to make any contribution to or in support of any political party or any committee or agency thereof.

The term 'contribution' as used in this subsection includes any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and includes any contract, agreement, or promise, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

"(i) It shall be unlawful for any person employed or retained by any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, to present, advocate, or oppose any matter affecting any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, before the Congress or any Member or committee thereof, or before the Commission or Federal Power Commission, or any member, officer, or employee of either such commission, unless such person shall file with the Commission in such form and detail and at such time as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, a statement of the subject matter in respect of which such person is retained or employed, the nature and character of such retainer or employment, and the amount of compensation received or to be received by such person, directly or indirectly, in connection therewith. It shall be the duty of every such person so employed or retained to file with the Commission within ten days after the close of each calendar month during such retainer or employment, in such form and detail as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, a statement of the expenses incurred and the compensation received by such person during such month in connection with such retainer or employment.

"SERVICE, SALES, AND CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

"SEC. 13. (a) After April 1, 1936, it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract by which such company undertakes to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any associate company thereof which is a public-utility or mutual service company. This provision shall not apply to such transactions, involving special or unusual circumstances or not in the ordinary course of business, as the Commission by rules and regulations or order may conditionally or unconditionally exempt as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(b) After April 1, 1936, it shall be unlawful for any subsidiary company of any registered holding company or for any mutual service company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract by which such company undertakes to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any associate company thereof except in accordance with such terms and conditions and subject to such limitations and prohibitions as the Commission by rules and regulations or order shall prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers and to insure that such contracts are performed economically and efficiently for the benefit of such associate companies at cost, fairly and equitably allocated among such companies. This provision shall not apply to such transactions as the Commission by rules and regulations or order may conditionally or unconditionally exempt as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, if such transactions (1) are with any associate company which does not derive, directly or indirectly, any material part of its income from sources within the United States and which is not a public-utility company operating within the United States, or (2) involve special or unusual circumstances or are not in the ordinary course of business.

"(c) The rules and regulations and orders of the Commission under this section may prescribe, among other things, such terms and conditions regarding the determination of costs and the allocation thereof among specified classes of companies and for specified classes of service, sales, and construction contracts, the duration of such contracts, the making and keeping of accounts and cost-accounting procedures, the filing of annual and other periodic and special reports, the maintenance of competitive conditions, the disclosure of interests, and similar matters, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(d) The rules and regulations and orders of the Commission under this section shall prescribe, among other things, such terms and conditions regarding the manner in which application may be made for approval as a mutual service company and the granting and continuance of such approval, the nature and enforcement of agreements for the sharing of expenses and distributing of revenues among member companies, and matters relating to such agreements, the nature and types of businesses and transactions in which mutual service companies may engage, and the manner of engaging therein, and the relations and transactions with member companies and affiliates, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. The Commission shall not approve, or continue the approval of, any company as a mutual service company unless the Commission finds such company is so organized as to ownership, costs, revenues, and the sharing thereof as reasonably to insure the efficient and economical performance of service, sales, or construction contracts by such company for member companies, at cost fairly and equitably allocated among such member companies, at a reasonable saving to member companies over the cost to such companies of comparable contracts performed by independent persons. The Commission, upon its own motion or at the request of a member company or a State commission, may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, by order require a reallocation or reapportionment of costs among member companies of a mutual service company if it finds the existing allocation inequitable and may require the elimination of a service or services to a member company which does not bear its fair proportion of costs or which, by reason of its size or other circumstances, does not require such service or services. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, by order shall revoke, suspend, or modify the approval given any mutual service company if it finds that such company has persistently violated any provision of this section or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"(e) It shall be unlawful for any affiliate of any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce, or of any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract, by which such affiliate undertakes to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any such company of which it is an affiliate, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, maintenance of competitive conditions, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(f) It shall be unlawful for any person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract with any public-utility company, or for any such person, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract with any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce, or with any registered holding company or any subsidiary company of a registered holding company, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, maintenance of competitive conditions, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(g) The Commission, in order to obtain information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation, shall from time to time conduct investigations regarding the making, performance, and costs of service, sales, and construction contracts with holding companies and subsidiary companies thereof and with public-utility companies, the economies resulting therefrom, and the desirability thereof. The Commission shall report to Congress, from time to time, the results of such investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable. On the basis of such investigations the Commission shall classify the different types of such contracts and the work done thereunder, and shall make recommendations from time to time regarding the standards and scope of such contracts in relation to public-utility companies of different kinds and sizes and the costs incurred thereunder and economies resulting therefrom. Such recommendations shall be made available to State commissions, public-utility companies, and to the public in such form and at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

"PERIODIC AND OTHER REPORTS

"SEC. 14. Every registered holding company and every mutual service company shall file with the Commission such annual, quarterly, and other periodic and special reports, the answers to such specific questions and the minutes of such directors', stockholders', and other meetings, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such reports, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission, shall be certified by an independent public accountant, and shall be made and filed at such time and in such form and detail as the Commission shall prescribe. The Commission may require that there be included in reports filed with it such information and documents as it finds necessary or appropriate to keep reasonably current the information filed under section 5 or 13, and such further information concerning the financial condition, security structure, security holdings, assets, and cost thereof, wherever determinable, and affiliations of the reporting company and the associate companies, member companies, and affiliates thereof as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS

"SEC. 15. (a) Every registered holding company and every subsidiary company thereof shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(b) Every affiliate of a registered holding company or of any subsidiary company thereof, or of any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce or not so engaged, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records relating to any transaction of such affiliate which is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(c) Every mutual service company, and every affiliate of a mutual service company as to any transaction of such affiliate which is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

"(d) Every person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, relating to any transaction by such person which is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

"(e) After the Commission has prescribed the form and manner of making and keeping accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records to be kept by any person hereunder, it shall be unlawful for any such person to keep any accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, or other records other than those prescribed or such as may be approved by the Commission, or to keep his or its accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, or other records in any manner other than that prescribed or approved by the Commission.

"(f) All accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records kept or required to be kept by persons subject to any provision of this section shall be subject at any time and from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, and other examinations by the Commission, or any member or representative thereof, as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may prescribe the account or accounts in which particular outlays, receipts, and other transactions shall be entered, charged, or credited and the manner in which such entry, charge, or credit shall be made, and may require an entry to be modified or supplemented so as properly to show the cost of any asset or any other cost.

"(g) It shall be the duty of every registered holding company and of every subsidiary company thereof and of every affiliate of a company insofar as such affiliate is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, to submit the accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records of such holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, as the case may be, to such examinations, in person or by duly appointed attorney, by the holder of any security of such holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, as the case may be, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(h) It shall be the duty of every mutual service company, and of every affiliate of a mutual service company, and of every person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies, insofar as such affiliate or such person is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, to submit the accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records of such mutual service company, affiliate, or person to such examinations, in person or by duly appointed attorney, by member companies of such mutual service company and by public-utility or holding companies for which such person performs service, sales, or construction contracts as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(i) The Commission, by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers may prescribe for persons subject to the provisions of subsection (a), (b), (c), or (d) of this section uniform methods for keeping accounts required under any provision of this section, including, among other things, the manner in which the cost of all assets, whenever determinable, shall be shown, the methods of classifying and segregating accounts, and the manner in which cost-accounting procedures shall be maintained.

"LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

"SEC. 16. (a) Any person who shall make or cause to be made any statement in any application, report, registration statement, or document filed pursuant to any provision of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact shall be liable in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same limitations as provided in section 18 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 with respect to an application, report, or document filed pursuant to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

"(b) The rights and remedies provided by this title, except as provided in section 17 (b), shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or otherwise at law or in equity; but no person permitted to maintain a suit for damages under the provisions of this title shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of.

"OFFICERS, DIRECTORS, AND OTHER AFFILIATES

"SEC. 17. (a) Every person who is an officer or director of a registered holding company shall file with the Commission in such form as the Commission shall prescribe (1) at the time of the registration of such holding company, or within ten days after such person becomes an officer or director, a statement of the securities of such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof of which he is, directly or indirectly, the beneficial owner, and (2) within ten days after the close of each calendar month thereafter, if there has been any change in such ownership during such month, a statement of such ownership as of the close of such calendar month and of the changes in such ownership that have occurred during such calendar month.

"(b) For the purpose of preventing the unfair use of information which may have been obtained by any such officer or director by reason of his relationship to such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, any profit realized by any such officer or director from any purchase and sale, or any sale and purchase, of any security of such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof within any period of less than six months, unless such security was acquired in good faith in connection with a debt previously contracted, shall inure to and be recoverable by the holding company or subsidiary company in respect of the security of which such profit was realized, irrespective of any intention on the part of such officer or director in entering into such transaction to hold the security purchased or not to repurchase the security sold for a period of more than six months. Suit to recover such profit may be instituted at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the company entitled thereto or by the owner of any security of such company in the name and in the behalf of such company if such company shall fail or refuse to bring such suit within sixty days after request or shall fail diligently to prosecute the same thereafter; but no such suit shall be brought more than two years after the date such profit was realized. This subsection shall not cover any transaction where such person was not an officer or director at the times of the purchase and sale, or the sale and purchase, of the security involved, or any transaction or transactions which the Commission by rules and regulations may, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, exempt as not comprehended within the purpose of this subsection. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to give a remedy in the case of any transaction in respect of which a remedy is given under subsection (b) of section 16 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

"(c) After one year from the date of the enactment of this title, no registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof shall have, as an officer or director thereof, any executive officer, director, partner, appointee, or representative of any bank, trust company, investment banker, or banking association or firm, or any executive officer, director, partner, appointee, or representative of any corporation a majority of whose stock, having the unrestricted right to vote for the election of directors, is owned by any bank, trust company, investment banker, or banking association or firm, except in such cases as rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission may permit as not adversely affecting the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

"INVESTIGATIONS; INJUNCTIONS, ENFORCEMENT OF TITLE, AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

"SEC. 18. (a) The Commission, in its discretion, may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this title, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in obtaining information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this title relates. The Commission may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as it shall determine, as to any or all facts and circumstances concerning a matter which may be the subject of investigation. The Commission, in its discretion, may publish, or make available to State commissions, information concerning any such subject.

"(b) The Commission upon its own motion or at the request of a State commission may investigate, or obtain any information regarding the business, financial condition, or practices of any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof or facts, conditions, practices, or matters affecting the relations between any such company and any other company or companies in the same holding-company system.

"(c) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding under this title, any member of the Commission, or any officer thereof designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in any State or in any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at any designated place of hearing.

"(d) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who, without just cause, shall fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records, if in his or its power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.

"(e) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(f) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or decree or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who, in his discretion, may institute the appropriate criminal proceedings under this title.

"(g) Upon application of the Commission, the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission thereunder.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 19. Hearings may be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept. In any proceeding before the Commission, the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, shall admit as a party any interested State, State commission, State securities commission, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State, and may admit as a party any representative of interested consumers or security holders, or any other person whose participation in the proceedings may be in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

"SEC. 20. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, issue, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations and such orders as it may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations defining accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which information required in any statement, declaration, application, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in balance sheets, profit and loss statements, and surplus accounts, the manner in which the cost of all assets, whenever determinable, shall be shown in regard to such statements, declarations, applications, reports, and other documents filed with the Commission, or accounts required to be kept by the rules, regulations, or orders of the Commission, and the methods to be followed in the keeping of accounts and cost-accounting procedures and the preparation of reports, in the segregation and allocation of costs, in the determination of liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the keeping or preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or appropriate, of separate or consolidated balance sheets or profit and loss statements for any companies in the same holding-company system.

"(b) In the case of the accounts of any company whose methods of accounting are prescribed under the provisions of any law of the United States or of any State, the rules and regulations or orders of the Commission in respect of accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or any rule or regulation thereunder; nor shall anything in this title relieve any public-utility company from the duty to keep the accounts, books, records, or memoranda which may be required to be kept by the law of any State in which it operates or by the State commission of any such State. But this provision shall not prevent the Commission from imposing such additional requirements regarding reports or accounts as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

"(c) The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. For the purpose of its rules, regulations, or orders the Commission may classify persons and matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons or matters. Orders of the Commission under this title shall be issued only after opportunity for hearing.

"(d) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or order as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, may authorize the filing of any information or documents required to be filed with the Commission under this title, or under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, by incorporating by reference any information or documents theretofore or concurrently filed with the Commission under this title or either of such Acts. No provision of this title imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission, notwithstanding that such rule, regulation, or order may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"EFFECT ON EXISTING LAW

"SEC. 21. Nothing in this title shall affect (1) the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 over any person, security, or contract, or (2) the rights, obligations, duties, or liabilities of any person under such Acts; nor shall anything in this title affect the jurisdiction of any other commission, board, agency, or officer of the United States or of any State or political subdivision of any State, over any person, security, or contract, insofar as such jurisdiction does not conflict with any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"INFORMATION FILED WITH THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 22. (a) When in the judgment of the Commission the disclosure of such information would be in the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers, the information contained in any statement, application, declaration, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be available to the public, and copies thereof may be furnished to any person at such reasonable charge and under such reasonable limitations as the Commission may prescribe: Provided, however, That nothing in this title shall be construed to require, or to authorize the Commission to require, the revealing of trade secrets or processes in any application, declaration, report, or document filed with the Commission under this title.

"(b) Any person filing such application, declaration, report, or document may make written objection to the public disclosure of information contained therein, stating the grounds for such objection, and the Commission is authorized to hear objections in any such case where it finds it advisable.

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any member, officer, or employee of the Commission to disclose to any person other than a member, officer, or employee of the Commission, or to use for personal benefit, any information contained in any application, declaration, report, or document filed with the Commission which is not made available to the public pursuant to this section.

"ANNUAL REPORTS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 23. The Commission shall submit annually a report to the Congress covering the work of the Commission for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this title as it may find advisable.

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"SEC. 24. (a) Any person or party aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission under this title may obtain a review of such order in the circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within sixty days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission, or upon any officer thereof designated by the Commission for that purpose, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

"JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 25. The District Courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder, and, concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder. Any criminal proceeding may be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or rules, regulations, or orders thereunder, may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is an inhabitant or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347), and section 7, as amended, of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia", approved February 9, 1893 (D. C. Code, title 18, sec. 26). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against the Commission in any court.

"VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS

"SEC. 26. (a) Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this title or with any rule, regulation, or order thereunder shall be void.

"(b) Every contract made in violation of any provision of this title or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and every contract heretofore or hereafter made, the performance of which involves the violation of, or the continuance of any relationship or practice in violation of, any provision of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall be void (1) as regards the rights of any person who, in violation of any such provision, rule, regulation, or order, shall have made or engaged in the performance of any such contract, and (2) as regards the rights of any person who, not being a party to such contract, shall have acquired any right thereunder with actual knowledge of the facts by reason of which the making or performance of such contract was in violation of any such provision, rule, regulation, or order.

"(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) to affect the validity of any loan or extension of credit (or any extension or renewal thereof) made or of any lien created prior or subsequent to the enactment of this title, unless at the time of the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the creating of such lien, the person making such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or acquiring such lien shall have actual knowledge of facts by reason of which the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the acquisition of such lien is a violation of the provisions of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, or (2) to afford a defense to the collection of any debt or obligation or the enforcement of any lien by any person who shall have acquired such debt, obligation, or lien in good faith for value and without actual knowledge of the violation of any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder affecting the legality of such debt, obligation, or lien.

"LIABILITY OF CONTROLLING PERSONS; PREVENTING COMPLIANCE WITH TITLE

"SEC. 27. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to cause to be done any act or thing through or by means of any other person which it would be unlawful for such person to do under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person without just cause to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making, filing, or keeping of any information, document, report, record, or account required to be made, filed, or kept under any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

"SEC. 28. It shall be unlawful for any person in issuing, selling, or offering for sale any security of a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, to represent or imply in any manner whatsoever that such security has been guaranteed, sponsored, or recommended for investment by the United States or any agency or officer thereof.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 29. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder (other than an order of the Commission under subsection (b), (d), (e), or (f) of section 11), or any person who willfully makes any statement or entry in any application, report, document, account, or record filed or kept or required to be filed or kept under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, knowing such statement or entry to be false or misleading in any material respect, or any person who willfully destroys (except after such time as may be prescribed under any rules or regulations under this title), mutilates, alters, or by any means or device falsifies any account, correspondence, memorandum, book, paper, or other record kept or required to be kept under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both, except that in the case of a violation of a provision of subsection (a) or (b) of section 4 by a holding company which is not an individual, the fine imposed upon such holding company shall be a fine not exceeding $200,000; but no person shall be convicted under this section for the violation of any rule, regulation, or order if he proves that he had no knowledge of such rule, regulation, or order.

"STUDY OF PUBLIC-UTILITY AND INVESTMENT COMPANIES

"SEC. 30. The Commission is authorized and directed to make studies and investigations of public-utility companies, the territories served or which can be served by public-utility companies, and the manner in which the same are or can be served, to determine the sizes, types, and locations of public-utility companies which do or can operate most economically and efficiently in the public interest, in the interest of investors and consumers, and in furtherance of a wider and more economical use of gas and electric energy; upon the basis of such investigations and studies the Commission shall make public from time to time its recommendations as to the type and size of geographically and economically integrated public-utility systems which, having regard for the nature and character of the locality served, can best promote and harmonize the interests of the public, the investor, and the consumer. The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study of the functions and activities of investment trusts and investment companies, the corporate structures, and investment policies of such trusts and companies, the influence exerted by such trusts and companies upon companies in which they are interested, and the influence exerted by interests affiliated with the management of such trusts and companies upon their investment policies, and to report the results of its study and its recommendations to the Congress on or before January 4, 1937.

"EMPLOYEES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 31. For the purposes of this title, the Commission may select, employ, and fix the compensation of such attorneys, examiners, and other experts as shall be necessary for the transaction of the business of the Commission in respect of this title without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States; and the Commission may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary in the execution of the functions of the Commission and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 32. If any provision of this title or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 33. This title may be cited as the 'Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.'

"TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL WATER POWER ACT

"SECTION 201. Section 3 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. The words defined in this section shall have the following meanings for purposes of this Act, to wit:

"'(1) "public lands" means such lands and interest in lands owned by the United States as are subject to private appropriation and disposal under public land laws. It shall not include "reservations", as hereinafter defined;

"'(2) "reservations" means national forests, tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, military reservations, and other lands and interests in lands owned by the United States, and withdrawn, reserved, or withheld from private appropriation and disposal under the public land laws; also lands and interests in lands acquired and held for any public purposes; but shall not include national monuments or national parks;

"'(3) "corporation" means any corporation, joint-stock company, partnership, association, business trust, organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not, or a receiver or receivers, trustee or trustees of any of the foregoing. It shall not include "municipalities" as hereinafter defined;

"'(4) "person" means an individual or a corporation;

"'(5) "licensee" means any person, State, or municipality licensed under the provisions of section 4 of this Act, and any assignee or successor in interest thereof;

"'(6) "State" means a State admitted to the Union, the District of Columbia, and any organized Territory of the United States;

"'(7) "municipality" means a city, county, irrigation district, drainage district, or other political subdivision or agency of a State competent under the laws thereof to carry on the business of developing, transmitting, utilizing, or distributing power;

"'(8) "navigable waters" means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which either in their natural or improved condition notwithstanding interruptions between the navigable parts of such streams or waters by falls, shallows, or rapids compelling land carriage, are used or suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, including therein all such interrupting falls, shallows, or rapids, together with such other parts of streams as shall have been authorized by Congress for improvement by the United States or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority;

"'(9) "municipal purposes" means and includes all purposes within municipal powers as defined by the constitution or laws of the State or by the charter of the municipality;

"'(10) "Government dam" means a dam or other work constructed or owned by the United States for Government purposes with or without contribution from others;

"'(11) "project" means complete unit of improvement or development, consisting of a power house, all water conduits, all dams and appurtenant works and structures (including navigation structures) which are a part of said unit, and all storage, diverting, or forebay reservoirs directly connected therewith, the primary line or lines transmitting power therefrom to the point of junction with the distribution system or with the interconnected primary transmission system, all miscellaneous structures used and useful in connection with said unit or any part thereof, and all water-rights, rights-of-way, ditches, dams, reservoirs, lands, or interest in lands the use and occupancy of which are necessary or appropriate in the maintenance and operation of such unit;

"'(12) "project works" means the physical structures of a project;

"'(13) "net investment" in a project means the actual legitimate original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the "classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission", plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for additions or betterments or used for the purposes for which such reserves were created. The term "cost" shall include, insofar as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others, and said classification of investment of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall insofar as applicable be published and promulgated as a part of the rules and regulations of the Commission;

"'(14) "Commission" and "Commissioner" means the Federal Power Commission, and a member thereof, respectively;

"'(15) "State commission" means the regulatory body of the State or municipality having jurisdiction to regulate rates and charges for the sale of electric energy to consumers within the State or municipality;

"'(16) "security" means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of a corporation subject to the provisions of this Act.'

"SEC. 202. Section 4 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4. The Commission is hereby authorized and empowered—

"'(a) To make investigation and to collect and record data concerning the utilization of the water resources of any region to be developed, the water-power industry and its relation to other industries and to interstate or foreign commerce, and concerning the location, capacity, development costs, and relation to markets of power sites, and whether the power from Government dams can be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, and what is a fair value of such power, to the extent the Commission may deem necessary or useful for the purposes of this Act.

"'(b) To determine the actual legitimate original cost of and the net investment in a licensed project, and to aid the Commission in such determinations, each licensee shall, upon oath, within a reasonable period of time to be fixed by the Commission, after the construction of the original project or any addition thereto or betterment thereof, file with the Commission in such detail as the Commission may require, a statement in duplicate showing the actual legitimate original cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and of the price paid for water rights, rights-of-way, lands, or interest in lands. The licensee shall grant to the Commission or to its duly authorized agent or agents, at all reasonable times, free access to such project, addition, or betterment, and to all maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, accounts, books, records, and all other papers and documents relating thereto. The statement of actual legitimate original cost of said project, and revisions thereof as determined by the Commission, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'(c) To cooperate with the executive departments and other agencies of State or National Government in such investigations; and for such purpose the several departments and agencies of the National Government are authorized and directed upon the request of the Commission to furnish such records, papers, and information in their possession as may be requested by the Commission, and temporarily to detail to the Commission such officers or experts as may be necessary in such investigations.

"'(d) To make public from time to time the information secured hereunder and to provide for the publication of its reports and investigations in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use. The Commission, on or before the 3d day of January of each year, shall submit to Congress for the fiscal year preceding a classified report showing the permits and licenses issued under this Part, and in each case the parties thereto, the terms prescribed, and the moneys received if any, or account thereof. Such report shall contain the names and show the compensation of the persons employed by the Commission.

"'(e) To issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, or to any State or municipality for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other project works necessary or convenient for the development and improvement of navigation and for the development, transmission, and utilization of power across, along, from, or in any of the streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, or upon any part of the public lands and reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or for the purpose of utilizing the surplus water or water power from any Government dam, except as herein provided: Provided, That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the Commission that the license will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired, and shall be subject to and contain such conditions as the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls shall deem necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of such reservation: Provided further, That no license affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be issued until the plans of the dam or other structures affecting navigation have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the Commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, a finding to that effect shall be made by the Commission and shall become a part of the records of the Commission: Provided further, That in case the Commission shall find that any Government dam may be advantageously used by the United States for public purposes in addition to navigation, no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto, except that this provision shall not apply to any Government dam constructed prior to June 10, 1920: And provided further, That upon the filing of any application for a license which has not been preceded by a preliminary permit under subsection (f) of this section, notice shall be given and published as required by the proviso of said subsection.

"'(f) To issue preliminary permits for the purpose of enabling applicants for a license hereunder to secure the data and to perform the acts required by section 9 hereof: Provided, however, That upon the filing of any application for a preliminary permit by any person, association, or corporation the Commission, before granting such application, shall at once give notice of such application in writing to any State or municipality likely to be interested in or affected by such application; and shall also publish notice of such application once each week for four weeks in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the county or counties in which the project or any part thereof or the lands affected thereby are situated.

"'(g) Upon its own motion to order an investigation of any occupancy of, or evidenced intention to occupy, for the purpose of developing electric power, public lands, reservations, or streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States by any person, corporation, State, or municipality and to issue such order as it may find appropriate, expedient, and in the public interest to conserve and utilize the navigation and water-power resources of the region.'"

"SEC. 203. Section 5 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. Each preliminary permit issued under this Part shall be for the sole purpose of maintaining priority of application for a license under the terms of this Act for such period or periods, not exceeding a total of three years, as in the discretion of the Commission may be necessary for making examinations and surveys, for preparing maps, plans, specifications, and estimates, and for making financial arrangements. Each such permit shall set forth the conditions under which priority shall be maintained. Such permits shall not be transferable, and may be canceled by order of the Commission upon failure of permittees to comply with the conditions thereof or for other good cause shown after notice and opportunity for hearing.'"

"SEC. 204. Section 6 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. Licenses under this Part shall be issued for a period not exceeding fifty years. Each such license shall be conditioned upon acceptance by the licensee of all the terms and conditions of this Act and such further conditions, if any, as the Commission shall prescribe in conformity with this Act, which said terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof shall be expressed in said license. Licenses may be revoked only for the reasons and in the manner prescribed under the provisions of this Act, and may be altered or surrendered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the Commission after thirty days' public notice. Copies of all licenses issued under the provisions of this Part and calling for the payment of annual charges shall be deposited with the General Accounting Office, in compliance with section 3743, Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 20).'"

"SEC. 205. Section 7 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7. (a) In issuing preliminary permits hereunder or licenses where no preliminary permit has been issued and in issuing licenses to new licensees under section 15 hereof the Commission shall give preference to applications therefor by States and municipalities, provided the plans for the same are deemed by the Commission equally well adapted, or shall within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Commission be made equally well adapted, to conserve and utilize in the public interest the water resources of the region; and as between other applicants, the Commission may give preference to the applicant the plans of which it finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the water resources of the region, if it be satisfied as to the ability of the applicant to carry out such plans.

"'(b) Whenever, in the judgment of the Commission, the development of any water resources for public purposes should be undertaken by the United States itself, the Commission shall not approve any application for any project affecting such development, but shall cause to be made such examinations, surveys, reports, plans, and estimates of the cost of the proposed development as it may find necessary, and shall submit its findings to Congress with such recommendations as it may find appropriate concerning such development.'

"SEC. 206. Section 10 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. All licenses issued under this Part shall be on the following conditions:

"'(a) That the project adopted, including the maps, plans, and specifications, shall be such as in the judgment of the Commission will be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, for the improvement and utilization of water-power development, and for other beneficial public uses, including recreational purposes; and if necessary in order to secure such plan the Commission shall have authority to require the modification of any project and of the plans and specifications of the project works before approval.

"'(b) That except when emergency shall require for the protection of navigation, life, health, or property, no substantial alteration or addition not in conformity with the approved plans shall be made to any dam or other project works constructed hereunder of an installed capacity in excess of one hundred horsepower without the prior approval of the Commission; and any emergency alteration or addition so made shall thereafter be subject to such modification and change as the Commission may direct.

"'(c) That the licensee shall maintain the project works in a condition of repair adequate for the purposes of navigation and for the efficient operation of said works in the development and transmission of power, shall make all necessary renewals and replacements, shall establish and maintain adequate depreciation reserves for such purposes, shall so maintain and operate said works as not to impair navigation, and shall conform to such rules and regulations as the Commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of life, health, and property. Each licensee hereunder shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the project works or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, constructed under the license, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor.

"'(d) That after the first twenty years of operation, out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, accumulated in excess of a specified reasonable rate of return upon the net investment of a licensee in any project or projects under license, the licensee shall establish and maintain amortization reserves, which reserves shall, in the discretion of the Commission, be held until the termination of the license or be applied from time to time in reduction of the net investment. Such specified rate of return and the proportion of such surplus earnings to be paid into and held in such reserves shall be set forth in the license.

"'(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this Part; for recompensing it for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of its lands or other property; and for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the Commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and any such charges may be adjusted from time to time by the Commission as conditions may require: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the Commission shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior in the case of such dams or structures in reclamation projects and, in the case of such tribal lands, subject to the approval of the Indian tribe having jurisdiction of such lands as provided in section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may with like approval be readjusted by the Commission at the end of twenty years after the project is available for service and at periods of not less than ten years thereafter upon notice and opportunity for hearing: Provided further, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent such power is sold to the public without profit or is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes, except that as to projects constructed or to be constructed by States or municipalities primarily designed to provide or improve navigation, licenses therefor shall be issued without charge; and that licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or other beneficial use in projects of not more than one hundred horsepower installed capacity may be issued without charge, except on tribal lands within Indian reservations; but in no case shall a license be issued free of charge for the development and utilization of power created by any Government dam and that the amount charged therefor in any license shall be such as determined by the Commission. In the event an overpayment of any charge due under this section shall be made by a licensee, the Commission is authorized to allow a credit for such overpayment when charges are due for any subsequent period.

"'(f) That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee, a permittee, or of the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the Commission shall require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the Commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be determined by the Commission. The licensees or permittees affected shall pay to the United States the cost of making such determination as fixed by the Commission.

"'Whenever such reservoir or other improvement is constructed by the United States the Commission shall assess similar charges against any licensee directly benefited thereby, and any amount so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to be reserved and appropriated as a part of the special fund for headwater improvements as provided in section 17 hereof.

"'Whenever any power project not under license is benefited by the construction work of a licensee or permittee, the United States or any agency thereof, the Commission, after notice to the owner or owners of such unlicensed project, shall determine and fix a reasonable and equitable annual charge to be paid to the licensee or permittee on account of such benefits, or to the United States if it be the owner of such headwater improvement.

"'(g) Such other conditions not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act as the Commission may require.

"'(h) That combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service are hereby prohibited.

"'(i) In issuing licenses for a minor part only of a complete project, or for a complete project of not more than one hundred horsepower installed capacity, the Commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this Part, except the license period of fifty years, as it may deem to be to the public interest to waive under the circumstances: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to annual charges for use of lands within Indian reservations.'

"SEC. 207. Section 14 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 14. Upon not less than two years' notice in writing from the Commission the United States shall have the right upon or after the expiration of any license to take over and thereafter to maintain and operate any project or projects as defined in section 3 hereof, and covered in whole or in part by the license, or the right to take over upon mutual agreement with the licensee all property owned and held by the licensee then valuable and serviceable in the development, transmission, or distribution of power and which is then dependent for its usefulness upon the continuance of the license, together with any lock or locks or other aids to navigation constructed at the expense of the licensee, upon the condition that before taking possession it shall pay the net investment of the licensee in the project or projects taken, not to exceed the fair value of the property taken, plus such reasonable damages, if any, to property of the licensee valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth but not taken, as may be caused by the severance therefrom of property taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the Commission. The net investment of the licensee in the project or projects so taken and the amount of such severance damages, if any, shall be determined by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing. Such net investment shall not include or be affected by the value of any lands, rights-of-way, or other property of the United States licensed by the Commission under this Act, by the license or by good will, going value, or prospective revenues; nor shall the values allowed for water rights, rights-of-way, lands, or interest in lands be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee: Provided, That the right of the United States or any State or municipality to take over, maintain, and operate any project licensed under this Act at any time by condemnation proceedings upon payment of just compensation is hereby expressly reserved.'

"SEC. 208. Section 17 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 17. (a) All proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. All other charges arising from licenses hereunder, except charges fixed by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of administration of this Part, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, subject to the following distribution: 12½ per centum thereof is hereby appropriated to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to "Miscellaneous receipts"; 50 per centum of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands and national forests shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the Act of Congress known as the Reclamation Act, approved June 17, 1902; and 37½ per centum of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests and public lands from development within the boundaries of any State shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to such State; and 50 per centum of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States. The proceeds of charges made by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this part shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts.

"'(b) In case of delinquency on the part of any licensee in the payment of annual charges a penalty of 5 per centum of the total amount so delinquent may be added to the total charges which shall apply for the first month or part of month so delinquent with an additional penalty of 3 per centum for each subsequent month until the total of the charges and penalties are paid or until the license is canceled and the charges and penalties satisfied in accordance with law.'"

"SEC. 209. Section 18 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 18. The Commission shall require the construction, maintenance, and operation by a licensee at its own expense of such lights and signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War, and such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce. The operation of any navigation facilities which may be constructed as a part of or in connection with any dam or diversion structure built under the provisions of this Act, whether at the expense of a licensee hereunder or of the United States, shall at all times be controlled by such reasonable rules and regulations in the interest of navigation, including the control of the level of the pool caused by such dam or diversion structure as may be made from time to time by the Secretary of War; and for willful failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such licensee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 316 hereof.'"

"SEC. 210. Section 23 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 23. (a) The provisions of this Part shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right-of-way heretofore granted or as confirming or otherwise affecting any claim, or as affecting any authority heretofore given pursuant to law, but any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality holding or possessing such permit, right-of-way, or authority may apply for a license hereunder, and upon such application the Commission may issue to any such applicant a license in accordance with the provisions of this Part and in such case the provisions of this Act shall apply to such applicant as a licensee hereunder: Provided, That when application is made for a license under this section for a project or projects already constructed the fair value of said project or projects determined as provided in this section, shall for the purposes of this Part and of said license be deemed to be the amount to be allowed as the net investment of the applicant in such project or projects as of the date of such license, or as of the date of such determination, if license has not been issued. Such fair value shall be determined by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing.

"'(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, State, or municipality, for the purpose of developing electric power, to construct, operate, or maintain any dam, water conduit, reservoir, power house, or other works incidental thereto across, along, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, or upon any part of the public lands or reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or utilize the surplus water or water power from any Government dam, except under and in accordance with the terms of a permit or valid existing right-of-way granted prior to June 10, 1920, or a license granted pursuant to this Act. Any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality intending to construct a dam or other project works across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof, other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States shall before such construction file declaration of such intention with the Commission, whereupon the Commission shall cause immediate investigation of such proposed construction to be made, and if upon investigation it shall find that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected by such proposed construction, such person, association, corporation, State, or municipality shall not construct, maintain, or operate such dam or other project works until it shall have applied for and shall have received a license under the provisions of this Act. If the Commission shall not so find, and if no public lands or reservations are affected, permission is hereby granted to construct such dam or other project works in such stream upon compliance with State laws.'"

"SEC. 211. Section 24 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. Any lands of the United States included in any proposed project under the provisions of this Part shall from the date of filing of application therefor be reserved from entry, location, or other disposal under the laws of the United States until otherwise directed by the Commission or by Congress. Notice that such application has been made, together with the date of filing thereof and a description of the lands of the United States affected thereby, shall be filed in the local land office for the district in which such lands are located. Whenever the Commission shall determine that the value of any lands of the United States so applied for, or heretofore or hereafter reserved or classified as power sites, will not be injured or destroyed for the purposes of power development by location, entry, or selection under the public land laws, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice of such determination, shall declare such lands open to location, entry, or selection, for such purpose or purposes and under such restrictions as the Commission may determine, subject to and with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary, in the judgment of the Commission, for the purposes of this Part, which right shall be expressly reserved in every patent issued for such lands; and no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from the occupation or use of any of said lands for said purposes. The United States or any licensee for any such lands hereunder may enter thereupon for the purposes of this Part, upon payment of any damages to crops, buildings, or other improvements caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond to the United States for the use and benefit of the owner to secure the payment of such damages as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond in a court of competent jurisdiction, said bond to be in the form prescribed by the Commission: Provided, That locations, entries, selections, or filings heretofore made for lands reserved as water-power sites, or in connection with water-power development, or electrical transmission may proceed to approval or patent under and subject to the limitations and conditions in this section contained.'

"SEC. 212. Sections 1 to 29, inclusive, of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, shall constitute Part I of that Act, and sections 25 and 30 of such Act, as amended, are repealed: Provided, That nothing in that Act, as amended, shall be construed to repeal or amend the provisions of the amendment to the Federal Water Power Act approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1353), or the provisions of any other Act relating to national parks and national monuments.

"SEC. 213. The Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is further amended by adding thereto the following parts:

"'PART II—REGULATION OF ELECTRIC UTILITY COMPANIES ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

"'DECLARATION OF POLICY; APPLICATION OF PART; DEFINITIONS

"'SECTION 201. (a) It is hereby declared that the business of transmitting and selling electric energy for ultimate distribution to the public is affected with a public interest, and that Federal regulation of matters relating to generation to the extent provided in this Part and the Part next following and of that part of such business which consists of the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and the sale of such energy at wholesale in interstate commerce is necessary in the public interest, such Federal regulation, however, to extend only to those matters which are not subject to regulation by the States.

"'(b) The provisions of this Part shall apply to the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and to the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, but shall not apply to any other sale of electric energy or deprive a State or State commission of its lawful authority now exercised over the exportation of hydroelectric energy which is transmitted across a State line. The Commission shall have jurisdiction over all facilities for such transmission or sale of electric energy, but shall not have jurisdiction, except as specifically provided in this Part and the Part next following, over facilities used for the generation of electric energy or over facilities used in local distribution or only for the transmission of electric energy in intrastate commerce, or over facilities for the transmission of electric energy consumed wholly by the transmitter.

"'(c) For the purpose of this Part, electric energy shall be held to be transmitted in interstate commerce if transmitted from a State and consumed at any point outside thereof; but only insofar as such transmission takes place within the United States.

"'(d) The term "sale of electric energy at wholesale" when used in this Part means a sale of electric energy to any person for resale.

"'(e) The term "public utility" when used in this Part or in the Part next following means any person who owns or operates facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this Part.

"'(f) No provision in this Part shall apply to, or be deemed to include, the United States, a State or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any corporation which is wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by any one or more of the foregoing, or any officer, agent, or employee of any of the foregoing acting as such in the course of his official duty, unless such provision makes specific reference thereto.

"'INTERCONNECTION AND COORDINATION OF FACILITIES; EMERGENCIES; TRANSMISSION TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

"'SEC. 202. (a) For the purpose of assuring an abundant supply of electric energy throughout the United States with the greatest possible economy and with regard to the proper utilization and conservation of natural resources, the Commission is empowered and directed to divide the country into regional districts for the voluntary interconnection and coordination of facilities for the generation, transmission, and sale of electric energy, and it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application, make such modifications thereof as in its judgment will promote the public interest. Each such district shall embrace an area which, in the judgment of the Commission, can economically be served by such interconnected and coordinated electric facilities. It shall be the duty of the Commission to promote and encourage such interconnection and coordination within each such district and between such districts. Before establishing any such district and fixing or modifying the boundaries thereof the Commission shall give notice to the State commission of each State situated wholly or in part within such district, and shall afford each such State commission reasonable opportunity to present its views and recommendations, and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

"'(b) Whenever the Commission, upon application of any State commission or of any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy, and after notice to each State commission and public utility affected and after opportunity for hearing, finds such action necessary or appropriate in the public interest it may by order direct a public utility (if the Commission finds that no undue burden will be placed upon such public utility thereby) to establish physical connection of its transmission facilities with the facilities of one or more other persons engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy, to sell energy to or exchange energy with such persons: Provided, That the Commission shall have no authority to compel the enlargement of generating facilities for such purposes, nor to compel such public utility to sell or exchange energy when to do so would impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers. The Commission may prescribe the terms and conditions of the arrangement to be made between the persons affected by any such order, including the apportionment of cost between them and the compensation or reimbursement reasonably due to any of them.

"'(c) During the continuance of any war in which the United States is engaged, or whenever the Commission determines that an emergency exists by reason of a sudden increase in the demand for electric energy, or a shortage of electric energy or of facilities for the generation or transmission of electric energy, or of fuel or water for generating facilities, or other causes, the Commission shall have authority, either upon its own motion or upon complaint, with or without notice, hearing, or report, to require by order such temporary connections of facilities and such generation, delivery, interchange, or transmission of electric energy as in its judgment will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest. If the parties affected by such order fail to agree upon the terms of any arrangement between them in carrying out such order, the Commission, after hearing held either before or after such order takes effect, may prescribe by supplemental order such terms as it finds to be just and reasonable, including the compensation or reimbursement which should be paid to or by any such party.

"'(d) During the continuance of any emergency requiring immediate action, any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission may make such temporary connections with any public utility subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission or may construct such temporary facilities for the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce as may be necessary or appropriate to meet such emergency, and shall not become subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission by reason of such temporary connection or temporary construction: Provided, That such temporary connection shall be discontinued or such temporary construction removed or otherwise disposed of upon the termination of such emergency: Provided further, That upon approval of the Commission permanent connections for emergency use only may be made hereunder.

"'(e) After six months from the date on which this Part takes effect, no person shall transmit any electric energy from the United States to a foreign country without first having secured an order of the Commission authorizing it to do so. The Commission shall issue such order upon application unless, after opportunity for hearing, it finds that the proposed transmission would impair the sufficiency of electric supply within the United States or would impede or tend to impede the coordination in the public interest of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. The Commission may by its order grant such application in whole or in part, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate, and may from time to time, after opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, make such supplemental order in the premises as it may find necessary or appropriate.

"'DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY; CONSOLIDATIONS; PURCHASE OF SECURITIES

"'SEC. 203. (a) No public utility shall sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the whole of its facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or any part thereof of a value in excess of $50,000, or by any means whatsoever, directly or indirectly, merge or consolidate such facilities or any part thereof with those of any other person, or purchase, acquire, or take any security of any other public utility, without first having secured an order of the Commission authorizing it to do so. Upon application for such approval the Commission shall give reasonable notice in writing to the Governor and State commission of each of the States in which the physical property affected, or any part thereof, is situated, and to such other persons as it may deem advisable. After notice and opportunity for hearing, if the Commission finds that the proposed disposition, consolidation, acquisition, or control will be consistent with the public interest, it shall approve the same.

"'(b) The Commission may grant any application for an order under this section in whole or in part and upon such terms and conditions as it finds necessary or appropriate to secure the maintenance of adequate service and the coordination in the public interest of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. The Commission may from time to time for good cause shown make such orders supplemental to any order made under this section as it may find necessary or appropriate.

"'ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES; ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITIES

"'SEC. 204. (a) No public utility shall issue any security, or assume any obligation or liability as guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise in respect of any security of another person, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the public utility, the Commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption of liability. The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption (a) is for some lawful object, within the corporate purposes of the applicant and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the applicant of service as a public utility and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary or appropriate for such purposes. The provisions of this section shall be effective six months after this Part takes effect.

"'(b) The Commission, after opportunity for hearing, may grant any application under this section in whole or in part, and with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may find necessary or appropriate, and may from time to time, after opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may find necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any previous order as to the particular purposes, uses, and extent to which, or the conditions under which, any security so theretofore authorized or the proceeds thereof may be applied, subject always to the requirements of subsection (a) of this section.

"'(c) No public utility shall, without the consent of the Commission, apply any security or any proceeds thereof to any purpose not specified in the Commission's order, or supplemental order, or to any purpose in excess of the amount allowed for such purpose in such order, or otherwise in contravention of such order.

"'(d) The Commission shall not authorize the capitalization of the right to be a corporation or of any franchise, permit, or contract for consolidation, merger, or lease in excess of the amount (exclusive of any tax or annual charge) actually paid as the consideration for such right, franchise, permit, or contract.

"'(e) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue or renewal of, or assumption of liability on, a note or draft maturing not more than one year after the date of such issue, renewal, or assumption of liability, and aggregating (together with all other then outstanding notes and drafts of a maturity of one year or less on which such public utility is primarily or secondarily liable) not more than 5 per centum of the par value of the other securities of the public utility then outstanding. In the case of securities having no par value, the par value for the purpose of this subsection shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. Within ten days after any such issue, renewal, or assumption of liability, the public utility shall file with the Commission a certificate of notification, in such form as may be prescribed by the Commission, setting forth such matters as the Commission shall by regulation require.

"'(f) The provisions of this section shall not extend to a public utility organized and operating in a State under the laws of which its security issues are regulated by a State commission.

"'(g) Nothing in this section shall be construed to imply any guarantee or obligation on the part of the United States in respect of any securities to which the provisions of this section relate.

"'(h) Any public utility whose security issues are approved by the Commission under this section may file with the Securities and Exchange Commission duplicate copies of reports filed with the Federal Power Commission in lieu of the reports, information, and documents required under section 7 of the Securities Act of 1933 and sections 12 and 13 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934.

"'RATES AND CHARGES; SCHEDULES; SUSPENSION OF NEW RATES

"'SEC. 205. (a) All rates and charges made, demanded, or received by any public utility for or in connection with the transmission or sale of electric energy subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and all rules and regulations affecting or pertaining to such rates or charges shall be just and reasonable, and any such rate or charge that is not just and reasonable is hereby declared to be unlawful.

"'(b) No public utility shall, with respect to any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, (1) make or grant any undue preference or advantage to any person or subject any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage, or (2) maintain any unreasonable difference in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service.

"'(c) Under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, every public utility shall file with the Commission, within such time and in such form as the Commission may designate, and shall keep open in convenient form and place for public inspection schedules showing all rates and charges for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services.

"'(d) Unless the Commission otherwise orders, no change shall be made by any public utility in any such rate, charge, classification, or service, or in any rule, regulation, or contract relating thereto, except after thirty days' notice to the Commission and to the public. Such notice shall be given by filing with the Commission and keeping open for public inspection new schedules stating plainly the change or changes to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the change or changes will go into effect. The Commission, for good cause shown, may allow changes to take effect without requiring the thirty days' notice herein provided for by an order specifying the changes so to be made and the time when they shall take effect and the manner in which they shall be filed and published.

"'(e) Whenever any such new schedule is filed the Commission shall have authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and, if it so orders, without answer or formal pleading by the public utility, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, charge, classification, or service; and, pending such hearing and the decision thereon, the Commission, upon filing with such schedules and delivering to the public utility affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, charge, classification, or service, but not for a longer period than five months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearings, either completed before or after the rate, charge, classification, or service goes into effect, the Commission may make such orders with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made at the expiration of such five months, the proposed change of rate, charge, classification, or service shall go into effect at the end of such period, but in case of a proposed increased rate or charge, the Commission may by order require the interested public utility or public utilities to keep accurate account in detail of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts are paid, and upon completion of the hearing and decision may by further order require such public utility or public utilities to refund, with interest, to the persons in whose behalf such amounts were paid, such portion of such increased rates or charges as by its decision shall be found not justified. At any hearing involving a rate or charge sought to be increased, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate or charge is just and reasonable shall be upon the public utility, and the Commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.

"'FIXING RATES AND CHARGES; DETERMINATION OF COST OF PRODUCTION OR TRANSMISSION

"'SEC. 206. (a) Whenever the Commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that any rate, charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order.

"'(b) The Commission upon its own motion, or upon the request of any State commission whenever it can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, may investigate and determine the cost of the production or transmission of electric energy by means of facilities under the jurisdiction of the Commission in cases where the Commission has no authority to establish a rate governing the sale of such energy.

"'FURNISHING OF ADEQUATE SERVICE

"'SEC. 207. Whenever the Commission, upon complaint of a State commission, after notice to each State commission and public utility affected and after opportunity for hearing, shall find that any interstate service of any public utility is inadequate or insufficient, the Commission shall determine the proper, adequate, or sufficient service to be furnished, and shall fix the same by its order, rule, or regulation: Provided, That the Commission shall have no authority to compel the enlargement of generating facilities for such purposes, nor to compel the public utility to sell or exchange energy when to do so would impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers.

"'ASCERTAINMENT OF COST OF PROPERTY

"'SEC. 208. (a) The Commission may investigate and ascertain the actual legitimate cost of the property of every public utility, the depreciation therein, and, when found necessary for rate-making purposes, other facts which bear on the determination of such cost or depreciation, and the fair value of such property.

"'(b) Every public utility upon request shall file with the Commission an inventory of all or any part of its property and a statement of the original cost thereof, and shall keep the Commission informed regarding the cost of all additions, betterments, extensions, and new construction.

"'USE OF JOINT BOARDS; COOPERATION WITH STATE COMMISSIONS

"'SEC. 209. (a) The Commission may refer any matter arising in the administration of this Part to a board to be composed of a member or members, as determined by the Commission, from the State or each of the States affected or to be affected by such matter. Any such board shall be vested with the same power and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as in the case of a member of the Commission when designated by the Commission to hold any hearings. The action of such board shall have such force and effect and its proceedings shall be conducted in such manner as the Commission shall by regulations prescribe. The board shall be appointed by the Commission from persons nominated by the State commission of each State affected, or by the Governor of such State if there is no State commission. Each State affected shall be entitled to the same number of representatives on the board unless the nominating power of such State waives such right. The Commission shall have discretion to reject the nominee from any State, but shall thereupon invite a new nomination from that State. The members of a board shall receive such allowances for expenses as the Commission shall provide. The Commission may, when in its discretion sufficient reason exists therefor, revoke any reference to such a board.

"'(b) The Commission may confer with any State commission regarding the relationship between rate structures, costs, accounts, charges, practices, classifications, and regulations of public utilities subject to the jurisdiction of such State commission and of the Commission; and the Commission is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe, to hold joint hearings with any State commission in connection with any matter with respect to which the Commission is authorized to act. The Commission is authorized in the administration of this Act to avail itself of such cooperation, services, records, and facilities as may be afforded by any State commission.

"'(c) The Commission shall make available to the several State commissions such information and reports as may be of assistance in State regulation of public utilities. Whenever the Commission can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, it may upon request from a State make available to such State as witnesses any of its trained rate, valuation, or other experts, subject to reimbursement to the Commission by such State of the compensation and traveling expenses of such witnesses. All sums collected hereunder shall be credited to the appropriation from which the amounts were expended in carrying out the provisions of this subsection.

"'PART III—LICENSEES AND PUBLIC UTILITIES; PROCEDURAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

"'ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND MEMORANDA

"'SECTION 301. (a) Every licensee and public utility shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, records of cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate for purposes of the administration of this Act, including accounts, records, and memoranda of the generation, transmission, distribution, delivery, or sale of electric energy, the furnishing of services or facilities in connection therewith, and receipts and expenditures with respect to any of the foregoing: Provided, however, That nothing in this Act shall relieve any public utility from keeping any accounts, memoranda, or records which such public utility may be required to keep by or under authority of the laws of any State. The Commission may prescribe a system of accounts to be kept by licensees and public utilities and may classify such licensees and public utilities and prescribe a system of accounts for each class. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may determine by order the accounts in which particular outlays and receipts shall be entered, charged, or credited. The burden of proof to justify every accounting entry questioned by the Commission shall be on the person making, authorizing, or requiring such entry, and the Commission may suspend a charge or credit pending submission of satisfactory proof in support thereof.

"'(b) The Commission shall at all times have access to and the right to inspect and examine all accounts, records, and memoranda of licensees and public utilities, and it shall be the duty of such licensees and public utilities to furnish to the Commission, within such reasonable time as the Commission may order, any information with respect thereto which the Commission may by order require, including copies of maps, contracts, reports of engineers, and other data, records, and papers, and to grant to all agents of the Commission free access to its property and its accounts, records, and memoranda when requested so to do. No member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall divulge any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of examination of books or other accounts, as hereinbefore provided, except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

"'(c) The books, accounts, memoranda, and records of any person who controls, directly or indirectly, a licensee or public utility subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and of any other company controlled by such person, insofar as they relate to transactions with or the business of such licensee or public utility, shall be subject to examination on the order of the Commission.

"'RATES OF DEPRECIATION

"'SEC. 302. (a) The Commission may, after hearing, require licensees and public utilities to carry a proper and adequate depreciation account in accordance with such rules, regulations, and forms of account as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may, from time to time, ascertain and determine, and by order fix, the proper and adequate rates of depreciation of the several classes of property of each licensee and public utility. Each licensee and public utility shall conform its depreciation accounts to the rates so ascertained, determined, and fixed. The licensees and public utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall not charge to operating expenses any depreciation charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the Commission, or charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed therefor by the Commission. No such licensee or public utility shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses. Nothing in this section shall limit the power of a State commission to determine in the exercise of its jurisdiction, with respect to any public utility, the percentage rate of depreciation to be allowed, as to any class of property of such public utility, or the composite depreciation rate, for the purpose of determining rates or charges.

"'(b) The Commission, before prescribing any rules or requirements as to accounts, records, or memoranda, or as to depreciation rates, shall notify each State commission having jurisdiction with respect to any public utility involved, and shall give reasonable opportunity to each such commission to present its views, and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

"'REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO AGENCIES OF THE UNITED STATES

"'SEC. 303. All agencies of the United States engaged in the generation and sale of electric energy for ultimate distribution to the public shall be subject, as to all facilities used for such generation and sale, and as to the electric energy sold by such agency, to the provisions of sections 301 and 302 hereof, so far as may be practicable, and shall comply with the provisions of such sections and with the rules and regulations of the Commission thereunder to the same extent as may be required in the case of a public utility.

"'PERIODIC AND SPECIAL REPORTS

"'SEC. 304. (a) Every licensee and every public utility shall file with the Commission such annual and other periodic or special reports as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate to assist the Commission in the proper administration of this Act. The Commission may prescribe the manner and form in which such reports shall be made, and require from such persons specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may need information. The Commission may require that such reports shall include, among other things, full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, net investment, and reduction thereof, gross receipts, interest due and paid, depreciation, and other reserves, cost of project and other facilities, cost of maintenance and operation of the project and other facilties, cost of renewals and replacement of the project works and other facilities, depreciation, generation, transmission, distribution, delivery, use, and sale of electric energy. The Commission may require any such person to make adequate provision for currently determining such costs and other facts. Such reports shall be made under oath unless the Commission otherwise specifies.

"'(b) It shall be unlawful for any person willfully to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making, filing, or keeping of any information, document, report, memorandum, record, or account required to be made, filed, or kept under this Act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"'OFFICIALS DEALING IN SECURITIES; INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES

"'SEC. 305. (a) It shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any public utility to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect of the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale by such public utility of any security issued or to be issued by such public utility, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends of such public utility from any funds properly included in capital account.

"'(b) After six months from the date on which this Part takes effect, it shall be unlawful for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one public utility or to hold the position of officer or director of a public utility and the position of officer or director of any bank, trust company, banking association, or firm that is authorized by law to underwrite or participate in the marketing of securities of a public utility, or officer or director of any company supplying electrical equipment to such public utility, unless the holding of such positions shall have been authorized by order of the Commission, upon due showing in form and manner prescribed by the Commission, that neither public nor private interests will be adversely affected thereby. The Commission shall not grant any such authorization in respect of such positions held on the date on which this Part takes effect, unless application for such authorization is filed with the Commission within sixty days after that date.

"'COMPLAINTS

"'SEC. 306. Any person, State, municipality, or State commission complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any licensee or public utility in contravention of the provisions of this Act may apply to the Commission by petition which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon a statement of the complaint thus made shall be forwarded by the Commission to such licensee or public utility, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time to be specified by the Commission. If such licensee or public utility shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating such complaint, it shall be the duty of the Commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall find proper.

"'INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMISSION; ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES; DEPOSITIONS

"'SEC. 307. (a) The Commission may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may find necessary or proper in order to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this Act or in prescribing rules or regulations thereunder, or in obtaining information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this Act relates. The Commission may permit any person to file with it a statement in writing under oath or otherwise, as it shall determine, as to any or all facts and circumstances concerning a matter which may be the subject of investigation. The Commission, in its discretion, may publish or make available to State commissions information concerning any such subject.

"'(b) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding under this Act, any member of the Commission, or any officer designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission finds relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Witnesses summoned by the Commission to appear before it shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"'(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, and other records. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found or may be doing business. Any person who willfully shall fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records, if in his or its power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.

"'(d) The testimony of any witness may be taken, at the instance of a party, in any proceeding or investigation pending before the Commission, by deposition, at any time after the proceeding is at issue. The Commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it, at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person authorized to administer oaths not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, nor interested in the proceeding or investigation. Reasonable notice must first be given in writing by the party or his attorney proposing to take such deposition to the opposite party or his attorney of record, as either may be nearest, which notice shall state the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of his deposition. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission, as hereinbefore provided. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent.

"'(e) If a witness whose testimony may be desired to be taken by deposition be in a foreign country, the deposition may be taken before an officer or person designated by the Commission, or agreed upon by the parties by stipulation in writing to be filed with the Commission. All depositions must be promptly filed with the Commission.

"'(f) Witnesses whose depositions are taken as authorized in this Act, and the person or officer taking the same, shall be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"'(g) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"'HEARINGS; RULES OF PROCEDURE

"'SEC. 308. (a) Hearings under this Act may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof or any representative of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept. In any proceeding before it, the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, may admit as a party any interested State, State commission, municipality, or any representative of interested consumers or security holders, or any competitor of a party to such proceedings, or any other person whose participation in the proceeding may be in the public interest.

"'(b) All hearings, investigations, and proceedings under this Act shall be governed by rules of practice and procedure to be adopted by the Commission, and in the conduct thereof the technical rules of evidence need not be applied. No informality in any hearing, investigation, or proceeding or in the manner of taking testimony shall invalidate any order, decision, rule, or regulation issued under the authority of this Act.

"'ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS OF COMMISSION; RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

"'SEC. 309. The Commission shall have power to perform any and all acts, and to prescribe, issue, make, amend, and rescind such orders, rules, and regulations as it may find necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Among other things, such rules and regulations may define accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this Act; and may prescribe the form or forms of all statements, declarations, applications, and reports to be filed with the Commission, the information which they shall contain, and the time within which they shall be filed. Unless a different date is specified therein, rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective thirty days after publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. Orders of the Commission shall be effective on the date and in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. For the purposes of its rules and regulations, the Commission may classify persons and matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons or matters. All rules and regulations of the Commission shall be filed with its secretary and shall be kept open in convenient form for public inspection and examination during reasonable business hours.

"'APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"'SEC. 310. The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and experts as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this Act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States; and the Commission may, subject to civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary for carrying out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

"'INVESTIGATIONS RELATING TO ELECTRIC ENERGY

"'SEC. 311. In order to secure information necessary or appropriate as a basis for recommending legislation, the Commission is authorized and directed to conduct investigations regarding the generation, transmission, distribution, and sale of electric energy, however produced, throughout the United States and its possessions, whether or not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, including the generation, transmission, distribution, and sale of electric energy by any agency, authority, or instrumentality of the United States, or of any State or municipality or other political subdivision of a State. It shall, so far as practicable, secure and keep current information regarding the ownership, operation, management, and control of all facilities for such generation, transmission, distribution, and sale; the capacity and output thereof and the relationship between the two; the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution; the rates, charges, and contracts in respect of the sale of electric energy and its service to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers and other purchasers by private and public agencies; and the relation of any or all such facts to the development of navigation, industry, commerce, and the national defense. The Commission shall report to Congress the results of investigations made under authority of this section.

"'PUBLICATION AND SALE OF REPORTS

"'SEC. 312. The Commission may provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and is authorized to sell at reasonable prices copies of all maps, atlases, and reports as it may from time to time publish. Such reasonable prices may include the cost of compilation, composition, and reproduction. The Commission is also authorized to make such charges as it deems reasonable for special statistical services and other special or periodic services. The amounts collected under this section shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. All printing for the Federal Power Commission making use of engraving, lithography, and photolithography, together with the plates for the same, shall be contracted for and performed under the direction of the Commission, under such limitations and conditions as the Joint Committee on Printing may from time to time prescribe, and all other printing for the Commission shall be done by the Public Printer under such limitations and conditions as the Joint Committee on Printing may from time to time prescribe. The entire work may be done at, or ordered through, the Government Printing Office whenever, in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, the same would be to the interest of the Government: Provided, That when the exigencies of the public service so require, the Joint Committee on Printing may authorize the Commission to make immediate contracts for engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, without advertisement for proposals: Provided further, That nothing contained in this or any other Act shall prevent the Federal Power Commission from placing orders with other departments or establishments for engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, in accordance with the provisions of sections 601 and 602 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 417), providing for interdepartmental work.

"'REHEARING; COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"'SEC. 313. (a) Any person, State, municipality, or State commission aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this Act to which such person, State, municipality, or State commission is a party may apply for a rehearing within thirty days after the issuance of such order. The application for rehearing shall set forth specifically the ground or grounds upon which such application is based. Upon such application the Commission shall have power to grant or deny rehearing or to abrogate or modify its order without further hearing. Unless the Commission acts upon the application for rehearing within thirty days after it is filed, such application may be deemed to have been denied. No proceeding to review any order of the Commission shall be brought by any person unless such person shall have made application to the Commission for a rehearing thereon.

"'(b) Any party to a proceeding under this Act aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in such proceeding may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for any circuit wherein the licensee or public utility to which the order relates is located or has its principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within sixty days after the order of the Commission upon the application for rehearing, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon any member of the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file with the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission in the application for rehearing unless there is reasonable ground for failure to do. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified or new findings which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"'(c) The filing of an application for rehearing under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the Commission, operate as a stay of the Commission's order. The commencement of proceedings under subsection (b) of this section shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

"'ENFORCEMENT OF ACT, REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

"'SEC. 314. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper District Court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this Act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or decree or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this Act.

"'(b) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission thereunder.

"'(c) The Commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary or proper legal aid and service of the Commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the Commission's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the Commission in any case in court; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the Commission.

"'GENERAL FORFEITURE PROVISION

"'SEC. 315. (a) Any licensee or public utility which willfully fails, within the time prescribed by the Commission, to comply with any order of the Commission, to file any report required under this Act or any rule or regulation of the Commission thereunder, to submit any information or document required by the Commission in the course of an investigation conducted under this Act, or to appear by an officer or agent at any hearing or investigation in response to a subpena issued under this Act, shall forfeit to the United States an amount not exceeding $1,000 to be fixed by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing. The imposition or payment of any such forfeiture shall not bar or affect any penalty prescribed in this Act but such forfeiture shall be in addition to any such penalty.

"'(b) The forfeitures provided for in this Act shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States, brought in the district where the person is an inhabitant or has his principal place of business, or if a licensee or public utility, in any district in which such licensee or public utility transacts business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures under this Act. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid from the appropriations for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"'GENERAL PENALTIES; VENUE

"'SEC. 316. (a) Any person who willfully and knowingly does or causes or suffers to be done any act, matter, or thing in this Act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who willfully and knowingly omits or fails to do any act, matter, or thing in this Act required to be done, or willfully and knowingly causes or suffers such ommission or failure, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"'(b) Any person who willfully and knowingly violates any rule, regulation, restriction, condition, or order made or imposed by the Commission under authority of this Act, or any rule or regulation imposed by the Secretary of War under authority of Part I of this Act shall, in addition to any other penalties provided by law, be punished upon conviction thereof by a fine of not exceeding $500 for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

"'JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES; ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITIES AND DUTIES

"'SEC. 317. The District Courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this Act or the rules, regulations, and orders thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder. Any criminal proceeding shall be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is an inhabitant, and process in such cases may be served wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed against the Commission in any judicial proceeding by or against the Commission under this Act.

"'CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION

"'SEC. 318. If, with respect to the issue, sale, or guaranty of a security, or assumption of obligation or liability in respect of a security, the method of keeping accounts, the filing of reports, or the acquisition or disposition of any security, capital assets, facilities, or any other subject matter, any person is subject both to a requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 or of a rule, regulation, or order thereunder and to a requirement of this Act or of a rule, regulation, or order thereunder, the requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 shall apply to such person, and such person shall not be subject to the requirement of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, with respect to the same subject matter, unless the Securities and Exchange Commission has exempted such person from such requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, in which case the requirements of this Act shall apply to such person.

"'SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"'SEC. 319. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"'SHORT TITLE

"'SEC. 320. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Power Act."'"

And the House agree to the same.

That the title of the bill be amended to read as follows:

"An Act to provide for control and regulation of public-utility holding companies, and for other purposes."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment strikes out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the House amendment and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted in the following outline, except for incidental changes made necessary by reason of agreements reached by the conferees and minor and clarifying changes.

Section 2

In section 2 (a) (2) of the Senate bill, the definition of "company" includes a "receiver, trustee, or liquidating agent" of a company. The substitute agreed to in conference adopts this language with an addition so that the definition only includes such a person "in his capacity as such."

Section 2 (a) (3) of the Senate bill, defining the term "electric utility company", exempts from the definition any company which sells 75 percent or more of the electric energy which it generates to a controlling company engaged primarily in manufacturing. This provision is not contained in the House amendment. The substitute includes the substance of the Senate provision modified to afford administrative flexibility.

Under sections 2 (a) (3) and (4) of the House amendment the Commission is directed to exempt, by order, from the definitions of "electric utility company" and "gas utility company" companies satisfying specified requirements. The substitute agreed to permits action with respect to classes of companies, and by rules or regulations.

Under section 2 (a) (11) of the Senate bill, an "affiliate" of a specified company may be a company 5 percent or more of whose outstanding voting securities are owned, held, or controlled by such specified company. This provision is not in the House amendment. It is included in the substitute agreed to, but "held" is changed to "held with power to vote." Under the Senate bill (but not under the House amendment) any officer or director of any company which is an affiliate of the specified company, under clause (A), is an affiliate. This provision is included in the substitute agreed to.

The House amendment (sec. 2 (a) (26)) defines an "integrated public-utility system" and this definition is included in the substitute agreed to in conference with a modification which would make it include, in the case of electric utility companies, a system consisting of one or more units of "generating plants and/or transmission lines and/or distributing facilities" instead of "generating plants and/or transmission lines and distributing facilities", and with the further modification that such a system, in the case of either gas or electric companies, is to be one not so large as to impair "the effectiveness of regulation."

Section 4

Section 4 (a) of both the Senate bill and the House amendment provide that it shall be unlawful for a holding company, after a specified date, to do certain acts without having registered. Among the acts specified in the Senate bill (and not included in the House amendment) is "(6) to own, hold, or control any security of any subsidiary company" of the particular holding company if such subsidiary company does any of the other acts specified in the subsection. This provision is included in the substitute agreed upon, modified so that the words "own, hold, or control" are changed to "own, control, or hold with power to vote", to make the language conform to that used in several places in section 2.

Section 5

Section 5 (b) of both the Senate bill and the House amendment contain requirements as to information to be contained in registration statements. Paragraphs (E) and (F) of the Senate subsection require the giving of certain information, including the names of security holders owning, holding, or controlling 1 percent or more of any class of security, remuneration of more than $10,000 per annum to persons other than officers and directors. These paragraphs are not included in the substitute agreed upon, since the Commission can obtain the information under the general authority contained in paragraph (3). There is also included in the substitute paragraph (K) from the Senate bill, providing for the furnishing of profit and loss statements for not more than 5 preceding fiscal years. The substitute contains another provison from the Senate bill expressly authorizing the Commission to permit the filing of a preliminary registration statement without complying with the requirements of subsection (b), but requiring a complete statement within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Commission.

Section 6

Section 6 (a) of both the Senate bill and the House amendment require Commission approval to be obtained for the issuance and sale of securities and the exercise of privileges and rights to alter priorities, preferences, voting power, or other rights of holders of outstanding securities. The Senate subsection applies to any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, while the House amendment applies to any registered holding company and to any subsidiary company thereof which is a public-utility company the issuance of whose securities is not subject to regulation by a State commission or State securities commission. The substitute agreed upon is the language of the Senate bill, which is qualified by a provision in section 6 (b) which directs the Commission to exempt the issue of securities by subsidiary companies in cases where holding-company abuses are unlikely to exist.

The Senate bill (sec. 6 (c)) makes it unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof to sell, or offer for sale, from house to house, any security of such registered holding company. This provision is carried in the substitute agreed upon, combined with section 6 (c) of the House amendment and modified somewhat so as more nearly to express the policy intended.

Section 7

Under section 7 (c) of the Senate bill the Commission may not approve the issue or sale of bonds by a registered holding company unless such bonds are secured by a first lien on physical property of the company, or by an obligation of a subsidiary company thereof secured by a first lien on physical property of such subsidiary company. Under the House amendment such bonds must be adequately secured by a lien on assets of the holding company. The substitute agreed upon accepts the Senate provision with an amendment permitting such bonds to be secured by other assets of a type and character considered by the Commission to be appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

The House amendment contains a paragraph (sec. 7 (c) (3)) exempting from the restrictions as to the issue and sale of securities any security the issuance of which was authorized by the company before January 1, 1935. The substitute agreed upon retains this provision, but it is modified to apply only to a security the issuance of which was authorized before January 1, 1935, and which the Commission authorizes as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

The Senate bill provides (sec. 7 (f)) that securities are to be issued subject to terms and conditions to be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Commission, and goes into detail with respect to what such terms and conditions may require. The House amendment contains no such provision. The substitute agreed to in conference authorizes the Commission to prescribe terms and conditions to assure compliance with the conditions specified in the section.

The Senate bill provides (sec. 7 (g)) that a declaration regarding the issuance of a security shall not become effective, if subject to the jurisdiction of a State commission or State securities commission, unless it is shown that applicable State laws have been complied with. This provision is not contained in the House amendment. The substitute agreed to contains a provision similar to that contained in the Senate bill, modified somewhat for the purpose of relieving the Commission of some of the administrative burden involved.

Section 9 (a) of the Senate bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof to acquire any securities or capital assets of another company, unless with the approval of the Commission under section 10. The House amendment contains the same provision except that the prohibition applies also to acquiring "any other interest in any business." The substitute agreed upon contains the House provision.

Section 9 (a) of the Senate bill also makes it unlawful, except with the approval of the Commission, under section 10, for any person who is an affiliate, under clause (A) or (B) of paragraph (11) of subsection (a) of section 2, of a registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, to acquire any securities or capital assets of such company of which it is an affiliate; and such provision also makes it unlawful for any person (by use of the mails or instrumentalities of interstate commerce) to acquire any security of any public-utility company, if such person is an affiliate, under clause (A) or (B) of paragraph (11) of subsection (a) of section 2, of such company, or will, by virtue of such acquisition, become such an affiliate. These provisions are not included in the House amendment. The substitute agreed upon in conference dropped the first provision above mentioned of the Senate bill and accepted the second provision with an amendment making the provision applicable only in case of a person who is or becomes an affiliate under clause (A) of paragraph (11) of subsection (a) of section 2 of more than one public utility or holding company.

Section 10

Section 10 (a) specifies information to be included in an application for the approval of the acquisition of securities or capital assets ("utility assets" in the House amendment) and in the Senate bill (but not in the House amendment) requires profit-and-loss statements of the company for not more than the 5 preceding fiscal years. This requirement is included in the substitute agreed upon in conference.

Under subsection (c) of the Senate section the Commission is directed not to approve the acquisition of securities or capital assets of a public-utility or holding company unless (1) such acquisition will serve the public interest by simplifying the corporate structure of the holding company system, or (2) the applicant has obtained from the Federal Power Commission a certificate that the acquisition will serve the public interest by tending toward the economical and efficient development of a geographically and economically integrated public-utility system. Under the House amendment the Commission is not to approve the acquisition unless it will serve the public interest by tending toward the economical and efficient development of an integrated public-utility system; and the requirement of approval is not to apply to the acquisition of securities or utility assets of a public-utility company operating exclusively outside the United States. The substitute agreed upon accepts the House provisions, with amendments which authorize the Commission to disapprove acquisitions detrimental to the proper functioning of a holding company system or detrimental to the carrying out of the provisions of section 11. These amendments were accepted in lieu of the corresponding provisions in section 8 of the Senate bill.

Section 11

Under the Senate bill (sec. 11 (b)) the Commission is directed to require, after January 1, 1938, each holding company system to be reduced to one geographically and economically integrated public-utility system and such business as is reasonably incidental, or economically necessary or appropriate, to the operations of such system. The Commission is further directed to require, after January 1, 1938, holding companies and their subsidiaries to be reorganized or dissolved when the Commission finds undue or unnecessary complications in the structure of the holding company system, or unfair or inequitable distribution of voting power, or certain conditions detrimental to the proper functioning of a single geographically and economically integrated public-utility system. The Commission is also directed to require, promptly after January 1, 1940, each registered holding company to take such steps as the Commission finds necessary or appropriate to make such company cease to be a holding company; this provision being subject to the exception that a company may be permitted to be a holding company in the first degree where the existence of the holding company relation is necessary, under State or foreign law, for the operations of a geographically and economically integrated public-utility system serving an economic region in a limited area.

Under the House amendment (sec. 11 (b)) the Commission is directed to require each holding-company system to reduce its operations to one integrated public-utility system (a defined term meaning substantially the same as "geographically and economically integrated public-utility system", the term used in the Senate bill), with the exception, however, that if the Commission finds that it is not necessary in the public interest to limit the operations of the system to one integrated public-utility system, it is to require such action as is necessary to limit the operations of the system to such number of integrated public-utility systems as it finds may be included in the holding-company system consistently with the public interest. The Commission may not, however, require divestment of interests in or control over persons or property other than a public-utility company or the utility assets of a public-utility company unless it finds that such interest or control may not be retained consistently with the public interest, and may not require divestment of interests in or control over persons doing business exclusively outside the United States or property located outside the United States. The Commission is under the duty (sec. 11 (c)) to compel this action after January 1, 1938.

The substitute agreed to, with respect to the question of integrated public-utility systems, provides that the Commission shall as soon as practicable after January 1, 1938, require each holding-company system to be limited to a single integrated public-utility system and to such other businesses as are reasonably incidental or economically necessary or appropriate to the operation of such integrated system, but includes an exception. This exception provides that the Commission shall permit additional integrated systems, if it finds that (1) each such additional system cannot be operated as an independent system without the loss of substantial economies which can be secured by the retention of control by the holding company, (2) all such additional systems are located in a restricted area, and (3) the continued combination of such systems under the control of one holding company is not so large as to impair the advantages of localized management, efficient operation, or the effectiveness of regulation. The Commission is given express authority to permit as reasonably incidental or economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of an integrated system the retention of any business, other than a public utility as such, which the Commission finds necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers and not detrimental to the proper functioning of the system.

The substitute contains a provision which is not in the House amendment but which deals with the same subject matter as paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of the Senate bill, directing the Commission to require each registered holding company and each subsidiary company thereof to take steps necessary to insure that the corporate structure or continued existence of any company in the holding-company system does not unduly or unnecessarily complicate the structure or unfairly or inequitably distribute voting power among security holders of the holding-company system.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of the Senate bill is not included in the substitute, but there is included a mandatory provision requiring the Commission to cause each holding company, and each company in the same holding-company system, to take such action as the Commission finds necessary in order that such holding company shall cease to be a holding company with respect to each of its subsidiary companies which itself has a subsidiary company which is a holding company. The effect of this is to require holding companies to cease to be holding companies beyond the second degree. The substitute contains another relaxation from the Senate provision in that it provides that the Commission may not require any change in the corporate structure or existence of any company which is not a holding company or of any company whose principal business is that of a public-utility company, except where such action is for the purpose of fairly and equitably distributing voting power among the security holders of such company.

It may be observed that section 11 (b) in both the Senate bill and the House amendment contemplates the reestablishment of the advantages of localized management in the operating utility industry and the consequently necessary break-down of the control of large holding companies over geographically scattered operating utility companies. Section 11 of both bills, therefore, authorizes the Securities and Exchange Commission to require a holding company to limit its control over operating utility companies to one integrated public-utility system.

To this limitation the Senate bill, like the House bill, allows, in section 3, exceptions in the case of a holding company whose interests are essentially intrastate and in the case of a holding company whose interests are essentially foreign. The House amendment grants what amounts to a further exception when the Commission finds that more than one integrated system may be included in a holding-company system "consistently with the public interest."

The conference substitute meets the House desire to provide for further flexibility by the statement of additional definite and concrete circumstances under which exception should be made to the norm of one integrated system. Definite exceptions not only provide a satisfactory constitutional standard but also an effective standard for the guidance of both the Securities and Exchange Commission and those holding companies which wish voluntarily to comply with congressional policy.

The substitute, therefore, makes provision to meet the situation where a holding company can show a real economic need on the part of additional integrated systems for permitting the holding company to keep these additional systems under localized management with a principal integrated system. Under such circumstances the Commission is directed to permit the holding company to retain control of such additional systems, even though not physically integrated with the principal system, provided all such integrated systems are located in the same State or States, or in adjoining States or a contiguous foreign country.

The remaining provisions of section 11 in both the Senate bill and the House amendment are mainly administrative provisions outlining the court procedure for the enforcement of the Commission's orders under this section and procedure for voluntary action on the part of the companies to comply with the requirements of the section. The Senate provisions spell out this court procedure in much more detail than the House provisions. The substitute provisions follow the Senate bill with certain amendments and omissions.

Section 12

Section 12 (g) of the Senate bill makes it unlawful for any affiliate of any public-utility company, by use of the mails or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or for any affiliate of a public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce, by any means, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any transaction not otherwise unlawful under the title, with any such company of which it is an affiliate, in contravention of the regulations of the Commission regarding reports, accounts, costs, maintenance of competitive conditions, and other matters. This provision is not contained in the House amendment. The substitute contains this provision with a slight amendment.

Section 13

Section 13 of both the Senate bill and the House amendment provide for regulation of the making and performance of service, sales, and construction contracts. The Senate bill would require the setting up of mutual-service companies (to be approved by the Federal Power Commission) for the performance of such contracts for the public-utility companies of any holding company system, such contracts to be performed at cost by such mutual-service companies; and such public-utility companies would not be permitted to enter into such contracts with any other company engaged in the business of performing such contracts if such business is conducted as a cooperative, mutual, or nonprofit enterprise, or with any other company in the same holding company system. The House amendment is similar to the Senate bill in that it prohibits any registered holding company from performing such contracts for public-utility companies in the same holding company system. It omits all provisions regarding mutual service companies, and administration is under the Securities and Exchange Commission. It provides that it shall be unlawful for any subsidiary company of a registered holding company to enter into or perform such contracts with any other company in the same holding company system in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission prescribes as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, regarding the consideration to be paid, and the other terms of such contracts, accounts, reports, costs, competitive bidding, disclosure of interest, and similar matters. The substitute agreed upon is a compromise which is intended to require intra-system contracts to be performed efficiently and economically at cost, fairly and equitably allocated among the companies served, and provides machinery for the setting up of mutual service companies, although the inflexible statutory requirement of the Senate bill that all such contracts be performed by mutual service companies was omitted.

The Senate bill (sec. 13 (c)) contains a provision, not contained in the House amendment, subjecting to Federal Power Commission control the entering into and performance of service, sales, and construction contracts by affiliates of public-utility companies or affiliates of holding companies or their subsidiary companies, by which any such affiliate is to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any such company of which it is an affiliate. The substitute agreed upon gives the Securities and Exchange Commission power to prevent the circumvention of the act by use of affiliates.

Section 15

Section 15 (e) of the Senate bill authorizes the prescribing of uniform methods of keeping accounts required to be kept under subsections (a) to (d), inclusive, of the section, specifying that the methods prescribed may relate to the manner in which the cost of assets shall be shown, the methods of classifying and segregating accounts, and the manner in which cost-accounting procedures shall be maintained. This provision, which is not contained in the House amendment, was substantially agreed to in the substitute.

Section 17

Section 17 (c) of the Senate bill contains a provision, not contained in the House amendment, declaring that no registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof shall have, as an officer or director, any executive officer, or other official or representative of a bank, trust company, investment banker, or banking association or firm, or of a corporation a majority of whose voting stock is owned by any bank, trust company, investment banker, or banking association or firm. The substitute agreed upon in conference accepts the provision of the Senate bill with an amendment giving the Commission power by rules and regulations to make appropriate exemptions.

Section 30

Section 30 of the Senate bill authorizes the Federal Power Commission to make studies and investigations of public-utility companies, to territories served or which can be served by public-utility companies, and the manner in which the same are or can be served, to determine the sizes, types, and locations of public-utility companies which do or can operate most efficiently and economically in the public interest, in the interest of investors and consumers, and in furtherance of a wider and more economical use of gas and electric energy; and the Federal Power Commission is directed to make public from time to time its recommendations as to the type and size of public-utility systems which can best promote and harmonize the interests of the public, the investor, and the consumer. The Commission is further authorized and directed to make a study of the functions and activities of investment trusts and investment companies and to report the results of its study to Congress on or before January 4, 1936. No such provisions are included in the House amendment. The substitute was agreed upon with an amendment substituting the Securities and Exchange Commission for the Federal Power Commission.

TITLE II

The Senate bill included national monuments and national parks in the definition of "reservations" in section 201 amending section 3 of the Federal Water Power Act, but the House amendment excluded national monuments and national parks in conformity with the act of 1921. While the definition of "licensee" is identical in each bill, a clerical error appears to have been made in this provision. It is clear that States and municipalities may be licensed under section 4 of the Federal Water Power Act and hence come within the definition of "licensee." In this section and in section 202, the adjective "reasonable" was added by the House to the actual legitimate original cost of licensed projects. The Commission has interpreted the Federal Water Power Act as requiring that all costs allowed must have been reasonably incurred. In view of this long-continued interpretation, it is felt that the inclusion of the word "reasonable" as a further qualification on the cost of licensed projects might at this late date cast doubt upon the Commission interpretation. For that reason, the amendment of the House has not been adopted in the substitute.

The Senate bill provided that the Commission upon its own motion could order an investigation of any occupancy of, or evidenced intention to occupy, "for the purpose of developing electric power", public lands or navigable and other streams, and the words just quoted have been included in the substitute in section 202 amending section 4 (g). In the same subsection the House amendment refers to the "water" resources of the region, and the Senate bill to the "water power resources of the Nation." The substitute adopts the phrase, "water-power resources of the region."

In section 7 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended by section 205 of the bill, the Federal Power Commission is directed to consider the development of the "water-power resources of the region" in which hydroelectric projects are to be located. In the House amendment this is broadened to consideration of development of the "water resources of the region", and the broader language is incorporated in the conference substitute.

Section 206 (e) of the Senate bill requires approval of the Secretary of the Interior or of the appropriate Indian tribe in fixing annual charges for the use of public lands or lands within an Indian reservation. The House amendment did not carry this provision, but it has been incorporated in the conference substitute.

Section 23 (b), as carried in section 210 of the Senate bill, provided that it should be unlawful for any person "for the purpose of developing electric power", to construct dams or other works on navigable waters or public lands or "to utilize" surplus water or water power from any Government dam except under a license or other authority granted prior to 1920. The words quoted were not in the House amendment, but are incorporated in the conference substitute, with the addition that works "incidental thereto" come within the prohibition.

Section 213 adds parts II and III to the present Federal Water Power Act. In the discussion below references are to sections carried in these two new parts.

PART II

The Senate bill in section 201(a) contained a somewhat more lengthy declaration of policy than the House amendment, the only material difference being that the House amendment contained no reference to "generation" of electric energy which appeared in the Senate bill. The conference substitute follows the language of the House amendment but inserts a clause relating to generation to the extent regulation thereof is provided for in this part and the part next following. The House amendment and conference substitute also make reference to the "sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce" which reference did not appear in the Senate bill. The same general differences between the Senate bill and the House amendment also appear in section 201(b) and the language of the House amendment has been followed with a clarifying phrase added to remove any doubt as to the Commission's jurisdiction over facilities used for the generation and local distribution of electric energy to the extent provided in other sections of this part and the part next following.

The House amendment to section 202(a) constituted in part a restatement in modified language of similar provisions of the Senate bill. The House amendment also authorized the Commission to modify the boundaries of regional districts when in its judgment the public interest so required. The House amendment placed a positive duty upon the Commission to promote and encourage voluntary interconnection. The House amendment with minor modifications is adopted in the conference substitute.

The Senate bill by subsection (c) of section 202 authorized the Commission to require interconnection for emergency purposes. The House amendment authorized emergency interstate interconnection or permanent interstate interconnection for emergency use only without subjecting such companies to the other provisions of the act. The conference substitute contains both provisions.

The Senate bill, section 203 (a), provided that a public utility could not dispose of its interstate facilities or any part thereof of a value in excess of $25,000 without Commission order, and in the following subsection required a Commission order for the acquisition of any security of any other public utility. The House amendment combined these two subsections, required Commission approval where the value is $100,000 or more, and required a hearing upon any application for such approval. The conference substitute follows the House amendment but reduces the amount of the exemption to $50,000 and requires opportunity for hearing rather than compulsory hearing in every instance. The Senate bill authorized the Commission to attach conditions which would avoid the creation of relationships detrimental to the public interests or the interests of investors or consumers. These two latter provisions were omitted from the House amendment. The conference substitute omits the former but adopts the latter provision.

Subsection (h) of section 204 in the House amendment exempted from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 and sections 12 and 13 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 security issues passed upon by the Federal Power Commission under this act. This was not in the Senate bill, and the conference substitute simply permits filing of duplicate copies of reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In section 305, the House amendment omits licensees from the provisions relating to officials dealing in securities and interlocking directorates. In subsection (b) the House amendment adds to the prohibited class of interlocking directorates, officers, and directors of banks underwriting or participating in the marketing of securities of a public utility or similar positions in electrical equipment supply companies.

In subsection (a) of section 318, in which conflicts of jurisdiction between the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Power Commission under this bill are resolved in favor of the former, the House amendment adds to such matters of conflict the assumption of obligation or liability in respect of a security. The conference substitute is enlarged to include any conflict arising under this bill.

Subsection (b) of section 318, in the House amendment, excluded Federal regulation, as provided in the two new parts added to the Power Act, of any matter as to which there is authority in a State commission. This subsection in the Senate bill provided that an interstate public-utility company shall not by this act be relieved from compliance with State laws. The conference substitute omits this subsection.

SAM RAYBURN,
GEORGE HUDDLESTON,
CLARENCE LEA,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House. I know how important time is at this hour of the day in the last day of the session. Members of the House have had opportunity to have in their possession for the last 2 hours a copy of this conference report. It is noted on the first page that it is the committee print, uncorrected and unrevised. However, I have looked over a revised copy of this matter and every change that has been made in the report that lies on the Speaker's table is noted in the copy of the committee print, except for two things to which I shall call attention.

On page 16 in subparagraph 2 of section 9 (a) in the committee print occurs the word "or (B)" after the word "clause (A)." The word "or (B)" should be stricken out. Then on page 24 of the committee print in subsection (i) occur the words "Federal Power Commission." Members of the conference committee will remember that in title I, wherever the term "Federal Power Commission" was used, it was agreed that it should be stricken out, and "the Commission" used, which means the Security Exchange Commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is a matter of punctuation. On page 3, section 2, paragraph (3), in "(B)" there are two semicolons. They seem to me to disjoint the paragraph. It seems to me those semicolons ought to be commas. Then there is a comma between the two semicolons which does not hook up exactly right. I find that paragraph confusing the way it is punctuated.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is too late to do anything about that, if there is anything the matter with it. The Senate has also filed its report. This report I think is pretty well understood by the Members of the House.

I do want to say this for the conferees on the part of the House and also on the part of the Senate, especially after we had our fight here in the House the other day, when some matters which were highly controversial were settled. I have never seen a finer spirit of cooperation among conferees in my life, with a disposition to give and take. They were real conferees to the extent that I think the House has brought back a fair bill and a workable bill, one that contains the best meat which is in the Senate and the House bills.

I reserve the remainder of my time, because I want to say a word in closing, and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to delay consideration of this conference report. I realize that probably every Member of this House has his mind made up as to how he is going to vote, but I shall take 1 or 2 minutes to express my last thoughts on this important legislation, which has been before Congress for many months.

Under the provisions of section 11 we declare to the country that Congress is embarking on a new economic policy in relation to industry and business, a policy which goes to the extreme length of Government dictatorship over private industry and business, a policy which permits Federal authority to dissolve and liquidate the property of American citizens, which property was acquired lawfully, without any regard to the losses those citizens may sustain. It is hard for me to believe that this Congress approves of any such unjust, un-American policy as this, which will bring loss to millions of citizens who have invested their money in utility securities.

If section 11 of both bills had been stricken out, and the other part adopted, we would then have enacted into law the most drastic regulatory provisions over industry and business that had ever been adopted by the American Congress. However, section 11 goes far beyond regulations, and does permit destruction.

Before I sit down, I must pay my compliments to the chairman of the committee, Mr. RAYBURN. I believe every Member of the House realizes the tremendous pressure which has been brought to bear upon him as chairman of this committee. If my memory serves me right, it was during the first week of February that the committee took this bill under consideration, and after months of public hearings and executive sessions, we brought the bill to the House, and during all that time, until the vote was finally taken, I think everyone must realize the tremendous pressure that was brought to bear upon the chairman of this committee.

Through it all, he has been a gentleman. He has been a man. Surely, we have not agreed on all things, but when we disagreed he has met us with a smile. I could not let this opportunity go by without paying my compliments to the chairman of this committee.

I also want to pay my compliments to the other members of the committee, especially to my Republican colleagues, who have assisted me in every way they could in my humble effort, which has been unsuccessful, I can see, to strike out the destructive features of this bill. I am for regulation. I do not believe we can go too far in strict and drastic regulation of the utility industry.

I do not want to take my seat until I pay my respects and compliments to one member of this committee, one member who has exhibited more courage than I have ever seen exhibited by any Member of Congress since I have been a Member of this body. Laboring under physical handicap at all times, yet he stood on this floor and expressed, without fear or favor, his honest, sincere convictions, and fought for a principle that he believed was right. I cannot help but believe that every Member on the Democratic side, even though they disagree with him, will hold him not only in admiration and esteem, but today they love him because he is a man. I refer to our friend and colleague, Mr. HUDDLESTON, of Alabama. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, at this propitious moment I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, Mr. COOPER, for his kindness and generosity.

It is my purpose to say only a few words on this report. I do so only because it seems incumbent upon me at this time.

This bill has two purposes. First, to regulate the holding companies, and, second, to limit their activities and to deal with their corporate structures. With the first of those purposes I am in hearty accord. The regulation of holding companies has been only too long delayed. Had this bill proposed regulation merely, reasonable, fair, and proper regulation, I feel confident there would not have been 50 votes against it in the House and it would have been passed long ago.

The second of these purposes to which I have referred is expressed in section 11 of the bill. The first of the purposes—regulation—was to redeem the pledge of the Democratic platform of 1932. As to the second purpose, it was an afterthought, and had no proper place in any regulatory bill. The bill as originally drawn had no section 11 and there was no purpose in it to deal either with the possessions or with the structures of the holding companies. It was designed merely to regulate them. As a regulatory measure it was incredibly drastic. I am conservative in saying that it was, and this bill as now presented is the most drastic and extreme measure of regulation ever offered in an American legislative body.

I have joined in the report of the conferees. In doing so, as far as the provisions of section 11 are concerned, I was constrained by the instruction given by the House. Never under any other circumstances would I have agreed to any such provisions as are carried in that section. [Applause.]

The regulatory provisions of this bill are drastic, far more extreme than they should be. I would never have agreed to some of the provisions found in the regulatory part of the bill had I not felt that the House by instructing the adoption of section 11 had swallowed the camel, and that it would be foolish on my part to expect the House to sustain me in straining at some of the repulsive gnats that I found in the regulatory sections. [Applause and laughter.]

The Members want to adjourn. I want to adjourn. We are tired. I am desperately tired. All of us are worn to death. I want to get back to my own green hills of Alabama, where I can be with my friends. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not desire to delay the adjournment of this body. I would not halt it for a moment. So that I signed the conference report for the purpose of enabling this matter to be presented to the House and to be brought to a conclusion, but with no intention whatever of voting for such a bill as was the product of the conference. I could not vote for it in good conscience.

From my point of view, the House stultified itself in instructing the conferees to accept the proposal made on section 11. That I cannot approve. I trust it will not work out as badly as I fear it will. I have had a great deal of experience in life. As the fruit of that experience I have learned that nothing ever turns out as good as its friends hope that it will, nor as bad as those who oppose it fear that it will. I am hoping that my judgment is not accurate in the belief I entertain that this measure will produce serious detrimental consequences to the people of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up the time of the House, but I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] that instead of this measure depriving people of their property, as he suggests, it is going to protect thousands of investors in operating utility companies from being robbed by these utility racketeers.

It is going to help protect the American people who today are being overcharged $1,000,000,000 a year for electric light and power.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] talks about this bill being too extreme. My only objection to it is that it is not extreme enough. I want to wring the hands of these racketeers from the throats of the American people who pay these exorbitant burdens for electric light and power, as well as the ones who are being robbed through the sale of worthless watered stocks.

As I have pointed out, the people of the State of New York are being overcharged more than $127,000,000 a year for electric light and power, and this is not in comparison with T. V. A.'s rates, but is in comparison with Tacoma, Wash., rates, which I shall insert in the RECORD at this point, and which rates are absolutely sound. Tacoma has a public plant worth $23,000,000. Last year that plant had a gross revenue of $1,940,994, and paid $145,575 in taxes; gave the city of Tacoma $200,545 worth of free service; set aside for depreciation $400,053; paid interest on its indebtedness amounting to $435,322, and still made a net profit of $508,190, and at the same time gave to the people of Tacoma the lowest light and power rates in the United States.

In a few years the people of Tacoma will have their plant entirely paid out and can reduce their rates to about one-half of what they are now paying.

According to the Tacoma rates the people of Maine are overcharged $5,229,000 a year.

The people of New Hampshire are overcharged $3,459,000 a year.

The people of Vermont and Rhode Island are overcharged $8,367,000 a year.

The people of Massachusetts are overcharged $37,557,000 a year.

The people of Connecticut are overcharged $14,397,000 a year.

The people of New York are overcharged $127,618,000 a year.

The people of New Jersey are overcharged $39,563,000 a year.

The people of Pennsylvania are overcharged $74,907,000 a year.

The people of Ohio are overcharged $47,529,000 a year.

The people of Indiana are overcharged $19,189,000 a year.

The people of Illinois are overcharged $59,261,000 a year.

The people of Michigan are overcharged $33,768,000 a year.

The people of Wisconsin are overcharged $17,787,000 a year.

The people of Minnesota are overcharged $13,911,000 a year.

The people of Iowa are overcharged $11,808,000 a year.

The people of Missouri are overcharged $20,249,000 a year.

The people of North Dakota are overcharged $1,860,000 a year.

The people of South Dakota are overcharged $2,345,000 a year.

The people of Nebraska are overcharged $6,770,000 a year.

The people of Kansas are overcharged $8,954,000 a year.

The people of Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, and West Virginia are overcharged $24,762,000 a year.

The people of Virginia are overcharged $9,698,000 a year.

The people of North Carolina are overcharged $11,653,000 a year.

The people of South Carolina are overcharged $6,292,000 a year.

The people of Georgia are overcharged $9,900,000 a year.

The people of Florida are overcharged $8,465,000 a year.

The people of Kentucky are overcharged $8,398,000 a year.

The people of Tennessee are overcharged $10,201,000 a year.

The people of Alabama are overcharged $6,344,000 a year.

The people of Mississippi are overcharged $4,117,000 a year.

The people of Arkansas are overcharged $4,211,000 a year.

The people of Louisiana are overcharged $7,477,000 a year.

The people of Oklahoma are overcharged $8,946,000 a year.

The people of Texas are overcharged $24,922,000 a year.

The people of Montana and Utah are overcharged $6,589,000 a year.

The people of Idaho are overcharged $2,789,000 a year.

The people of Wyoming are overcharged $1,323,000 a year.

The people of Colorado are overcharged $6,461,000 a year.

The people of Arizona and New Mexico are overcharged $4,344,000 a year.

The people of Nevada are overcharged $1,046,000 a year.

The people of Washington are overcharged $11,661,000 a year.

The people of Oregon are overcharged $6,510,000 a year.

The people of California are overcharged $50,947,000 a year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] but call attention to the fact that the people of the State of Pennsylvania are overcharged $74,907,000 a year; the people of Alabama, the home State of Mr. HUDDLESTON are overcharged $6,344,000 a year and the people of the State of Ohio, Mr. COOPER's State, are overcharged $47,529,000 a year. In Indiana, the home State of Mr. PETTENGILL, they are overcharged $19,187,000; in Georgia, $9,900,000.

This bill will help to bring relief to the people who bear these enormous burdens, and to protect them from such outrages in the years to come. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I was one of 59 Members of the House who day before yesterday voted for the compromise in connection with the holding company legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to read a telegram received yesterday by myself, as well as by the other 58 Members, from Mr. Hugh S. Magill, president of the American Federation of Utility Investors. The telegram reads:

This is a telegram addressed to those Members of Congress who previously had voted their convictions on the utility bill and who yesterday reversed their positions. We appeal on behalf of millions of the American electorate who have invested their savings in utility securities that you return to your previous support of the rights of your investor constituents. Your vote of yesterday can be interpreted by investors only as surrender to political expediency after your convictions had already been publicly recorded, not once but several times. We also appeal to the fair-mindedness and political courage which you demonstrated three times previously to reassert your position and place principle above politics, to hold fast to utility regulation, and to oppose utility destruction.

Such a message is unfair and is rightfully resented by those of us who have felt our position in regard to our opposition to the "death sentence" has been consistent throughout. May I say in the very few seconds remaining to me that since the first I have favored regulation, and the strictest type of regulation, for public-utility holding companies. I voted against the death clause in the original bill that was stricken from the House measure, and then I supported the House legislation. I sincerely wanted, as I believe the large majority of the membership of this House wanted, to see a bill enacted that would regulate and not ruin, yet still protect the investing public. I continued to vote against the death clause on subsequent roll calls.

The compromise which I supported allows holding companies their day in court; they are to be given a hearing, they are given an opportunity for judicial review. I consistently opposed the destruction of this great industry and loss to the investor, who even in the opinion of David Lawrence, foe of this administration, will not be affected under the new bill. I believe by voting for the compromise that we will give this great public-utility industry a chance to reform itself from within and enjoy the confidence of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. I have not taken very much time of the House on this important bill and would not say anything now had not the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] read the telegram from the superlobbyist, Magill, whom I doubt has a single dollar invested in the bonds or stocks of any of these utilities. He so testified, I believe, before our committee, and I am satisfied that he is nothing more nor less than a professional lobbyist who has obtained a great deal of money from people by misrepresentation. I think a telegram from a publicity-seeking man of his caliber never should have been read on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman evidently is not disturbed about Mr. Magill's criticism and his appeal to put principle about politics.

Mr. SABATH. I assure the gentleman that I am not, but the people generally do not know who he is. May I say for those unacquainted with this man Magill that he has had a checkered career. At one time he was field secretary of the National Educational Association. Then, I understand, he was secretary of the National Editorial Association and, it is my further understanding, that he was dismissed from both. I do not know what his occupation, if any, was, but as he testified on July 25, 1935, before the Rules Committee, which has been investigating the $10,000,000 utility holding lobby, he organized the American Federation of Utility Investors to conduct an organized propaganda against this legislation and through clever methods obtained from the unfortunate stockholders the sum of $50,000 on the pretense that he is protecting their interests. How much more he has received from the holding companies or the corporations, we have not as yet been able to ascertain. However, he admitted on the stand that he prepared many articles, statements, pamphlets, and letters which carried the most scurrilous and contemptible attacks upon the President and some of the membership of this House.

No respectable man or man of honor would stoop to such a low level. Personally, I do not have any special regard for the dollar-grabbing publicist or lobbyist, but never have I had more contempt for one of either kind and never to the extent in which I hold this man. I know that even the Members of the House who voted against the "death sentence", which he so viciously assailed with the intent to defeat the legislation, resented, and resent now, his unmanly attacks. I only regret that time will not allow me to give you this man Magill's complete biography, but I commend to your attention his testimony before the Committee on Rules, in which testimony he exhibited himself in the true light as a contemptible blatherskite of the first water. He has undoubtedly proved himself to be as untrustworthy, as wicked, and shamefully selfish as any of the other superlobbyists who have infested the Capital. However, as soon as the Committee on Rules resumes its investigation I shall have him recalled and go more fully into his various activities.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is the right of any man to criticize any legislation; but I resent and condemn a man who has no interest in a matter who, for a few paltry thousand dollars, will lend himself to assail men who honestly try to pass legislation in the interest of the people. And especially do I resent and condemn men who, deliberately and without reason, attack the President of the United States.

Unfortunately, Magill has not alone been guilty of disseminating these vicious attacks with the intent to defeat this legislation, but beyond question he is the arch slanderer and vilifier among all the clique of vicious propagandists and lobbyists that have come to my notice. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, in that my time is so limited, I want to ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to Wendell L. Willkie by one of my constituents, Mr. C. T. Graydon, who is an outstanding attorney in my district, be read in my time.

This letter so completely expresses my views on this most important subject that I am sure that I would not be able in the time allotted me to express my views nearly so well as they are expressed in this letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUGUST 21, 1935.

Mr. WENDELL L. WILLKIE,
President Commonwealth & Southern Corporation,
20 Pine Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I received the excerpts from the debate on the Wheeler-Rayburn utilities bill and also your letter, and I presume these things are being paid for out of the money coming from profits of the stockholders. I wish to register my protest against the use of money of the Commonwealth & Southern in any such manner and to state that I consider the acts on the part of the utility companies in attempting to influence the congressional legislature to be unwarranted and an illegal interference with the operation of the Congress of this country.

The records of the Federal Trade Commission show that the amount of debentures issued by the various utility companies of this country over a period far exceed the fixed capital stock of the entire utility holdings. The disclosures before the investigating committee of the National Congress show why for the last few years the stockholders and holders of bonds have not been paid dividends or interest on the obligations. I consider that the practice of watering stock and writing up values, which has been so prevalent among many utility companies, to be an outrageous practice which should not only be condemned by every right-thinking man, but should be stopped by governmental interference if necessary.

Many widows and orphans in my territory have utility securities which have not paid dividends and will never pay dividends, in my opinion, and this hue and cry which is being put up about the loss of their property is an attempt to lock the barn after the horse is gone. I do not know the set-up of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the criticism which I am making generally of the utility corporations may not apply to the corporation in which I own stock but the history of all utilities to date is that all have engaged, more or less, in practices of this kind, and I, as a right-thinking American citizen, condemn such practices. I favor the Wheeler-Rayburn bill for the following reasons:

1. I disagree with Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam, and Roberts; and I believe that the bill is constitutional in that it is an attempt to regulate corporations which are engaging in practices detrimental to the interest of the people at large.

2. I feel that a large number of the securities already issued are worthless and that the widows and orphans will never receive any benefit from such securities, and I am in favor of passing a law that will prevent this occurring in the future.

3. I am in favor of the bill because it was found necessary, at least in some instances, to send fake telegrams, publish newspaper stories which were found not founded in fact, and make statements which were admittedly to arouse passion and prejudice to defeat the bill.

4. I do not believe that numerous holding companies in one organization bode good for the country and those who own stock in the corporation.

5. I therefore have not written my Congressmen against the bill, but have written them in favor of the bill, and I expect to send each of them a copy of this letter for their information.

Yours truly,

C. T. GRAYDON.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I suppose that I have received over 5,000 letters and telegrams from my constituents opposing the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. The great majority of these are form letters and telegrams dictated, written, and—I suppose—sent in by someone other than those whose names are signed thereto.

My friends, I am serving my eighth term in Congress, having been reelected in each instance over from one to two opponents. It is my belief that I have the confidence of my people and have received their support because they know that I am honest, hard working, and that I am standing for and voting for their best interest at all times. I do not believe that there is a Member on the floor of this House that is more deeply concerned about the welfare of the widows and orphans, including the great masses of the people, than am I. I have endeavored to be fair to every line of business and every line of industry in my district during my services in Congress. The serious condition of the country at the time when President Roosevelt took charge, no doubt, was brought about because the administrations serving prior to the election of Mr. Roosevelt and the Congress failed to put a stop to the plundering and the robbing of the people by the various well-organized and well-financed groups of this country. The failure on the part of those in charge, as stated, has permitted the centralization of the wealth of the country in the hands of a few people, while millions of our honest, hard working, and innocent people have been denied a fair standard of living.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, there is so much in the present bill that ought to become law now that it is very difficult for me to decide what my vote ought to be, in view of the fact that I entertain a very sincere conviction that part of the bill ought not to become law and will be very detrimental to the country.

Now, let us forget that this is a holding-company bill entirely. I do not suppose many of us have a passion or prejudice against the operating companies of the Nation. The part I object to and which I think will seriously curtail expansion, the extension of lines and properties and the reemployment of our idle men, is found in section 11 (b), 2, which gives the Commission the power to require every operating company in the Nation that is a part of a holding-company system to be reorganized for the purpose of redistributing its voting power in any way the Commission may lay down. In other words, the Commission may say with reference to the operating companies of the Nation that voting power now vested in common stockholders shall be transferred in whole or in part to preferred stockholders, bondholders, and debenture holders. With the uncertainty existing as to what the Commission will do with reference to laying down what is a fair and equitable distribution of voting power of the securities of the operating companies of the Nation, I do not see who is going to buy them. When the bond houses of America and the agencies that handle the sales of stocks of operating companies and prospective investors finally analyze this bill and realize there is a question mark as to whether the people who buy the operating-company stocks will be permitted to vote these stocks after they buy them, it is difficult for me to see how this industry can get money to go ahead in the next few years. It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I am constrained, much against my will, to vote against the bill.

There are of course two answers which may be made to my argument. One is that the Supreme Court of the United States will hold section 11 unconstitutional. The right to vote stocks lawfully issued under the law of the State in which the company is organized is as much a property right as the stock itself. It is an incident of the stock and gives the stock value. Under the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation", I will stake my professional reputation as a lawyer that the Supreme Court will not permit the Securities Exchange Commission to take from common stock owners their right to vote their stock.

There is another reason why this is unconstitutional under the "hot oil" and Schechter cases recently decided, and that is that there is no definition in the bill of what is a fair or equitable distribution of voting power. This is as bald a delegation of legislative discretion to an administrative agency as the American Congress has ever placed on the statute books. The responsibility will rest on other shoulders than mine, for again flying in the face of the Supreme Court of the United States and giving the administration another black eye from the Supreme Court. The responsibility for that result will not rest upon the Supreme Court but upon those of us here who vote for the bill.

Despite the fact that what we are doing will have no legal effect, nevertheless investors cannot be expected to buy into a lawsuit and gamble their dollars on court decisions. Only speculators will do that, and the result of the bill may transfer the savings of thrift into the pockets of gamblers.

The second answer to my argument is that the Commission will never undertake to enforce this provision of the bill. But as they are not called upon to act for 2½ years the uncertainty as to what they may or may not do in the future will rest not only upon the stocks of the operating companies of the Nation now outstanding but those which otherwise might be issued.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, as I see the bill, you are going to subject the privately owned operating companies of the Nation to financial starvation.

Even if operating-company stocks can be sold with this uncertainty thrown over them the almost inevitable effect will be that with the greater uncertainty and the greater hazard they can be sold only at an increased dividend and interest rate which will be reflected in an increased cost to the consumer of the utility.

You are, therefore, penalizing the consumer whom you want to help to get cheap light and power; you are frightening the investor; and third, and far more important than all, you are making it more difficult for private industry in the utility field to expand its plant and reabsorb the men who have been pounding the pavements of America for the past 3 or 4 years looking for a job.

There are those who believe in public ownership and the nationalization of this industry. I respect their sincerity. But if we are going to embark on that program, let us do so honestly and openly and without subterfuge. Let us not hide behind the hidden meaning of language, whose effect is not yet understood, to accomplish that objective. Let us not subject the privately owned companies of the Nation to slow financial starvation, and thus make public ownership and nationalization inevitable.

For many long weeks I have tried to make this point plain to the Congress. But unfortunately the bill has gone before the country as a holding-company bill, and it has been difficult for the public to understand that it affects the operating companies equally.

Without arguing the merits of the matter at all at this time, let me point out part of the background behind this provision of the bill. We have first the fact that this bill was sponsored in the United States Senate by a gentleman who is known to be in favor of the socialization of the industry and who ran for the office of Vice President of the United States on a platform dedicated to that end in the year 1924. We have, second, the far-flung and gigantic plans for the development of power by the Federal Government—Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee, Bonneville, St. Lawrence River, Passamoquoddy, and several others almost as large—aggregating, as I understand, an investment in the long run of taxpayers' money amounting to between two and three billion dollars. We have, third, P. W. A. loans and outright grants to municipalities and publicly owned plants. We have, fourth, the provision in the Federal Water Power Act of some years ago giving the preference to municipalities, counties, and States to dam our navigable rivers for the purpose of erecting hydroelectric plants. We have, fifth, the appointment announced in the papers yesterday to be a member of the Securities Exchange Commission, which will administer this act, of a gentleman from the Puget Sound district who has been connected with a municipal power and light plant and who is, according to newspaper reports, thoroughly committed to the public ownership and socialization of this industry.

As I say, I am not now arguing the merits of that program. But I would be remiss to my duty if I did not do my full part in calling the attention of my colleagues and the country to the provision in this bill to which I now object as a part of that far-flung program. If with full knowledge of the facts the people of the United States want to embark on that program, well and good. As a Democrat, however, and proud of my party, and elected upon a platform which called for the strict regulation of holding companies, but not the destruction of privately owned operating companies, I shall stand on that platform and keep my implied promise to the people who sent me here to represent them. If we are to destroy the operating companies of the Nation, let us do so by honorable struggle in broad daylight and not by a knife in the dark.

I close by repeating now as my last word on a bill which has occupied my sincerest thought for 7 long months, one paragraph of a speech which I made on the floor of the House on June 28 as follows:

> Dissolved or reorganized, not knowing where the voting power in operating companies is finally to rest, how can any operating company in the United States secure money for its extensions, its improvements, the purchase of heavy machinery, in which the great amount of our unemployment exists, and the reabsorption of millions now on the dole? In the next few years what man will buy common stocks of operating companies, not knowing whether the contract under which he buys and invests his savings will be worth a tinker's darn 3 or 5 years from now? What man will buy operating company common stocks or even continue to hold the common stocks he already possesses with this uncertainty whether he will have a voice in the election of the managers and directors of the business in which his investment is made? If any bill could be written which would more completely hamstring and retard the development and growth of the operating companies of this Nation, than the present bill, it is altogether beyond my imagination.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not entertain the fears of either the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Indiana. We must remember that there are nearly 10,000,000 investors in the stocks of the utilities of this country, and that a vast majority of them are holders of the securities of operating companies and not the holding companies.

Mr. Speaker, this is a drastic regulatory measure. This will cause to cease the operation of many holding companies. I do not believe there are many people, especially within the sound of my voice, who are not perfectly convinced that a great many of the holding companies as they are now set up and as they now operate should go out of business.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good bill. I am glad to have had my little part in it, and I thank those on my committee who have been so kind and courteous to me throughout these long and tiring months, and the membership of the House for the consideration they have given me during its consideration on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the conference report I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 112, not voting 96, as follows:

REVENUE BILL OF 1935

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8974) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany H. R. 8974]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 12, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 10, 13, 14, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Upon net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 12½ per centum.

"$250 upon net incomes of $2,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 13 per centum in addition of such excess.

"$1,940 upon net incomes of $15,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 per centum in addition of such excess.

"$5,440 upon net incomes of $40,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $40,000, 15 per centum in addition of such excess."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment strike out "15½" and insert "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) Section 144 of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That in the case of the payment, after December 31, 1935, of dividends of the class with respect to which a deduction is allowed by section 23 (p), the deduction and withholding provided for in this section shall also apply to 10 per centum of the amount of the payment: Provided further, That the Commissioner, under rules and regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize withholding under this section and section 143 (a) (1) (B), in cases where the taxpayer has a taxable year ending on any other date than December 31, at the rate of 13¾ per centum (and, in the case of payments of dividends with respect to which withholding is required, may authorize such payments to be made without withholding) until the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year which begins after December 31, 1935.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, in line 1 and in line 7, strike out "$1.50" and insert "$1.40"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "(except subsections (f), (g), and (i) thereof)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 109. PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

"(a) Section 351 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year, upon the undistributed adjusted net income of every personal holding company a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

"'(1) 20 per centum of the amount thereof not in excess of $2,000; plus

"'(2) 30 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $100,000; plus

"'(3) 40 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; plus

"'(4) 50 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000; plus

"'(5) 60 per centum of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000,000.'

"(b) Section 351 (b)(2)(C) of such Act is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'and distributions (not in complete or partial liquidation and not a "dividend" as defined in section 115) made during the taxable year out of earnings or profits of such year.'

"(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 110. CORPORATE LIQUIDATIONS

"(a) Section 112 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by adding after paragraph (5) a new paragraph reading as follows:

"'(6) EXCHANGE IN LIQUIDATION.—No gain or loss shall be recognized upon the receipt by a corporation of property (other than money) distributed in complete liquidation of another corporation, if the corporation receiving such property on such exchange was on the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935 and has continued to be at all times until the exchange, in control of such other corporation. As used in this paragraph "complete liquidation" includes any one of a series of distributions by a corporation in complete cancellation or redemption of all its stock in accordance with a plan of liquidation under which the transfer of the property under the liquidation is to be completed within a time specified in the plan, not exceeding five years from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of the series of distributions under the plan. If such transfer of property is not completed within the taxable year the Commissioner may require of the taxpayer, as a condition to the nonrecognition of gain under this paragraph, such bond, or waiver of the statute of limitations on assessment and collection, or both, as he may deem necessary to insure the assessment and collection of the tax if the transfer of the property is not completed in accordance with the plan. This paragraph shall not apply to any liquidation if any distribution in pursuance thereof has been made before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935.'

"(b) Section 112 (c) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out "or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(5), or (6)".

"(c) Section 112 (e) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out "subsection (b) (1) to (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b) (1) to (6)".

"(d) Section 112 (i) of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended by striking out "(4), or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(4), (5), or (6)", and by striking out "(3) or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(3), (5), or (6)".

"(e) The amendments made by this section shall apply only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 20 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 6 to 25, both inclusive, and lines 1 to 16, both inclusive, on page 21, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 202. ESTATE TAX—VALUATION

"(a) Section 302 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"'(j) If the executor so elects upon his return (if filed within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law), the value of the gross estate shall be determined by valuing all the property included therein on the date of the decedent's death as of the date 1 year after the decedent's death, except that (1) property included in the gross estate on the date of death and, within one year after the decedent's death, distributed by the executor (or, in the case of property included in the gross estate under subdivision (c), (d), or (f) of this section, distributed by the trustee under the instrument of transfer), or sold, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, shall be included at its value as of the time of such distribution, sale, exchange, or other disposition, whichever first occurs, instead of its value as of the date 1 year after the decedent's death, and (2) any interest or estate which is affected by mere lapse of time shall be included at its value as of the time of death (instead of the later date) with adjustment for any difference in its value as of the later date not due to mere lapse of time. No deduction under this title of any item shall be allowed if allowance for such item is in effect given by the valuation under this subdivision. Wherever in any other subdivision or section of this title or in Title II of the Revenue Act of 1932, reference is made to the value of property at the time of the decedent's death, such reference shall be deemed to refer to the value of such property used in determining the value of the gross estate. In case of an election made by the executor under this subdivision, then for the purposes of the deduction under section 303 (a) (3) or section 303 (b) (3), any bequest, legacy, devise, or transfer enumerated therein shall be valued as of the date of decedent's death with adjustment for any difference in value (not due to mere lapse of time or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a contingency) of the property as of the date one year after the decedent's death (substituting the date of sale or exchange in the case of property sold or exchanged during such one-year period).'

"(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27 of the Senate engrossed amendments, lines 7 and 8, strike out "after the date this amendment takes effect" and insert "on or after the first day of the second month following the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935"; and on page 29 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 3, strike out "fifteenth" and insert "thirtieth"; and on page 31 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 13 to 17, both inclusive; and on page 32 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 1 to 6, both inclusive.

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The Managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: This amendment proposes increased surtax rates over those imposed by existing law beginning on amounts of surtax net income in excess of $1,000,000. Under existing law the rate on the amount of surtax net income in excess of $1,000,000 is 59 percent. Under the amendment, amounts of surtax net income in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $1,500,000 would be taxed at 60 percent, and the rates would then be increased by suitable graduation until amounts of surtax net income in excess of $10,000,000 would be taxed at 75 percent. Under the House bill, the surtax rates are increased over the rates contained in existing law in the case of surtax net incomes of over $50,000. The rate in the House bill is 31 percent on amounts of surtax net income between $50,000 and $56,000, while under existing law the rate in this bracket is 30 percent. The rates in the House bill are then graduated upward until amounts of surtax net income in excess of $5,000,000 are taxed at 75 percent. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment provides for a graduated income tax on corporations as follows:

Upon net incomes not in excess of $15,000, 12½ percent.

Upon net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes in excess of $40,000 and not in excess of $100,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes in excess of $100,000, 15½ percent in addition of such excess.

The House bill contains the following rates in respect to this tax:

Upon net incomes not in excess of $15,000, 13¼ percent.

Upon net incomes in excess of $15,000, 14¼ percent in addition of such excess.

The House recedes with an amendment substituting the following rates for those proposed in the Senate bill:

Upon net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 12½ percent.

Upon net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 13 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes of $40,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

On amendment no. 3: The House bill provided for a limited deduction in computing net income of contributions to corporations, community chests, etc., organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes. The Senate amendment adds "or the prevention of cruelty to children." The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 4 and 5: These amendments provide that the rate of withholding at the source in the case of foreign corporations after December 31, 1935, shall be 15½ percent instead of 13¾. The House recedes with an amendment in each case making the rate 15 percent.

On amendment no. 6: Under existing law, which was not changed in this respect by the House bill, corporations, both domestic and foreign, are allowed a deduction, in computing net income, of dividends received from domestic corporations subject to income tax (except dividends received from a China Trade Act corporation or from certain corporations taxable on only gross income sources within the United States because of receiving a large percentage of their gross income from sources within a possession of the United States). The Senate amendment confines the deduction to 85 percent of the amount of the dividends. The House recedes with an amendment changing 85 percent to 90 percent.

On amendment no. 7: This amendment provides for withholding of tax at the source in the case of dividends paid to a foreign corporation, with respect to 15 percent of the amount of the dividend, since under amendment no. 6 only 85 percent of the dividend is nontaxable. The House recedes with an amendment changing 15 percent to 10 percent, in pursuance of the action taken on amendment no. 6, and authorizing the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, to permit withholding under existing law, in the case of a corporate taxpayer having a taxable year ending on any other date than December 31, until the beginning of its first taxable year which begins after December 31, 1935.

On amendment no. 8: This amendment subjects to both normal and surtax and to the corporation income tax interest on obligations of the United States and all instrumentalities of the United States, issued or reissued on or after the date of the enactment of the bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 9: The House bill raised the rates of the excess-profits tax imposed by section 702 of the Revenue Act of 1934, starting with 5 percent of the part of the net income in excess of 8 percent and not in excess of 12 percent of the adjusted declared value, up to 20 percent of the portion of the net income in excess of 25 percent of the adjusted declared value. The House bill made no change in the existing capital-stock tax. The Senate amendment reimposes the capital-stock tax beginning with the year ending June 30, 1936, with a rate of $1.50 a thousand instead of $1 a thousand as under existing law, but allowing a new declaration of value. It also reimposes the excess-profits tax beginning with the first income-tax year ending after June 30, 1936, with the rates fixed at 6 percent of the portion of the net income in excess of 10 percent and not in excess of 15 percent of the adjusted declared value, and 12 percent of the portion of the net income in excess of 15 percent of the adjusted declared value. In computing net income a deduction is allowed of the corporation income tax for the same year. The Senate amendment also allows to China Trade Act corporations a credit against the adjusted declared value of the capital stock based on the proportion borne to the par value of all their stock by the par value of the shares owned by residents of China, the United States, or possessions of the United States, and by individual citizens of the United States or China. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the rate of capital-stock tax at $1.40.

On amendment no. 10: This is a change in section number. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This is a technical amendment made necessary by amendments nos. 4 and 5, and the House recedes with an amendment making a further technical change made necessary by amendment no. 7.

On amendment no. 12: This is a technical amendment made necessary by amendment no. 8, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 13: This is a technical amendment made necessary by amendment no. 9, and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 14: This amendment allows China Trade Act corporations, for the purpose of the excess-profits tax imposed under amendment no. 9, a credit against net income similar to the credit allowed them under the income-tax law for the purpose of computing their net income subject to the corporation tax. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 15: This amendment makes three changes in section 351 of the Revenue Act of 1934 relating to the income tax of personal holding companies, applicable only in the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935.

(1) The amendment increases the rates, starting at 20 percent of the amount of the undistributed adjusted net income not in excess of $2,000 up to 60 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000,000. This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

(2) The amendment also provides that in the case of an affiliated group of corporations (defined in terms of 95-percent ownership), if the sum of the gross incomes of all the members of the group derived from royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale of stocks or securities is less than 80 percent of the sum of the gross income of all members of the group, then the common parent corporation shall not be considered a personal holding company. This provision is omitted under the conference agreement.

(3) The amendment also permits as a deduction in computing undistributed adjusted net-income distributions made during the taxable year out of earnings and profits of such year, if not a distribution in liquidation and if not already deductible as a "dividend." This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

On amendment no. 16: This amendment provides that no gain or loss shall be recognized upon the receipt by a corporation of property or money in liquidation of another corporation if the receiving corporation owns at least 80 percent of the voting stock of such other corporation. The House recedes with an amendment containing the following limitations:

(1) The nonrecognition of gain is confined to property received from the corporation being liquidated and does not extend to money. If, in addition to property, money is received on liquidation, the gain is recognized in an amount not in excess of the money so received; but no loss is recognized in such a case.

(2) The amendment does not apply to any liquidation where a distribution in pursuance of such liquidation was made before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935.

(3) The corporation receiving the property on liquidation must own at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of the corporation being liquidated. This ownership must exist on the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1935 and must continue at all times thereafter until the exchange.

(4) Liquidation is confined to "complete liquidation", which is defined to include any one of a series of distributions by a corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all of its stock in accordance with a plan of liquidation under which the transfer of the property under the liquidation is to be completed within a time specified in the plan, not exceeding 5 years from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of a series of distributions under the plan.

(5) If the transfer of property in liquidation is not completed within the taxable year, the Commissioner is given authority to require a bond, or a waiver extending the period for assessment and collection of the tax, or both bond and waiver, so that the Government's right to assess or collect may not be jeopardized if the transfer of the property is not completed in accordance with the plan.

(6) Since the liquidations are treated as tax-free exchanges, the basis provisions of section 113 (a) (6) of the Revenue Act of 1934 will be applicable. The following examples will show how the basis is determined under this section (assuming for simplicity that there were no adjustments to be made in the basis of the stock):

CASE NO. 1

Corporation A paid $100,000 for the stock of Corporation B. It liquidates Corporation B and receives on liquidation property worth $200,000 at the date of liquidation. Corporation A has realized a gain of $100,000 from the liquidation, which under the amendment is not recognized. However, the basis of Corporation B's property in the hands of Corporation A will be not $200,000, the value at the time of liquidation, but $100,000, the amount Corporation A paid for Corporation B's stock. Corporation A subsequently sells the property it acquired from Corporation B on liquidation for $200,000. Corporation A will be required to pay a tax in the year of sale on a $100,000 gain.

CASE NO. 2

Corporation A paid $100,000 for the stock of Corporation B. It liquidates Corporation B and receives on liquidation the following:

Property	$150,000
Cash	50,000
Total	200,000

The gain of $100,000 realized upon liquidation will be recognized only up to the amount of the cash, namely, $50,000. The basis of the property is $100,000, computed as follows:

($100,000 cost of Corporation B's stock to Corporation A, decreased in the amount of money received, $50,000, and increased in the amount of gain recognized to Corporation A at the time of liquidation, $50,000.)

If Corporation A sells the property for $150,000, it will be required to pay a tax on a gain of $50,000, which is the gain the recognition of which was postponed at the time of liquidation.

On amendment no. 17: This amendment strikes out the inheritance tax in the House bill and inserts in lieu thereof an increase in the rates of estate tax. Under existing law net estates not in excess of $10,000 are taxed at 1 percent; under the amendment this rate is increased to 2 percent. Gradual increases in the rates are made in the other brackets until the amount of a net estate in excess of $50,000,000 is taxed at 70 percent. Under existing law, the maximum rate is 60 percent on the portion of the net estate in excess of $10,000,000. The conference agreement retains the change of rates proposed in the Senate amendment.

The amendment also reduces the specific exemption allowed for purposes of the additional estate tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, from $50,000 to $40,000. This portion of the Senate amendment is also retained under the conference agreement.

The amendment also allows an additional deduction, in computing the value of the net estate, of the net shrinkage in value of assets arising from the difference in the aggregate value of assets forming part of the decedent's gross estate on the date of death and the aggregate value of such assets 1 year thereafter, substituting the date of sale or exchange by the executor in the case of assets sold or exchanged during such 1-year period. In lieu of this provision, the conference action inserts a provision giving the executor an election with respect to the time as of which the property included in the gross estate is to be valued. Under existing law, the valuation is made as of the date of death. If the executor exercises the election given him by the conference agreement, all the property included in the estate on the date of death is to be valued as of the date 1 year after the decedent's death, except that the value (at the time of distribution, sale, exchange, or other disposition) of property distributed, sold, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, is taken in lieu of its value as of 1 year after death. Where the decedent owns an interest or estate the value of which is affected by mere lapse of time, the value used under the election is the value as of date of death adjusted for changes in value not due merely to lapse of time. Deductions for losses from fire, other casualties, etc., and other deductions, are disallowed if reflected in the later valuation of the property. The conference agreement also provides that the valuation of property transferred to charities, etc., for the purpose of the deduction under existing law, shall be made on the same basis used in valuing the gross estate, disregarding any change due to mere lapse of time or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a contingency. The operation of this new provision giving the executor an election may be shown by the following example:

A decedent dies owning real estate of the value of $100,000, corporate stock of the value of $60,000, bonds of the value of $20,000, foreign government bonds maturing 9 months after date of death of a face value of $10,000, but of a value of $9,550, and cash amounting to $5,000. These values are as of the date of death. The gross estate at date of death amounted, therefore, to $194,550. The decedent had debts of $15,000 and the administration expenses were $25,000, which debts and expenses were promptly paid by the executor. The value of the net estate as of date of death was, therefore (after taking off the specific exemption), $114,550. Six months after the decedent's death the executor distributed the bonds to a legatee under the will, at which time they were worth $18,000, and he sold all the corporate stock owned by the decedent for a fair market value of $50,000 in order to raise cash to pay the debts and expenses. The foreign bonds were paid in full at maturity. During the first year after the decedent's death the value of his real estate appreciated $5,000. The executor elects to take advantage of the new provision of the bill. The value will be arrived at in this way:

Assets:		Value
Real estate (as of 1 year after death)		$105,000
Corporate stock (as of date of sale)		50,000
Bonds (as of date of distribution)		18,000
Foreign bonds (as of date of disposition, i. e., maturity)		10,000
Cash		5,000
Gross estate		188,000
Deduct:
Debts	$15,000
Administration expenses	25,000
Specific exemption	40,000
		80,000
Net estate		108,000

The amendment also gives a new deduction, in determining the net estate of a decedent who was a citizen or resident of the United States, of the proceeds of life insurance policies payable to the estate in trust for the payment of death duties imposed by the United States or any other jurisdiction, to the extent that such proceeds are actually used in the payment of such taxes. This provision is omitted under the conference agreement.

The amendment also makes the due date of the estate tax 15 months after death instead of 1 year as provided in existing law. This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

All the above amendments are effective only in the case of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of the bill. This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

On amendment no. 18: This amendment strikes out the gift tax on donees in the House bill and inserts in lieu thereof an increase in the rates of the gift tax on donors provided in the Revenue Act of 1932. Under existing law, the gift tax rate on net gifts not in excess of $10,000 is three-fourths of 1 percent; the amendment increases this rate to 1½ percent. Consistent increases are made in the higher brackets until the amount of a net gift in excess of $50,000,000 is taxed at 52½ percent. Under existing law the maximum rate is 45 percent on the amount of the net gift in excess of $10,000,000. The gift tax rates proposed are three-fourths of the estate-tax rates proposed. This is the same ratio as exists between the estate and gift tax rates under existing law. The conference agreement retains the change of rates proposed in the Senate amendment.

The amendment also reduces the specific exemption in such act from $50,000 to $40,000. This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

The above amendments are effective only in the computation of gift taxes for the calendar year 1936 and subsequent years. This provision is retained under the conference agreement.

On amendment no. 19: This amendment inserts a new title covering a number of miscellaneous matters, each of which is separately stated below, together with the action of the conferees thereon.

MANUFACTURERS' EXCISE TAXES

Section 401 makes the following amendments to the Revenue Act of 1932 with respect to the manufacturers' excise taxes:

(1) Section 620 (3) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended to permit the tax-free sale of any article taxable under title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932 sold by the manufacturer or producer to or for the exclusive use of the United States, any State, Territory of the United States, political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia. The amendment exempts all sales to States or political subdivisions thereof for exclusive use by them regardless of whether or not the articles are to be used for an essential governmental function, and permits more than one dealer in the chain of sales.

(2) The amendment to section 621 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 will permit a refund or credit of the tax paid by any manufacturer or producer on his sale of an article if such article is eventually resold through one or more dealers to the United States, any State, Territory of the United States, political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia. A credit or refund is also provided if an article is ultimately used, or resold for use, as fuel supplies, etc., of certain vessels. Similar amendments allow refunds when certain articles subject to the gasoline tax are ultimately used, or resold for use, for non-motor-fuel purposes and where lubricating oils are ultimately used, or resold for use, for nonlubricating purposes. All these refunds are allowed to the manufacturer for the benefit of the person who sells the articles to the user.

(3) Another amendment allows interest on refunds of overpayments of the manufacturers' sales taxes at the rate of 6 percent per annum.

This section of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement, with a clerical change.

ARTICLES PRODUCED FROM TAXABLE OILS

Section 402 provides for a tax on the importation (from a foreign country, a possession of the United States, or the high seas) of articles manufactured or produced wholly or in chief value from oils of the classes subject (at the time of importation of such articles) to the tax under existing law on the processing of coconut oil and certain other vegetable oils or the tax on the importation of certain fish and marine-animal oils. The tax is to be computed by applying the rates provided for in the existing taxes to the amount of the specified oils from which the imported articles are made. Provision is made for payments to the Philippine treasury analogous to the provision now applying under the processing tax on coconut oil. The new tax is subject to the same administrative and drawback provisions of law as is the existing tax on imported fish and marine-animal oils. The conference agreement retains this section, to take effect after the thirtieth day after date of the enactment of the act, instead of the fifteenth day as provided in the Senate amendment.

SPECIAL EXCISE TAX ON CARRYING ON LIQUOR BUSINESS

Section 403 of the bill, added by amendment no. 19, terminates as of June 30, 1935, the special excise tax of $1,000 a year imposed by section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1926 on every person carrying on the business of a brewer, distiller, liquor dealer, or manufacturer of stills, contrary to State law. This portion of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement.

INTEREST ON DELINQUENT TAXES

The amendment also provides that the rate of interest on any internal-revenue tax, or customs duty, not paid when due, shall be at the rate of 6 percent per annum. This makes all interest provisions with reference to deficiencies and delinquencies of internal-revenue taxes uniform as far as the rate of interest is concerned. Under existing law, interest is assessed on deficiencies of income, excess profits, estate, and gift taxes at the rate of 6 percent per annum and the deficiency, with interest thereon to date of assessment, is not subject to interest at 1 percent per month until 10 days (30 days in the case of estate taxes) after notice and demand, whereas the interest on overdue miscellaneous excise taxes is 1 percent per month from the due date of the tax. Under the amendment the rate will be uniformly 6 percent per annum before and after notice and demand. The amendment merely changes the rate and does not provide for interest in any cases where interest does not now accrue. This portion of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS AS TO TAXES

The amendment also adds a section making it clear that the Federal Declaratory Judgments Act of June 14, 1934, has no application to Federal taxes. This portion of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement.

FAILURE TO FILE RETURNS ON TIME

Under existing law, if a return of an internal-revenue tax is not filed at the time prescribed therefor, 25 percent of the tax is added to the tax, whether the delay in filing the return is 1 day or a longer period. Section 406 (first paragraph) of the bill, added by the amendment no. 19, provides for an addition to the tax, in lieu of such 25-percent addition, in cases where the time fixed for filing the return is subsequent to the passage of the bill, of 5 percent of the tax if the failure is for not more than 30 days, with an additional 5 percent for each additional 30 days during which the failure continues, not to exceed 25 percent in the aggregate. This portion of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement.

TAX ON WHALE OIL

The amendment exempts whale oil from the present tax of 3 cents a pound on importation. This portion of the Senate amendment is omitted under the conference agreement.

TAXES ON CRUDE PETROLEUM

The first paragraph of section 407, added by the amendment, reduces the existing taxes on the production and on the refining of crude petroleum from one-tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons to one twenty-fifth of 1 cent per barrel. This portion of the Senate amendment is retained under the conference agreement.

EFFECT OF CLOSING AGREEMENTS

The amendment also provides that if the Commissioner, in determining the tax liability of any person, has entered into an agreement in writing with such person in respect of any issue likewise involved in the tax liabilities of one or more other persons and arising out of the same transaction, then none of such other persons shall be denied a settlement of such issue on the same basis. This portion of the Senate amendment is omitted under the conference agreement.

On amendments nos. 20, 21, 23, and 24: These amendments make changes in title and section numbers. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 22: This amendment adds a definition of the term "collector." The House recedes.

On amendment no. 25: This amendment repeals sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 and declares void all Treasury regulations in pursuance of such actions. The Senate recedes.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAMUEL B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, if this conference report is adopted, the principal changes by reason of Senate amendments will be as follows: I may say at the outset that the House provision as to the increase in the surtax rates is retained in the bill. It starts at $50,000 and graduates up to 75 percent on net incomes over $5,000,000.

The corporation income tax was changed somewhat by the conference. The House provision provided a range of 1 percent from 13¼ percent on corporation incomes not in excess of $15,000 to 14¼ percent on corporation incomes above $15,000. The conference report provides 12½ percent on corporation incomes not in excess of $2,000, 13 percent on incomes between $2,000 and $15,000, 14 percent between $15,000 and $40,000, and 15 percent above $40,000.

The capital-stock tax as it exists today and as we left it in the House bill is $1 per thousand. The Senate made it $1.50 per thousand and the conference agreed on $1.40 per thousand and gave the corporations the right to declare a new adjusted value.

The excess-profits tax in the conference report bears the rate of 6 percent on net corporate income above 10 percent, and not in excess of 15 percent, and a 12-percent rate above 15 percent.

There will be included in the bill, if the conference report is adopted, an intercorporate dividend tax. The House bill had no such tax. The Senate put an amendment on the bill providing for an intercorporate dividend tax which would amount to 2¼ percent. We reduced this in conference to what will amount to about a 1½-percent rate.

The inheritance tax, which the House bill carried, is out of the bill, and in lieu of it, we have an increase in the estate taxes and in the gift taxes which go along with the estate taxes. With the inheritance tax we also had a gift tax on the donees as a protection of the inheritance tax. This, of course, goes out with the inheritance tax. So what we have now in the conference report is an estate tax and no inheritance tax, but the estate tax has been increased in two respects: First, by lowering the exemption from $50,000 to $40,000 and by commencing with a 2-percent rate on the first $10,000 of taxable estate and graduating it up to 70 percent over $50,000,000. The gift tax bears a rate approximately three-fourths of the rate of the estate tax and is carried through in this proportion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. This covers the principal changes, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report makes in the House bill. There are some other amendments which are in the bill and are set out and explained fully in the report, and it seems hardly worth while to take the time of the House to go into a detailed explanation of them. I shall ask you to read the report and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks by printing in connection therewith a detailed statement in writing explaining just what has been done in the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection of the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. My Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by extending in the RECORD a statement prepared by the Treasury Department in opposition to the so-called "McCarran amendment."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the gentleman inform us of the fate of the provision which relates to the taxation of corporate contributions to charities?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is retained in the bill, I may say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a further question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the gentleman inform us with respect to that provision of the bill which, as I understand it, would make subject to estate taxes the principal of life-insurance policies?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We have not included the amendment which exempted the proceeds of life insurance which were devoted solely to the payment of estate taxes. This is the point the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman explain that a little?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The present law is that insurance policies have an exemption of $40,000, and in addition to that, there is general exemption for estate-tax purposes of $40,000. So we deemed it unnecessary to give further exemption to life insurance, inasmuch as we have this $40,000 exemption in existing law.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I would like to have an explanation of why the House yielded on inheritance taxes and accepted the estate tax?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The House yielded for the purpose of bringing a bill back to this body. It was necessary, I will say to the gentleman from California, to yield in order to get an agreement, but we get about the same amount of money out of the increase in the estate taxes that we were to get out of the inheritance taxes.

Mr. COLDEN. The point with me is this. In the case of the estate tax the tax is levied on the entire estate regardless of the number of heirs, but with an inheritance tax, if there is one heir and the estate amounts to $1,000,000, the tax is applied to the entire amount, but if there are 10 heirs, there would only be $100,000 as the amount of the inheritance.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I may say to the gentleman that we advanced those arguments but, as the gentleman knows, we cannot have everything. We have to give in on some things in order to get the other body to yield.

I submit the following detailed statement on the conference between the two Houses on the Revenue Act of 1935:

CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE REVENUE BILL OF 1935

The House surtax rates were adopted. The Senate increased the surtax rates only over $1,000,000. This would bring in only about $4,000,000. The Senate conferees agreed to the House surtax rates which started with net incomes of $50,000 and graduated upward to a point of 75 percent in the case of net incomes in excess of $5,000,000.

On the graduated tax on corporations, we agreed to a compromise. As you know, the House levied a graduated rate range of 1 percent, that is, net incomes not in excess of $15,000 were taxed at 13¼ percent, and net incomes in excess of $15,000 were taxed at 14¼ percent in addition of such excess. The Senate amended the bill by levying a graduated tax ranging from 12½ percent on net incomes not in excess of $15,000 to 15½ percent upon net incomes in excess of $100,000. We succeeded in getting the Senate conferees to agree to a compromise levying taxes on corporations as follows:

Upon net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 12½ percent.

Upon net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 13 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 percent in addition of such excess.

Upon net incomes in excess of $40,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

The House provision allowing corporations to deduct gifts to organizations operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes was accepted by the Senate. The Senate extended this to include gifts to organizations for the prevention of cruelty to children.

The Senate adopted a provision which had the effect of exempting China Trade Act corporations from the excess-profits and capital-stock tax. These corporations are already exempt from the income tax. The reason for the exemptions is to enable American corporations doing business in China to compete with foreign corporations. England and many of the other foreign countries grant their companies doing business in China complete exemption from taxation, and unless this Government affords the same inducement to our American corporations doing business in China, they will not be able to compete with the foreign corporations or secure adequate Chinese capital. Your conferees agreed to the Senate amendment as to this point.

The Senate levied a tax on intercorporate dividends which amounted to about 2¼ percent. Under existing law, dividends received by a corporation from a domestic corporation are allowed as a deduction in computing net income. The Senate allowed only 85 percent of the dividends received as a deduction. We compromised on the proposition, changing the 85 percent to 90 percent, which will result in an intercorporate tax of about 1½ percent.

The Borah amendment came in for considerable discussion at the conference. The effect of this amendment was to subject to both normal and surtax as well as to the corporation income tax, interest on obligations of the United States and instrumentalities of the United States issued after the date of the enactment of the bill. The House conferees did not believe this to be a sound amendment for the reason that it would not close the loophole of tax-exempt securities but merely give investors an opportunity to invest in State securities instead of Federal securities. It is believed that the only proper way to accomplish the taxation of Federal and State securities is through a constitutional amendment which would operate on both the States and the Federal Government and not give one a field for investments at the expense of the other. It might be mentioned that this amendment was also vigorously opposed by the Treasury and the administration. We got the Senate conferees to recede on this amendment.

The Senate increased the capital stock tax from $1 per $1,000 to $1.50 per $1,000. We got them to agree to an amendment reducing the rate from $1.50 to $1.40 per $1,000. As a result of this concession, we accepted the Senate rates on the excess-profits tax. These rates are fixed at 6 percent of the portion of the net income in excess of 10 percent and not in excess of 15 percent of the adjusted declared value, and 12 percent of the portion of the net income in excess of 15 percent of the adjusted declared value. We also agreed to the Senate amendment permitting corporations a new declaration of value for capital stock tax purposes beginning with the year ending June 30, 1936.

In the case of personal holding companies, we agreed to the Senate amendment increasing the rates starting at 20 percent of the amount of the undistributed adjusted net income not in excess of $2,000, up to 60 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000,000. This amendment was considered necessary in view of the increase in rates of the individual surtaxes.

The Senate inserted in the bill a provision which would have the effect of combining the gross income of members of an affiliated group of corporations for the purpose of determining whether the common parent corporation was a personal holding company. We objected strenuously to this amendment, as we felt it would open the door to many lookholes in the personal holding company section, and we succeeded in getting the Senate conferees to recede on this amendment.

The Senate also inserted an amendment permitting one corporation to liquidate another corporation without the recognition of gain or loss. Your conferees were compelled to accept this amendment, but succeeded in inserting certain provisions which had the effect of tightening it up and preventing loopholes. The provision as now written applies only if the corporation owns at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of the corporation being liquidated. This ownership must exist on the date of the enactment of this act and must continue at all times thereafter until the date of liquidation. If the corporation receives from the corporation being liquidated, money, the gain on liquidation to it is taxable to the extent of the money so received.

We yielded to the Senate on its provisions substituting for the House provisions on inheritance tax and gift tax on donees, increased rates in the estate tax and in the gift tax on donors. The Senate provision gradually increases the rates in the brackets beginning at 2 percent until the amount of the net estate in excess of $50,000,000 is taxed at 70 percent. Under existing law the maximum rate is 60 percent on the portion of the net estate in excess of $10,000,000. Consistent increases were made in respect to the gift tax on donors so that the new gift-tax rates are about three-fourths of the estate-tax rates. The Senate amendment also reduced the specific exemption of $50,000 allowed both for estate- and gift-tax purposes under existing law to $40,000. While we were unable to get the Senate conferees to agree to an inheritance tax, they did agree that such a tax should be studied by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, the Treasury Department, and the office of the Legislative Counsel, with a view to making positive recommendations on this subject in the near future.

We succeeded in getting one of the principles of our inheritance tax incorporated in the estate tax. This permits the executor to value the property of a decedent as of 1 year from the date of death, with certain exceptions in the case of distributions, sales, etc. This will eliminate many of the hardships which were experienced after 1929 when market values decreased very materially between the period from the date of death and the date of distribution to the beneficiaries. We refused to agree to the Senate amendment allowing a deduction in the case of the proceeds of life-insurance policies actually used for the payment of Federal, State, and foreign death taxes. It was felt that with the abandonment of the inheritance tax the present estate tax provisions granting a $40,000 exemption in the case of insurance might be deemed adequate. Moreover, the enactment of such a provision would seriously curtail the Government revenues. However, it was felt that this subject was worthy of further study and that some effort should be made to look into this matter further.

We agreed to the Senate amendment exempting from the manufacturer's excise taxes sales to the State for exclusively public purposes regardless of whether or not the articles sold were to be used for essential governmental functions. This amendment is similar to the bill introduced by Congressman McCORMACK and reported out by the Ways and Means Committee several days ago.

We also agreed to the Senate amendment relating to the processing tax on coconut oil. It appears that there is a serious loophole in existing law by which many companies escape the payment of the processing tax by having the articles processed outside of the country. To remedy this situation, the amendment provides for a tax on the importation of articles produced wholly or in chief value from the oils subject to tax under existing law on the processing of coconut oil and certain other vegetable oils or the tax on the importation of certain fish and marine-animal oils. The tax is to be computed by applying the rates provided for in existing taxes to the amount of the specified oils from which the imported article is made.

We also agreed to the repeal of the special excise tax of $1,000 imposed under existing law upon every person carrying on the business of a brewer, distiller, liquor dealer, or manufacturer of stills contrary to State law. This tax has been held by the lower courts to be not a tax but a penalty, and is practically unenforceable at the present time. Moreover, since the tax is imposed upon an annual basis, it gives encouragement to liquor violators who have paid this tax to claim that they have Federal sanction to carry on their unlawful business.

Your conferees also agreed to the Senate amendment decreasing the interest on delinquent taxes to 6 percent per annum. Under existing law in many cases the interest rate runs at 12 percent from the due date of the tax, especially in the case of many of the miscellaneous excise taxes. This results in a very great hardship in many cases, due to the fact that the Commissioner has no authority to compromise the 12-percent interest.

Your conferees also agreed to the Senate provision providing that the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act of June 14, 1934, has no application to Federal taxes. The application of the Declaratory Judgment Act to taxes would constitute a wide departure from the long-continued policy of Congress with respect to the determination, assessment, and collection of Federal taxes. It is believed that the procedure for the collection of Federal taxes should not be interfered with by a procedure designed to facilitate the settlement of private controversies and that existing procedure both in the Board of Tax Appeals and the courts affords ample remedies for the correction of tax errors.

Your conferees also accepted the Senate amendment reducing the amount of the 25-percent penalty for failure to file a return to 5 percent if the failure is for not more than 30 days, with an additional 5 percent for each additional 30 days, not to exceed 25 percent in the aggregate. This penalty has resulted in considerable hardship because of the lack of power on the part of the Commissioner to compromise such penalty separately and apart from the tax. Your conferees felt that this amendment would accomplish considerable good in alleviating the hardships.

The Senate adopted an amendment to exempt whale oil from the present tax of 3 cents a pound on importation. Your conferees succeeded in getting the Senate conferees to recede from this amendment.

Your conferees agreed to the Senate amendment reducing the existing taxes on the production and on the refining of crude petroleum from one-tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons to one twenty-fifth of 1 cent per barrel. These taxes are levied primarily for the administration of the oil codes in order that proper investigation might be made of the books and records of the oil companies. It is believed that a lower rate would not interfere with the purpose for which the taxes are imposed. Therefore, your conferees agreed to this Senate amendment.

Your conferees also succeeded in getting the Senate conferees to recede from an amendment which would have involved serious administrative difficulties in the Bureau. The Senate amendment provided that if the Commissioner entered into a closing agreement with any taxpayer in respect to any issue, the determination in such agreement as to such issue should be permitted other taxpayers. This would have the effect of practically nullifying the closing-agreement system which has been in effect in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for many years and would cost the Government considerable administrative difficulty as well as additional expense.

In closing, I wish to submit a statement as to the revenue to be derived under the conference report.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE

There is no substantial difference in the total revenue to be expected from the bill as agreed to in conference and in the total revenue expected under the House and Senate bills, as can be shown from the following comparison:

Estimate of additional revenue

[For a full year of operation]

Source	House bill	Senate bill	Bill as agreed to in conference
Surtax increases	$45,000,000	$4,000,000	$45,000,000
Graduated corporation tax	15,000,000	60,000,000	37,000,000
Capital-stock tax	0	55,000,000	44,000,000
Excess-profits tax	100,000,000	10,000,000	10,000,000
Inheritance tax	86,000,000	0	0
Estate tax	0	80,000,000	80,000,000
Gift tax	24,000,000	21,000,000	21,000,000
Intercompany dividends	0	39,000,000	28,000,000
Total	270,000,000	269,000,000	265,000,000

Net total additional revenue	255,000,000	254,000,000	250,000,000

I also submit the following statement prepared in the Department of the Treasury in opposition to the Senate amendment repealing sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act:

Sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act should not be repealed. They are not detrimental to any legitimate silver transactions. Practically the only persons injured are the silver speculators typified by those active in the Wall Street Silver Exchange.

American shipping lines, insurance companies, and truckers, contrary to the statement in the report of the Committee on Agriculture, are being assisted by the present program. All purchases by the Government are stipulated to be carried by American ships, insured by American companies, and transported in American trucks. If silver speculation in New York is resumed, speculators will buy silver in London, which will be shipped to this country by the London sellers in British ships with British insurance. For every 5 million ounces of silver, $27,000 worth of business accrues to American shipping, trucking, and insurance companies. A total of $1,755,000 worth of business to these companies would have been lost if the silver had been bought abroad by private speculators.

American smelting and refining companies are being benefited. Because of the slightly higher price for silver in the New York market over the London market, it is worth while for the owners of foreign silver ores to ship them to this country for smelting and refining here prior to sale at New York. These companies are satisfied with the operation of the act.

Legitimate industrial users of silver are properly protected. There is no tax on profits derived from the industrial use of silver; and adequate provisions are made for the acquisition, use, and disposition of silver for industrial purposes.

Similarly, the interests of silver miners are adequately safeguarded. The tax does not apply to the profits on newly mined silver; and all newly mined silver is acquired by the Government at a price in excess of the world market value.

Finally, if the rise in the price of silver is not to drive other nations away from the monetary use of silver, there must be power to help them protect their outstanding silver currency. The provisions in question make it possible to protect foreign countries, whose currency is affected by the silver program, from unnecessary adverse effects through the possibility of imposing embargoes on the importation of their silver coins. This was actually done by the Treasury order of May 20, 1935.

It is the Wall Street silver speculators who are adversely affected by these provisions. This is as it should be. They are doing nothing to help the cause of silver but are merely attempting to make an unearned profit on the Government's program for the wider use of silver.

To repeal the provisions in question would detract from the dignity which they are designed to give to silver as a part of the monetary system of the United States. It is thoroughly recognized that, under present conditions, the United States must have complete control over the monetary supply of gold. No one can seriously question the necessity for this control. The purpose of the Silver Purchase Act and the silver program in general was to give silver an equal dignity with gold as a monetary metal. In order for the Congress to retain its power to coin money and regulate its value, which has proven so necessary in the case of gold, there must be reserved in the Federal Government a corresponding power to regulate silver.

Correspondingly, it was generally conceded that it would not be proper for any small portion of the public to reap a profit out of the situation presented by the control of gold, and, for that reason, the orders requiring the surrender of all gold at its then monetary value were prescribed. It is true that through this action certain foreign interests not amenable to the laws of this country were enabled to reap an unearned profit. Protection, however, was assured as far as the jurisdiction of the United States extended by preventing private profit as a result of a public necessity. The identical situation is presented with respect to silver. Congress has determined that the public interest requires the silver-purchase program. It was just as careful to assure the protection of the general public against unearned and unjustified profits of a small group of speculators in silver as it had been in connection with gold. It may be that some foreign speculators will seek and have sought to take advantage of the American silver policy. The Treasury Department has announced itself as thoroughly disapproving of any such result and is endeavoring in its pursuit of the silver-purchase program to prevent such unjust profits from accruing to any speculators, domestic or foreign. Even, however, should it be possible for some foreign speculators to make a profit, it is still a situation comparable to that which existed with respect to gold. Since the public interest declared in the Silver Purchase Act demands that the silver-purchase program be pursued vigorously, the Congress has justly provided that no unjust profit shall accrue to the domestic speculator over whom it has control. That it is unable to control the foreign speculator is no justification for its failure to limit the unearned profits made, as a result of the Government's action for the benefit of the whole Nation, by a small group of domestic Wall Street silver manipulators.

Finally, the point cannot be too often emphasized that sections 6, 7, and 8 of the silver-purchase act are not extraneous and unrelated provisions but are part and parcel of a carefully developed plan for the effectuation of the entire policy. Unless the Government is supplied with the weapons of control provided by these sections, it will be greatly hampered in its effectuation of the silver-purchase policy of section 2. Can the Secretary of the Treasury in good faith find that "terms and conditions" of purchases are "reasonable" and that they are "most advantageous to the public interest" if silver is held at exorbitant prices by speculators and sharpshooters who would be placed in a position to dictate to the Government while it is effectuating its own policies? Yet, by congressional mandate the Secretary is required to find that the rates, times, terms, and conditions of his purchases shall be "reasonable" and "most advantageous to the public interest" (sec. 3).

Of course, the Treasury intends to pursue the program laid down by the Congress. The history of its transactions to date proves this without question. But equally the administration owes to the people of the United States the duty to see that they are not victimized by a small group for its own selfish ends. This is true whether that group is the Wall Street silver manipulators or the foreign silver speculators. The policy of the Treasury cannot be subservient to those groups of silver speculators who have been relying on the announced policy of the United States to bolster their speculative activities. The United States must show that it, and not the speculator, is able to control the destinies of silver in the United States. To do this, the Government must be in a position to make it so expensive for these silver speculators to oppose the United States Government they will not do so.

With the situation what it is, with the record of accomplishment what it is, and with the prospects of further accomplishment promising as they are, it would be most unwise to take away from the Government at this time the very weapons and implements which it has used and which it will continue to use to bring to the most complete fruition the Government's program for the rehabilitation of silver.

Statistics on the silver program to July 31, 1935

	Ounces
Amount of silver purchased by United States in first 13 months of operation of program is (Detailed statement annexed.)	471,704,047
1. This is about 68 percent of the silver coin and bullion owned by United States or in circulation on June 30, 1934, amounting to	694,645,065
2. It is about 19 times more than the amount which the United States agreed to withdraw from production annually pursuant to the London agreement, that amount being	24,400,000
3. It is about 15 times more than the total domestic production of silver during the same period amounting to	31,360,000
4. It is about 4 times more than the estimated world production of silver since June 30, 1934, amounting to	119,024,000
5. It constitutes an average monthly receipt of silver since June 30, 1934, amounting to more than	36,000,000
6. On June 30, 1934, the total amount of silver to be acquired in order to increase the amount of silver to one-third of the value of the monetary stock of gold ($7,856,074,226) on June 30, 1934, was	1,330,749,073

Therefore the acquisitions during the first 13 months under the Silver Purchase Act constitute 35½ percent (over one-third) of that amount.

Receipts of silver by the Treasury from June 30, 1934, to July 31, 1935

	Ounces
1. Newly mined domestic silver (the Silver Purchase Act imposes no tax on the profits made by the silver-mine owners from such silver)	33,592,750
2. Nationalized silver (this was silver which was situated in the continental United States on Aug. 9, 1934. 50.01 cents were returned by the United States to the depositor for such silver. Profits on nationalized silver are exempt from the 50-percent profits tax)	112,363,428
3. Other acquisitions of silver under the Silver Purchase Act	325,953,722
Total	471,909,900

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is a little better in some respects than the bill which the House originally passed. In other respects it is not so good. However, I congratulate the conferees on the work they have done, considering the fact that they could not go beyond the provisions of the House and Senate bills.

Of course, the Members of the minority had been urging for a long time previous to the writing of this bill the necessity of raising more revenue by taxation in order to meet in some way the wild orgy of extravagant expenditures that this administration has indulged in.

The bill as it stands today is, perhaps, the nearest thing to a political gesture that has been considered in this Congress, and it is so recognized all over the country. It is not a revenue measure insofar as the amount of revenue it produces is concerned—around $250,000,000. This would pay the current running expenses of this Government for about 11 days.

That is not a Budget-balancing project at all. I call to the attention of Members of the House the fact that when our distinguished Vice President was the Speaker of this House he came from that rostrum down to the floor and made a speech like an evangelist might make, to bring people within the fold. We had under consideration the manufacturers' excise tax at that time, and the question arose as to whether we should balance the Budget. After making a very plaintive and a very personal appeal to all of the Members of the House, that distinguished Speaker at that time had this to say:

> At the risk of being criticized I want to give to the world and to the country today, if I can, an expression of this House, so that the world and the country may realize that we are going to balance the Budget. Mr. Chairman, may I do an unusual thing? I may be criticized for it, but I want every man and every woman in this House who votes to balance the Budget and who is willing to go along with that effort to try to balance the Budget, to rise in their seats.

Then there is a note in parenthesis to the effect that there was applause, the Members rising. Mr. Speaker, I watched that performance very closely, and I think there was only one Member in the House who did not rise and that was the present distinguished Speaker of the House who only a few hours before had declared that there was no necessity of balancing the Budget. Then the distinguished gentleman from Texas, Mr. Garner, now our Vice President, continued:

> Now, if they do not mind, those who do not want to balance the Budget can rise in their seats.

And there is a note in parenthesis in the RECORD there that no one arose. So it was unanimous, evidently, on both sides of the House, because we on this side certainly wanted to balance the Budget. We had introduced a bill for a manufacturers' sales tax which we thought would balance the Budget and would eliminate forever the nuisance taxes, which have been such a trouble to the people of this country.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the date of that?

Mr. CROWTHER. March 29, 1932. After nobody had risen against it, the distinguished Speaker then said:

> I think that ought to restore to the American people confidence in our country.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will recall that notwithstanding that patriotic response made by the House of Representatives to the message from the President, who was then Mr. Hoover, to balance the Budget, we endeavored to raise, I believe, $300,000,000, but in spite of that effort we fell short of balancing the Budget by something like three or four hundred million dollars, and still the Republic stands, and Heaven and earth did not pass away.

Mr. CROWTHER. If the gentleman will remember, that was nearly a billion-dollar tax bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no; I disagree with the gentleman. That special tax was no billion-dollar tax bill. We first proposed a manufacturers' sale tax, to raise a certain amount, and when that was defeated we came in with another bill to raise taxes, but it was not near a billion dollars.

Mr. CROWTHER. I am sure the gentleman is mistaken, but the fact remains that there is a present necessity of balancing the Budget. I realize there is nothing that would give the people of this country, the business people of the country, a greater degree of confidence than to know that this Congress had determined—not to balance the Budget this year, for I doubt if you can even balance it next year, but certainly they are entitled to the promise and an effort on the part of the Ways and Means Committee and this Congress—to balance the Budget, and the statement that there will be an attempt to balance the Budget within 4 or 5 years.

That is the only sane way it can be approached. We cannot levy taxes today to balance the Budget. They would be equivalent to a capital tax that would be destructive. This new tax that is being put on, this additional 40 or 50 cents on capital stock, closely approaches being a capital levy, because it must be paid whether the corporations make a dollar or not. That is not the kind of taxes that ought to be laid. I think we all agree and the people of this country are satisfied that this administration should do something on the other side of the ledger, and in some common-sense way convey to the people of this country that there is an intention on the part of this Congress to lay sufficient taxes to balance the Budget. We should have laid not less than a half or three-quarters of a billion in this tax bill, 25 percent more than the present Budget needs. I mean the ordinary Budget. Let that be laid over 4 or 5 years until we catch up, perhaps in 1939 or 1940, because it is going to be a long, slow drag uphill. We cannot have restoration to normal conditions in a period of less than 5 or 10 years, and we ought to prepare for it. But instead of that the majority yielded to expediency. They soaked the rich and soaked the thrifty instead of writing a common-sense tax bill, commencing with a thorough revision of the rates all the way down the line. That is what should have been done, because everybody in this country is willing to contribute to balancing the Budget if they know it is going to be done; but they certainly are going to ask you to do this. It ought to be a twin program. Together with revising the rate structure and raising sufficient money for the lap-over in the balance of 5 years, you ought to accompany that with a program of drastically decreased spending. Otherwise the money that we raise will be futile.

The Secretary of the Treasury came before the Ways and Means Committee and said this money was to pay amortization costs on the national debt; that the gold profit had been put in a separate drawer in the Treasury; the silver profit had been put in another drawer. He recommended that a third drawer be built in the Treasury to put these receipts, to pay the interest charges; and, finally, to reduce the national debt. As far as this amount of money is applicable to the national debt, they could put the drawer in the eye of a humming bird and it would not affect his eyesight for a minute. [Laughter.]

I may say at this time that I am speaking in no partisan spirit. I am speaking as the present Vice President did in 1932. He said:

> We may have differences among ourselves, but in our hearts we are patriotic and loyal. We want to serve this public regardless of party. This is a sensible Congress, and I hope we can get sensible results.

It is in that vein I am speaking now.

At this time I want to pay a tribute to the chairman of our committee for the wonderful patience and the tireless effort he has exhibited in coordinating the various legislative proposals that have come before the Ways and Means Committee. He has had a terrific task.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, that is one 2 minutes I was sure of getting. [Laughter.]

May I at the same time convey the good wishes of the minority to all the members of the majority? Our associations have been most friendly and they have been happy. We have worked with a common effort. We have disagreed and had wide disagreements at times. We have had some words that were hot enough, if they were spit, to burn the grass on a golf course, but after it was all over we were still friends and united in an effort for our great country and for its preservation.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity of thanking them.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] is entitled to a great deal of credit, because I believe that the increase in receipts in this last year has been largely due to the efforts made by the gentleman's subcommittee in closing up the rat holes of escape and evasion that were in our old law. The gentleman and his committee have been very helpful in increasing the revenue to the Treasury at this time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in my remarks a joint statement of three paragraphs made by the dissenting members of the conference committee on the bill, H. R. 8974.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. WOODRUM]. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT BY DISSENTING MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE CONSIDERING H. R. 8974

We have not signed the conference report on the tax bill because we do not wish in any way to be a party to the final enactment of this legislative absurdity.

It is not a revenue bill, and as everybody knows it was never intended to be. The only reason it is before Congress is because the President asked for it, and the only reason it will be passed is because the President wants it passed.

No one can justify the bill. It is significant that neither the House Ways and Means Committee nor the Senate Finance Committee even attempted to do so in their respective reports on the bill. Their silence in this respect is eloquent testimony of the absence of any valid excuse for its enactment.

It has not been possible for the conferees to work out a good bill from either the House or Senate provisions. Their whole effort has been confined to salvaging as many of the President's original suggestions as possible, irrespective of merit, and at the same time they have kept in mind the fact that they must provide at least $250,000,000 of revenue in order to keep the bill from being made any more ridiculous as a tax measure. Under the circumstances it is no wonder that the compromise agreement is unscientific and unsound.

The revenue to be raised would pay the current running expenses of the Government for approximately 11 days, and it is but one-fifteenth of the amount of the deficit for the last fiscal year. Hence it is an absolute joke as a revenue measure.

If it is necessary to come $250,000,000 closer to balancing the Budget, the amount could very readily be realized, without the necessity of imposing further burdensome taxation, by the simple expedient of eliminating some of the unnecessary, wasteful, and extravagant expenditures now being made by the administration.

Perhaps the most objectionable feature of the compromise bill is that providing for a graduated income tax on corporations ranging from 12½ to 15 percent, in lieu of the present flat rate of 13¾ percent. This provision is in the bill merely to satisfy a whim of the President. It is unfair and unjust, and violates the principle of ability to pay. Corporations are merely aggregations of individuals, and under the graduated tax the numerous small taxpayers of a large corporation (for example, the 700,000 stockholders in the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.) would have to bear a greater burden than the very wealthy stockholders of smaller corporations. Aside from this fact, any increase in corporation taxes at this time will only add further impediments in the way of business recovery.

Senator JESSE H. METCALF.
Representative ALLEN T. TREADWAY.
Representative ISAAC BACHARACH.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to higher taxes on incomes, for I realize, as the whole country ultimately must, that we cannot continue forever to boost expenditures without providing for increased revenues. I prefer taxation, even although confiscatory, to inflation, for while taxation at the rates provided in this bill will take much of the wealth of the people, inflation would destroy it all. It is not the fact that you are in this bill imposing the heaviest income taxes levied by any government in the world that disturbs me, but the knowledge that you are doing it without at the same time subjecting income from tax-exempt securities to taxation.

You think you are soaking the rich, but you are not. By this legislation you are accomplishing one thing, and one thing only. You are driving all the rich into the safe dugouts of tax exemption and thereby forcing the poor to pay all the taxes.

High taxes on other incomes, coupled with the exemption of incomes derived from interest on Government bonds, does not make sense. You will never reach the swollen fortunes of America—the really dangerous accumulations of wealth—until you stop making it possible for millionaires to escape taxation. Your gesture may fool a few temporarily; in the long run it will fool none. When the forgotten man—forgotten except when the tax collector sees a chance to squeeze another dollar out of him—realizes what you have done to him, how you have coddled the usurers and penalized the workers, he will curse the new deal and all its works and vote into well-deserved oblivion those who have perpetrated this terrible hoax.

Two years ago, at the other end of the capitol, there was an investigation which disclosed that J. Pierpont Morgan for 3 years had practically paid no taxes and that Charles Mitchell had cheated the Government by selling securities to his wife. Rightly there was a wave of indignation that swept over the land. Measures were taken to close the loopholes which smart lawyers had found in the income-tax law. These tax evaders had taken advantage of an exemption, the exemption from taxation of current income to the extent that it was offset by past losses charged during the current year. We amended the law and limited the losses that could be offset. We took away a part of the exemption.

But there is another kind of exemption, another kind of evasion, the losses from which amount every year to many times those resulting from the devices to which Mr. Morgan and Mr. Mitchell resorted. The other body, by a margin of one vote, decided that the Federal Government should not extend further opportunity for that kind of evasion, that it should not issue any more tax-exempt bonds. One would suppose that after the President had spoken so scornfully of the "thrifty men" who had avoided the payment of taxes by investing their money in such bonds, those who had always been obedient under his lash would move quickly to make such avoidance impossible in the future. One would suppose that a President who had used brave words would follow them up with brave deeds, and that he would place upon his "must" list the resolution to amend the Constitution so as to make the income from all Government bonds taxable.

It is more important than ever now, when we are imposing heavier taxes upon incomes from other sources, that we close the doors of exemption to the holders of Government securities and make those who pay no taxes, however large their incomes, carry their just share of the tax load. It is more important, because to impose heavier taxes upon income from business while large issues of tax-free bonds are being constantly placed on the market, is to invite capital to shirk to an even greater extent than during the past 5 years, its responsibility to revive industry and promote recovery.

What would induce a taxpayer in the highest bracket, if he happens to live in a State with a high income-tax rate and has to pay an aggregate rate of 90 percent on his income, to put his money into any other investment, when 3-percent tax-exempt bonds are available? Such a man, in order to get a net return as great as a 3-percent bond yields, would have to find a private investment earning 30 percent. Obviously, there are no such private investments. Obviously, therefore, capital will not be able to get back into business until one of two things happens: A reduction of taxes on income from private enterprise or an income tax that reaches income from Government bonds. The whole recovery effort depends on getting capital back into productive enterprise—into wage-paying enterprise. That effort will be completely checkmated by the tax program we are now putting into effect.

Farmers, business men, and home owners complain of high interest rates—rates that are out of balance with the present earning power of the people. Everybody should complain, for the evil effects of high interest rates reach every person, whether he owes a single dollar or not. Usury is responsible in a large measure for the freight rates we pay to debt-burdened railroad companies, for the prices we pay for gas and electricity. Usury, collected from the producer of raw materials, from the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer, is reflected in the high cost of living. Usury makes rents high and wages low.

Interest that is out of line with the general income level deprives the debt-ridden millions of their buying power, paralyzes business, and puts workingmen on the streets. It starves the many and gluts the few with hoarded wealth.

Talk of sharing the wealth! The only economically sound way of dividing up is to put the debtor and the creditor back into the same relative position they were in before the price level dropped. That can be accomplished, not by the bootstrap-lifting method of raising prices but by removing the artificial device which has prevented interest rates from dropping to their natural level. That device is the exemption of income from Government bonds from taxation.

Interest rates are fixed by those who control sizable aggregations of capital. Such persons are in the higher income-tax brackets. They cannot afford to lend on the doubtful security of a private venture, the success of which is dependent upon the hazards of business in a rapidly changing world, unless they can get a rate that will net, after taxes, as much as they can earn from tax-exempt bonds. Hence, the wider the margin of income absorbed by taxes, the higher will be the minimum rate which they will charge on ordinary loans, so long as they have opportunity to invest in tax-exempt bonds. That there will be ample opportunity appears from the fact that in addition to $20,000,000,000 of State and municipal bonds there will be $45,000,000,000 of United States bonds available before existing authorizations have been exhausted. So long as the wealthy of the country have access to tax-free bonds, aggregating $65,000,000,000, secured by a first lien on America's $200,000,000,000 of physical wealth, they will have no incentive to invest in farm and home mortgages and corporation bonds unless these carry a rate in excess of what borrowers can afford to pay. There will be no "cheap money" for the common people until the doors of exemption are closed to the rich.

There is only one argument that has been advanced seriously against the taxation of income derived from Government bonds. It has been said that such taxation would result in increasing the rates on such obligations sufficiently to absorb the tax revenue that could be collected. That contention is plausible but not sound. A simple mathematical computation will answer it. Let us suppose that a 4-percent bond, tax exempt, running for say 20 years, is worth par on the basis of the prevailing money market. What would it be worth if taxed? Obviously it would be worth more to a potential investor in the lower income-tax bracket than to one in the higher, for the investor paying an 8-percent tax would receive as his net return not 4 percent but 4 percent less 8 percent of 4 percent, or 3.68 percent. He could afford to pay for the bond the present worth of $1,000 payable in 20 years at 3.68 percent, money being worth 4 percent—a computation every schoolboy has learned to make. He would bid a little less than $1,000.

The income-tax payer in the highest bracket, paying a 75-percent tax, would earn not 4 percent but approximately 1 percent net. In order to ascertain at what price to buy the bond in order to earn 4 percent net he would have to determine by mathematical calculation the present worth of $1,000 payable in 20 years at 1 percent, money being worth 4—which would be considerably less than $1,000.

On the day appointed the two men would bid. The higher bidder would get the bond. If the 75-percent income-tax payer wanted it, he would have to pay what the 8-percent income-tax payer could afford to give. If the 75-percent taxpayer got the bond, the Government would gain in the amount that his bid exceeded what the bond was worth to him at 4 percent. If he did not bid high enough to get the bond, he would be forced to get out of the retreat where those investors who refuse to take the hazards of business have in increasing numbers found refuge during the last years. In that event the objective which the administration has sought to accomplish—forcing money into the usual channels of trade where it will start the wheels of industry—would be attained.

There is no argument for tax exemption that bears close analysis. When some pay less taxes than they should, others pay more than they should. The forgotten man in the long run will bear the burden of the present effort to soak the rich. If he does not pay directly he will pay indirectly, in higher prices, in lower wages, and in postponement of the day of recovery.

It has been said that the return of prosperity depends upon a revival of the heavy industries. There would soon be a building boom in this country if rents were lowered so that every family that lives in 3 rooms could afford 6. Rents could be lowered, and would be lowered, if home mortgages bore 3½-percent instead of 7-percent interest, if a part of the tax burden on real estate were shifted to income from Government bonds, and if the freight rates on building material could be made to reflect a less burdensome financial structure.

A tax system that forces men to keep their estates liquid in anticipation of confiscatory inheritance taxes, that compels them to invest in easily marketable securities rather than in unmarketable plants and structures, that makes it more profitable to finance Government operations than business ventures, will retard recovery, encourage governmental extravagance, and destroy private initiative. Such a system will give socialistic enterprise an advantage over private enterprise, and thereby serve to break down our present economic system. Tax exemption presents definitely a more serious threat to our institutions than the empty mouthings of the gentlemen who recently met in Moscow to plot world revolution. Socialism, if it ever comes in this country, will come as the result of the confiscation of private property by taxation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. DELGADO].

Mr. DELGADO. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I should be compelled to rise in opposition to a bill that I know is a "must" bill, a measure that has to be enacted into law before this session may be brought to a close, but I would be remiss in my duty if I did not voice my emphatic protest against one of the amendments inserted at the last minute in the Senate to the bill now being reported by the House conference committee. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to section 402 which imposes what is called a "compensatory tax" on products made chiefly from coconut oil.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a flagrant violation of the trade compact contained in the Tydings-McDuffie Act passed only last year and by a great majority of the Membership of both Houses of the Seventy-third Congress. This act established the terms and conditions under which American-Philippine commercial relations would be carried on for the next 10 years. In your magnanimity you provided in this law that its provisions shall not take effect until accepted by the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for that purpose. Pursuant to this requirement, the Philippine Legislature did accept the law, assuming, of course, that such acceptance would, as it should, mean that this Congress will not undertake to change the provisions thus accepted without the consent of the people of the Philippines or of its authorized representatives. The Filipino people ratified that acceptance by an overwhelming majority.

The Tydings-McDuffie Act changes radically enough the trade relations existing heretofore between the United States and the Philippine Islands by restricting the free entry of many of our principal products into this country. Our people do not believe that these restrictions are entirely fair to us, at least so long as you exercise sovereignty over the islands. Nevertheless, we accepted the law ready to bear the consequences of the restrictions contained therein, onerous as they patently are, for the sake of having a foundation upon which we might build a stable economic structure.

But it is not the value involved, reckoned in dollars and cents, that causes us great concern. It is the feeling of insecurity that will necessarily follow the changes in the Tydings-McDuffie Act brought about by piecemeal legislation such as section 402 of the Revenue Bill under consideration, which has the effect of undermining the economic foundations laid down by that act. But disregarding completely our own material and moral interests in this issue, and considering the question purely from the angle of American advantages, it would require no astute logic nor a keen sense of observation to come to the conclusion that curtailment of Philippine sales to the United States would necessarily result in the lessening of the buying capacity of the people of the islands which in turn would result in the destruction of the eighth best market for American goods.

I know you are a practical and business-minded people. You are spending billions of dollars in surveying the possibilities of new markets and in expanding your foreign trade. The Philippines, Mr. Speaker, is not a mere possibility, but a market that is already yours. Would you give it away and sacrifice the benefits derived therefrom by the whole country only to please certain groups whose interests are limited to a few industries? The logic of the situation may be made clear by offering as an example the sad plight of your textile industry in the Philippines.

Recently, 60 distinguished Members of the House strongly endorsed a petition for an increased Philippine tariff on cotton goods with a view to enable the American producers of this commodity to cope with the competition brought about in the islands by countries producing textiles at a lower cost. We are whole-heartedly with you and are most willing to cooperate with you in saving your textile industry from the overshadowing ruin with which it is menaced in the Philippine market. [Applause.] But you can readily discern that this cooperation could be given only by increasing the cost of living for all Filipinos since we have to import almost all our requirements in the cotton-fabric line. Under the present state of affairs where the buying capacity of the average Filipino is being sliced to the bone by the gradual curtailment of Philippine exports to the only market at present available, it is hard to conceive how a greater protection could be extended to American textiles shipped to the Philippines. I do hope, however, that a satisfactory solution to this grave problem may be found.

I think I am justified in venturing the statement that the administration and many of you gentlemen are against the adoption of this Senate amendment, but, in view of the parliamentary situation created which places you in the dilemma of casting your votes against the whole bill just to eliminate this amendment or accept it, I am not so presumptuous as to hope that you would allow this whole measure, which affects the welfare of 130,000,000 American citizens, fail of passage for the sake of giving heed to the just protest of 14,000,000 Filipinos.

I would seem proper at this point, Mr. Speaker, to bring to recollection the recorded fact that the Filipinos have strenuously opposed the establishment of the so-called "free-trade" relations between America and the Philippines. Well-intentioned and lofty-minded American statesmen imposed these free-trade relations upon the Filipinos as a matter of principle. They could not feel at rest and in peace with their conscience while a condition existed whereby American products went to the Philippines duty free while Philippine commodities were admitted into America only after payment of the prescribed import taxes. The Filipinos were moved to oppose this act of justice on the part of America primarily on political grounds, although this attitude on their part was not wholly devoid of practical reasons.

A cursory glance at the statistical data on Philippine-American and foreign commerce would suffice to enable the impartial observer of Philippine affairs to discover these practical reasons. I shall presently offer these data for the purpose of setting aright certain mistaken notions concerning the possibilities and potentialities of Philippine foreign trade. Before so doing, I deem it not only proper but just to state that for 7 years previous to the imposition of the Philippine-American free trade, from March 8, 1902, to August 5, 1909, Philippine products were admitted into the United States with a preferential tariff reduction of 25 percent, whereas American commodities going to the Philippines paid full duties. From the latter date, however, while importations into the Philippines from the United States had been exempted from the payment of any levies, duty-free entry of Philippine products into the United States was denied to sugar in excess of 300,000 long tons annually; cigars in excess of 150,000,000; wrapper tobacco in excess of 300,000 pounds, and filler tobacco in excess of 1,000,000 pounds. Full duty was retained upon Philippine rice, and the law made dutiable Philippine products or manufactures containing foreign material in excess of 20 percent of their value.

The effect of this trade agreement should be obvious to all to require elaboration. Suffice it to say that the expectations of the supporters of the idea of American-Philippine free trade were abundantly realized. The volume of American sales to the Philippines registered substantial and steady gains, and so did the sum total of Philippine exportations to the United States. Proportionately, however, the Philippines lost in the bargain, for while American sales to the Philippines have augmented 91 times—from $1,353,086 in 1899 to $92,592,950 in 1929—American purchases of Philippine products increased only 32 times—from $3,935,235 in 1899 to $124,465,473 in 1929.

As to what the future had in store for Philippine foreign commerce if free trade between the United States and the islands had never been established may be gleaned with fair accuracy from the following figures showing the value, in American gold dollars, of merchandise imported into and exported from the Philippines from 1854 down to 1901, the year previous to the first tariff concession of 25 percent granted to products entering the United States from the islands:

[1] August to December.

The figures for the years 1859, 1868 to 1872, inclusive, and 1895 to 1897, inclusive, are missing from this table because efforts to locate them proved unavailing, but the data given covers a period of almost half a century, 48 years to be exact, immediately preceding the advent of American-Philippine free-trade relations.

What do these figures suggest to the fair-minded and unbiased student of the trend and development of a country's economy? That the growth of population, which carries with it increased consumption as well as production, has brought increment to the volume of the commercial intercourse of the Philippines with other countries. The progress was gradual and steady, with slight retrogressions at times but stable because it was free from any artificial stimulus. The balance of trade has been in favor of the islands except in 5 of the 35 years immediately preceding American occupation of the Philippines. The unfavorable balance of trade against the islands from 1898 to 1901 can be directly traced to the decline in production due to the armed strife between Americans and Filipinos that was raging during those years on Philippine soil.

The conclusion seems clear from the figures just given that Philippine foreign commerce would not have remained stationary or stagnant because of lack of the abnormal incentive of tariff protection. True it is that the advance would have been less spectacular and meteoric, but certainly it would have been of a more stable and less dependent nature.

Under this natural process of development of a country's economy, taking into account the increase in our population, our foreign commerce might have grown to only half of its present volume, but it would have been a permanent gain, uninfluenced and uncontrolled as it were by fictitious conditions.

But what is the situation that an overseas trade swollen to its present proportions by the expedient of tariff protection over which we have no control has created? It requires no effort of the imagination to perceive the fact that our country's economy would be deflated to virtual nothingness if the tariff balloon to which it has been forcibly attached since August 5, 1909, were inflicted the smallest puncture.

This inflationary process was given further impetus by the United States Tariff Act of 1913 which removed all duties on Philippine products coming into America except on those containing foreign material in excess of 20 percent of their value. Its effect has been, of course, to divert the Philippine foreign trade from its former competitive channels into the reservoir of monopoly.

Notwithstanding these potential inducements, the Filipinos had been rather slow, apathetic, I might say, in taking full advantage of the extraordinary opportunities offered their products in the American markets. The growth of the production of Philippine exportable commodities has therefore been kept at a normal pace.

Let me illustrate this point with a brief account of the development of Philippine sugar production. The highest annual exportation of this commodity attained before the advent of free trade was in 1895 when the country shipped to foreign markets 341,470 metric tons. Although as I have said before the Tariff Act of 1909 allowed 300,000 long tons of Philippine sugar to come to the United States duty exempt, and the Tariff Act of 1913 removed this restriction, the volume of sugar exports from the islands never attained the 1895 record until 1924, 15 years after the advent of free trade, when the country exported 357,830 metric tons of the sweet.

It was only after continued and insistent persuasion on the part of Federal agencies having jurisdiction over Philippine affairs, effectively seconded by the insular administration with grants of loans on very liberal terms through the Government-controlled bank for the erection of modern sugar mills, that the Filipino sugar planters finally acceded to cooperate in the movement to make the most of the American tariff concessions by increasing the yield of their lands. They were told that America produced but one-fifth of its sugar requirements, and since other sugar-producing countries had to pay duty while Philippine sugar was exempt from any levies, it was quite obvious that there was everything to gain and nothing to lose in the venture. Henceforth, they pledged their lands as security for the money loaned for the construction of sugar mills that would give their sugarcane greater yield of the sweet. Since the new plants needed more sugarcane to operate at a profit, every square inch of available ground in the old sugar region of the islands was plowed and planted to supply the new mills with the raw material required. Farmers who for generations had been engaged in sugar production and gave it up in despair because they found the returns meager and without prospects of betterment dusted off their old implements, and once more took up the cultivation of the crop that gave sustenance to their ancestors. The industry, thus stimulated, grew to the extent of attaining a maximum yearly production of about 1,500,000 long tons.

Sugar production in the United States is still four-fifths below its consumption requirements, which is patently indicative of the fact that American consumers of the sweet must either curtail its use or supply the deficit in the domestic production with imported sugar. Yet, on March 24, 1934, Congress enacted a law limiting the free entry to America of Philippine sugars to 50,000 long tons of refined and 800,000 long tons of unrefined sugar annually for a period of 5 years, and levying a graduated export tax for the succeeding 5 years which would have the effect of virtually closing the American markets to sugar coming from the islands from the second year of the collection of such tax.

The Filipino planters of sugarcane that pledged their lands as guaranty for the loans granted by the bank for the erection of sugar mills would be unable to meet these obligations within the next 7 or 8 years, with the result that they either will be dispossessed of their lands or the people at large would be made to sustain the loss since, as I said before, the creditor bank is a Government-controlled institution.

We are not greatly disturbed by the fact that our sugar and, I may properly add, our coconut oil, another industry developed exclusively under the aegis of free trade, are subjected to certain restrictions in the American market, while American products and manufactures are allowed free entry in unlimited quantities into the Philippines. What perplexes us is that you virtually tell us in this law of March 24, 1934, to make preparations to enter the competitive markets of the world, on the one hand, and on the other you set up barriers in that same law that would render such preparations impossible of realization.

It has been asserted in this Chamber, as well as in the Senate during the discussion of the measure that became Public, No. 127, Seventy-third Congress, that the purpose of the United States Congress in fixing in the law a preparatory or transition period of 10 years was to enable the islands to become commercially and economically independent from America before Philippine political independence becomes an accomplished fact. I grant most readily that the means devised to achieve that end were conceived in a spirit of helpfulness, but it is not hard to visualize that the results will fall far short of the expectations of the good men and good women of this Congress, who meant to set an example to the world of devotion to the cause of human freedom.

In support of this viewpoint it would suffice, I think, to call attention to the fact that during these 10 years of preparation our commercial outlet in America will be gradually shut to our exportable commodities, but we are virtually incapacitated to seek other markets for our surpluses since these can be secured only by means of trade agreements which the law specifically states "shall be under the direct supervision and control of the United States."

We could make no trade arrangements with other countries in favor of our products without agreeing to grant reciprocal concessions in our markets to their products. It is therefore apparent that an agreement of this nature will necessarily affect adversely American exportations into the Philippines and, consequently, no American chief executive can reasonably be expected to give it validity.

It has been averred that inasmuch as the Filipinos had accepted the law that contains such a glaring inconsistency, no other course is open to this Nation than to complete the transaction, providing the conditions specified in the Act are fully met. Yet, a few days after this law was signed by the President, the stipulation contained therein in respect to coconut oil was completely ignored by subjecting this product to the payment of a levy—the excise tax—from which, under the terms of the law, it should have been exempt. On top of this it is proposed by section 402 of the revenue bill, which I am now opposing, to levy additional burdens.

And because we seek to render workable the plan of this Congress to secure not only political but also economic independence to the Philippines, we are held before the eyes of the world as an unfair and ungrateful people.

This brings us to the consideration of a very delicate subject which I would rather not comment upon. Still I could not conscientiously shirk the issue, for, as the distinguished Senator from Idaho, the Honorable WILLIAM E. BORAH, rightfully wrote in the foreword to the book entitled "Philippine Uncertainty":

> Simplicity of heart, candid, open, frank, and fair dealing ought to be cardinal and first principles in all matters which have to do with the liberty and independence of a people.

I am certain that I voice the sentiment of every Filipino, old and young, man, woman, and child, when I say, as I do now, that we are profoundly grateful for all the progress, for all the material improvements bestowed upon us by American initiative and supervision. I admit, most whole-heartedly, that you have been generous to us beyond comprehension, but I am compelled to correct the statement that we have asked you to enter an agreement which will continue after our national independence, and under which the American people will continue to tax themselves for the purpose of keeping the Filipino people prosperous and successful indefinitely.

As I said before, free trade was never sought by the Filipinos. On the contrary, the Philippine Assembly adopted on March 27, 1909, a resolution petitioning Congress not to establish free trade on the ground that free trade between the United States and the islands would in the future become highly prejudicial to the economic interests of the Philippine people and would bring about a situation which might hinder the attainment of the independence of the said people. Limited free trade was, nevertheless, established for the avowed purpose of benefiting consumers of sugar in the United States. In 1913, without solicitation on the part of the Filipinos, Congress removed the restrictions contained in the Tariff Act of 1909 and established complete free trade. In pleading for this trade relationship between the United States and the Philippines, the late Oscar Underwood, at that time Democratic leader in the House, said:

> We could not honestly face those dependent people who give us free trade in their markets if we close our doors here * * *. Because we do not want to stand and face the world in such a position as that and say (to the Filipinos) that under our law we command you to open the door so that American goods can flow into your country, because we have the power to do it, and then turn around and say to them that on the only thing they can import, practically, into our country and make a market for we will close our doors and prevent them developing their trade. I say that no true-born American citizen who faces this question fairly and squarely and understands the situation will consent to that.

At the time of the enactment of the Tydings-McDuffie Act the estimated sugar production and consumption of the United States was given by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture as follows:

	Short tons
Estimated consumption requirements for 1934	6,476,000
Production, calendar year 1932–33:
Continental United States—short tons	1,539,000
Hawaii—do	1,008,000
Puerto Rico—do	816,000
Total domestic production	3,363,295
Requirement above production	3,112,705

If sugar is not beyond the pale of the economic law of supply and demand, the inescapable conclusion is that the American public would be benefited rather than taxed by the free admission of Philippine sugar into the American market, and the American sugar producer would not be in the least affected by it.

Notwithstanding the compelling eloquence of these figures and the unassailableness of the fact they establish that Philippine sugar cannot, under present levels of American production of this commodity, be the source of any factual material harm to domestic sugar producers, it is gratuitously insisted that we desire our prosperity at the expense of the economic ruin of these producers.

Let us grant for the sake of argument that this legislation is sound and well founded. Let us concede as well the correctness of the assertion that Philippine prosperity cannot be preserved except through the consent of this country to enter an agreement under which the American people will continue to tax themselves for the purpose of keeping the Filipino people prosperous and successful indefinitely. Indeed, it would require a prowess of mental prestidigitation to reconcile these pronouncements with the suggestion that that burden upon the American people would be lifted and the ruin of the American sugar producer averted by allowing the Filipinos to become a completely self-governing political entity, like one of your own States.

It would seem proper at this point to submit to you the recorded fact that the first political party organized in the Philippines had for its objective the attainment of statehood in the American federation of States. This movement was, however, at once discouraged as unfeasible under your ideas and principles of government. You seceded from the British Empire principally because of trade discrimination. Certainly, you cannot reasonably expect a people whom you have taught your own history and your own ideas and ideals on human rights to lend their consent to become the poor relation in the American national home and retain their self-respect and your respect.

The point has been stressed time and again that American-Philippine trade relations have advantaged the Filipinos more than they have benefited Americans, and the balances of trade between the two countries have been invoked and are still being flaunted in support of this contention. Once more I wish to assure you at this juncture that we are grateful, profoundly thankful, for all the benefits this country and her magnanimous people have graciously bestowed upon us. But this sentiment that has ever been aglow in the heart of every Filipino should not be allowed to overshadow the facts when the inalienable rights of a people to liberty are involved.

Allow me, therefore, to submit to your consideration the figures showing the trend and fluctuations of American-Philippine commercial intercourse during the half of a century immediately preceding the advent of free trade between the two countries, and by way of comparison the statistical data covering the periods under free trade most favorable to the Philippines.

Yearly average ratio of exports to every dollar of imports

1854 to 1894: Full-tariff period	$35.54
1902 to 1908: 25-percent preferential period	2.44
1909 to 1933: Free-trade period, including years of unfavorable balance	1.52

A glance at these figures should suffice to bring to any impartial mind the conviction that the trade balances in favor of the Philippines were far greater, proportionately, before the advent of free trade than at any time during its operation. And if we subtract from these favorable balances the amounts of money paid out of the Philippine treasury to American officials and employees who drew the highest salaries in the Philippine civil service from the inception of American sovereignty; the profits derived by American banking houses from operations attending the interchange of products between the two countries; marine and other kinds of insurance premiums; moneys paid for freight on American vessels; and last, but not the least, the gains accruing to the banks of this country from the use in their ordinary transactions of Philippine government funds deposited therein aggregating $61,500,000, these trade balances would thaw to a very negligible figure.

It would, therefore, seem fairer as well as more consistent with the reality of the situation to look upon the commercial relationship between America and the Philippines as profitable in about the same measure to both countries, than to twist this pleasant fact into sophistry and indulge in a wrangle as to who got the best of the other in the deal.

That the islands are rich in natural resources valuable to American manufactures and that the United States in turn are potential producers of commodities essential to Philippine life and progress are facts that cannot be justifiably denied. Our past experience in the interchange of these elements necessary to your industry and to our comfort has been mutually advantageous in every respect. The predominating position occupied by your products in our markets can be preserved, and the nook now reserved to our commodities in your field of consumption could be maintained without injury to any one. Why then, not wait for a frank exchange of views on this matter by means of an economic conference such as that announced by the President of the United States to take place shortly after the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines?

Why, again, could not this question be considered independently from political questions? Certainly, no true-born American would countenance a move on the part of his Government to bargain human rights in exchange for trade concessions.

As Senator BORAH truthfully said, "Selfishness, pride, and all kinds of sophistry may be expected to have influence in determining the time when a people are entitled to independence", but I am comforted by the conviction, putting it in the words of the same distinguished statesman, that "the American people are essentially just."

Indeed, it is most distressing to note the efforts exerted in certain quarters to becloud the now almost satisfactorily solved problem of American-Philippine relations by the revivification of imaginary Philippine shortcomings and incapacities which have long become mummified from lack of the vitalizing energy that only truth can supply. At a time when the enlightened elements of both countries should be one in the thought and determination to hasten the glorious culmination of a noble experiment along the paths of human freedom and progress which is without parallel, neither in the recorded history of mankind nor in the recollection of human mind, we are disturbed by the deafening fanfare of glaring untruths about Philippine conditions and dire prognostications as to the future of the islands which, although baseless and bearing all the earmarks of egoistic propaganda, are, nevertheless, apt to attract undue attention and draw unmerited hearing. This revival of blasted myths and discredited tales seems to be gaining force and aggressiveness as the day for the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines draws near. It would seem from these developments that there are elements that are bent on destroying the creditable contribution to world progress made by the good peoples of this country and of my country during the last quarter of a century.

I wish therefore to take advantage of this opportunity to denounce this destructive work in the most vigorous and emphatic terms. But realizing that the time of this Congress is sorely needed for the great national problems demanding prompt attention and speedy solution, I shall not abuse your kindness in giving me of your precious time by taxing your patience with a lengthy discourse on a subject which, although of the utmost importance to the 14,000,000 people that I have the honor and privilege of representing here, cannot justly claim precedence over questions affecting the welfare of 130,000,000 Americans. I shall merely request that I may be permitted to bring to your attention and to that of the people of the United States through the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the facts concerning the Philippines which selfish propaganda is endeavoring to confuse and, in some instances, deliberately misrepresent and distort.

To give you an illustration of the trend and nature of this propaganda it would seem sufficient to mention the fact that it is now asserted that Filipinos lack interest in public affairs. If this allegation were true, the inescapable and sad conclusion would be that American intervention in Philippine affairs is causing retrogression rather than promoting the advancement of the political education of the inhabitants of the islands, for in 1919 the Commission sent by President Harding to investigate conditions in the Philippines reported that "Interest in the election was wide-spread. Election day passed without any serious disturbance. There was a wide general acceptance by the minority of the result of the popular vote."

Fortunately, however, and to the lasting credit of America's high achievements in the Philippines, that interest in public affairs is growing as demonstrated by the number of women who for the first time exercised the right of suffrage in connection with the ratification of the constitution of the forthcoming Philippine commonwealth. It would be well, in this connection, to draw attention to the fact that the right of suffrage has been conferred on the Filipinos gradually. At first they were permitted to elect only their municipal officials; later on they were allowed to select their provincial executives, and ultimately their national legislators.

The fact that in the last general elections 1 of every 14 registered and fully 85 percent of those registered actually cast their votes should be an unerring proof of the greater confidence of the Filipinos in the efficacy of the political system implanted by America in the Islands and a rebuke to those that would discredit this fundamental achievement of American political tutelage over an alien race.

Even our agricultural methods have been pointed out as affording a justifiable reason for a change in the decision already reached by this Congress as to the ultimate political relationship between the United States and the Philippines. It has been alleged that our farming implements and methods of planting and harvesting, especially in reference to rice, are rather primitive. Anyone taking more than 3 or 4 weeks' time to observe this phase of Philippine productive activities could hardly fail to note that that primitiveness is not due to any apathy on the part of the Filipinos to adopt the methods prescribed by a civilization nurtured and developed in a hemisphere that has to contend with soil and climatic conditions entirely different from those prevailing in the Islands.

Of course, we use carabao instead of mule to plow our rice lands. Why? For the simple economic reason that the carabao can be procured at a considerably lesser cost than the mule, and because the carabao requires no imported feed as the mule would. The use of tractors was tried on low rice lands but it was found that no tractor has yet been made that could take the place of the carabao in these lands. A similar problem concerning the stripping of Manila hemp remains unsolved. Time and again the government of the Philippines has offered prices to encourage the design of a satisfactory mechanical stripping device for hemp fiber but to this day no practical machine has been evolved.

The nipa shacks in which the greater part of the rural population of the Philippines dwell has not escaped the keen sense of observation of my country's critics. These critics contend that these bamboo houses are insanitary and very damp during the heavy rains. Yet no impartial observer can reasonably deny that the dwellers of these rickety houses get more air and sunlight in them than the inhabitants of the tenement houses in many cities and the occupants of mountain and river-bank shacks in some admittedly more progressive and enlightened countries. Necessarily peoples, even animals, must live according to the climatic and other requirements of the particular zone of the earth wherein they abide. A polar bear can no more survive in a tropical country without the aid of ice than a man from the tropics brought to Washington in January or February garbed in his tropical attire.

But some of our critics have been rather kind to us. They grant that the Filipinos are for the most part a quiet, gentle, hard-working, and worthy people; that they have made real progress in wealth, in standards of living, in education, in the development of their natural resources. They also concede that the islands are very rich in natural resources, and that they are so situated as to enable them to become the trade center for more than half the population of the earth. Yet even these kind critics express fears that a people that have made such progress, that are the possessors of a country so rich and so advantageously situated, will be wiped out from the face of the earth because of the loss of their free American markets.

I purposely omit any reference to the current prophecies on the fate of the contemplated Philippine Republic because, I am obliged to confess, sorcery, astrology, palm reading, and other methods of divination are beyond my mental capabilities.

The most widely known historical prognostication made concerning the fate of a new nation may be found in the annals of your own struggle for freedom. Curiously enough, the very same predictions made concerning the future of the then young American Republic are being almost literally repeated in reference to the Philippines.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I not enter my most earnest plea that we put in effect a truce on all speculation as to what might be the lot of the Philippines in the event of independence, and buckle down to work on the tangible question of the welfare and happiness of the American people and of the inhabitants of the Philippines from the more practical angle of the progress and prosperity of both peoples? It would be well also to call a halt to every move to amend the Tydings-McDuffie Act until the whole question of American-Philippine trade relations may be fully considered by the conference which the President has planned for next year for the purpose of going into this matter. [Applause.]

I wish to thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for giving me this time, and I want to take this opportunity to say that while 7 months ago I came here almost a stranger, you have all been so kind and courteous to me that you now make me feel like a part and parcel of this House, and even when you refused what I wanted, you made me feel under obligations to you. My sincerest gratitude to the illustrious Speaker and to each and every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the conference committee upon the conference report which they have brought in and in doing so to express the belief that it is a far better bill than we had before us for consideration in the House and as it came from the committee. In saying this I naturally predicate my statement upon my own personal views in reference to the matter.

It will be recalled that I offered amendments in regard to a tax on intercorporate dividends, which was voted down. I also offered amendments striking out the gift tax on donees in the House bill, as well as an amendment to strike out title II, the inheritance tax, and insert in lieu thereof increased estate-tax rates; gift tax on donee and the inheritance-tax provisions both being new taxes set up by the House committee. Both of these matters went out in the Senate. In lieu thereof they have increased the tax rate both on gifts of donors and estate taxes, which I think is a far better proposition and much easier of administration. Had they not set forward the date applicable for these two rates, I think we could have gotten a tremendous amount from transfers or conveyances of trusts that are now being indulged in. This bill as amended in the Senate makes the date applicable January 1, 1936. Naturally, with the transfers now being made, it is a question whether or not they will be reached.

In increasing the rates on gifts and estates I thought it was the intention of Congress to try to catch the transfers now being made.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is referring to the estate tax as a gift tax?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these increases will relate back to any gift that may be made from the time of the effective date of this act.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is the thing that I am interested in, and I am wondering why the committee did not make the act effective upon its passage. In that way we would catch a lot of the transfers of property now being made.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course, we cannot retroactively impose an excise tax, but we can increase the rate.

Mr. McFARLANE. I understand that, and I am wondering if it does not become a question of fact as to the intent of the person at the time of making the conveyance. There is some question about that. I hope this bill will get the result that I know the President and the committee had in mind.

As to the other taxes that have been added in the Senate in keeping with the wishes of the President, was added the progressive corporation tax which was omitted by the House. They added an intercorporate dividend tax, which was omitted by the House. They struck out the inheritance tax and gift tax on donee contained in the House bill and increased the rates on existing gift and estate taxes, all of which I think is more progressive and easier of administration.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that we must drive this money out of hiding and force it into circulation and business channels before we will be able to take up the slack and stop this cycle of unemployment.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CROWTHER. I wonder if the gentleman realizes the difficulty that faces us in this matter, where State and municipal bonds are involved in the property?

Mr. McFARLANE. I understand, but we must have a beginning somewhere. If we are going to pass the buck back to the States and municipalities and use that as an alibi and excuse, we will never be able to accomplish anything.

Mr. CROWTHER. Then there ought to be a cooperative effort made of some kind.

Mr. McFARLANE. I say let us start it now. We have been fighting along here for years and have gotten nowhere.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Now, as to the exemptions provided in this bill, and as to the evasions and exemptions that now exist in the present law. There has been little, if any, effort made to close these loopholes.

ABOLISH THE BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

The Board of Tax Appeals is trying less than one-fourth of the cases now being filed with them. This means compromising cases involving millions of dollars of taxes. I know, and this has been called to the attention of both the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Senate Finance Committee, the two committees dealing with taxation, and they should have given more consideration than was given toward the elimination of these loopholes that mean such a tremendous loss to the Government. This Board has not functioned as a review body as Congress intended, but has set up a lot of highly technical rules never intended by Congress, which makes it impossible for the court to properly function. This Board as it now functions means a lot of expensive litigation to the Government.

This Board ought to be repealed and a board set up in lieu thereof which would correct this situation from an administrative standpoint. That has not been attempted in this bill and I hope the situation will be corrected at the next session.

There are many evasions contrary to some of the expressions here this afternoon. There are liberal exemptions. An estate could be worth many millions of dollars and little, if any, taxes would be paid if they were properly advised by a shrewd tax attorney. The tax laws are full of exemptions for the rich and by availing themselves of these exemptions, as the law is presently written, there will be very little tax collected based on the amount of wealth which a lot of these large estates have.

I am the only Member of the House, I believe, that submitted my views on taxation to both the House and Senate committees and offered amendments to make corrections as herein suggested. I hope the next session will give more consideration to the elimination of the many loopholes now existing in our tax laws, each of which quite naturally favors the wealthy, and no doubt the exemptions written into the law by well-financed lobbies working to that end. In addition to the number of loopholes previously pointed out, I submit these additional ones for the consideration of the committee and the House for early consideration next session.

SPECIAL BENEFITS TO SPECIAL INTERESTS WHICH SHOULD BE ELIMINATED

Interest

Section 23 (b) of the present law provides for a deduction on account of interest paid or accrued within the taxable year, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations the interest upon which is wholly exempt from tax. The indebtedness incurred by banks in paying interest on deposits is not treated as interest on money used to purchase exempt securities, even though these very deposits may be all invested in exempt securities. The effect of this construction is to make most of the larger banks exempt or practically exempt from income tax. The House attempted in writing the Revenue Act of 1934 to stop this loophole. (See pp. 21–22 of House report on the revenue bill of 1934.) In this report, the House used the following illustration:

> Suppose a bank pays interest of $16,000,000 on deposits. It receives from investing these deposits $20,000,000, of which $8,000,000 represents tax-exempt interest and $12,000,000 taxable interest. Since it is allowed to deduct the entire interest paid, namely, $16,000,000, it escapes tax entirely on the taxable interest of $12,000,000.

The Senate, however, reversed the House action and returned to the provisions of prior acts which permit banks to go practically free of tax. (See p. 24, Senate revenue bill of 1934.)

Depreciation

Congress still permits the taxpayer to deduct depreciation based on the March 1, 1934, value (sec. 113 (b), Revenue Act of 1934), despite the fact that the Supreme Court has held that the allowance for depreciation is a matter of discretion with Congress and no depreciation whatever is allowable as a constitutional right. It is interesting to note that England allows depreciation only in the case of machinery and equipment used in their business, and in that case only upon actual cost. No depreciation whatever is allowed upon buildings or upon some fictitious basis as has been done in the case of this Government.

Capital gains and losses

Section 117 of the present law holds out considerable inducement to charge taxpayers to withhold their property from sale for a long period of years. You will note that if the taxpayer sells the property in the first year he is taxable upon 100 percent of the gain. If sold after 1 year, but not more than 2, 80 percent, and if held for 10 years or more only 30 percent of the net income is subjected to tax. The forerunner of this provision was placed in the Revenue Act of 1921 at the instigation of Ogden L. Mills. The excuse for its insertion was that it would facilitate the sale of capital assets and therefore produce more revenue even at the low rate proposed at that time (12½ percent). It needs no student of taxation to see that the amendment instead of inducing taxpayers to sell property has the opposite effect because the longer held the less amount of tax. It is impossible to estimate the loss in revenue resulting from this provision. Undoubtedly, it runs into hundreds of millions since its enactment. Even under the present law it would seem to account for the loss of a good many millions per year.

Life-insurance companies

The present scheme of taxing life-insurance companies is said to have been worked out for Congress by Dr. T. S. Adams of Yale University who formerly advised Congress on internal revenue matters. The scheme itself has every evidence of having been written by the life-insurance companies' attorneys. In substance, it provides a separate method of computing income for life-insurance companies, and in the case of mutual insurance companies only the income from investments is included in gross income (secs. 201 to 203, inclusive). From the gross income there is allowed any expense allocable to investment income. Then a special deduction of 3¾ percent of the mean of its reserve funds held at the beginning and end for the taxable year is also deducted. This deduction prior to the Revenue Act of 1932 was 4 percent instead of 3¾ percent. It is a well-known fact that almost every State in the Union prescribed the amount to be set up each year by the life-insurance companies to cover its reserves.

The deduction is a matter of accounting and is carefully checked by most of the States and there seems no reason why the deduction should not be the actual amount approved by the insurance commissioner of the various States. Many of these States allow 3 percent or slightly more. When the Revenue Act of 1932 was written this fact was brought out, but the large insurance companies opposed such a proposal and it was mainly through their influence that the rate was fixed at 3¾ percent. This allows the large insurance companies to reduce their taxable income by substantial amounts in excess of their actual bookkeeping, whereas it does the small insurance companies little, if any, good whatever because these companies are required to set up a reserve of approximately 3¾ percent. A computation could be made of the loss in this respect, but it probably is in excess of $5,000,000 each year.

Recognition of gain or loss

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1921 gain or loss, with but a few exceptions in the 1918 act, was determined in the case of every transaction. In the 1921 act, however, special provisions were inserted which were designed, so Congress was informed, to postpone the tax on certain transactions. These provisions are found in section 112 of the present law, and frequently operate in such a manner as to relieve numerous transactions of any tax burden whatever. The general scheme was to postpone the tax, but it in fact postponed the actual determination of the gain or loss.

It is impossible to estimate the millions of dollars that have been lost in the past by reason of these provisions. The Ways and Means Committee considered this question at the time of the enactment of the present law, but the changes made do not materially change the nature of this section, with the result that revenue is still being lost.

Tax-free dividends

Congress continues to grant immunity from tax to dividends paid out of 1913 values. This is true despite the fact that the Supreme Court holds that these dividends may be subjected to tax. The House on two occasions has attempted to tax these profits, but in each case their attempt was checked by the action of the Finance Committee of the Senate. It was estimated during the course of the Revenue Act of 1934 that at least $10,000,000 in revenue is lost from this source each year.

Credit for foreign taxes

This country is practically the only large country which permits a credit for foreign taxes. It is very difficult to justify this credit when no credit is allowed for income taxes paid to the various States of the Union. Proponents of this credit stress the hardship that would be put on our foreign trade by its withdrawal. However, England is a country which gives great consideration to its foreign trade, and does not permit such a deduction. This is true despite the fact that the latter country has very high taxes. The loss in revenue from this source runs all the way from $20,000,000 in depression years to as high as $50,000,000 in prosperous years.

CONCLUSION

I submit to the Ways and Means Committee and to the House that if the above loopholes, along with the many other loopholes I have previously mentioned, and the amendment I have offered, are approved and the very liberal exemptions cut down to within reason, that instead of collecting about $1,000,000,000 per year, as collected this year from income tax, we would collect more than twice this amount. We all agree that a tax based on ability to pay is the fairest tax; then why not eliminate the loopholes that favor the rich at the expense of the poor and place this money into the Treasury, where it belongs, to help cover some of our staggering indebtedness? [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, in my study of congressional tax measures, this is the first tax bill in which an effort has been made to tax those who have the actual ability to pay. If my information is correct, and if the amount of money this tax bill will raise reaches $250,000,000 or $275,000,000, then that sum will amortize $6,000,000,000 of the national debt on the basis of the present interest rate that we are paying. This is on a 40-year basis. This makes the new-deal expenditures self-liquidating. For this reason, and because I believe that taxes ought to be collected, I am unqualifiedly for this measure. I say that this is the first attempt on the part of the Congress to actually place the tax burden where it belongs, i. e., on the shoulders of those who are able to pay. It is my belief that taxes should be levied on those who can pay. This bill is in full accord with my views. For that reason I am for it and will vote for it on the principle that we are now taxing in accordance with the taxpayer's ability to pay.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my very sincere appreciation to my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], a distinguished Member of this House and a very able member of the Committee on Ways and Means, for his very kind and courteous remarks with respect to my services as chairman of that committee.

I also wish to correct my statement in a colloquy with him awhile ago with respect to the amount of taxes raised under a previous administration in the tax bill to which he referred. I find upon refreshing my memory that the request from the President at that time was an increase of about $900,000,000, or nearly the amount the gentleman stated. After the House had taken action and the bill had gone to the other body there came a further request from the President of the United States for an additional amount of $300,000,000, and we endeavored to increase the bill so as to raise that amount, and we did increase the bill before it was finally enacted into law to raise something like that amount. After we had done this business conditions were so unfavorable throughout the country that we failed by something like three or four hundred million dollars of balancing the Budget, but we did the very best we could.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] is one of the ablest and fairest men in this House and is as nonpartisan, I believe, as any man in the House. A few years ago I thought he was one of the most active partisans in the House. I was either wrong then or he has undergone an improvement. I think it is both. I think I somewhat overestimated his partisanship and that he has experienced a considerable change. Anyway, I repeat that I have never known a more patriotic man in the performance of his duties, or a man who approaches his duties with a fairer conception of his responsibilities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this bill, while it will not balance the Budget, it will raise a substantial sum. It will make a start in that direction, and if business continues to improve, as we all hope it will, and as it is improving now, instead of this bill producing about $250,000,000, Mr. Parker, our able expert on tax matters, estimates it will probably raise about $400,000,000. With $400,000,000 of additional revenue under this bill, and with the economies that we should, and must, effect as we get away from the requirements for relief and recovery, I think we will balance the Budget in another year or two. I sincerely hope we can, and I believe we will; and I state to the House now that I am just as anxious, and will go just as far as a man consistently or reasonably can, in an effort to reduce expenditures to the lowest possible level consistent with proper government service. I pledge myself to do this, because it is essential for the good of the entire country.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on agreeing to the conference report I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 247, nays 73, answered "present" 3, not voting 107, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Sinclaire, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2796) entitled "An act to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9215. An act making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HALE, and Mr. KEYES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8870) entitled "An act to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, to enforce the twenty-first amendment and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 38. Concurrent resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress; and

H. Con. Res. 39. Concurrent resolution authorizing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to sign bills and joint resolutions after the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2002. An act to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3260. An act to amend Public Law No. 438, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1912. An act for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army; and

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 872) entitled "An act for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims."

STATEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. LEE, is absent. If present he would have voted "aye" on the tax bill conference report, and also would have voted "aye" on the utilities conference report.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. LEE and Mr. GASSAWAY, of Oklahoma, both inform me that if present at the time of the consideration of the flood-control bill, H. R. 8455, they would have voted "yea."

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES AND COMMISSIONS BY THE SPEAKER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may have until Wednesday next, August 28, 1935, to appoint committees and commissions that have been authorized by the House or by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS BRIDGE BILL

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I call up from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 9070, the omnibus bridge bill, with Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, calls up a bill with Senate amendments thereto.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate amendments and that they be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what this bill is?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is the omnibus bridge bill passed a few days ago. The Senate amended it by adding five new bridges not provided in the original bill. All of them are strictly according to the approved form of the House for these bridges. One of them is a State-owned free bridge. The others are publicly owned toll bridges, with a 20-year amortization.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, under what right is this bill called up?

The SPEAKER. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, which authorizes any member of a committee, when directed by the committee, to call up House bills with Senate amendments, on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point that the committee has not had a meeting since the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot go behind the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the committee has met and considered this bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky will reply by repeating what he said in the beginning, that by the direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I call this bill from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Clause 2 of rule XXIV provides:

> House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Is there objection?

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the so-called "Brooks bill" included in this?

Mr. CHAPMAN. That is the bill offered by Mr. BROOKS, of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MORITZ. Yes.

Mr. CHAPMAN. That was included in the original bill as it passed the House. This includes all bills passed by the House and five bills added by the Senate.

Mr. MORITZ. Is the Brooks bill a toll-bridge bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It is.

Mr. MORITZ. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. MCFARLANE)—ayes 130, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY RELIEF IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Insular Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3140) to provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 may be expended for permanent rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all sums which the President has segregated or allotted or shall segregate or allot for projects in Puerto Rico out of the money appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 shall constitute a special fund to provide relief and work relief and to increase employment in Puerto Rico. The fund thus established shall continue available for expenditure until June 30, 1940. All income derived from operations financed out of this fund and the proceeds of the disposition of property acquired therewith shall constitute a revolving fund, which shall remain available for expenditure for the purposes and in manner authorized herein and in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 until Congress shall provide otherwise, notwithstanding any limitation of time contained in the said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. Any agency or agencies lawfully designated or established to administer funds allotted hereunder or the revolving fund herein authorized may be continued so long as the said funds or any of them remain available for expenditure.

Projects for rural rehabilitation in Puerto Rico may include the acquisition, development, maintenance, and operation of agricultural enterprises. A reasonable charge may be made for materials and services produced or made available by any project: Provided, That such materials and services may also be supplied as compensation, in whole or in part, for services rendered by persons employed upon any project.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 15 (f) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended by section 8 of the act of May 9, 1934, or any action taken thereunder, all or any part of the unobligated balance of taxes heretofore or hereafter collected from the processing of sugar beets or sugarcane in Puerto Rico and/or upon the processing in continental United States of sugar produced in or coming from Puerto Rico are hereby authorized, in the discretion of the President, to be transferred to the revolving fund authorized by this act. Not exceeding $10,000,000 of this fund may, in the discretion of the President, be set aside in the Treasury for use as an insurance fund to insure individual agriculturists in Puerto Rico, but to the extent only of such insurance fund and its accretions, against damage by hurricane to their farm dwellings and farm buildings, growing crops, plants and trees, including trees used as shade for growing crops, warehouses and produce in barns and warehouses: Provided, That said fund may be so employed only during such periods as the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that commercial insurance is not available, and at premiums sufficiently high to keep the principal of the original insurance fund intact, and policies of insurance shall be issued hereunder only pursuant to such terms and premium rates as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe by regulations duly promulgated. Until otherwise provided by law all moneys collected as premiums on such insurance or otherwise in connection with the administration of such fund or the operation of such insurance activity shall constitute accretions to the fund and shall be held, together with the original insurance fund and all additions thereto, as a revolving fund for the purposes of such insurance.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to 20 minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. TABER. Is H. R. 8621 identical with this Senate bill, so that if I have one copy it will do as well as the other, or is there a change?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No. There is one change.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on this bill at the request of the Committee on Insular Affairs. This is a measure that the administration is vitally interested in, due to the very peculiar economic conditions in Puerto Rico.

The measure is necessary in order to spend more slowly the funds allocated to Puerto Rico from the public-works fund, the relief funds. It entails no additional expense. It permits the Interior Department to take funds allocated to Puerto Rico and extend the time over which they are to be expended because of the peculiar conditions of Puerto Rico. It is not a question of building bridges or roads or things like that in Puerto Rico. It is agricultural rehabilitation, the planting of coffee bushes and the planting of trees to shade the bushes.

We all know that coffee bushes produce in about 5 years after they are planted. This bill permits this money that has been allocated to Puerto Rico to be expended over that period from now until 1940, rather than in the next 2 years. That seems to me to be a very meritorious request, in view of their condition there.

The second provision of the bill provides that from the processing tax on the goods in Puerto Rico an insurance fund is built up to insure against damage in Puerto Rico. At the present time, due to the severe storms, typhoons and others, it is impossible to get insurance in Puerto Rico because the rates are prohibitive. This builds up a fund from their own processing tax. That, too, seems to me to be logical.

Now, in connection with the report on this bill, I will read to you a letter addressed to Dr. Gruening, who had to do with the administration of affairs in Puerto Rico:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 15, 1935.

Hon. ERNEST H. GRUENING,
Administrator Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DR. GRUENING: It appears to me that H. R. 8621 (S. 3140), "to provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 may be expended for permanent rehabilitation, and for other purposes", provides a practical method of helping to put Puerto Rico permanently on its feet with the money to which it is entitled under the relief appropriation act.

The peculiar needs of Puerto Rico, as you know, require that funds there be spent more slowly than on the continent, and in a manner adapted to the special requirements of Puerto Rico. Otherwise there will be no end in sight to large Federal expenditures on the island in the future for the mere purpose of avoiding a social collapse.

I hope you will find time to confer with Members of Congress and to explain to them how pressing the situation in Puerto Rico is.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman could tell us whether or not it is a fact that Puerto Rico is now allowed to retain all customs duties collected at its ports and also all port fees? I understand that is a fact, but I am not sure about it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I regret that I do not have that information.

Mr. TABER. My understanding is that that is so, but I am not sure of it. I thought perhaps the gentleman could give me that information.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No. I do not happen to know that.

This House bill was reported out with but one voice raised in committee against it. The voice of the gentleman raised in committee against this House bill was for one reason, that it provided for certain industrial work which he opposed. The Senate bill, as presented to you, has stricken out the objectionable part. So that, as far as the Committee on Insular Affairs is concerned, we are unanimous for this bill as it has passed the Senate.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. I notice on page 2 of the bill, beginning in line 12, it is provided:

Projects for rural rehabilitation in Puerto Rico may include the acquisition, development, maintenance, and operation of agricultural and industrial properties and enterprises.

Does that mean that this fund is going to create new industries in Puerto Rico?

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I say to the gentleman that that is the provision that the gentlemen on his side of the aisle objected to in the House committee. It has been stricken out and is not being considered in the bill before the House.

Mr. HOLMES. This is a Senate bill I have here. The gentleman said they were different.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have the Senate bill before me.

Mr. HOLMES. I was reading from the Senate bill myself, S. 3140.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, that is the provision of the House bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It was stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. HOLMES. I am reading the Senate bill. It goes on to say further:

A reasonable charge may be made for material and services produced or made available—

And so forth.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is very evident the gentleman is not reading from the same bill from which I am reading.

Mr. HOLMES. I am reading from the bill S. 3140.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read lines 12, 13, and 14 of the engrossed Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the lines requested.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 12, 13, and 14: "Project for rural rehabilitation in Puerto Rico may include acquisition, development, maintenance, and operation of agricultural enterprises."

Mr. DEMPSEY. The word "industrial" has been stricken.

Mr. HOLMES. In my bill, Mr. Speaker, the word "industrial" is included and I was interested in knowing whether or not it was intended to create new industrial plants in Puerto Rico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Senate amendment struck out the word "industrial."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are there any other changes in the Senate bill as compared with the House bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; that is the only one.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to oppose a bill that is proposed and presented on the floor by my distinguished and lovable friend, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERGUSON). Two hundred and eighty-three Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. MCFARLANE, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I regret sincerely to be compelled to take the floor in opposition to a bill that was brought to the floor by my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], but I think the Membership of the House should be advised as to what is in this legislation.

I call the attention of the Membership to the fact that when we passed the $4,800,000,000 relief bill we placed a limitation therein of June 30, 1937, beyond which time the President could not spend money out of said appropriation. Notice the first sentence of the pending bill. It reads as follows: "That all sums which the President has segregated or allotted or shall segregate or allot for projects in Puerto Rico shall constitute a special fund to provide work relief and to take care of unemployment in Puerto Rico and shall continue available for expenditure until June 30, 1940." The Congress of the United States would extend privileges 3 years for Puerto Rico beyond the time the same Congress closed the door on your constituents and mine. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Not now.

What does this mean? Are you willing to go back home to your constituents, face them, and have them say: "You fixed this thing so that Puerto Rico could continue on the dole while we, your constituents, are taken off the dole."

Does some one want to tell me that the citizenship of Puerto Rico is in worse shape than are the people of the drought-stricken area of the farm and wheat districts of the great Middle West? Does some one want to tell me that the citizens of Puerto Rico are in worse shape than citizens in the stricken areas in the industrial centers of the United States?

Now, let us see what else we do here. We not only extend the time 3 years under which the President may continue to pay the dole to Puerto Rico, after we have been cut off, but we do something else, and I want to read section 2, page 2, as follows:

Notwithstanding the provisions of section 15 (f) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended by section 8 of the act of May 9, 1934, or any action taken thereunder, all or any part of the unobligated balance of taxes heretofore or hereafter collected from the processing of sugar beets or sugarcane in Puerto Rico and/or upon the processing in continental United States of sugar produced in or coming from Puerto Rico are hereby authorized, in the discretion of the President, to be transferred to the revolving fund authorized by this act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Membership of this House that if they pass this bit of legislation they must go back home to their constituents ready to say to them that this little niche of an island down there, which, in my opinion, we were very kind to when we took it under our wing, has been extended privileges beyond the privileges which we have extended to our own constituents.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does the gentleman know that we returned to them last year $10,000,000 in taxes on fats and oils?

Mr. NICHOLS. I did not know we were going to give them that extra amount, but I think we have given them about $35,000,000 under this act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who just spoke made so many misstatements that it indicated an entire lack of understanding of the subject with which we are dealing. The facts are that we do not appropriate one single solitary dollar in this bill to Puerto Rico. All we do is to ask for the right to take the relief money that has been allocated to that island and give them an opportunity to use the money as a special fund with which to rehabilitate the island. That is all. There is not another thing.

What has happened in Puerto Rico? There are two special crops. One is sugar that has not helped the island very much, and the other is coffee. The finest grade of coffee in the world is grown in Puerto Rico. Most of it is sold in the southern countries of Europe, Spain particularly, and it brings to them higher prices than the coffee of Brazil. The trouble in Puerto Rico and what has brought so much destitution to that island is the hurricane proposition. It is difficult to provide any sort of defense against these hurricanes. Last year we spent $14,000,000 and $14,000,000 in addition to that the year before for relief in Puerto Rico. Why? Because the hurricanes had destroyed some of these coffee trees and the farm labor drifted down into the cities where they are living in the slums. What we want to do is to take them out of the cities and put them back in the rural areas where they belong and make them self-sustaining.

It is impossible to go through with such a program if it is limited to 1937. In two years we have spent foolishly $28,000,000 by the dole system. We want to abolish that. We want to make permanent relief, and in order to do that we want to create a revolving fund, and this revolving fund to begin with is only the amount that has already been allocated to Puerto Rico.

I have heard it said that Puerto Rico is getting five times as much as any of the States. I want to say that is absolutely false. Puerto Rico has 368,000 unemployed. According to the testimony before our committee, it is getting $30,000,000. The State of Wisconsin has 185,000 unemployed, and we are getting $90,000,000. Does that look as though Puerto Rico is getting five times as much? They are not getting as much as is allocated to the average State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, the only argument which is raised against this bill is that we extend the time to 1940, while the money appropriated for relief in the various States must be spent by 1937; hence a great hullabaloo is raised, and it is said that Puerto Rico is being treated better than the States in this respect. But let us analyze the facts. It makes no difference what the time limit is. What count are the results.

The results in the Puerto Rican situation are these. If you spend the money by 1937 you will have spent no more or less than you are providing by the provisions of this bill. So that the bill does not spend an additional penny more than has already been allocated to Puerto Rico. I repeat, we do not spend one penny more nor one penny less under this bill than has already been allocated to Puerto Rico. Now, then, if we are going to take this money and throw it into Puerto Rico in such a manner that it will be wasted and of no use to Puerto Rico and of no use to the United States, then what good is it to insist that the money must be spent by 1937?

Why not give Puerto Rico a chance? Why not give her an opportunity to spend this money in a manner which will help her? We might as well spend this money in a manner which will be useful to Puerto Rico, give her the time she wants, and really aid her. It takes time to plan and to take care of the land in Puerto Rico which was taken out of sugar cultivation, and restore it to the Puerto Ricans so that they may earn a living from it.

This bill will do the following for Puerto Rico:

First. To provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 shall be available for expenditure until June 30, 1940.

Second. That these moneys shall be considered as a special fund.

Third. That all income derived from operations financed out of this fund, and the proceeds of the disposition of property acquired therewith, shall constitute a revolving fund to remain available for expenditure for the purposes and in the manner authorized in the bill and in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, until Congress shall provide otherwise.

Fourth. To coextend the life of any agency or agencies of the Government lawfully designated to administer such funds with the life of the fund itself. The President has already established by Executive Order No. 7057, dated May 28, 1935, the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration to administer work relief for the island in a coordinated manner.

Fifth. To define rural rehabilitation so as to make it applicable to the special needs of Puerto Rico.

Sixth. To place in the special fund hereby created the processing taxes derived from Puerto Rican sugar under the Jones-Costigan Act (said processing taxes having already been assigned to Puerto Rico by Executive order dated June 9, 1934) authorizing a part of this money to be used for setting up insurance against hurricanes for Puerto Rican farmers when said insurance shall not be available at practicable rates from private insurance companies.

A great deal has been said here that Puerto Rico is receiving too much. I say that Puerto Rico is not receiving enough. Anybody who knows the facts knows how much the workers of Puerto Rico are suffering, knows how great their need is, and that we have not appropriated sufficiently to take care of their needs. Puerto Ricans are Americans, good citizens, and therefore they are entitled to the same treatment as the unemployed in our States. I trust that you will be just at this late hour and pass this bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the situation is somewhat like this, and if I make any misstatements I would like to be corrected. Frankly, from the situation as I understand it, I can draw no conclusion from it except that those who are interested in keeping the integrity of government here in this country ought to vote against this bill.

My undertsanding is there has been an allotment of $35,000,000 for relief to Puerto Rico under the act of April 8, 1935. My understanding also is that this is unquestionably five times the amount that is legitimately required for relief during the current fiscal year, and this is all that is being provided out of that relief fund for any part of the United States, except Puerto Rico.

Now, without regard to the interests of the United States Treasury, without regard to the obligation which was placed upon the Executive in the allotment of funds for relief, five times the amount required has been allotted in this case.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman stated he wanted to be corrected if he made any misstatements.

Mr. TABER. And because they are not able to use the money intelligently they bring in this bill and want to embark upon a large program of agricultural rehabilitation and rural rehabilitation, including the acquisition, development, maintenance and operation of agricultural enterprises. Instead of confining this to a pay-as-go proposition, they extend the time within which this money shall be spent to 1940.

It seems to me ridiculous that in your district and mine only such sums are being used for relief as are currently needed and only such amounts are being allotted——

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. When we find we have allocated for relief five times the money necessary for that particular purpose, is it not possible to take that money back into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. TABER. My own idea is that what ought to be done in this particular case is that the President should withdraw that portion of the allotment which is not needed for relief.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman said he wanted to be corrected if he made a misstatement and I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman stated they are spending five times as much as was needed. They have spent about $28,000,000 in the last 2 years and they are going to allot $30,000,000 on a 2-year basis but to be spread over 5 years. This is a decrease and not an increase for the year. The gentleman certainly does not maintain that this is a greater amount of money.

Mr. TABER. Now, wait a minute and let me get this straight in the minds of the Members of the House.

Thirty-five million dollars, I understand, has been allotted.

Mr. MAVERICK. Thirty million dollars.

Mr. TABER. This, in my opinion, is five times as much as they need for relief down there. It must be five times that amount, or you would not want to spread this out for 5 years.

Mr. MAVERICK. Oh, no.

Mr. TABER. I must decline to yield further.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman asked us to contradict him, and stated he would permit us to correct his statements.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield further.

I simply want to call the attention of the House to the facts and to the logical deduction from what the gentleman from Texas has said to us, which is that there are five times as many dollars allocated for relief down there as there should be; otherwise they would not want to extend the time within which it might be expended to 5 years; and it is also true that under this bill they can allot almost any amount they please out of this relief fund for these agricultural enterprises and have 5 years to expend it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Oh, no.

Mr. TABER. Oh, the gentleman must not have read his bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I cannot yield now.

The gentleman must realize that when they are spending this money over 5 years and can allocate any amount they please on these agricultural enterprises it must be per se a wasteful procedure. The Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], was very particular when this bill was up to limit the time within which the money might be expended to June 30, 1937, and this rule applies to all of us except Puerto Rico if this bill is passed.

Now, let us beat the bill and let Puerto Rico stand like the rest of us.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. In addition to the $30,000,000 they take the processing tax on sugar and add that to this amount.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. And that is in addition to the $30,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to understand the situation. This bill is not an appropriation bill. It does not appropriate a single dollar, but it seeks to permit the Rehabilitation Administration in Puerto Rico to spend the money that has been allocated slowly and wisely, so that Puerto Rico may be really and permanently rehabilitated and the burden upon the taxpayers in the United States may be ended.

Now, we have heard it said time and again that we should first think and then spend. Here is an attempt to plan, to think, to map out a course of progress that will rehabilitate Puerto Rico and end the drain upon the taxpayer of this country. Now, do you want to waste this money or do you want to spend it wisely to put Puerto Rico on its own feet?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I am sorry I do not have the time to yield.

I hope you will vote for this bill so that the plan that has been worked out can be carried out and we can stop spending our money in Puerto Rico. This is the issue, Mr. Speaker, that this bill presents. This plan has been studied, it has been worked out and it has the endorsement of the administration.

This bill has the endorsement of the President of the United States. Do you want to enable the board to carry out wise plans, or do you want to force them to spend the money quickly and foolishly instead of slowly and wisely?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I must take issue with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania who has just told you that the $10,000,000 provided for in this bill is not an appropriation. It is specifically provided on page 3 of the bill that $10,000,000 of the processing tax on sugar shall be set up as an insurance fund. According to present Democratic theories that may not be an appropriation, but it certainly is in my opinion. The bill provides that the processing tax paid on sugar processed in Puerto Rico, or continental United States, shall be used as the basis for an insurance fund against loss by hurricane to farm dwellings, farm buildings, growing crops, plants, trees, including shade trees, warehouses, and produce in barns and warehouses. This puts the Government in competition with the private insurance companies. It means nothing more or less.

I want those of you who want this bill supported, I want those of you who are going to vote for it, to go back home to the housewives in your districts and tell them that you want them to approve the payment of $16,666 by them every day in the year to provide an insurance fund for Puerto Rico. I want you to tell the housewives back home that every time they go in and buy a pound of sugar they are helping to look after the insurance fund in Puerto Rico. I want you to tell the housewives in your districts that every time they go to a store to buy this necessary staple, sugar for the table, for canning, and all other domestic uses, they are providing means for the maintenance of an insurance fund for possible losses in Puerto Rico. Tell these housewives that you believe they should help pay the premiums for the landowners and growers in Puerto Rico. What is its purpose? What is the object of this legislation? It is set up because the proponents of this legislation say that the insurance premiums down there are too high. Mr. Speaker, this is nothing more or less than a socialistic scheme to put the Federal Government in the insurance business in competition with private insurance companies, to have the housewives of America pay the premiums for insurance against loss by hurricane in Puerto Rico for the benefit of the landowners of Puerto Rico, and to saddle the cost of this protection for the landed proprietors of Puerto Rico on the bread winners of America. My first duty is to the people whom I represent, and I shall oppose vehemently and persistently all endeavors to compel my people to assume the obligations which in justice rests on the shoulders of the people with Puerto Rico. Charity begins at home; and while the present distress of unemployment in my district continues, and which has not been relieved by the futile efforts of the present administration, I shall oppose these measures of the bestowal of benefactions upon others.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Mexico to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DEMPSEY) there were—ayes 59, noes 43.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the grounds that there is no quorum present, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After a pause.] Evidently there is no quorum present. The call is automatic. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 101, not voting 159, as follows:

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL 1935–36

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I made a statement which was carried in the press that I was going to stand for retrenchment in expenditures and retrenchment in appropriations. [Applause.] Several days ago I made the same statement to my colleagues on the floor of this House when we were considering the supplemental appropriation bill. I am going to keep the faith. [Applause.]

At that time we passed this appropriation bill carrying, in round numbers, $93,000,000, in response to new legislation passed by the Congress and carrying out the legitimate administration of that new legislation. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate has increased that bill by about $500,000,000. I am going to let the bill die before I will give in. [Applause.] The Senate having adopted a concurrent resolution to adjourn, cannot retract. So, as far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned, we have no further business for this session of Congress.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Does not the gentleman think it fair to let the House pass on the question of whether it desires to provide mandatory loans on cotton and wheat rather than pass on it himself?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I say to my colleague I have been in this House day in and day out during this session, and I have seen bill after bill come up to authorize new appropriations. Only one little insignificant bill has been voted down out of bills involving hundreds of millions of dollars. [Applause.] It is time for this Congress to adjourn if you do not want to ruin the credit of your Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say, and no amount of persuasion can move this Scotch mind of mine. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I happen to be one of those who represent the cotton farmers. There are some men here who represent the wheat farmers. If this is going to be an attack on the Senate for attempting to save the wheat and cotton farmers from destruction by reason of the recent ruling, we want to be heard.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not object. The gentleman can have all the time he wants.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am 100 percent with the sentiment expressed by the chairman. [Applause.] To my mind, the action of another body that has proceeded in the last 24 hours to put everything in the deficiency appropriation bill except the kitchen sink, and pass a resolution to adjourn in a few hours and send it over to the House, saying, "Swallow it, because we are going to adjourn in a few hours", is intolerable.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The amendments put on there carry legislation of the most vital importance, which have no place on a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. Fundamentally changing the entire agricultural policy of the administration.

Now, I say we are here to do business for our constituents and not to go on a fishing trip or back home on a vacation. Vital problems are facing this country. It does not make a bit of difference to me whether we adjourn tonight at 12 o'clock or next month at 12 o'clock. [Applause.] We ought to meet our duties.

I must part company with my good chairman, whom I respect and honor, who is doing a good job on the Appropriations Committee, when he says he is going to let the bill die. Do not let the bill die. I will tell you what will happen in another body in an hour or two. They will do what they often do—change their minds. They will do that. In just a few hours—in just a few minutes you will see the Senate withdraw that resolution to adjourn and then come back and try to work this thing out. If you will sit tight here and do your duty as a Representative, as we are supposed to do it, we will work this bill out. There are vital matters concerned, and the bill ought not be permitted to die.

The social-security set-up that means so much to all of our constituents and to the administration is involved here. All of their funds are involved if we do not pass this bill but let it wait until we come back again. So, gentlemen, let us proceed with discretion and caution, and sit tight.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree with the gentleman we have a lot of things to do. Let me repeat what a great President, one of the greatest Presidents representing another party, the late President Coolidge, once said: "If you sit tight on them long enough they always back down."

Mr. WOODRUM. They always do.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. We saw the spectacle yesterday of the House passing a flood-control bill costing about $400,000,000. The Senate added about $200,000,000 in more projects onto the bill and then did a good job of chloroforming it. I think they have done some good deeds this session.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Included in this bill also is the appropriation to carry out legislation we passed early in the session setting up a soil-survey board, is there not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Exactly. There are a lot of things of importance in the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the Senate retract the concurrent resolution to adjourn after the House has passed a similar resolution?

Mr. WOODRUM. I understand they can. I understand they will do it. I am confident they will do it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman does not represent a district in which any cotton is produced?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say to my friend I am not speaking about the merits of it at all; I do not know anything about the merits of the cotton proposition.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman used the expression in substance that if the House stuck by its guns the Senate would tuck in its tail and run. What assurance has the gentleman that the House will not agree with the Senate?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have every confidence in its ultimate wisdom when it acts deliberately.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of important business to take care of tonight.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if we have a lot of business to attend to, I object.

MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I present a privileged report from that committee and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 372

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of (S. J. Res. 175), a joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act 1935, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which was considered today under suspension of the rules but failed of passage. It is a matter about which there was some confusion. It is a very simple matter and has nothing to do with ship subsidies. It merely extends the time within which the President can determine whether or not to cancel or modify the contracts. The President has before him this important situation: Many of these contracts will expire between October of this year and January of next year. I am authorized to say that the President feels he needs this authority.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. After a bill has been passed on, can it be brought up again the same day? What about the Puerto Rico bill, which failed? If we can again bring up the bill made in order by this resolution, we can do it with the Puerto Rico bill, or with any other bill that has been defeated once during the day. This bill was defeated a few hours ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry. This is an effort on the part of the gentleman from New York, Chairman of the Rules Committee, to bring this bill up under a special rule.

The question is up to the House as to whether or not that can be done.

Mr. MAVERICK. I did not hear the Chair.

The SPEAKER. This is a special rule which is under consideration and is in order.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it in order for the Chairman of the Rules Committee to bring in a rule on a bill which we defeated this afternoon and then move the previous question before the opponents have an opportunity to be heard?

The SPEAKER. It is, under the rules of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, all the opponents were heard today.

The SPEAKER. It is a question for the House itself to determine.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEARIN. Does this rule provide for the opportunity to offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is considered in the House under the rules of the House.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 130, noes 58.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. (After counting). Two hundred and twenty-eight Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, as amended, be amended by striking out "October 31, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1936": Provided, That the right of the United States to annul any fraudulent or illegal contract or to institute suit to recover sums paid thereon is in no manner affected by this joint resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate joint resolution which was thoroughly discussed today. There was a lengthy debate in favor of it and in opposition. I think it is well understood by the Members of the House; therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Do we have the right bill now?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill which the rule made in order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Are we not permitted now under the present parliamentary situation to offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. Not after the previous question has been ordered. It is necessary for the House to dispose of this motion first.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The bill is already engrossed. It is a Senate bill.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 147, noes 45.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. McFARLANE. I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THIRD DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the legislative situation with reference to the deficiency bill, I desire to tell the House that in my opinion, under the relief bill which was passed and signed on the 8th of April, the President would have authority to allot funds to meet the old-age-pension proposition, the widows' pension, and the children's relief and the relief for the blind.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. What about the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. TABER. Well, he might have authority in that case; but I would not want to say.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF KANSAS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3434) to provide for the appointment of one additional judge for the district of Kansas and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE and Mr. CARLSON objected.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3204) to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3204) to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $200,000, in addition to the amount previously authorized, for the purpose of defraying the cost of completing the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, including landscaping of the contiguous grounds thereof, constructing the entrances thereto, and constructing a suitable museum room in connection therewith.

SEC. 2. The Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to enter into contract for the execution and completion of the work and to fix the compensations to be paid to artists, sculptors, landscape architects, and others, who may be employed by the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, in the completion of the said Mount Rushmore National Memorial pursuant to the provisions of section 3 of Public Law No. 805, Seventieth Congress, approved February 25, 1929, as amended by section 1 of Public Law No. 471, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 26, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides an authorization of $200,000 for the completion of the Mount Rushmore Memorial in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

There was previously appropriated $250,000 for this memorial. The citizens of the State of South Dakota have contributed $70,500, and there has been spent from relief funds approximately $50,000.

This memorial is being carved in granite; the figures of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt will be carved in this granite in the Black Hills, which will endure as long as the deeds of these great men contribute to the happiness of American posterity.

Mr. Speaker, the question simply resolves itself into whether we are going to leave this memorial unfinished or whether we are going to complete it. We have spent millions of dollars in the recent sessions of Congress for things less worth while.

To leave this memorial unfinished would be to desecrate the memory of these great statesmen. To finish it shows that we appreciate the Americanism they lived and taught. It is the spirit of the West to complete every undertaking. I ask the House to vote approval of this authorization.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time this matter has been before the House. Frankly, I do not know how much has heretofore been appropriated, but I understand that a great deal of money has been appropriated, probably, $250,000, and I understood when the question came up before that the $250,000 was intended to finish the job and it was stated at the time that it would complete it.

Now, Gutzon Borglum, the noted sculptor, as I understand it, gets a very large share of the money that is appropriated for this particular purpose.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Gutzon Borglum does not get any such thing.

Mr. TABER. Does he not get something?

Mr. WOODRUFF. He gets something, and he is entitled to get something, I hope the gentleman will concede. But he does have to hire help, he does have expenses that have to be paid out of this. What he gets is a very small part of what is provided in this bill.

Mr. TABER. That is fine.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It is true also.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it is not an easy job to stand up here and try to protect the Treasury of the United States. I have stood up and done it a good many times, and many times I have been bowled over after I have done it; but I feel that an attempt should be made at every opportunity to protect the Treasury, because the inroads on it are so severe that a serious question arises in my mind whether we are going to be able to meet those inroads. Having appropriated $250,000 heretofore for this job, with the understanding that that would finish the job, we ought not to go any further and appropriate any more money. We are in this situation: They have already completed the likenesses of Presidents Washington and Jefferson, as I understand it. That is a very considerable job, and it would seem to me that that would make a very good park all by itself, without adding any more to it.

In making that statement I do not wish to cast any aspersions upon President Lincoln or upon President Theodore Roosevelt, but I believe that a community which has as fine a park as this, with the likenesses of Washington and Jefferson, ought to be content and that it ought not to come back here for $200,000 more. I cannot see any excuse for spending so much money. We have started in tonight to allow some of these large appropriations to die. Let us let a few more die and not dig into the Treasury quite so hard. There is a lot of sentiment about all these parks. There is a lot of sentiment about all of these activities of an esthetic character. There is a lot of sentiment on the part of the neighborhoods affected. They feel they ought to have these things, but having treated them fairly in the past, is it not time that we should stop and not go any further? I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if we do not intend to complete this project at Mount Rushmore we should not have commenced it. This half-finished job out there will represent a total loss unless we go ahead and complete it. I am in thorough sympathy with the position of my friend from New York, Mr. TABER, but there are things that we should do and this is one of them. It is not such a great sum of money that is being asked for in this appropriation.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Is it not true that this monument is bringing millions of people to South Dakota?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes. I was present when this park was dedicated by the late President Coolidge. It is one of the beauty spots of North America.

Mr. McFARLANE. Can the gentleman tell us about how many people have visited that section to view this monument and how far it is from the highway and how far it is from the center of population? Tell us something about this so that we will understand what we are about to vote on.

Mr. KNUTSON. I shall let the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WERNER], who is thoroughly acquainted with these different angles, answer that question.

Mr. McFARLANE. How close to completion are the two figures?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from South Dakota will also reply to that question. I think it would be a mistake to stop this gigantic work at this time, because if we do not complete it, the money that we have put into it will represent a total loss, and Congress will be the laughing stock of the country.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] is opposed to this appropriation, let us ask him something about the $3,000,000 that we voted for Texas.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague understands that money spent for public improvements in some other Member's district is always called "pork." I have no interest in this matter except to protect the money that we have already invested in this park.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman tell us how much we have invested?

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman not think it advisable to avail ourselves of the matchless genius of Gutzon Borglum while he is still living?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is going to be one of the most marvelous works of art ever undertaken by mortal man. Mount Rushmore is situated in the Black Hills, and I say to you men and women who have never been out there that it is one of the scenic spots of the world. As this place becomes better known it will be visited by thousands and thousands of additional people each year. Therefore we should complete the job as soon as possible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, it seems inopportune at this time to bring in a bill of this sort. We spend millions every year for the unemployed, for the fathers of families who have no work and who are starving, which is right, but to spend $250,000 for art work at this time is certainly out of order. You cannot eat art. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said, we have two images fashioned now, of Jefferson and Washington. That should be sufficient. What we are interested in now is getting people back to work so that the heads of families can get wages to buy food for their children. We are not interested in art right now. This project is all right in prosperous times when we have plenty of work and everybody is happy. Right now we should concentrate on the necessities of life.

The Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BUCHANAN] says we should retrench, and then the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], the great conservative, tells us to spend more money. Can you beat that?

Mr. WERNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORITZ. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WERNER. Does the gentleman realize that practically every dollar that has been spent on Mount Rushmore is used to employ labor with which to feed the mouths of hungry children?

Mr. MORITZ. It is used to employ people like Mr. Borglum, who is already wealthy. There are a few laborers employed, and that is all. This is a lot of foolishness and ought to be voted down.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ], who has just concluded his remarks on this important bill, has apparently little knowledge of what is going on in the Black Hills. He seems possessed of the idea that the only person employed on that great work is Mr. Gutzon Borglum. When I tell you that the figure of Washington on that great mountainside is as large as the dome of this Capitol, and that the figures of Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt will be of comparable size, you will realize that Mr. Borglum finds it necessary to have many people help him in that tremendous work.

Now, I naturally have sympathy for the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I have looked with much apprehension upon the wild squandering of money that is going on in this country. We are spending money for "boondoggling"; we are spending money for Passamaquoddy; we are spending money for building a highway down the Keys of Florida, over which few people will travel, and it is all built at a cost of many millions of dollars.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOODRUFF. No; I do not yield.

I say to the Members of this House that the work going on at Mount Rushmore is something that will stand for thousands of years as a monument to the formative period in American history. That great monument contemplated in the Black Hills of South Dakota is supposed to typify four great epochs. One, typified by Washington and his work; one typified by Jefferson and his work; one typified by Lincoln and his work; and one typified by the work of Theodore Roosevelt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I stated a moment ago, when that great monument is completed, it will stand as a monument all down the ages to the Americanism we have known up to this time in our history. What is a matter of $200,000 in these days, when we consider that we have, during this session of Congress, appropriated $10,350,000,000 for God knows what, when with this $200,000 we can build a monument such as has never before been contemplated, such as has never before undertaken in the history of this world, to commemorate the great things which have contributed to making this the greatest country the world has ever known and the finest country in which to live.

Mr. Speaker, when I note the objections to this worthy measure, involving a mere $200,000, registered by the different Members of the House, particularly those of the majority, I am reminded that with the enactment of the third deficiency bill, which passed the House today, the appropriations for this session of Congress will amount to the staggering total of $10,350,000,000, bringing the total appropriated by the present administration during its first 3 years, under the direction of President Roosevelt himself, to the outrageously unjustified amount of $26,035,119,000.

This amount is greater by a few million dollars than the sum expended by this Government from April 6, 1917, until July 2, 1921, a period of more than 4 years, during which the United States was officially at war with Germany, and during which we were providing clothing, subsistence, military equipment of every kind and character for an army of 4,500,000 men, paying all other expenses incidental to conducting a war across a stretch of 2,500 miles of ocean, as well as increased expense for civil activities, and at the same time loaning billions of dollars to our allies, not much of which will ever be repaid.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, this administration appropriated $7,105,050,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, there were appropriated—not including the $2,000,000,000 appropriated for the stabilization fund—$8,581,069,000; and this, together with the sum appropriated by this session of Congress, represents a sum greater by $1,514,274,000 than was expended by the United States during the period of 124 years from Washington's first inauguration to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, when President Wilson assumed Executive authority over the expenditures of the United States Government.

During this 124 years the people paid in part for the expense of waging the Revolutionary War and in full for the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Indian wars, the Civil War, and the Spanish War, and in addition, of course, paid all of the other military and naval expenses as well as the civil expenses of the Government.

During the fiscal year just closed there was collected from every source, including the processing taxes upon foodstuffs and clothing, less than $4,500,000,000. This session of Congress has appropriated $5,900,000,000 more than we had to spend, and this means that the debt heaped upon the people of the country has been increased in this amount as a result of our action.

The tax bill, enacted at the insistence of President Roosevelt, notwithstanding the confiscatory rates on large incomes and estates and the increased taxes on business, will provide not to exceed $250,000,000 per year. If this bill serves no other purpose it will at least demonstrate to the country that the extravagant, wasteful expenditures of the Democratic administration now in power can be met only in exceedingly small part by soaking the rich, and that the poor will be called upon to pay far more than any people in their circumstances should ever be called upon to pay for taxes.

The amount of revenue produced by this tax bill will pay the running expenses of the Government as now conducted for less than 10 days. Even as a redistribution-of-wealth measure, which the people were led to believe it to be, it would provide but $2.08 for each of our 120,000,000 people. The bill makes it perfectly obvious to the great masses of our people that, in the last analysis, they, and not the rich, are going to be required to assume the greater portion of the cost of the administration's profligate expenditures.

Every dollar of expense, every dollar of debt is of vital interest to every class of our people, more particularly to the poorer classes. As President Roosevelt said in speaking at Pittsburgh, October 19, 1932:

> Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from their wages, in increased costs of what they buy, or—as now—in broad cessation of employment. There is not an unemployed man, there is not a struggling farmer, whose interest in this subject is not direct and vital.

On that day, President Roosevelt expounded a fact, not a theory. Unless he has completely forgotten that statement and the truth of it, he must recognize the fact that the billions of dollars of waseful expenditures and the billions of dollars of debt being heaped upon our people must, in the last analysis, be paid largely by those who can least afford to pay, and I refer to our workers, our farmers, our people of modest incomes.

The result of this increasingly tragic situation, unless remedied at once, is bound to be a reduction of the American standard of living to the point where it will be comparable to that in the nations of the Old World and the Orient.

This burden of debt is going to be with us for generations. The young people of today, the young people of tomorrow, their children and their children's grandchildren, will be called upon to pay for the extravagance and the wasting of this administration.

Unless I am greatly mistaken in the good sense of the American people, they will, at the first opportunity presented to them through the ballot box, once and for all time register a repudiation of these shockingly wasteful policies that will be a lesson to other administrations for many years to come.

In view of the conditions I have outlined and in view of the ridiculous purposes for which billions are being spent by this administration, and in view of the worthy purpose for which this $200,000 is proposed, I hope the House will overwhelmingly approve the bill under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I have learned in life that each knock is a boost. I therefore want to thank my colleague for the knock he has just given Key West, Fla. I was inclined to vote for this proposition, but my good colleague and friend from Michigan, with whom I have served so many years, showed me he was so misinformed as to conditions in Florida, and so unfair, I am afraid to follow him on this bill. When he stated that no one ever traveled the Key West Highway, the eighth wonder of the sea, he clearly convinced me that I would be foolish and unwise to vote for his proposition. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 8 minutes, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are now discussing the question of spending $200,000 more. I want to call to the attention of the House the statement made by the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. BUCHANAN, day before yesterday, that we have appropriated at this session of Congress over $10,000,000,000; more money than has ever been appropriated by any Congress in the history of this Nation in 149 years. Now, when you think that we have been the most extravagant Congress that has ever assembled, do you not think we ought to really consider, and consider carefully, what we are doing?

Where are we going to get the money? Remember that last year we spent $7,500,000,000, one-half raised by taxation and the other 50 percent raised by bonding the children and the grandchildren of this Nation to pay the bill, a millstone around their neck. This year we are appropriating 50 percent more than we spent a year ago. Now, if we are not going to increase the taxes more than we have done, if we are not going to raise more than $250,000,000 additional, you can see that if this money is spent we are going to be $7,500,000,000 in the red before the end of the year.

Let me ask you as supposedly sensible men, and I cannot qualify it in any other way, considering the expenditure of money, if you want to consider the continuation of the Government of the United States there is not one man here in this Chamber tonight but who realizes that in a very short time if we continue to pyramid our public debt as we did last year and as we are trying to do this year, that eventually the credit of this Nation will be gone; and when you wreck the credit of this Nation you wreck this Nation itself.

Now, what are we doing? We are considering here in this bill the question of putting on a mountain side the likeness of the face of Washington, which has already been completed, and of the face of Jefferson, which I understand is nearly completed, and of the faces of Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt. We are told in this Chamber that the completed likenesses will each be as high as the Capitol Dome; our national debt is $31,000,000,000 higher than the Empire State Building. If these two faces are that big, gracious goodness, we ought to change the faces of those two men or else we ought to change the faces and the complexion of the Members of this House, one of the two. If the Members of Congress and our guests in the galleries want to look at the face and figure of Washington, they need not go to the Black Hills of South Dakota; they can turn to the portrait in this Hall of the House of Representatives and see Washington in natural size, as he would want to be seen by the citizens of this country.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield because there is still hope for America and there is still hope for this Congress if we refuse to appropriate any more money. Then when we come back here next year, let us put more taxes on the American people, because that is what you will have to do ultimately. Tax the American people more so they will send back to Congress men who will not spend money like you have been spending it during this session of Congress. [Applause.]

They tell me that we are going to employ on this monument Mr. Borglum and his crew of assistants. Now, I like Mr. Borglum. I think he is a very fine man, and no doubt he is one of the finest sculptors in this land, or in the world.

I question whether the $200,000 that is to be spent for this particular purpose at this particular time will do as much good for the people of South Dakota as though this money were spent to help the farmers of South Dakota, instead of in a manner in which they are trying to help them now with the processing taxes, for you must remember that the people back home are getting tired of the processing taxes. Now, when you go to the people of America and ask them to pay taxes in some other manner to pay these 60 men for building these great faces of Washington, Jefferson, and Roosevelt on that mountainside, faces which are going to be as high as the Capitol Dome, then I think the taxpayers will say to you, and they will say to me that their tax bill is higher than the Capitol Dome. Taxes are now too high, but to save the Nation you must either increase taxes or cut down expenses. What course will you take?

Mr. McFARLANE. Gutzon Borglum is a chiseler, is he not?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

CONGRESS MUST NOT ADJOURN NOW—OUR WORK IS UNFINISHED

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, the administration deserves credit for continuing the great Rushmore Black Hills Project. Gutzon Borglum is a sculptor whose genius is unquestioned and whose fame is world-wide. This art project was originated under the Republican President, Coolidge, and carried on by the administration of President Hoover, and all the Democratic administration is seeking to do now is to finish what the Republicans began.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION MUST BE PASSED

We must not adjourn now. We must stay here until we have passed the bill to pay the adjusted-service certificates due the veterans of the World War, and other veterans' legislation. The more than $2,000,000,000 provided in the adjusted-service certificates bill will flow into the arteries of commerce and trade to revive business and help labor in this crisis.

PASS THE FRAZIER-LEMKE FARM REFINANCING BILL

We must pass the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill and other farm legislation. The farmers are entitled to that and no less than that. I have voted for every piece of labor, veterans', and farmers' legislation brought before this House, and now it is proposed that we adjourn without enacting genuine, adequate social-security legislation. Speeches are even made on the floor tonight that we should adjourn without appropriating any money to carry out the measures passed by this Congress. What is the purpose of this? Is the purpose to destroy the little good that might come of the work we have done, insufficient and inadequate as it is? Is that your purpose?

MUST PROVIDE FUNDS FOR GENUINE, ADEQUATE SOCIAL SECURITY

We must stay here until we have provided adequate funds for genuine social security, by taxation on gifts, inheritances, and incomes over $5,000. I am in favor of staying here to carry out by proper appropriations the bills that have been passed for unemployment, old age, maternity, health, accident insurance, and social insurance in general. We have no right to think of our personal comfort in this matter. We are hired to stay here and do our duty by the people back home in these United States. They expect nothing less from us than that.

I want the RECORD to show that I am against adjournment now when the American Federation of Labor says that 11,000,000 are now unemployed, and I consider that figure way too low—the figure lies somewhere between twelve and fifteen million unemployed, and we have plenty of authority to sustain our position on that. I am against adjourning now when the relief lines run more than 22,000,000 and are steadily rising and have been rising during the last 3 years.

THIS CRISIS IS NOT OVER

Ladies and gentlemen, this crisis is not over, and we must meet it as our fellow citizens expect us to meet it. We must stay here until we find a solution to the problems that confront us in this day and hour. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not alarmed as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania about the American Government being made bankrupt by the Roosevelt administration. Half the wealth of the world is in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose for rising at this time is to refute the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] relative to Key West, Fla. It is one of the most ancient and picturesque cities in the United States. It is the southernmost city in the United States. Money expended for this highway will prove to be one of the most meritorious expenditures this Congress has ever made. Thousands of tourists as well as local persons will travel this highway annually. The gentleman from Michigan is entirely in error relative to the importance of this Federal expenditure. [Applause.]

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, the provision in the report of the Committee on the Library sets out that this is the last money to be given to finish this project. I want to relieve the anxiety of my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania by calling his attention to these simple facts. When we talk of deficits, for every 2 years and 8 months of our existence from the beginning of the Government to the present time 1 year out of that 2 years and 8 months has been a year of deficit. I want the Members to get that perfectly clear. We have never had any difficulty in paying our deficits when we got to work. This is work and will help to whatever extent we appropriate the money for it. This $200,000 will finish this great work. We ought to understand what the art of our country means. We ought to get some idea of what we are doing out there and what a really great work is being done by a great American sculptor—in fact, the greatest in the world.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is approved by the Director of the Budget. We come here and ask your vote for this bill with the approval of all the agencies that have anything to do with it, and this bill, I may say, comes here also with the approval of the President of the United States. The other day the President wrote this letter:

> In our conversation the other day regarding the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, your description of the progress of work on the memorial and of its inspirational value to our people in the years to come convinces me of the need for legislation to authorize an additional appropriation of $200,000 for the completion of this project.

Mr. Speaker, that letter was written to the senior Senator from my State, Hon. PETER NORBECK, who has given of his time, of his efforts, and of his thoughts, and whose heart lies in the completion of this great American memorial.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERNER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. I hope the gentleman's resolution will pass. I should like to make this observation, if the gentleman will permit: This project was started, as the gentleman knows, under a previous administration. There are no politics in it at all. It is a great American project. It always has happened that these projects have taken more money than we started out to spend. If we appropriate more money to finish this, we are simply doing what we have always had to do and what we know we always will have to do in the future. It takes more money than was thought necessary at the beginning. I think the resolution is meritorious, and I hope it will pass.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WERNER] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 119, noes 41.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2364) relative to the retirement of certain officers and employees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I shall be glad to explain the bill. This bill has the recommendation of the Post Office Department and the Postmaster General. It affects only 52 employees who automatically were retired by the Economy Act of 1932, but were retained by the Post Office Department for part of the month of July, but could not be paid because there was no money appropriated with which to pay them.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation, this is not liable to establish a precedent because nothing similar to this can happen in the future.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. This is simply to pay for work that has been done and not paid for by the Government.

Mr. SNELL. There has been no work done that was not paid for, because these people were on the pay roll.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. A large number of employees were retired under the Economy Act and then asked if they would not work until the 10th of July, and a Comptroller's decision subsequently barred them from their retirement pay until the 1st of August, and this bill takes care of that situation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

There being no objection, the clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and employees of the United States Government or of the government of the District of Columbia who had reached the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service on or before July 1, 1932, or during the month of July 1932, and who were continued in active service for a period of less than 31 days after June 30, 1932, shall be regarded as having been retired and entitled to annuity beginning with the day following the date of separation from active service, instead of August 1, 1932, and the United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make payments accordingly from the civil-service retirement and disability fund to those persons entitled and who make application therefor.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACTIVE DUTY FOR RESERVE OFFICERS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6250) to amend the National Defense Act, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

> Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
>
> "That the President is hereby authorized to call annually, with their consent, upon application to and selection by the War Department, for a period of not more than 1 year for any one officer, not to exceed at any time 1,000 Reserve officers of the combatant arms and the Chemical Warfare Service in the grade of second lieutenant, for active duty with the Regular Army: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the number of Reserve officers that may be called to active duty under existing laws, nor the conditions under and purposes for which they may be so called.
> "SEC. 2. That, for the period of 10 years beginning July 1, 1936, the Secretary of War is authorized to select annually, in addition to the graduates from the United States Military Academy, 50 officers who shall be commissioned in the Regular Army: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine for each annual increment the number to be allotted among the promotion list branches: And provided further, That the number to be appointed in the promotion list branches shall be selected from such Reserve officers who have received the training herein authorized or from graduates of the Army Air Corps Training Center."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in the singular and unique situation of having passed the House and the Senate twice, in that the provisions of the bill, substantially, were a part of what was known as the "additional cadetship bill" for the Military Academy. By action of the Senate, this part of the bill was recalled, with the consent of the House, and then the House subsequently passed a bill authorizing the calling of not exceeding 2,000 Reserve officers to duty, and this amendment of the Senate cuts it down to not exceeding 1,000 Reserve officers.

Mr. SNELL. Just what does the gentleman mean by calling them to duty?

Mr. McSWAIN. Active duty with the Regular Army for training, not exceeding a period of 1 year at a time. This is one of the most essential and fundamental and constructive pieces of legislation with regard to national defense that has been inaugurated in a long time.

Mr. SNELL. This is entirely new.

Mr. McSWAIN. This is new, but it has the approval of the War Department and the approval of the Reserve Officers' Association, and all those who have constructive thought with regard to the best and most economical way of providing national defense.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Are these Reserve officers who are called to duty to be used in labor disturbances?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; these officers are to serve on active duty with the Regular Army.

Mr. SABATH. Is this necessary on account of the retirement act that we passed a few days ago?

Mr. McSWAIN. This has no connection whatsoever with that matter. These gentlemen are just called for training. There are 120,000 of these officers in the United States, and we are calling not to exceed 1,000.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that this provides for a thousand new officers?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no. There are at present 120,000 Reserve officers, and 90 of them are on active duty. This permits the Secretary of War to call not exceeding 1,000 in any one year, and it will depend upon the action of the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress as to how much money they can get. They may only furnish the money for 500, but this bill gives him authority to call not exceeding 1,000.

Mr. RICH. Are they going to spend all the money they can get to take care of these men?

Mr. McSWAIN. They will not spend any more than Congress appropriates, and there will be no request for an appropriation at this time.

Mr. RICH. What is it going to cost to maintain these officers?

Mr. McSWAIN. If the 1,000 officers are called, it will not cost more than $1,500,000.

Mr. RICH. Where are you going to get the million and a half dollars?

Mr. McSWAIN. We will have to see about that next year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. There are 13 House bills with Senate amendments on the Speaker's table. These bills have passed the House and passed the Senate, and the Senate has amended them. The Chair thinks, in all fairness, that these bills, having advanced to that stage, should be considered at this time. The Chair thinks that the Members who are interested in them, if they desire to do so, ought to be given the opportunity to call them up. Of course it takes unanimous consent. The Chair will recognize Members who are interested in these bills at this time.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY LAWS

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7858) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof, and supplementary thereto, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7858 with Senate amendments thereto.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, strike out all after "filed." down to and including "presumed" in line 20, and insert: "If the United States of America is a creditor or stockholder, the interests or claims thereof shall be deemed to be affected by the plan, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept or reject a plan in respect of the interests or claims of the United States. If, in any reorganization proceeding under this section, the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in, or claim against, the debtor, as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be confirmed by the judge except upon the acceptance of a lesser amount by the Secretary of the Treasury certified to the court: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall fail to accept or reject a plan for more than 90 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court to which the plan has been proposed, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, his consent shall be conclusively presumed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should make a short explanation and tell us exactly what this means.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed by the House for the purpose of clarifying a provision in the corporate-reorganization statute which the Seventy-third Congress passed. Some of the courts construing that statute found that Congress had failed to fix the status of Government claims during the reorganization of corporations. The House passed the bill fixing the status of Government claims, and when the bill went to the Senate the Senate amplified the statute so as to fix the agency to represent the Government in this matter in the Secretary of the Treasury for all departments of the Government, rather than to have every department of the Government that might have a claim against the corporation making separate investigations into the corporate assets. Another amendment that was added by the Senate gave the Secretary of the Treasury the right to be the agent for all of the Government organizations and make one investigation instead of several. Next, the time within which the Secretary of the Treasury, as the agent, would have to accept or reject settlements proposed in these reorganizations was extended from 60 days to 90 days, giving more time for a more thorough investigation. Third, customs duties were placed in the same status as taxes in the collection of the Government claim. That is what this does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RELIEF OF BELL OIL & GAS CO.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7140, an act for relief of the Bell Oil & Gas Co., with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7140, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,616.69 to the Bell Oil & Gas Co., of Tulsa, Okla., for the purpose of reimbursing said Bell Oil & Gas Co. for Federal tax on gasoline delivered under contract with the War Department, dated June 29, 1932, said Department having contracted to pay said tax and said payment having been refused by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF MILITARY RESERVATION TO THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8444, to authorize the transfer of a certain military reservation to the Department of the Interior, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8444, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the same.

The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 11, after "War Department", insert ": Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the transfer of any part of the said reservation which, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, is needed for the proper development, control, or use of the reservation for military purposes: Provided further, That upon cessation of such use the premises so transferred shall revert to the jurisdiction of the War Department: And provided further, That the transfer authorized by this act shall not require discontinuance of the operation of the Fort Belvoir Fish Cultural Station, however, its removal and establishment elsewhere on the Belvoir Military Reservation, Va., as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

JOHN S. CANNELL, DECEASED

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 1575, to correct the military record of John S. Cannell, deceased, with Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Strike out all after "have" in line 8, down to and including "1918" in line 10, and insert: "died on the 12th day of September 1918 as a member of said organization, and that his death was in the line of duty and was not the result of his own misconduct."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "An act for the relief of John S. Cannell, deceased."

TO AMEND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6250) to amend the National Defense Act, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment, having been informed that the objection was made under misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 6250 with a Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the President is hereby authorized to call annually, with their consent, upon application to and selection by the War Department, for a period of not more than 1 year for any one officer, not to exceed at any time 1,000 Reserve officers of the combatant arms and the Chemical Warfare Service in the grade of second lieutenant, for active duty with the Regular Army: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the number of Reserve officers that may be called to active duty under existing laws, nor the conditions under and purposes for which they may be so called.

"SEC. 2. That for the period of 10 years, beginning July 1, 1936, the Secretary of War is authorized to select annually, in addition to the graduates from the United States Military Academy, 50 officers who shall be commissioned in the Regular Army: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine for each annual increment the number to be allotted among the promotion list branches: And provided further, That the number to be appointed in the promotion list branches shall be selected from such Reserve officers who have received the training herein authorized or from graduates of the Army Air Corps Training Center."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I should like to make a reservation to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be recognized in opposition.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HERMAN W. BENSEL

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speakers' table the bill (H. R. 3109) for the relief of Herman W. Bensel, with Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Lines 6 and 7, strike out "Regiment Volunteer Infantry, National Guard", and insert: "Infantry."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the amendment explained.

Mr. McSWAIN. The Senate amendment only changes the designation. The House bill said that this soldier was of the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Regiment Volunteer Infantry, National Guard. The amendment simply strikes that out and inserts the word "Infantry."

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. I overlooked the fact that he desired to explain his attitude a moment ago. I yield the gentleman 2 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman said we are adding a thousand officers to the Regular Army and it was to cost $1,500,000, I thought that was something beyond what we ought to do in the late moments of the session, but when it is only giving men in the National Guard, Reserve officers, an opportunity for part time, it makes an entirely different aspect on this $1,500,000, because it is going to give employment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT E. CALLEN

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Claims, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4567), an act for the relief of Robert E. Callen, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,418.52" and insert "$1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELINORA FAREIRA

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4770) for the relief of Elinora Fareira, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, after line 9, insert:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800 to Mearon Perkins, formerly a janitor in the El Centro Post Office, El Centro, Calif., in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for a reward for protecting the property of the United States on February 4, 1932, at great risk to his life, when he was compelled to shoot and kill one Alvin Self, an escaped convict, who was ransacking the package room of such post office."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act for the relief of Elinora Fareira and Mearon Perkins."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY E. LORD

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5097) for the relief of Mary E. Lord, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK WILLIAMS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5521) for the relief of Frank Williams, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY BROWN RALEY

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5750) for the relief of Mary Brown Raley, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after "1932", insert: "and for expenses and losses resulting therefrom."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. L. B. GENTRY

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3149) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi Division, to determine the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after "Act" insert: "Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed the sum of $5,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6776) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, with Senate amendments, concur in Senate amendments nos. 1 and 2, and disagree to Senate amendment no. 3.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after "districts," where it occurs the first time, insert: "reclamation districts,"

"SEC. 3. The Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, is further amended by adding after section 36 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 36A. In addition to the authority granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by section 36 of this act, as amended, the Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, as hereinafter provided, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $10,000,000 to or for the benefit of counties, political subdivisions of States, political subdivisions of counties, and districts, duly organized under the laws of any State, in which the United States has acquired or shall hereafter acquire lands for purposes of watershed protection, timber production and conservation, protection of grazing areas, or preservation of wildlife. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling any such county, political subdivision, or district (hereinafter referred to as the "borrower") to refinance its outstanding indebtedness existing at the time the United States acquired or shall have acquired such land.

"'Such loans shall be subject to the same terms and conditions as loans made under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended; except that (1) the term of any such loans shall not exceed 40 years; (2) each such loan shall, in the opinion of the Corporation, be reasonably and adequately secured, and, in respect to the type of security, shall be secured (a) by bonds, notes, or other obligations for the payment of which shall be pledged the full faith and credit and taxing power of the borrower or of such taxing authority as may be authorized pursuant to State law to levy assessments, taxes, or other charges for the repayment of said obligations, or (b) by bonds, notes, or other obligations which are a lien on real property situated within the boundaries of the borrower, which is taxable under existing laws, or shall be secured by both of such methods, and (c) by such other collateral as may be acceptable to the Corporation; and (3) the borrower shall agree, insofar as it may lawfully do so, that so long as any part of such loan shall remain unpaid the borrower will in each year apply to the repayment of such loan, or to the purchase or redemption of the obligations issued to evidence such loan, an amount equivalent to a proportionate part of the principal of the loan, taking into consideration the number of years through which the loan will mature and taking into consideration the intention to place on the taxpayers a burden as nearly uniform as practicable throughout the entire term of the loan, and that it shall at all times make provision for such reasonable reserves as may be approved by the Corporation. No loan shall be made under this section until the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (A) shall have determined that by reason of the acquisition of said land by the Government the financial condition of the borrower has been sufficiently affected to warrant the making of such loan; (B) has satisfied itself as to the security supporting the outstanding bonds or other obligations of the applicant; and (C) in the case of a loan to reduce or refinance the outstanding indebtedness of an applicant, has been satisfied that an agreement has been entered into between the applicant and holders of its outstanding bonds or other obligations under which the applicant will be able to purchase or refund all or a major portion of such bonds or other obligations at a price determined by the Corporation to be reasonable after taking into consideration the average market price of such bonds over the 3 months' period ending July 1, 1935, and under which a reduction will be brought about in the amount of the outstanding indebtedness of the applicant, or under which a reduction in its annual charges of principal and interest will be accomplished, resulting in benefit to the community and promoting its general welfare. Loans made under this section shall bear interest at a rate or rates to be fixed by the Corporation.

"'When a loan is authorized pursuant to the provisions of this section and it shall then or thereafter appear that repairs and necessary extensions or improvements to the properties of borrower are necessary or desirable for the further assurance of the ability of the borrower to repay such loan, the Corporation, within the limitation as to total amount provided in this section, may make an additional loan or loans to such borrower for such purposes.

"'The proceeds of any loan applied for by a borrower under this section may be paid either to such borrower or to the holders or representatives of the holders of the bonds, notes, or other obligations to be reduced and refinanced in connection with such loan, and such loans may be made upon promissory notes collateraled by such bonds, notes, or other obligations, or through the purchase of securities issued or to be issued by such borrower. In the discretion of the Corporation, the borrower may, if consistent with State law, be authorized to deliver to the holders of such original obligations, refunding bonds bearing the same rate of interest and issued on the same basis of the refunding bonds to be held by the Corporation.'"

Page 3, after line 11, insert:

"SEC. 4. That notwithstanding any other provision of law, Electric Home and Farm Authority, a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, shall continue until February 1, 1937, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order, to be an agency of the United States. During the continuance of such agency, the present investment in the capital stock of such corporation, for the use and benefit of the United States, shall be continued, and such corporation is hereby authorized to use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, and all moneys which have been or may hereafter be allocated to or borrowed by it, in the exercise of its functions as such agency."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes."

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand Senator NORRIS will recede on Senate amendment no 3?

Mr. PIERCE. He has receded on that amendment.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, Senate amendments nos. 1 and 2 will be agreed to and Senate amendment no. 3 will be disagreed to.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES BY CERTAIN WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8133) to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who are disabled World War veterans to make final proof of their entries, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "settler or."

Page 1, line 5, strike out "actually engaged in" and insert: "a member of."

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out "who settled, entered upon, or applied for public lands" and insert: "whose entry was made prior to January 1, 1935,".

Page 1, line 9, strike out "incapacities is" and insert: "or mental disabilities has been or may hereafter become."

Page 2, line 5, strike out "or settled."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize certain homestead entrymen who are disabled World War veterans to make final proof of their entries, and for other purposes."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have these amendments explained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to permit homestead entrymen who have been discharged from service in the World War to have a chance to prove up on their homesteads, provided they are disabled and unable to live on them and take care of them.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice this provision amongst others:

Who because of physical or mental disabilities has been or may hereafter become unable to perform the prescribed residential improvement and other requirements.

Is not this going pretty far?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No; it simply provides that a soldier who is disabled or who becomes disabled and cannot prove up on his homestead may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be given the right to the homestead without living on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSEL SPECIALLY EMPLOYED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3433) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would make a statement explaining this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is introduced for the purpose of relieving from the operation of existing law Mr. William Stanley who was formerly an Assistant Attorney General and who is wanted by the Attorney General to continue the prosecution of a case in which he was engaged while he was in the service. There is $20,000,000 involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors to be specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the conduct of the cases entitled The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (a corporation) as trustee under a deed of trust made by William Waldorf Astor, etc., against Frank C. Bowers, etc. (L 35/74 and L 35/75) pending in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, including all proceedings to review any judgment or decree that may be rendered therein, and any other case or proceeding involving the matters or any of them involved in the said cases.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 9168) were laid on the table.

MACK COPPER CO.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 1878) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear this bill explained.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. During the World War the Government took possession of something over 5,000 acres of land belonging to the Mack Copper Co., later known as "Camp Kearney." There was no lease or contract made. Later the Court of Claims allowed the Mack Copper Co., as rental, the sum of $79,000. They used the land for something over 5 years, but left it in a terrible condition, with trenches, pits, and so forth.

Mr. McFARLANE. The matter goes to the Court of Claims?

Mr. BURNHAM. It goes to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McFARLANE. This bill merely confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to try the case?

Mr. BURNHAM. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time, prior consideration, or any statute of limitation, to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. against the United States for just compensation for the taking and use, of certain real property owned by the Mack Copper Co. and situated in San Diego County, State of California, which real property was taken, used, and occupied by the United States as an Army cantonment, training camp, or for other military purposes during the period from on or about May 15, 1917, to on or about June 1, 1922, not heretofore paid by the United States to the Mack Copper Co.

SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims of the United States, in the hearing and determination of any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act, is authorized, in its discretion, to use and consider as evidence in such suit, together with any other evidence which may be taken therein, the testimony and other evidence filed by Mack Copper Co. and the United States, respectively, in case no. D–134 on the docket of that court entitled "Mack Copper Co. against the United States", wherein the court rendered a judgment on the 6th day of June 1927.

SEC. 3. From any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act, a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROTECTION AND PRESERVATION OF DOMESTIC SOURCES OF TIN

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3381) to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to hear this bill explained.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the interest of national defense, it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress and the purpose and intent of this act to protect, preserve, and develop domestic sources of tin, to restrain the depletion of domestic reserves of tin-bearing materials, and to lessen the present costly and dangerously dependent position of the United States with respect to resources of tin.

SEC. 2. There shall not be exported from the United States after the expiration of 60 days from the enactment of this act any tin-plate scrap, except upon license issued by the President of the United States. The President is authorized to grant licenses upon such conditions and regulations as he may find necessary to assure in the public interest fair and equitable consideration to all producers of this commodity.

SEC. 3. Any violations of the provisions of this act shall be a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this bill explained.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the tin bill?

Mr. FADDIS. It is the tin bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I objected once before to the consideration of this bill. I object.

RIO GRANDE CANALIZATION PROJECT

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3085) authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have this bill explained, and I want to know how much it is going to cost.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to permit the State Department to carry out an international agreement. In about 1906 the Federal Government of the United States saved about $30,000,000 as the result of entering into an agreement with Old Mexico, which agreement provided that we furnish Old Mexico with 60,000 acre-feet of water a year. The dam which is located in Old Mexico is such they cannot measure the water. The people of New Mexico and southern Texas are denied water now, as set out in the report by the Secretary of State, and it is impossible for him to comply with this international agreement without this construction.

This bill has passed the Senate. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the gentlemen on that side of the aisle, who are members of the committee and are familiar with this matter, are in favor of it. Unless the work is performed it is going to cost this Government many millions of dollars.

Mr. SNELL. What will it cost if we carry it out as agreed in the international agreement?

Mr. DEMPSEY. One million and two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SNELL. It is necessary to carry out the agreement with Mexico?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON. This bill has the approval, not only of the State Department, but of the International Boundary Commission in connection with the carrying out of an international treaty with Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is correct, and it also has the approval of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. TABER. How did it come that a treaty was made in 1906, and there has been no suggestion of an appropriation in all this time?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from New York that they have been carrying it out since that time, but this reservoir has filled with silt, as is set forth in the report, and it is impossible to carry out the agreement any further without some construction work being done.

Mr. TABER. Do they need as much as $1,200,000?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; then we will have a permanent job and can carry out the agreement with Old Mexico.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How does it come that the gentleman has not brought this matter up earlier in the session?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We brought this matter up earlier in the session. A bill was passed unanimously providing for a survey. We voted an appropriation of $60,000 in order to survey this work.

The survey has been made and the State Department now comes to you and asks you to permit them to do this construction work.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What will result if you let this go over until January?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We cannot tell. We might have international trouble on this border.

Mr. THOMASON. This is just an authorization.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is all.

Mr. RICH. Was there any committee of the House that considered this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARTIN, is the ranking minority Member, and he is very familiar with it.

Mr. RICH. If this Senate bill involves the construction of this work on a river why would it not go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This is an international matter.

Mr. RICH. Why was it not brought up before the Committee on Flood Control?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, it is not that kind of a bill. This is an international matter and one that must be considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. RICH. Why did the gentleman wait until the last minute to bring in this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This bill was pending in the Senate and I have been trying to get the floor for some time to get it up.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman did not have to wait until the Senate acted in order to get action here on his bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We had to wait until the report came back as a result of the survey that was made.

Mr. RICH. It will only be 4 months until Congress reconvenes, and, as I understand, this is going to cost a million and a quarter dollars. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will reserve his objection, I may state that this does not appropriate the money but only authorizes it.

Mr. RICH. I realize that, but I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3085) authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the completion of the engineering investigation, study, and report to the Secretary of State, as heretofore authorized by Public Resolution No. 4, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved February 13, 1935, the Secretary of State, acting through the American Section, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, in order to facilitate compliance with the convention between the United States and Mexico concluded May 21, 1906, providing for the equitable division of the waters of the Rio Grande, and to properly regulate and control, to the fullest extent possible, the water supply for use in the two countries as provided by treaty, is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain, in substantial accordance with the engineering plan contained in said report, a diversion dam in the Rio Grande wholly in the United States, with appurtenant connections to existing irrigation systems, and to acquire by donation, condemnation, or purchase such real and personal property as may be necessary therefor.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 1 hereof, other than for operation and maintenance, including salaries and wages, fees for professional services; rents, travel expenses; per diem in lieu of actual subsistence; printing and binding, law books, and books of reference: Provided, That the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not apply to any purchase made or service procured when the aggregate amount involved is $100 or less; purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger- and freight-carrying vehicles; hire with or without personal services, of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment; acquisition by donation, condemnation, or purchase of real and personal property; transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon change of station; telephone, telegraphic, and air mail communications; rubber boots for official use by employees; ice; equipment, services, supplies, and materials, and other such miscellaneous expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary properly to carry out the provisions of the act: Provided, That any part of any appropriation made hereunder may be transferred to, for direct expenditure by, the Department of the Interior pursuant to such arrangements therefor as may be from time to time effected between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior, or as directed by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania for 20 minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the State Department and the purpose of it is to settle a claim of Old Mexico against the Government of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman makes the statement that this bill was introduced at the request of the State Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should think if the gentleman would impress the point that the State Department is insisting upon this measure, he would have no trouble with his bill. What has the gentleman to show that the bill was introduced at the request of the State Department?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have a letter from Commissioner Lawson of the International Boundary Commission, who has been on that Commission for 25 or 30 years, which is a part of the report.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But that is not the State Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. His report is submitted by Secretary Hull.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is the date of the letter from Secretary Hull?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has the letter.

Mr. THOMASON. August 9, 1935.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should think as popular as Secretary Hull is in this House, if he wants something done, the House would be mighty apt to do it for him.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, this measure has been recommended, I am informed, by the State Department. I do not know any department of this Government that has not recommended the expenditure of large sums of money. It seems as if any Member of this House who speaks on behalf of the conservation of funds finds himself very much alone. That is the position I find myself in. There are only a few people in this House who are trying to conserve the resources of this country. I may say I am mighty glad I am one of them. There are not many people here who are trying to help me to conserve the funds of this country. Why is that the case? Once in a while I hear some Member get up and say that he thinks we have gone far enough in spending. I was taught when I was a boy that if you saved the pennies the dollars would take care of themselves. It is not how much you make, but how much you save that spells success. We are talking here on a bill involving a million and a quarter dollars.

Where are you going to get the money? To me a million and a quarter dollars is a great, great mountain of money. I just wish you all had a million and a quarter and then you might be able to give me some of it and then we would all have a good time and be happy.

We talked a few moments ago about building the face of Washington as high as the Capitol Dome. The Membership of this House is building a debt so high that I am afraid it is going to wreck this country. Higher than the Washington Monument.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BURDICK. Does not the gentleman realize he is helping to build up this expense by his extensive remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. RICH. If the amount that Congress spent on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was a criterion of the expense of this Nation as represented by this Congress, I would never say another word in the House of Representatives.

It is about time that some of you men who come from some of the States that do a lot of talking about spending but never raise any money to pay the bills and are always here with your hands out, grabbing and trying to get something for nothing—if you would give a little bit of attention as to whether you are wrecking the country or trying to do something for it, it would be a fine thing to do. This is a serious question. Where will you get the money? There is nobody in the whole House that I have higher regard for than I have for the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], but that is not the question. The question is, What are you going to do to preserve this Nation? I have heard it said on the floor of the House so many times that it is not going to cost anything. Naturally, the men who make that statement know full well that if they can get an appropriation it will cost something, and in this particular instance it is a million and a quarter dollars.

Therefore the statement that it does not cost anything is an erroneous statement. If we want to try to preserve this Nation, the statement that when we get an appropriation it is not going to cost anything is a foolish statement. I do not want to try to make the point that we can still continue to make appropriations if we do not intend to get the money, but everyone that asks an appropriation for money expects to get the money. Where are you going to get it? That is the question. If I can utilize all the time that is at my command, and that is probably only for an hour or two, if I can save three or four or a half dozen or more bills from coming up here and save five or six or seven million dollars, then I have paid for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for this session of Congress several times over.

You are going to be requested in a short time by the Chairman of the Committee on Printing to make some changes in the expenditure of funds for printing next year. If you adopt those changes, you will then save money on the appropriation for printing at the next session of Congress. If you are able to do that, and if you are able to stop now the appropriation of additional money, we may then feel that we are trying to do something constructively.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. GREEVER. Does the gentleman realize that if this dam is not constructed, if this appropriation is not made, the United States and its citizens stand to lose 120,000 acre-feet of water per year?

Mr. RICH. Let the gentleman explain that. How are we going to lose 120,000 acre-feet of water a year?

Mr. GREEVER. Because at the present time it is being diverted to Mexican lands.

Mr. RICH. If you build this dam, and if you take this 120,000 acre-feet of water away from Mexico, then you will probably have a war with Mexico, and it will cost, instead of a million and a quarter dollars, probably thirty or forty or fifty or a hundred million dollars.

Mr. GREEVER. But this is carrying out the terms of an agreement.

Mr. RICH. When was that agreement consummated?

Mr. GREEVER. In 1906.

Mr. RICH. Is the American Government permitted to take that water away from Mexico?

Mr. GREEVER. We are not taking it away from Mexico. They are appropriating it for the use of their own citizens.

Mr. RICH. What would Mexico have to say if you took the water away from them now?

Mr. GREEVER. I do not know; I cannot speak for them.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think we ought to do something that will cause a disruption in the friendly relations between Mexico and the United States?

Mr. GREEVER. I think we ought to carry out our agreement and save the waters of the United States for the people of the United States.

Mr. RICH. I am glad the gentleman has that thought in mind, because I have come to the conclusion that when we are making reciprocal-trade agreements and trying to take care of foreign countries to the detriment of our own people, we are doing something contrary to the best interests of the American people. I think all of you men who have not signed the petition on the Speaker's desk, to bring that bill up before the House, should do so at this time. That is something that is very necessary to the welfare of the American people. Have you signed that petition? If not, do so at once, bring the bill up, stop these reciprocal-trade agreements, and save American markets for American labor, for American farmers, and American manufacturers.

I congratulate the gentleman. I am glad the gentleman is trying the conserve these resources for the American people.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman signed the petition for the Frazier-Lemke farm-refinancing bill?

Mr. RICH. No.

Mr. McFARLANE. I commend it to the gentleman. I hope he will sign it before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. RICH. I am not an inflationist. If I wanted to start the printing presses of this country I would do just what you fellows are doing on the Democratic side of the House. I would squander every dollar that the American people could get hold of, and if I would do that, I would do more detriment to America than has ever been done in the history of this Nation. I would not be a party to starting the printing presses. This, I will not do.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman, in my opinion, is expounding some sound philosophy. When we return home most of us will find that the ideas which the gentleman is expressing are the same ideas which our own constituents concur in. I should like to state that recently there was a bond issue in California which was turned down in my district at a ratio of 10 to 1.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLEAN. The matter under discussion is the building of a dam on the Rio Grande and the gentlemen are now discussing bond issues in California.

Mr. RICH. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, if the gentleman from New Jersey was correct in his statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. I do not want this taken out of my time, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New Jersey said we were not talking on the bill when we talked about raising money. That is just the reason I am talking now. I am talking to save money—the taxpayers' money. They want to spend a million and a quarter dollars to build a dam down there on the Rio Grande, a great, wide river that is a great deal like many other rivers of this country that we are damming, it is dry a big part of the year. Now they want to build a dam down there so that they will have some water and take it away from Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not the gentleman in favor of carrying out an international agreement?

Mr. RICH. I think that all contracts that are made between nations ought to be religiously carried out, but I think that when this Government of the United States and the present Democratic administration did what they did last year in abrogating many of the air mail contracts which were made, and when the Democratic Party repudiated the gold clause in all contracts, prohibiting the Government from paying out to people money which on its own promise it had to pay in gold, then I think we as a Nation did one of the most damnable things that any nation has ever done in the history of the world, especially giving foreign countries a just cause to repudiate their debts to us. What fools ye mortals be.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the genrtleman state whether there are any power projects in connection with this dam?

Mr. RICH. If there is any power, so that we would be putting any utilities out of business, then I would certainly have to oppose the project, because I am against the Government in business. I want to say that the Tennessee Valley Authority which you Democrats authorized down South, is going to be the biggest millstone that was ever hung around the necks of the people of this Nation. It will cost this Nation $2,000,000,000. It is socialistic, communistic, and Russianistic.

Millions and hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent in the southeastern part of this country to put the local people out of business, and it is a disgrace and a crime.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did the gentleman vote for the tax bill today?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I voted for the tax bill. The gentleman thought I did not, did he not?

Mr. McFARLANE. I thought he did not.

Mr. RICH. That is an iniquitous tax bill, but I am trying to balance the Budget. I have tried to help you Democrats, but you are so fast in your expenditures and so short in your income that you will bankrupt this Nation.

Mr. McFARLANE. What kind of a tax bill would the gentleman advocate?

Mr. RICH. Now, I am trying to stop you spending money. If I could do that, then I have accomplished a great good.

Mr. McFARLANE. What kind of a tax bill would the gentleman have written?

Mr. RICH. I would have had it 10 times as big as it is, so that I could awaken the people back home. If I could awaken the people back home, believe me, the gentleman from Texas would not come back here again, and very few Democrats at the next Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman tell us whether he favors a sales tax?

Mr. RICH. We will have to come to a sales tax shortly or some other form of taxation to balance the Budget and save our Nation.

Mr. McFARLANE. I thought so.

Mr. RICH. Or else we will never balance the Budget.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to my colleague from Oregon.

Mr. EKWALL. We give up. What is it the gentleman wants? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Stop spending, stop spending. Can not you fellows understand English?

I want to answer the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. RICH. I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon that I am trying to utilize a little time because it is only 1 hour and 50 minutes to Sunday. When Sunday comes we shall have to adjourn sine die; and I hope we do, because all you are doing now is spending money, and if I can utilize all of this time you cannot spend money during that time, and, therefore, I am saving this country, so the gentleman possibly can be returned to another Congress by his people back in Oregon.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken.

Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8692) was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGESHIPS SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. DUFFEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3389, to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this bill creates two additional Federal judges for the southern district of New York. Is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask a question, are these two judges in addition to the judges provided in the bill passed by the House recently?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. They are.

Mr. YOUNG. Does not the gentleman know that United States district judges, as a class, are a group of tyrants and dictators instead of a group of public servants; and that they are not responsible to the people of the country and many of them usurp their judicial authority?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. That has not been my experience, answering the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for these additional judgeships in this particular district?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. The appointment of these judges has been recommended by the Judicial Conference, presided over by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. It has been recommended by two Judicial Conferences. The Judiciary Committee of the House, further, conducted a hearing on a similar bill which was reported out of the House Judiciary Committee on March 6; and after listening to Judge Knox and Martin Conboy, United States attorney for the southern district of New York, there was no question in the opinion of the Judiciary Committee that this bill should be recommended and passed.

Mr. Conboy testified that criminal cases in the southern district of New York are 4 years in arrears. It takes 3 years to get an admiralty case to trial, and civil cases are, on the average, 2 years behind the docket; and the United States is a party to one-third of the cases, so there is quite a charge on the public revenue through delay in bringing these cases to issue.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman tell us how many additional Federal judgeships have been created to date by this Congress?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. I do not know.

Mr. YOUNG. We recently created a group of additional judges, did we not?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. We did.

Mr. YOUNG. Why is it these two additional judgeships were not created at that time?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill, as I understand it, provides two additional Federal district judges for the southern district of New York.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLANE. On yesterday a bill was considered creating an additional district judgeship for the eastern district, New York City, in Brooklyn. I was informed by two of the gentlemen from New York that the President was back of that bill. I find from the Department of Justice and others that the President was not back of that bill.

Now they come in and ask the passage of this bill creating two additional judgeships. I telephoned the White House trying to get the President's position on this bill. More than 3 hours have elapsed, but he has not seen fit to answer two telephone calls I have made to the White House. [Laughter.] I just want to call the gentleman's attention to this: In 1933 there were one hundred and thirty-five-thousand-and-odd cases filed in the Federal district courts of the country and 138,000 disposed of. Last year only 70,000 cases were filed in the district courts of the Nation and 90,000 cases were disposed of.

If we could get these golf-playing Federal district judges back on the bench where they belong, stop their vacations, put them back to work as they should be, we would not need to create these additional Federal judgeships. Oh, I know it is said these are nice juicy plums, and they are; but that does not justify the creation of so many additional judgeships, each at a cost of more than $70,000 a year.

Under the circumstances I shall be forced to object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I will reserve my objection, but I have got to have a lot better reasons than those so far advanced for me not to press my objection.

Mr. GREEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and it is not my purpose to object, it seems to me it would be more appropriate for us to divest the American people of some of the tyrannical corrupt Federal judges than to create more Federal judgeships. We have one in the State of Florida who, as shown by evidence before the committee, has been tyrannical. We want him impeached.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2324) to incorporate The Military Order of the Purple Heart.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know what this bill is all about. I want to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-named persons, to wit: Howard J. Lepper, New Jersey; George L. Apgar, New Jersey; D. Brandon Bernstein, California; Edgar N. Bloomer, New Jersey; William J. Burke, Connecticut; Charles A. Carlson, California; Rev. Michael J. Corr, New Jersey; Fred Cudmore, New York; Raymond L. Cunneff, Pennsylvania; Frank Cushner, Connecticut; George L. Edmonds, Pennsylvania; Joseph Godley, Michigan; L. E. Henry, Maryland; Kimon Karelis, Minnesota; Israel Kaufman, District of Columbia; F. K. Kennedy, Pennsylvania; John R. Lagana, Missouri; Carey D. Mitchell, Missouri; Ludwig J. Nachtmann, Pennsylvania; Harry T. O'Connell, New York; A. S. Odin, Michigan; Robert G. Patton, California; James Pistorio, District of Columbia; James T. Potter, Massachusetts; Maurice E. Romm, Connecticut; Frank A. Schrepfer, Pennsylvania; Harry A. Seigall,

Connecticut; Walter C. Stamm, Minnesota; Fred H. Surry, Washington; T. M. Thompson, Minnesota; Clyde E. Winterton, New Jersey; Carl Wirching, California; and such other persons as may be chosen who are holders of the Purple Heart Medal, awarded by the War Department under General Orders, No. 3, dated February 22, 1932, duly chosen, are hereby incorporated and declared to be a body corporate. The name of this corporation shall be "The Military Order of the Purple Heart."

SEC. 2. The said persons named in section 1, and such other persons as may be selected from among those who have been awarded the Purple Heart Medal by the War Department, may complete the organization of said corporation by the selection of officers, the adoption of a constitution and bylaws, and do all other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and at any meeting for that purpose any person duly accredited as a delegate from any chapter or State department, known as "The Military Order of the Purple Heart", shall be permitted to participate in the proceedings thereof.

SEC. 3. That the purpose or object of this corporation shall be patriotic, fraternal, historical, and educational;

To preserve and strengthen comradeship among its members;

To assist worthy comrades;

To perpetuate the memory and history of our dead;

To maintain true allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and fidelity to its Constitution and laws.

SEC. 4. That the corporation created by this act shall have the following powers:

Perpetual succession with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity;

To receive, hold, own, use, and dispose of real estate and personal property as shall be necessary for its corporate purposes, including the right to mortgage, encumber, or exchange said real estate or personal property;

To adopt a corporate seal, and change the same at pleasure;

To adopt a constitution, bylaws, and regulations, to carry out its purposes, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, or any State, or of the District of Columbia;

To adopt for the purposes of the corporation emblems and badges;

To establish State, District, and Territorial organizations and units or chapters; and

To publish a magazine, or other publications, and generally to do any and all such acts and things as may be necessary in carrying into effect the purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 5. That the organization shall be nonpolitical and as an organization shall not promote the candidacy of any person seeking public office.

SEC. 6. That the said corporation and its State, District, Territorial, or local units, or chapters, shall have the sole and exclusive right to have and to use in carrying out its purposes the name of "The Military Order of the Purple Heart."

SEC. 7. That the said corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, make and transmit to the Congress a report of its proceedings for the preceding calendar year, including a full and complete report of its receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 8. That as a condition precedent to the exercise in any State of any power or privilege herein granted or conferred, The Military Order of the Purple Heart shall file in the office of the secretary of state of such State the name and post-office address of an authorized agent in such State upon whom legal process against The Military Order of the Purple Heart may be served.

SEC. 9. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman explain the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, this is another Federal incorporation. Is it not true that the Judiciary Committee of the House has had so many applications for Federal charters that the committee has found it necessary to refuse to grant Federal charters except in certain cases? This bill was before the Judiciary Committee this year and was considered. There are pending other applications for Federal charters. The Congress must understand that if we are going to grant Federal charters under these circumstances we must grant them to everybody or else we are going to have trouble. Where are we going to draw the line? I do not believe this is the place to violate a principle established by the committee of which my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], now on his feet, is one.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. As a matter of fact, we broke the precedent by authorizing a group of people to be incorporated this year.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is correct. That is just what I say, a certain group came before our committee. They wanted the National Theater incorporated because certain people insisted on it. They persuaded some of the new members of the committee, who were sincere in what they were doing, to grant the request, and they have been regretting it ever since. This is the second step. Just so sure as you grant this charter you are going to have a flood of applications. We must meet the issue sometime. Let us meet it now.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] made a wonderful speech here 2 days ago in reference to Will Rogers not being buried in Arlington Cemetery because he was not a veteran. This applies to veterans who were decorated by their country for valor. They would be excepted. They are not these other associations to which reference has been made.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, no one can be a member of the Purple Heart unless he or she bled for his or her country. All I am asking is that we get the same privilege—and I am a Purple Heart man myself—that the Legion and the V. F. W. got.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Is this a House bill or Senate bill?

Mr. STACK. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. MICHENER. It has not been before the committee.

Mr. STACK. They are not questioning it now. I talked to the chairman and he has not objected.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the Chairman wants to put this bill through, I am not going to object.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear what the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee has to say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear from the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I challenge the statement that the Judiciary Committee has favorably passed upon this bill.

Mr. STACK. I did not make that statement. I said the Chairman and some of the Members were favorably inclined toward it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if it is desired, I will make a statement, although I do not see how I got in on this. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] stated what has been the situation in the Judiciary Committee of the House. It is true that the rule that was established by that committee was violated, although that is not quite the correct word. An exception was made with reference to the incorporation mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

This is a bill which passed the Senate. There is a great sentiment associated with the advocacy of this bill. It is true that we incorporated the American Legion and probably one or two similar organizations. The committee did not agree to report the bill favorably. The Committee on the Judiciary have no responsibility for this bill because they did not report it. I do not feel called upon as an individual Member of the House to do more than make the statement which I have just made. I am not going to object to the bill as an individual Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STACK]?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3389) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if this is the same bill to which the gentleman from Texas objected so vociferously a short while ago.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. It is the same bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman tell us why the gentleman from Texas has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. There was a misunderstanding.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want someone to tell me whether or not the President wants this legislation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have been trying to make an explanation about that.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the President want this bill passed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not betray any confidence when I say the President has asked me two or three times if I could not be instrumental in helping to relieve the congested situation in the southern district of New York.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then why did we not get this bill up ahead of all these other bills that have been passed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Wait a moment and do not ask me too many questions at one time. He referred to these two judgeships. What is the other question of the gentleman?

Mr. McFARLANE. The question is, Why did we not bring in this bill ahead of all these other judgeships that we have passed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I cannot answer that question. Sometimes the most important legislation is late arriving.

This district, as my friend from Texas knows, has perhaps the heaviest litigation and the most important litigation of any district in the United States. The relative number of cases, our investigation discloses, does not fairly indicate the volume of business.

Mr. McFARLANE. On the basis of the gentleman's statement, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Texas wants to know if this is a bill that the President has sponsored. I want to say to the Democrats that if this is a bill that the President sponsors our President is a socialistic President; if you will look at the things he is doing in carrying out a socialistic platform and if you want to sustain the Democratic Party, you ought to turn from him and support the Democratic platform, as you promised the American people you would do when you adopted the Democratic platform and you were all elected on its strength. Now, why are you following the Socialist platform and not the Democratic platform?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MORITZ. I object, Mr. Speaker.

THE NATIONAL YEOMEN F.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1687) to incorporate the National Yeomen F.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that it has not been his intention to recognize Members to call up Senate bills unless a House committee, to which a similar bill has been referred, has reported the bill and the same is on the calendar. The Chair is perfectly willing to recognize requests of this kind, but the Chair does feel that the Members who have Senate bills with similar House bills on the calendar recommended by the committee should have preference.

The Chair will therefore ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to withhold his request.

Mr. CONNERY. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate requests the House to return to the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38) providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 3 to the bill (H. R. 6776) entitled "An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes."

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1994) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Has this bill been reported by the committee?

Mr. LEA of California. It has.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill and tell us what it does and what committee reported it?

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported this bill unanimously. Its enactment would permit an application to be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish joint freight rates between water and rail carriers on the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Savannah Rivers.

Mr. TABER. Do they do this at other places?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; there are a number of other places where this law is already in effect.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Does this bill apply only to these particular rivers?

Mr. LEA of California. That is all.

There being no objection, the clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (e) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the Transportation Act, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1924, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "or Snake Rivers", and inserting in lieu thereof "Snake, Sacramento, or San Joaquin Rivers."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "or San Joaquin Rivers" and insert "San Joaquin, or Savannah Rivers."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privilege of the House and offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN offers the following resolution:

"Whereas the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has announced that he will refuse to move to take from the Speaker's desk the deficiency bill (H. R. 9215) and move to concur in the Senate amendments, or to disagree to said amendments and ask for the appointment of conferees; and

"Whereas this is a matter that goes directly to the integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That said bill be taken from the Speaker's desk, the Senate amendments disagreed to, a conference agreed to, and conferees appointed on the part of the House."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I do not think the resolution is privileged and is not in order under the general rules of the House, and I make that point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-seven Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers a resolution to which the gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that it is not privileged.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly. I submit that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is not privileged for the reason that it seeks to take from the Speaker's desk the deficiency appropriation bill, passed by the House, amended by the Senate, and messaged back to the House. Under the general rules of the House the procedure in such case would be for the Speaker to refer that bill to the Committee on Appropriations and for the Committee on Appropriations to consider the bill, have hearings if it saw fit, and report the bill back to the House with the amendments adopted by the Senate, unless the House should send the bill to conference by unanimous consent or by the adoption of a special rule.

If my understanding of the rules of the House is correct, those are the only three methods by which it can be considered. It can be referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Speaker, which is seldom done, or by unanimous consent it can be sent to conference, in which event, of course, a motion to instruct the conferees is in order, or the Senate amendment may be concurred in by the method of a special rule. Under those circumstances, the general rules of the House making ample provision for disposition of the legislation, I submit, the resolution of the gentleman from Mississippi is not privileged in any sense of the word.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, as I recall the resolution, it says something about the integrity of the proceedings of the House. The fact is that the procedure in reference to this bill, with Senate amendments, is in accordance with the rules of the House and the integrity of the proceedings of the House has not been interfered with whatsoever. What the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi would like to do is to put himself in the place of the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in this respect. If the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations rose and asked to send the bill to conference today, he would have to get unanimous consent. Any Member could object.

All portions of Senate messages requiring consideration in the Committee of the Whole—

And this is an appropriation bill—

and Senate bills of all kinds are referred to the appropriate standing committee under direction of the Speaker without action by the House. A House bill returned with Senate amendments involving a new matter of appropriation, whether with or without a request for a conference, is referred properly to a standing committee, and on being reported therefrom is referred directly to the Committee of the Whole.

In this stage of the proceedings it might well be that the Speaker would not refer the bill to the Committee; but while it is on the Speaker's desk, not even the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations could take it off without unanimous consent. Any other Member can object.

That being the case, no privilege of the House has been violated; and the gentleman's resolution is not privileged.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] speaks about sending this bill to a committee. Ordinarily I submit that would be the proper procedure, but we are not only in the dying day but in the dying hour of a Congress, and this bill is of vital importance to every citizen of the United States.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] becomes confused between the integrity of the House and the integrity of the proceedings of the House. This resolution is privileged because it involves a matter that goes directly to the integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives. If this resolution is voted down and the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations carries out his suggestion which was made on the floor a while ago, then the Congress of the United States is paralyzed in the dying hour on a bill that involves an appropriation for all the vast legislation which we passed since the last deficiency appropriation bill was passed.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we have today involved in this bill that comes from the Senate a matter of vital importance to the farmers throughout this country, who are today suffering——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order. That is what the Chair is interested in.

Mr. RANKIN. I am trying to point out to the Chair that this resolution involves a matter of the integrity of the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is the point on which the Chair desires to hear the gentleman, and that alone, because that is the only point involved in the point of order that has been made.

Mr. RANKIN. Then the importance of the bill would not be considered. I submit that the importance of the legislation itself and the fact that we are in the dying hour of the Congress also should be considered, when it comes to trying to break a deadlock, in order to keep from paralyzing legislation that has been worked on for months.

So I submit this is the only recourse. Whenever the chairman of a committee comes into the House and says, "I refuse to ask for a conference, and I refuse to take the bill from the Speaker's desk", a bill in which every Member of the House is interested and in which the entire country is interested, there is only one recourse left to a Member of the House, and that is to rise to a question of the privileges of the House and offer a resolution to take that bill from the Speaker's table and start it on its parliamentary course. That is exactly the procedure I have followed.

I submit that my resolution is in order and that this is a matter which involves the privileges of the House and that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman understand that when that bill came back from the Senate, carrying $500,000,000 more appropriation than the House bill carried, and new legislation as well, the rules provide that that bill should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that they might investigate those amendments and report on them, and not be required in 3 or 4 minutes or 3 or 4 hours to pass upon that vast amount of appropriation to see whether it is justified or not. Whether I choose to ask unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table is a privilege that I have, and I knew that unanimous consent would not be granted.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not agree that it is the privilege of the chairman of the committee to paralyze a bill that the Congress has passed on and that now depends upon adoption or rejection or ironing out of the amendments on the differences between the two Houses. This is a matter that involves the integrity of the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the Chair desires to hear me, I will state briefly what the situation is, as I see it. The point of the gentleman from Mississippi is this: If the course of action under the rules of the House can only be taken by unanimous consent, and if that unanimous consent is sought or granted, the matter automatically becomes a question of privilege. That is so insane that there is not any sense in arguing it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The rules of the House and all of the precedents of the House provide just what should be done when a bill has been returned to the House with Senate amendments. Under the established precedents the bill must be referred to a standing committee, unless unanimous consent has been obtained to send the bill to conference, or a special rule has been reported and passed upon by the House, providing that it shall be sent to conference.

The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to section 3108 of volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, which reads as follows:

A House bill returned with Senate amendments, involving a new matter of appropriation, whether with or without a request for a conference, is referred directly to a standing committee and on being reported therefrom is referred to the Committee of the Whole.

As the Chair has stated, it was the duty of the Chair to refer this bill to the Committee on Appropriations, the standing committee having jurisdiction of it. That practice must be followed unless the chairman of the committee or some Member of the House should obtain unanimous consent that the bill be sent to conference, or a special rule is presented making disposition of the bill. In this case no request for unanimous consent was made. It is the custom of the Chair always to recognize the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the bill in question. Neither has a rule been presented. The Chair fails to see how the integrity of the House proceeding has been violated in this particular instance. The Chair does not think that, under the guise of a resolution presented as a matter of privilege, involving the integrity of the House, the established rules of the House can be overturned. The Chair does not think there is a question of privilege presented by the resolution or that there was anything in the action taken with reference to this particular bill violative of the integrity of the House or its regular proceeding.

The question as to whether or not we are now in the closing hours of a Congress, the question of the importance or unimportance of these appropriations and the legislation contained in this bill, are matters with which neither the Chair nor the House, under its established rules, has anything to do at the present moment.

As the gentleman from Texas has said, there is a reason for the practice of the House in referring these bills to the standing committees where unanimous consent or a special rule to the contrary has not been obtained. It is, of course, manifestly for the purpose of giving to the committee an opportunity to examine the amendments and report back to the House its recommendation as to whether or not those amendments should be agreed to or disagreed to.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia.

The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. No. 38), a concurrent resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the request of the Senate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL and Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 127, noes 103.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. May I inquire of the Chair whether to grant this request of the Senate the rules must be suspended, and to agree to the motion will require a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. No; the request of the Senate is laid before the House and acted upon by a majority of the House. The action taken by the House will determine what shall be done with the request.

Mr. MAPES. The Chair rules that it requires only a majority to grant the request?

The SPEAKER. It requires only a majority.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand it, the House passed a resolution to adjourn sine die. The Senate concurred in that resolution. The Senate now requests that the resolution be returned to them so that they may take action withdrawing their concurrence, and the vote "aye" is a vote to send it back to the Senate so they may take such action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOBBINS. If this request of the Senate is not granted and the resolution is not returned, will the House and the Senate automatically adjourn sine die today?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass on that question when it arises.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 203, nays 95, not voting 132, as follows:

Mr. PITTENGER changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. RANDOLPH changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Inasmuch as the House has passed a resolution to adjourn today, if the House does not rescind its action does the House automatically adjourn before 12 o'clock midnight?

The SPEAKER. The House in agreeing to the request of the Senate has returned the concurrent resolution to the Senate, and the House must now await the action of the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn sine die.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What time is it? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. According to the clock it is 17 minutes of 12 o'clock midnight.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is that standard time or daylight-saving time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the mechanics of this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Am I correct in saying that this action of the House must be messaged to the Senate, received by the Senate, and the House notified of its reception by the Senate before 12 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It must be received by the Senate. Then the Senate will take such action as it may desire.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Must the House then be notified as to the reception of the message by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the Senate takes some action.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As one of the greatest speakers the State of New York ever had, the gentleman from New York was the greatest clock "turner-backer" the State ever had.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the bill under consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill called up by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and for which unanimous consent was given for its immediate consideration.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to any more business being transacted by unanimous consent tonight if we are going to be here next week. We will have plenty of time then to attend to this business.

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly at 11:30 o'clock p. m., the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11:35 o'clock p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has rescinded its former action to recall from the House, House Concurrent Resolution No. 38, providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would it be in order to request that the message received from the Senate be again read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the message.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has rescinded its former action to recall from the House House Concurrent Resolution No. 38, providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Senate has informed the House that it has rescinded its action in recalling from the House the adjournment concurrent resolution, what is the present situation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been informed that the Senate has taken a recess until Monday at 12 o'clock. The Chair will ask the House to take a recess for a reasonable time until the fact can be ascertained.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the House in the present circumstances should now adjourn, would it adjourn sine die?

The SPEAKER. That is what we are attempting to determine.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 1874. An act to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. HARRY MOORE, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, the captains and the members of the crews of certain fishing and pleasure boats, and to others; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures.

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the House take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly at 11:40 o'clock p. m. the House stood in recess to meet at the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11:45 p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has reconsidered its action in agreeing to House Concurrent Resolution No. 38, providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the message from the Senate because the Senate adjourned several minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. This is a message from the Senate and can be delivered to the House even though the Senate has adjourned. The Chair does not understand that a point of order lies against the reporting of a message from the Senate by a regularly accredited official of the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

THE DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has as its intent the approval by Congress of a violation of the law by the Commissioner of Immigration. The resolution sets up as a statement of facts that the Department of Labor has "stayed" for 26 months the deportation of 2,600 aliens subject to deportation under the law now in force and effect, and in force and effect for all of the 26 months; 2,600 aliens that the Department of Labor knew were subject to deportation, and willfully and knowingly refrained and refused to deport.

The resolution further provides that Congress without repealing the law urge the continued violation of it by the Department of Labor. This resolution would be ludicrous if it were not so serious. We are treated tonight to the spectacle of what was intended to be a great legislative body becoming a jester's court. We are seeing here tonight the House of Representatives of the United States authorizing an officer of the Federal Government to violate his oath of office and the law of the Government whose agent he is.

The excuse is made that these are "hardship cases." We are told the law should be violated because if it is not violated men who came here illegally and remained here fraudulently will be separated from their American wives whom they married under authority of a marriage license obtained by deceiving the officer who issued it. Because they violated our law of entry they must now be allowed to remain here to compete for jobs with native-born American citizens and honest, conscientious, law-abiding foreign-born American citizens. They will endeavor to take the jobs of some of the millions of foreign-born citizens who came into the country lawfully, and took out their first papers and met all the requirements of the law.

These people are being discriminated against by the Department of Labor, and by this resolution. By this resolution you favor these 2,600 aliens who flouted the law and continue to laugh at it. You are endeavoring to penalize the foreign-born man and woman who paid for their citizenship in this country with their money and toil of weary years.

We have the most lenient laws of entry and naturalization of all the nations of the world; yet you would, by this resolution, give a prize for the violation of our lenient laws to these 2,600 aliens, and add to it a grand prize for the Department of Government that shuts its eyes to the criminal act.

Proponents of this resolution tell us that illegal entry is a crime that should be overlooked. If that were true then entry should never have been made illegal in the beginning; and most certainly those of that opinion should now present a bill to repeal the law instead of a resolution to condone its violation. This resolution does not repeal any existing law. Not a Member contends that it does. This resolution cannot, under the rules, even be sent to the Senate for action, nor submitted to the President for his approval or veto. It was never intended by its sponsors to become a law. It is a camouflage—a subterfuge. It is a shadow without substance. It is a nauseous thing that is fittingly brought before the House at a night session in the closing days of Congress. It is a thing of darkness that would not bear the scrutiny of the bright light of a reasoning day.

As a very young man and as a lawyer I learned that we must play every game by the rules. That it applies to baseball and football and government and the game of life. Laws are not just or unjust. They are merely rules to go by. We, as a people, have found that certain rules work better than other rules or no rules at all; so we adopt the rules that experience has taught us work best and call them laws. Not because they are just but because in our relations with one another we must have rules to govern our actions. All must abide by the rules or the game of government, the game of life, is a failure.

Congress, under the Constitution, is the rule-making body for our governmental game. Congress made the rule covering the entry and deportation of aliens. The rule was made long ago. The Labor Department was, and is, familiar with the rule but the Labor Department refuses to play by the rules. And this resolution asks each of us as Members of Congress in the House to commend the Department of Labor for violating the rules.

I cannot vote for it. You cannot play any game without observing the rules. I cannot vote to commend the Department for disrespect of law.

WOOD F. AXTON—AN IDEAL INDUSTRIALIST

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members of the House, I am unwilling that the session should close without there being made by me, and in this way, some expression touching the work and character of one of the most useful, most humanitarian captains of industry appearing in our country during the current generation. I refer to Wood F. Axton—popularly known as "Wood Axton", who died at his home near Louisville, in his native State of Kentucky, on the 4th of last April, aged 63 years.

RISE FROM POVERTY

In his life history and achievements he strongly exemplified the spirit which we are pleased to describe as "typically American." A poor boy, country-born, he early displayed the qualities of industry, integrity, resourcefulness, courage, and vision, which, in time, lifted him from obscurity to the heights of business success and national prominence. A recital of his early responsibilities, of his battle against the odds of poverty and limited opportunity, of his lack of educational advantages, and of his complete and enduring triumphs over all obstacles, would be of dramatic worth. I wish that time might permit the same to be made. As it is, I must content myself with the suggestion of a few illustrative details.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A GREAT BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

More than 35 years ago Wood Axton became interested in the manufacture of tobacco products; and from the most meager "shoe-string" beginnings, he built up, and until his death served as the head of, one of the largest and most successful tobacco industries of the country; that of the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co., of Louisville. It was established and has ever been maintained as an "independent" concern; and everyone who knows the history of the tobacco business in this country, can appreciate what this means. To create and successfully operate such an enterprise, required the highest degree of courage, skill, and sagacity. Aided by his sturdy brothers, and a loyal and efficient staff which he brought to his side, he so conducted the company's affairs as to achieve success in a large way; yet throughout its long and noteworthy career, the organization has maintained the best standards of wages, working conditions, and welfare benefits for its employees. Today, in these regards, it stands as one of the Nation's models; and nowhere can there be found a more loyal, efficient army of workers than that which is employed by it.

LABOR RELATIONSHIPS

Always employing organized labor in his factories, Wood Axton never encountered labor trouble or strikes—so fair and just were his policies and methods, and so appreciative and loyal have been his employees. In fact, his attitude toward labor and his square-dealing practices had long since carried his name and that of his enterprise to every part of the Nation; and at the time of his death, because of these facts, and because also of his outspoken sentiments as regards the whole question of capital and labor, he was a national figure. By both the leadership and rank and file of labor he has long been held in the warmest affection and esteem; while, on the other hand, capital has often profited by his example.

A PIONEER MANUFACTURER

In recent years this firm—in addition to carrying on its other activities—has been a pioneer in the manufacture of the cheaper or so-called "10-cent cigarette", and in this work it has been most successful; although, more recently, processing taxes and other burdens placed on tobacco manufacturers by the farm program, and, as I consider it, an inequitable Federal tax rate, have jeopardized that success. It was characteristic of this man to declare and hold to the policy that his company—at whatever loss or cost to it—should absorb the processing taxes rather than pass them on to the consumer or take them from the grower.

THE PRINCIPLE OF LIVE AND LET LIVE

Much favorable comment developed throughout the country some time ago when Wood Axton refused to accept, at the wish of the stockholders and directors of the company, any salary in excess of $10,000 a year for his services as president and directing head of the organization. There were other stockholders besides himself to be considered, he said; and, moreover, he argued, the "take-outs" of employers in big business are usually too large, and ofttimes unconscionable; and salary increases should begin at the bottom rather than at the top. What a favorable contrast is presented by his attitude and action in this connection when they are compared with the practices of so many officials and directors of large corporations who have claimed and received huge bonuses and salaries to the serious loss and disadvantage of employees, stockholders, and the general public. This is said with due consideration of the fact that real talent and ability should be well compensated; but too often has it been the case that those receiving the largest compensations have proven themselves to be the least competent and worthy.

The business of Mr. Axton's firm has been operated on the large-volume, small-profit plan. He and his associates have believed that the farmer and wage earner should receive adequate returns for their toil. The operation of his plant and those of other "independent" manufacturers have produced a very useful and desirable element of competition in the tobacco growers' markets; and by reason of the fact the growers have been substantially benefited.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS

The subject of these remarks was distinguished for his hatred of every form of insincerity and hypocrisy; for his candor and unflinching courage; for his keen sense of justice; for his readiness always to fight for what he believed to be right; for his unfailing sympathy for the poor, the struggling, and all the "underdogs" of our social order. Born of the soil, in spirit he ever remained a son of the soil. Unspoiled by business success and uncorrupted by wealth, he kept his feet on the ground and never lost the "common touch." His own early strivings and hardships rendered his strong and ardent nature deeply sympathetic with all others who found themselves in the same rugged pathways he had trod. He was a born leader of men—a rugged individualist, if you please—but a leader who made partnership with all those with whom he came into business association, for their advantage as well as his own. This was his conception of life and industry, and from this high ideal he never departed. Not only this, he had as well the proud satisfaction of achieving success by adherence to it.

He possessed the capacity for friendship, and he had troops of friends, loyal to him to the last degree, and he to them.

INTEREST IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Throughout his life he was vitally interested in public questions; especially in all those which affected the safety and welfare of the Republic, and the economic and social betterment of its people. Unceasingly, by means of his voice and means, he aided worthy causes. His benefactions, though modestly extended, were more numerous than the world will ever know.

He led in movements for lower utility rates, for fairer tax methods, and for improved farm and labor conditions. Through all his life he was passionately devoted to the cause of the toilers, and he utilized to the fullest possible extent the opportunities of his own great business enterprise to put into practical effect the gospel he preached.

In addition, he did much, with purse and appeal, for the cause of education among the colored youth of his section, and in numberless ways proved himself the friend and benefactor of the colored race.

INDEPENDENCE IN THOUGHT AND ACTION

Wood Axton's interest in public affairs was in nowise induced by selfish considerations. This, his whole life proves. He possessed great vigor and independence of thought. On all questions of a political nature he held strong and decided convictions; but he was not influenced by narrow or partisan considerations. Like myself, in the days of Theodore Roosevelt, he was a "Bull Mooser", and in 1912 the leader in Kentucky of the "Bull Moose" movement. This fact led to a friendship between us that survived to the end, and the more that I saw and learned of him and his views and methods the more highly I respected him, the more warmly I became attached to him.

Some years ago I had the pleasure of visiting Louisville, and going through his establishment, and I was greatly struck and impressed with the spirit and practices which there prevailed. I have ever since believed that if the relationships there maintained between employer and employee could be generally followed in our industrial world the great problems of production and labor would be largely solved.

AN EFFECTIVE SPEAKER

Referring somewhat further to his personal characteristics, I may say that Wood Axton was widely known as an unusually effective public speaker. Big hearted and big brained, his wide experience, his extensive practical knowledge, his quaint and pungent humor, his "grass roots" philosophy, his broad and generous outlook, and his picturesque and homely phrase—not to mention an unsurpassed gift of sarcasm when he was combating what he believed to be injustice or hypocrisy—all combined, with a slow, bullseye method of delivery, to render him a unique and powerful figure on the platform and the hustings.

FARMER AND STOCK BREEDER

In his later years, his health was not good, and although yet active in the management of his manufacturing enterprise he made his home on his extensive and beautiful bluegrass estate, overlooking the lordly Ohio River, and situated near the Kentucky metropolis. Here, in farming and stock raising he found relaxation and pleasure and lived close to the good earth he loved so well. As a breeder of fine livestock—thoroughbred horses and golden Guernseys—winners on the track and in places of exhibit—he took his place among the most successful breeders in a State long noted for its excellence along these lines.

EULOGIES

Many were the eulogies induced by his death. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, his long-time and intimate friend, thus spoke of him:

Mr. Axton exerted great influence for the promotion of industrial peace in cooperation and understanding between employer and employee. The industry which he builded and the harmonious relations which he established stand as a monument to his noble character and his intellectual ability.

Col. Urey Woodson, veteran editor and publisher of Kentucky, and now Director of the Alien Property Bureau, had this to say:

I have known him intimately since he was a lad of 10. His first job was as a carrier for my newspaper, the Owensboro Messenger, at a dollar a week. I have watched his wonderful career with pride. He was an ideal citizen, a great humanitarian whose charities were never fully known. He will be greatly missed in the civil life of Kentucky.

These were typical expressions, and might be endlessly multiplied. The newspapers of Kentucky and elsewhere utilized the occasion of Mr. Axton's death to commend his life and deeds, and used them as wholesome texts on which to preach the gospel of industrial peace and welfare which he had so fully put into effect. Some excerpts from leading editorials from Louisville dailies are given:

[From the Courier Journal]

Wood Axton was what is known as a "self-made man", but he never boasted of the fact nor attributed his success to his own ability, strength, or efforts. He was far too modest and self-effacing for that. That same sense of selflessness characterized his attitude toward those with whom he had dealings, especially the Kentucky burley tobacco farmers, from whom he bought most of the raw material for his tobacco and cigarette factory, and the employees of his plant.

An incident of the completion of a quarter of a million dollar addition to his factory at Twentieth and Maple Streets in 1933 illustrates Mr. Axton's attitude toward the tobacco growers. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration had just been established and had promulgated a processing tax on manufactured tobacco with which to reimburse farmers for land taken out of leaf production. The question of how this tax would be paid was a delicate one for Mr. Axton's company, whose chief product, the 10-cent cigarette, was being marketed on a narrow margin of profit. Mr. Axton's decision was typical, and he gave it unflinchingly, courageously, to an assembled group of stockholders. The company would absorb the tax, he said, even though it meant smaller dividends and lower salaries. He always limited his own pay check and that of other executives. The manufacturers had enjoyed many fat years, he said, but the farmers had gone through many lean years. The farmer, he felt, should be helped toward recovery.

Similarly, when the N. R. A. promulgated its codes and regulations, the Axton plant did not need to raise wages. It was already paying more than the minimum scale demanded.

Always honest and straightforward himself, Wood Axton could not tolerate dishonesty and political trickery in public servants and never hesitated to express himself in forceful fashion when he felt it necessary. Public-spirited, but without ambition for himself personally, he was always an active supporter of civic enterprises in the interest of the taxpayer, the citizen, the community as a whole.

[From the Louisville Times]

Mr. Axton was far more than a genial and sympathetic employer.

His theory of getting on in the world was that of a general who realizes that an army marches better and fights better on good rations and in good shoe leather than on poor rations and without comfortable shoes.

His margin of profits depended upon intelligent economy.

His enterprises were great. Getting on the wrong side of the ledger would wreck his own fortune and throw many people out of employment.

In this situation he was unafraid of the labor problem. He believed he could maintain good relationship with his employees and that they would give him the square deal he intended to give them.

He believed in the decency of human nature.

Napoleon knew the value of 5 minutes. Every captain of industry must know the value of 5 cents.

But Mr. Axton's understanding of economy was not that an employer must be a hard bargainer with his employees, never altogether in their good graces.

Wood Axton was a kindly neighbor. He wished to see tobacco growers find a profit. His attitude toward the processing tax—that the manufacturer should absorb it—was illustrative.

If there were, in business, more such men, the social problems of civilization would be simpler than they are.

How unfortunate that Wood Axton died in his early sixties.

[From the Louisville Herald-Post]

It is not the growth of the Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co., not the more than modest beginning and more than phenomenal development, which deserve to be recalled and recorded; of these many other instances could be found. It is the story of the man. His industry and pluck were his own. His faith in the principles which guided him from the first, loyalty to which never for one moment faltered; his determined championship of the causes which he had made his own: these it is which men have in mind when they learn that Wood F. Axton is no more.

In the face of tremendous difficulties, overcoming entrenched opposition, he had invaded the cigarette field, so long the peculiar property of the Big Four, and carved out one corner for his own. Others had joined him and shared in that bold and successful effort. But his was the idea and his the reward.

* * * * * * *

Civic life in Louisville is the poorer for the loss of a manly figure. The tobacco raiser has lost a friend. A splendid fighter will fight no more. And then there is the lover of a horse, the breeder of fine cattle, the citizen of broadest interests, the comrade.

Is it too much to say we shall not look upon his like again?

IN CONCLUSION

Small wonder it is that because of the character of his life and deeds this man, at his death, was as widely mourned, perhaps, as any other Kentuckian of his generation; and small wonder it is, also, that from high and low, rich and poor, white and black, and from far and near, there came to his bier and crowned and pressed about it such a wealth of bloom and verdure—the tokens of love, gratitude, and esteem—as has rarely, if ever, been equaled in his beloved State. His name shall long endure as a synonym and symbol of all the sturdy and generous qualities, the splendid initiative, the undaunted courage, the indomitable will, the tireless energy, the faith, the integrity, and the prescience that have characterized the builders of America from earliest times. His life was inspirational in the highest degree; and it well deserves to be here told and cited as something worthy of the emulation of our American youth. Especially is this true when so many false and corrupting standards prevail. He literally exemplified the scriptural adage, "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings." Wood Axton did more than stand before kings of the industrial world. He set them an example which, were they wise, they would strive to follow.

Peace to his ashes! Judged by what he was, and by what he did, we have every reason to believe that all is well with his soul.

LOAVES AND FISHES—OR THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I received a letter this morning from a disappointed applicant for a post-office appointment in which he said, "You ought to have the guts to make these appointments yourself."

I replied, "I do make them myself. I have personally appointed every Democratic postmaster in the Ninth District. I take the responsibility for every one of them and I challenge any man to point out a more competent or more popular set of postmasters in any congressional district in the United States."

What he probably meant was that I should not have consulted the Democratic committees in making the appointments. Now, it goes without saying that a Congressman must consult somebody in selecting postmasters. No man in Washington, a thousand miles away, attending committee meetings all morning and the sessions of the House all afternoon and working late at night trying to clear his desk of mail, can know who ought to be appointed at every office in the district. No matter how well acquainted the Congressman may be with any office from Jefferson City to the Mississippi River and from Hannibal to St. Louis, the people who live in the community and who receive their mail through the office are better qualified than any outsider to say whom they want and who is entitled to the appointment. For this reason all Congressmen must necessarily consult somebody in the community and take their advice in making appointments. It is merely a question then of whether he will consult some local man secretly and conduct all negotiations behind closed doors or whether he will consult the committees elected by the patrons of the office under the laws of the State of Missouri, in open meetings with all candidates and anybody else who is interested, present to hear the proceedings. He must adopt one of the two methods, and I find the people of our district prefer a voice in the selection of their postmasters and would rather that I take the advice of the committees they have elected than leave the selection to some unknown adviser who is not responsible to them or anybody else.

Announcement was made in the newspapers in advance of the last primary that the committeemen elected at the primary would be consulted in the selection of postmasters. Voters elected them with that in view, and anyone who objects to the committees being consulted is unwilling to abide by the will of the majority as expressed in a fair election at the polls, and obviously wants the Congressman to go over the heads of the legally elected committeemen and appoint some candidate the patrons have indicated by their vote they do not want.

Selection by the patrons is local self-government—one of the fundamental tenets of the Democratic Party. The patrons of the office select their postmaster just as they select the superintendent of their school and no one but the patrons of the office have a voice in it. It is the most democratic method that could be devised. It is home rule in its purest form and the personification of Jeffersonian Democracy.

Only one committeeman in the entire district has written to me questioning the plan. He suggested that it was unjust to the committees to ask them to make recommendations—that they were not elected for that purpose and it would make them enemies. He overlooked the fact that the service of the committeemen is purely voluntary and that no committeeman is expected to vote who for any reason prefers not to participate. Every ballot sent to the committees explains that any committeeman preferring not to vote may return his ballot unmarked.

It is interesting to note that every committee in the district has promptly responded when asked for recommendations and that their selections have been unusually satisfactory both to the local patrons and to the Department here in Washington. It might also be added that practically every committee in the district has repeatedly endorsed candidates for various offices to the Governor, Senators, and others and frequently complained when their recommendations were ignored. If they endorsed candidates to the Governor and Senators for State and Federal appointments, why should they not endorse to the Congressman for postmaster?

The efficiency of the system was especially demonstrated in the selection of census enumerators. The enumerators for the Ninth District were the first in the State to be appointed and the first to complete their enumeration. In this connection, I might add that the supervisor was selected by the chairmen and vice chairmen of the 13 counties of the district, receiving 23 out of the 26 votes. Without exception the candidates selected by the committees have been men and women who were qualified for their duties, who were entitled to party recognition, and who were the choice of the communities from which they were appointed, and all of them are making records which more than justify their selection.

The suggestion that applications for appointments be referred to the party committees comes from the administration. Early in the year Postmaster General Farley wrote to various Senators in part as follows:

JANUARY 8, 1935.

DEAR SENATOR: I have been making an effort to arrive at a uniform system of approving applications and appointments.

In New York State for a long time we have adopted the policy of clearing everything through the Democratic committee. We do that even in the case of post-office appointments. We have not had any trouble in working out this scheme, and I am passing it along to you, to the State chairman and your Congressmen merely as a thought so that if you think it advisable you might care to have it tried out in your State. I am sure you would be entirely satisfied with the system.

If I may not be too presumptuous, I am going to suggest that you sit down with your Congressmen and discuss this. It is not only working out satisfactorily in our State but in several other States I have in mind, and for that reason I pass it along to you.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY.

I served as confidential clerk under Speaker Clark during the Wilson administration and his experience with this vexatious problem confirms my confidence in Chairman Farley's recommendation. Speaker Clark tried three methods of securing endorsements. He first depended on letters from his personal friends. Immediately there sprang up over the district high-pressure letter mills from which poured letters and telegrams calculated to influence the Speaker's decision in making the appointments. Some wrote the letters on blank stationery and carried them around to obtain signatures. Others, more subtle, made the rounds and gathered up stationery and wrote the letters on business letterheads and then took them back for signatures. Frequently letters were signed without notice to the purported authors. The utility lobby is at least 20 years behind the times in this method of campaigning. If the practice did not originate in letter-writing campaigns for post offices, it at least was widely used by the enterprising propagandists of that day.

To meet this situation Speaker Clark adopted a second plan and required applicants to circulate petitions and secure the signatures of the patrons of the office endorsing the applicant for the appointment. Someone claimed some time ago that the endorsement of applicants by the committees engendered local strife and antagonisms. No such antagonisms could possibly compare to the bitterness which followed the circulation of petitions in the early days of the Wilson administration. Each name added to the petition enlisted a partisan who immediately took up the cudgel for his candidate. Towns were divided into warring factions which drew into the controversy banks, churches, lodges, sewing societies, and practically every other social, civic, and political organization in the community. If any genius can suggest a plan for selecting postmasters which will not occasion local dissension and can patent it he will have an income that will make him independent for life. As a matter of fact, after observing at close range every possible method of appointing postmasters I am convinced that endorsement by committees elected by the patrons of the office is the most satisfactory method and is accompanied by less acrimony than any other which has yet been tried.

Speaker Clark's third plan was invoked when toward the end of his unhappy experience in appointing postmasters, he decided to hold an election, at which each patron of the office was allowed one vote. Of all the plans he tried, the primary was the most disastrous and occasioned such bitter dissension that he frequently said in after years he would always regret calling it and would never hold another.

It is a sad commentary on the frailty of human nature that in the last years of his long and distinguished career, when he had brought fame and honor to his district and his State, when he had come within a hair's breadth of the Presidency of the United States, the greatest office known among men—when he would have been an honored guest in any Parliament on the face of the globe—there was hardly a town in his own district which he could visit without feeling directly or indirectly the hostility of some relentless partisan whose candidate he could not appoint to the village post office. I vividly recall the first time I returned from Washington after the appointment of the postmaster in my own town, I was followed up the street by a fine old gentleman, one of the most respected men of the county, gesticulating and shouting in a frenzy of rage, "Just wait until Champ Clark runs for Congress again. We will scratch him so hard they will have to get new pencils in the booths." Commanding ability, scholarship, lifelong devotion to duty, and incomparable service to his country and his times rendered by the great Speaker, meant nothing when weighed in the balance with the local postmastership.

Mr. Speaker, patronage is the bane of our democratic form of government. All political machines are built on patronage, and excessive political funds are accumulated through assessments on political job holders. The endorsement of postmasters and other appointees of the Ninth Congressional District by the local committees is a guaranty that no such machine will be built and no such funds will be collected in our district.

The only consideration in the selection of our postmasters has been the good of the service, the welfare of the party, and the approval of the patrons. And, judging from the letters received, 99 percent of the patrons endorse the method of their selection. It is also sanctioned by the highest party authority, as indicated by the following letter of approval:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, April 15, 1935.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CLARENCE: For a long time I have been watching very closely the manner in which you have been handling the recommendations for postmasters in your congressional district. The idea of getting the recommendation of the county organizations on such appointments, I am satisfied, meets with more general approval than any other form you may follow. That is exactly the system we used in New York State, and we haven't had any difficulty at all.

It would be pleasing to me if other Congressmen would follow this system, because I am sure that if they did they would find it highly satisfactory from every point of view.

With every good wish, I am,
Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY.

Chairman Farley is correct. Our experience demonstrates that the plan of getting the recommendations of county organizations meets with general approval. Most of our postmasters have now been appointed. Only a few remain to be installed. If they can be chosen as amicably and harmoniously as those we have already selected, our committees will have made a record in the history of the district and the State. In this work the committees will have the cooperation of all serious-minded citizens who believe Congress should devote most of its time to problems of taxation, relief, farm prices, old-age pensions, veterans' legislation, agricultural adjustment administration, loans, roads, recovery from the depression, and other matters affecting every family and every pocketbook in the district rather than neglect these to get a post office for one man in the town.

KERR BILL PROVIDES A HUMANE DEPORTATION PROGRAM

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the law-abiding aliens in the United States should not be handicapped, in these difficult times of economic readjustment, by threats of wholesale and mandatory deportations and compulsory naturalization, and I will do everything I can in the performance of my official duties to reassure aliens here, who are not in any of the criminal classes, that they will continue to have the equal security guaranteed to them and to citizens by our Constitution and by our laws.

Several of the opponents of the Kerr bill, including my colleague in the House and former member of my committee, the Honorable MARTIN DIES, of Texas, have taken upon themselves to issue to the public and to broadcast over the radio some statements which are not only unfair and un-American but express unsound principles and figures that are apparently untrue.

Assertions have been made in print and by voice which would have the general public believe there are now in the United States from 6,000,000 to 20,000,000 aliens and that of these aliens from three and a half million to 10,000,000 are now here illegally and subject to deportation. It has also been proposed that all aliens now unlawfully here should be immediately deported and that all aliens who are legally here should become citizens within a year.

All of these statements are so fantastic and are such exaggerations that I feel all right-thinking American people should be given, without delay, an answer with authoritative information from trustworthy sources.

Following a most careful examination of the records of the Census Bureau, of the records of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and of other sources of reliable information, the Honorable Daniel W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, recently told our committee during open public hearings that the total number of foreign-born persons now in the United States, other than those who have become citizens, or those who have filed their declarations of intention to become citizens or those minors who will become citizens upon the naturalization of parents with declarations of intention is not in excess of 3,403,000. Colonel MacCormack, at the same hearings, also stated that he was compelled to the conclusion that it is extremely unlikely that there are now as many as 100,000 aliens who are here illegally and subject to deportation under existing laws.

The Kerr bill, which is now awaiting consideration on the floor of the House, is primarily a legislative measure to enable the more effective and humane administration of our deportation laws, but the inevitable result of its enactment will be to reduce the alien population of our country and to further restrict hereafter both legal and illegal immigration from abroad.

An interdepartmental committee, made up of representatives of three Government departments—Justice, State, and Labor—will be authorized to study certain cases involving aliens who are in the noncriminal classes—that is, aliens whose only offense may be a technical violation of the immigration law, but for which there is no criminal penalty provided other than deportation—and then in these cases exercise limited discretion to adjust the status of certain of these aliens in a humane manner calculated to preserve the unity of homes honorably established on American soil and to prevent American-born minor children becoming orphans in their native land.

The Kerr bill grants no discretionary power to adjust the status of any alien whose deportation is mandatory under existing law on grounds that the alien has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, or is deportable as an anarchist or Communist, or is deportable on account of any violation of State or Federal laws regarding the importation or sale or distribution of narcotics, or who is not of good moral character, or who is deportable as a prostitute, procurer, or similar immoral person.

Deportations will be greater in number because there are four classes added to the aliens subject to deportation that are not covered by existing laws; these include the habitual criminal, the racketeer, the gunman, the alien smuggler of aliens, and violators of State narcotic laws. Apprehensions of aliens subject to deportation and temporary detention of them without warrant will legally enable immigration officials to more efficiently get aliens who now escape and are lost before the issuance of lawful warrant can be secured.

Fewer foreign-born persons who have never before been here will arrive as quota immigrants because the number of all aliens who have been permitted by the interdepartmental committee to remain will be deducted from the quota of the countries from which they originally came here. Skilled agriculturists will no longer have the preference status which they now have under the quotas.

This bill will clean up a great deal of the injustice that our present inflexible deportation law has made mandatory. These inhumane practices have been known for years by thoughtful students of the operation of our immigration laws, and Congress has been urged for a long time to legislate the necessary remedies. The Kerr bill will bring the needed relief and will thereby increase the wholesome respect for our immigration laws.

The Kerr bill should be speedily made law, and I will do all I possibly can to bring that about.

I will not be a party in Congress to any plan proposed by either the alien groups or the restrictionist groups to railroad through my committee or by passage on the floor of the House any measure which is essentially un-American in principle or which seeks to arouse undue animosity among our people by arousing any established alien prejudices against the foreign born primarily because they are foreign born. If they are law abiding and uphold the principles of our Constitution, aliens are entitled to receive equal opportunity and security to that enjoyed by anybody in this country.

HAWAII AND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio addresses delivered by me on February 11, 1935, and August 20, 1935:

RADIO ADDRESS DELIVERED FEBRUARY 11, 1935

To my radio audience, greetings and best wishes to you all, or, as we say in Hawaiian, "Aloha kakou a pau loa."

This is the Delegate from Hawaii, speaking on the general subject of the Hawaiian Islands, having been granted time on the air through the courtesy of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

I first came to this country from Hawaii nearly 30 years ago, appointed to the Naval Academy by our former Delegate, Prince Kuhio Kalanianole, the only prince of a royal family to serve as a Member of Congress, which position he held for 10 terms, or nearly 20 years. As a young Hawaiian from a country only recently annexed to the United States, I was an object of considerable interest, but was received with such kindness and friendliness by all the people whom I met on my trips across the continent, while at school at Annapolis, and later during my service as an officer in the Navy, that I felt sure our famous Hawaiian hospitality did not surpass that of the American people. I know this is the experience of all of our island people who come to the mainland to school or on business or for pleasure.

But coupled with that sympathetic interest there is a great lack of knowledge concerning Hawaii and its people, natural enough under the circumstances, but sometimes harmful to Hawaii. It was soon impressed upon me that we in Hawaii knew a great deal more about the mainland, and the people here, than they did about us. We are brought up on American history, and in our contacts with visitors from every part of the Union, and with residents from every section, who have come to the islands to live, we become well informed about America. Coming as the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii it is still a matter of surprise to me to find how few are acquainted with conditions in our little country of Hawaii. Despite the thousands of visitors who have been in Hawaii for stays of various duration the number who know Hawaii from first-hand acquaintance is but a small proportion of the total population of this great Nation of 125,000,000 people.

For that reason, we of the Islands, who have the opportunity, constitute ourselves voluntary spokesmen of our people, in the effort to give information concerning our country to the mainland residents. Recently a friendly gentleman whom I met, commented upon my speaking English so readily, and was astonished when I told him that English has been spoken in Hawaii for over 100 years; has been a legal language of the country for several generations, and was the only language taught in the public schools of the islands for a decade before we became a Territory of the United States. Another interested friend was surprised to learn that we are closer to the mainland than we are to the Philippine Islands, or to the Orient. Less than 2,500 geographical miles from San Francisco, Hawaii forms the apex of a triangle, of which the base is the coastline from Seattle to San Diego. On the other hand, we are 3,500 miles from the Philippines, and a greater distance from the mainland of Asia. We might almost be called a coastal island group.

Our Territory comprises a chain of islands, whose total area about equals that of Connecticut and Rhode Island taken together. The usual picture of the South Sea islands hardly applies to Hawaii. We are just within the Tropics in latitude, but because of our small island area, in the middle of the north Pacific Ocean, our climate is tempered by the trade winds, which blow for nearly 10 months out of the year, and by ocean currents that sweep down from the Bering Sea to Hawaii.

When Captain Cook discovered the Hawaiian Islands he found a populous country, whose people were living in the feudal age in political and social culture, but in the stone age in the mechanical arts because of the restrictions of their environment, principally the lack of metals. These people were the northernmost branch of the Polynesian race, that occupies the whole of the eastern Pacific from Hawaii to New Zealand. While the exact origin of this race may be in doubt, there is no question that it is, at least partly, of Aryan extraction, and it shows a high degree of adaptability to civilization as we understand it. Soon after Captain Cook discovered the Hawaiian Islands our great leader, Kamehameha I, consolidated the group into one kingdom, and gradually a more liberal form of government was evolved, mostly from American models, but with some features from the British system of government to provide a place for our Hawaiian royalty.

After nearly 100 years as a monarchy, and a brief existence as a republic, the islands became a part of the American Union by annexation. This occurred in 1898, during the Spanish-American War. However, the basis of our annexation had no direct roots in the war itself, but was the result of a close cultural and economic association, with the United States, over a period of many years.

Texas and Hawaii are the only two parts of the United States that have come into the Union by annexation. One was admitted as a State and the other was incorporated as a Territory, both by joint resolution of Congress and not by treaty. In neither case was conquest nor purchase involved. In both cases the new territories came into the United States of their volition, and might well have chosen some other political destiny.

In the 35 years we have been a Territory of the United States, Hawaii has developed into a progressive, self-respecting, and self-governing community, complying with every obligation of American citizenship and showing on every occasion a devotion and a loyalty to that citizenship that cannot be surpassed by any other part of the country. During the World War Hawaii more than did its part in men in service, in subscriptions to every call for cooperation in the national emergency.

Because of our highly developed agricultural resources, Hawaii has been prosperous internally, and has been a paying member of the Union, remitting to Uncle Sam's treasury, a substantial sum over and above what the Nation expends in the Territory for local purposes. In fact, the balancing of the ledger would show a credit to Hawaii in the neighborhood of $170,000,000—a small sum in these days of billions, but a large sum for our small community to have paid out of its earnings into the National Treasury. Our trade, almost exclusively with the United States, has averaged annually, over the years, about $100,000,000 worth of exports, consisting principally of cane sugar and pineapples and about $90,000,000 worth of imports. So Hawaii is a good customer, a steady market for American merchandise, and commercially, a valuable asset to the Union, particularly to the West Coast cities, with whom most of this trade is carried on.

At the time of annexation, the matter of statehood was discussed and the leaders of the American Government expressed themselves as committed to the policy of ultimate statehood for the Territory, when the growth of the country justified that step.

The only safe guarantee that we have for the protection of our country and its people as an integral part of the United States is statehood. Until this is obtained we are subject to the will of Congress, despite the definite obligations mentioned in the joint resolution of annexation, which referred to the guarantees of the treaty of annexation, then pending before the United States Senate. For this reason, and because Hawaii takes a great pride in its citizenship and naturally aspires to perfect that status by becoming a full-fledged sovereign State of the Union, we repeatedly petitioned Congress to permit us to organize a State government. I have introduced a bill in the present Congress for that purpose and have asked that it be considered on its merits; and, if necessary, that a congressional commission visit Hawaii this summer to survey conditions in the islands on the ground.

To those who are concerned about our racial set-up, let me say that no unprejudiced person doubts for a minute the loyalty of our citizens, from whatever ancestry, any more than one would doubt those in many communities on the mainland that have as great a diversity of racial strains. In a population of over 380,000 people, perhaps a third are aliens, ineligible to citizenship. While an important element industrially, this group does not participate in governmental affairs. The citizen group, about two-thirds of the total population, comprises in round numbers 50,000 Hawaiians and part Hawaiians, nearly as large a number of Anglo-Saxons, and a somewhat smaller number of Latins, in all about 150,000 of Polynesian and Caucasian peoples, whose Americanism is beyond question; and about 120,000 citizens of Chinese and Japanese ancestry, concerning whose loyalty we, of Hawaii, have no doubt.

The Chinese group, came originally to Hawaii, nearly 60 years ago, and are now completely identified with the country of their birth. The more numerous, and more recent, Japanese citizens, many of them still children, and all of whom must be Hawaiian born to qualify as citizens, are showing every indication of their desire, to be Americans in the fullest sense, and to one who has lived among them, and observed their progress in this ambition, there can be no doubt as to their sincerity, nor their capacity for citizenship. We are anxious, that as complete an investigation of our people be made, as the Government may wish to make, and we are willing to abide by the verdict so arrived at, based upon a true knowledge of Hawaii. We believe such a verdict will grant our plea for statehood.

To the great number of American people who are in the habit of traveling during some part of the year to escape the cold of winter or the heat of summer, I can only say: "Come to Hawaii and see for yourselves the real Hawaii."

As we say in Hawaiian, Mahalo, me ke aloha nui—thank you with best wishes.

RADIO ADDRESS DELIVERED AUGUST 20, 1935

America, in its march across a continent, has always had its frontier outposts, marking for a time the western limits of its settled domain. Pushing these outposts ever further toward the setting sun, the Pacific Ocean was finally reached and the continent spanned from ocean to ocean. But even while this rapid settlement was going on venturesome American ships were sailing the seven seas in search of trade and profits. Yankee ships knew the west coast of America when California was under the flag of Mexico, Oregon, and the Puget Sound country as yet an unexplored land, and Alaska still under the control of Russia.

In this bold pioneering the islands of the Pacific were likewise visited. Hawaii was in touch with the business houses of Boston and New York through their vessels while George Washington was President of the United States. The Navy goes where the Nation's commerce leads its vessels, and the United States Pacific Squadron patrolled the coast west of America and the islands of the Pacific before the American Nation had crossed the Mississippi River.

The value of Hawaii as an ocean outpost, controlling the north Pacific, was realized from these earliest times. The first naval visitors recognized its strategic location and urged the United States to obtain the exclusive use of bases in the country. The absence of any other island group in this area adds to Hawaii's natural value the feature of uniqueness. There is no alternative choice that can be utilized by America.

Several treaties were suggested looking to the cession of land-locked Pearl Harbor, an ideal naval base, to the United States. The then Hawaiian Kingdom in most cases was agreeable to such an arrangement, expecting no doubt that material advantages would more than compensate for some small loss of territory or sovereignty.

But the United States, still occupied with developing its own vast hinterland, turned a deaf ear to any Pacific outpost and declined to approve any treaty for such a project.

Other nations were also alive to the possibilities of a naval base in Hawaii, and perhaps America's indifference might have thrown Hawaii into the arms of some other power had not that indifference been coupled with a firm stand against such an eventuality and a strong support of the sovereignty of the Hawaiian Kingdom.

Up to annexation therefore the strategic value of Hawaii was still potential and not actual. The Spanish-American War made the United States a world power, and brought it into the Pacific area more than ever before.

Today Hawaii is America's last western outpost, almost a fundamental necessity in the protection of the west coast of the mainland. This part in America's scheme of defense is primarily naval. As a fleet base Hawaii serves America. The Army stationed there simply protects that base from attack and has no other reason for being in Hawaii.

It is also true that Hawaii is of greater value to America than to any other nation. Its control and development by any other nation could not be considered a defensive measure, and it might easily become a spear-point aimed at our west coast in an offensive war.

Whether the developments of warfare will lessen Hawaii's importance in the strategy of America's defense is a matter of conjecture.

When sail power was the sole means of locomotion on the seas, Hawaii was an imperative need. When steam from coal became the source of power, Hawaii's value was hardly less. With greater radius of action by use of oil, Hawaii may be slightly less important.

But its proximity to the west coast, its commanding location in the north Pacific, both for ocean and air travel, gives America such a tremendous advantage in any Pacific operation that it is hardly conceivable that its strategic value will ever be less.

It is a common error to think of Hawaii as a remote country, sometimes even assumed to be in the vicinity of Asia. A glance at the map of the north Pacific Ocean will correct this confusion of ideas. America is Hawaii's closest neighbor, 2,091 miles away; Japan is 3,394 miles beyond, China further away, and Australia 4,420 miles "down under" to the south.

America has shown its willingness to retire from the Asiatic area in recent arrangements to grant independence to the Philippines and in treaty pledges not to fortify Guam. But certainly its insistance upon making Hawaii a real fleet base, adequately protected from attack, cannot be criticized. Such a policy is but the natural development of defense measures for the protection of its own mainland from possible attack, that makes Hawaii the last, as it is the westernmost, American outpost. Hawaii's distance from any other country precludes any suspicion that its development is for offensive purposes.

The American people are, on the whole, a peace-loving people. Even those who, like myself, have served in its military or naval services abhor war as a means of settling international differences, perhaps even more so than the civilian population without military experience. But unpreparedness may invite the very conflict we wish to avoid. Failure to guard ourselves against attack would increase tremendously the cost in life and wealth of carrying on a defensive war.

If all these points are true, as I believe them to be, then we should make Hawaii impregnable to attack, and we should equip Pearl Harbor to become a fleet naval base in the full meaning of that designation. Recent appropriations to complete this program, concerning which much has been said in the press, are after all simply putting into effect a plan of national defense that had been determined upon by us many years ago, and agreed upon at the Washington Disarmament Conference several years ago, and only partially done during intervening years.

No nation need read into these expenditures any policy other than that America wishes to assure her own protection. The defense of Hawaii carries with it no menace to any other nation. Jingoes of both America and Japan have tried to draw conclusions from the recent extension of Hawaii's military defenses not justified by the facts. But no nation can afford to allow its jingoes to control its policies. There are, frankly, no issues of real consequences between America and Japan. Our trade relations are mutually profitable, with a substantial balance in America's favor. Our spheres of greatest interest do not clash. It is difficult to conceive what either nation could possibly gain by a conflict, and it is unquestionable that both would lose. I am confident that the wise leadership of both nations will not allow any extreme group to precipitate a conflict.

We in Hawaii are nearer neighbors of Japan than the rest of America. Possibly for that reason we understand her better than continental Americans do. We have among our citizens many of Japanese ancestry, and we find no justification for considering them as different from other races. They respond to the same stimuli as other peoples, and have shown every indication of joining with the other races of Hawaii in making our island melting pot thoroughly American in every fundamental aspect.

Our young Americans of Japanese blood, first and second generations born on American soil, are developing along the same lines as the descendents of European immigrants to this country. They are industrious, law-abiding citizens, filled with loyalty to America. Perhaps Hawaii's mission will be not only that of military outpost, but also one where the two great nations that face each other across the Pacific may become better acquainted with each other's people, and find in such acquaintanceship grounds for mutual good will and friendship, rather than prejudice and enmity.

Hawaii, as America's western outpost, standing guard for America in the North Pacific, is primarily a precautionary measure, an insurance against war, which all of us hope and believe will not be used, but which must be provided for our own best protection.

COTTON CROP VALUE INCREASES IN KERN AND TULARE COUNTIES, CALIF., AND THE UNITED STATES

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, Dr. C. A. Cobb, Director of the Division of Cotton, of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in the Department of Agriculture, has released some very interesting figures, compiled through August 14, 1935, which show the progress of the Cotton Adjustment Program in the United States, the State of California, and the Tenth Congressional District of California, which I have the honor to represent in Congress.

It is apparent, from these figures, that the Nation, our State, and my congressional district have received generous financial assistance from the cotton-adjustment program instituted by Congress.

Permit me to discuss, for a moment, the financial benefits which the cotton industry of my district has received during the past few years. During the 1932–33 period, the cotton industry, like others, was headed for the wall.

Kern and Tulare Counties, which are the cotton-growing areas of my district and which boast the most magnificent yield in the Nation, did not escape the effects of the depressed markets, and Kern County, during that season, found the farm value of its lint and seed approximated only $1,704,104, and Tulare County was in an equally serious plight because the lint and see value of its crop had fallen to $1,021,785 in value—an aggregate value of only $2,725,890 for the cotton crop of those two great counties.

Supervised markets, rental payments and other benefits, however, show that at the end of the 1934–35 season the cotton industry of Kern and Tulare Counties (as well as the United States and the State of California in general) enjoyed increased values.

It is interesting to note, by way of figures, the steady increase in value which the cotton crop has staged during the past two seasons. Let us take Kern and Tulare Counties, for instance, and compare the value of their 1932–33 season's crop with the 1933–34 crop, and also with the 1934–35 crop, and also the comparative figures for the State of California and the United States.

	1932–33 season	1933–34 season
	Farm value of lint and seed	Farm value of lint and seed	Rental payments as of Mar. 31, 1934	Option payments as of Apr. 30, 1935	Total payments	Farm value plus payments
Kern	$1,704,104.76	$3,906,965.20	$15,251.00	$32,816.54	$48,067.54	$3,955,032.74

MONEY SHORTAGE CAUSES ALL OUR DISTRESS—DESTRUCTION OF FARM WEALTH PROTECTS WALL STREET GANGSTERS. REFUSAL TO ADEQUATELY FINANCE FARM MORTGAGES, VETERANS, OLD-AGE VICTIMS, TEACHERS, ALL PROFESSIONAL CLASSES, HOME OWNERS, OTHER CITIZENS HAS PROLONGED DISTRESS, INCREASED POVERTY

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, we have just recently passed a new tax bill to bring additional revenue of perhaps around $200,000,000 annually. This amount will not even pay the interest on our present national debt.

And it perhaps will be difficult to even raise this much additional revenue because of cash money shortage.

Why is it so hard to raise money from taxation? Because there is simply not enough money in the country and not enough money in circulation with which to pay taxes. How can people pay taxes when they have not got any money? There is a lack of money. There is a shameful lack of money in this country on which to do business.

Do you know that there is not enough money in all the 15,894 banks of the country to pay the Federal Government interest of $756,617,126.73 for July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1934, and less so for our national debt interest for the year July 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935, of about $821,000,000, without even considering the billions of State, county, and other governmental unit debts and the huge private debt of billions of dollars? All the banks of this country hold in their vaults less than $750,000,000 of all kinds of cash or currency money. The actual amount on June 30, 1934, was only $713,968,000. This huge money shortage is a crime.

This money shortage causes virtually all our distress and it affects us all. Veterans of the World War must have their money, must have steady jobs and share in the general benefits everyone gets from increased circulation of money. Veterans and other citizens must have more cash to do business. The National Union for Social Justice demands more money. The Share-the-Wealth and Commonwealth citizens must have more cash if their programs should be adopted. Advocates of production for mutual use and service (the End Poverty Society) must have more money to circulate to make their plans successful.

The railroad brotherhood members want more money in circulation, as it means more business for the railroads and so more work. Workers' unemployment and social protective forces must be served, but more money in circulation is necessary.

Old-age victims, Townsendites, and others demand their rightful payments for the aged pioneers of our country. Home owners are hopeless without more money in use. Teachers, schools, and professional men and women cannot serve humanity well without getting paid and there is not enough money in circulation to pay many of them. All classes of society must have a sufficient supply of money. Only the wealthy have enough of it at present. Needy veterans, needy farmers, needy labor, clerks, professional men, school teachers, workers of all kinds, needy home owners, and other classes of society need cash.

The Supreme Court again found it necessary to reverse those national legislative policies which violate the Constitution. These policies refuse to let money circulate.

The President cannot legally control legislative powers that the Constitution gives exclusively to the Congress. These powers include the "coin money" power.

CONGRESS, THE PRESIDENT VIOLATE THE CONSTITUTION

Congress refuses to circulate money as the Constitution orders Congress to do. Both Congress and the President violate the Constitution regarding the "coin money" power.

Because the President refused to let Congress pay the full bonus to veterans—nearly 80 percent of Congress wanted to pay this debt—and because the President refused to let Congress circulate money for all the people, there has been much crazy, makeshift legislation forced through Congress to try to improve poverty conditions that are almost wholly due to the shortage of money in circulation. Emergency legislation, illegal and unconstitutional, can never take the place of the shortage of an adequate supply of money in circulation among all the people.

Congress said the N. R. A. would correct conditions that are due to shortage of money. It was declared unconstitutional and now the first N. R. A. is as dead as the "dodo bird."

The President is unconstitutional by keeping the "coin money" power. Congress lets him do this illegally, and Congress lets Wall Street regulate the value of money.

During the Seventy-fourth Congress the Supreme Court really ruled that nothing must interfere with the power of Congress to coin and issue money. Not even the President.

SUPREME COURT SAYS GOLD IS NOT MONEY

The Supreme Court, in effect, said gold was not money. Neither is silver. Nothing is money unless it is stamped as money by Congress, redeemable by tax revenues.

In the Frazier-Lemke Bankruptcy Act ruling the Supreme Court ended its decision in these words:

> Through taxation the burden of the relief afforded in the public interest may be borne by the public.

This means Congress should tax excessive wealth gained by deflating or robbing farmers and the public, to afford relief to the public "in the public interest."

Only by Government lending of a few billion dollars to farmers in trouble with mortgages, many losing their homes because of the adverse Frazier-Lemke Bankruptcy Act decision, and only by paying the $2,000,000,000 long past due to the soldier veterans was it possible to put money in circulation safely and quickly to relieve national distress.

Money-scarcity policies of big bunco bankers cause virtually all our hell on earth, our distress, and most of our crime and our poverty.

Only by long term and low cost lending of a few billion dollars to farmers in trouble with mortgages or other finances, on the Frazier-Lemke basis, and only by paying out and spending enough billions of dollars to the needy veterans as well as through all needy citizens, can money be put in circulation safely and quickly to relieve national distress. Every needy man and woman must be allowed to earn needy money.

DEBT-SLAVERY MONEY IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Congress must coin constitution money and stop debt-slavery.

Taxes cannot be paid with bankers' debt money, bondage money which constantly increases debts and taxes.

The annual debt and property-tax charges of over $20,000,000,000 cannot be paid with a small amount of money and that controlled by big bankers.

Big bankers really get Government doles, over $2,000,000 daily. Congress also prints hundreds of millions of money free for big banker racketeers—free except actual cost of paper, ink, and printing (less than one-thirtieth of 1 percent). Farmers and other citizens pay 1½ percent up to 10 percent or more for money.

Congress must circulate money for all citizens to earn. Big bankers must not be kept on doles with special issues of Government bonds and thousands of millions of interest payments given to the big bankers exclusively.

The refusal of the administration to circulate money freely has increased unemployment and poverty.

No recovery or national welfare measures for all classes of our citizens are possible without putting plenty of money in circulation.

The Constitution says that Congress must coin money and control money by regulating its value, for use of all the people.

The last Congress declared that the control of money, which had been regulated and managed by Wall Street bankers for 73 years, must be returned to the control of Congress. The Supreme Court last February sustained that decision, February 18, 1935.

Because money does not circulate freely debt-slavery exists today.

Debts cannot be paid because money is too scarce.

Mortgages cannot be paid without cash. People must have money.

Why does Congress refuse to let money circulate?

The people are tired of debt-slavery.

The people demand more money in circulation.

American citizens cannot trade with one another or pay debts because money does not circulate. But Wall Street bankers still object. They refuse to let money circulate.

It is impossible to live decently without money circulating.

There must be enough money for everyone to earn some.

Congress must coin the money. The Constitution says so.

Wall Street must stop coining money. That's unconstitutional.

Our money system has been unconstitutional ever since private bankers stopped Congress from issuing Abe Lincoln honest greenbacks.

Wall Street still controls our money system.

Wall Street took control during the Civil War. Wall Street has been boss of America ever since.

I believe Wall Street still runs our Treasury Department. Congress does not coin enough money for public use because Wall Street bankers object. Wall Street proposes to keep control of money for its own exclusive purposes.

WALL STREET BANKERS GET $2,000,000 DAILY DOLES

Abe Lincoln honest dollars are the only debt-free dollars the American people have ever had. They are the most scientific, safest, and best dollars ever coined. They are the only dollars that conform 100 percent with the Constitution. There still are 346,000,000 of these dollars in circulation, coined by Abe Lincoln's Treasury Department. These dollars are not tied to any bondage bonds and they do not pay tribute to Wall Street-allied bankers. Doles to New York bankers cost the people of the United States over $2,000,000 every day for interest on Government coined dollars that are coined for bankers almost exclusively, and for bondholders.

Money means life to trade. Much money means much trade.

More money means more trade and business.

Money creates progress. Shortage of money cripples, destroys.

Every Congressman swears to obey the Constitution.

Failure to coin money betrays the Constitution. Therefore Congress must coin money for everybody—enough for every State and all its citizens.

In controlling money Wall Street has always inflated and deflated at will to create panics and foreclosures. Wall Street deflated 200 billions of values in recent years.

Deflation by taking money out of circulation drops values and makes property for sale cheap on the courthouse steps.

Taking money out of circulation destroys homes.

Taking money out of circulation destroys family life.

Taking money out of circulation drives men mad. It is a criminal madness, and causes suicides, murders, and other crimes.

Mr. Speaker, America's people have been overboard for 5 years. Too many have been sunk, too many destroyed.

There is no hope for farmers, clerical workers, professional men, business tradesmen, all skilled and unskilled artisans, and labor so long as Wall Street masters control America's wealth.

W. W. Aldrich, son-in-law of J. D. Rockefeller, and boss of Wall Street's biggest bank, recently told the Senate Finance Committee it would be vicious to let the people have money. Aldrich's allies recently inflated and later deflated two hundred billion and grabbed untold hundreds of millions for themselves. To let the public have some of their money back now will be hell, Aldrich says. It may mean "a conflagration of inflation uncontrolled" by bankers, says Wall Street's agent. He thinks it all right to let Wall Street inflate two hundred billions to grab all it wanted and keep the public poor.

Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, the radio broadcaster, favors Honest Abe Lincoln dollars as proposed by the Nye-Sweeney bank bill.

Now, for the true idea of the greenback. It is the credit and property of the American people.

ABE LINCOLN GREENBACKS OUR ONLY HONEST DOLLARS

Honest Abe Lincoln greenback dollars are briefly described by Lincoln's Secretary of the United States Treasury who explained what they are in these words:

"What is a greenback? Did you ever think what it was?

"Why, it is simply the credit of this great American people put in the form of money to circulate among the very people whose credit makes it good.

"When I was Secretary of the Treasury the question arose, How should these vast armies and navies be supplied?

"How should the boys be fed in the fields, the sailors in ships, and provisions be made for their support, their clothing, food, and transportation?

"I found the banks of the country had suspended specie payments.

"What was I to do?

"The banks wanted me to borrow their credit or pay them interest in gold upon their credit. They did not pay any gold, or propose to pay any themselves, but they wanted me to borrow their notes.

"I said, 'No, gentlemen; this great American people is worth all of you put together. I will take the credit of the people, cut it up in the form of little bits of paper and we will circulate that paper.'"

Under our present money system the Treasury Department issues bondage bonds bearing annual interest, hoodwinks the innocent, and bleeds them for tribute. They are merely another expression of the sin of serfdom. They enslave the masses.

"National debts paying interest are merely the purchase by the rich of the power to tax the poor", said John Ruskin.

Much historical enlightenment on bondage bonds is given on pages11847–11848 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 25, 1935. Senator GERALD P. NYE, of North Dakota, gives evidence that our bondage bonds, now being increased, are plainly the international big bankers' method of extending chattel slavery by saddling the public with permanent debt. In this way they get rid of the responsibility that masters of chattel slaves were compelled to assume.

Bondage bonds and monopoly control of money are the cause of most of our troubles. Our Treasury Department issues bonds to private bankers. Then the Treasury prints greenbacks for the same private bankers. Then the Treasury authorizes the bonds to be deposited as collateral against the new printed greenbacks, printed cheaply at cost of paper and ink and labor. Then the Treasury takes back the new printed greenbacks, printed free of any service charge, in payment for the bonds. Also the Treasury thanks the big-banker bondage masters for the "privilege" of paying them interest and doles to the extent of tens of millions of dollars every month on United States bondage bonds that ought never pass out of possession of our Treasury Department.

This is a damnable racket. It is an "insiders" jobbery racket.

CRIMINAL WEALTH OF BIG BANKERS RAKE-OFF RACKETEERS

We used to hear arguments about the unlawfulness of depriving masters of their serfs. Now we hear objections to depriving bondage bond masters of their illegal, unconstitutional, ungodly interest rake-offs that some progressive men claim is criminal wealth—surrendered in the form of doles to big banker rake-off racketeers.

We are told that those who commit these evils do so "in the name of the people" and "for the true service of the people." Such lies!

Under our present system, without money men are in chains and shackles.

Without money there is stagnation, sorrow, crime, and distress.

Congress can cure all these troubles by issuing more money without interest-bearing bonds but with the gold and silver in the Treasury and credit of the people back of it.

Money in reach of everybody will rescue millions. More money will restore honest values on a normal basis.

MONEY DEFLATION CAUSED DARK AGES

The history of the Dark Ages, Mr. Speaker, can be written in one word, "Deflation." For a thousand years European countries were plunged into chaos by deflation. Money stopped circulating. Money was not understood. Men went back to barter.

Without money people could not trade. Progress stropped.

Chaos is here now because money does not circulate.

Men suffer all kinds of agonies when money is scarce.

When the Government permits money to disappear trouble begins.

When farmers cannot sell their products they stop buying.

When the farmers stop buying city workers stop working.

When workers stop working factories shut down.

When farmers cannot get money, factories cannot sell goods and workers cannot get work. This all happens because Congress lets the "coin money" well dry up.

When Congress will not let money circulate, then workers get laid off, factories stop running, and the farm products drop below the cost of production and go to waste. Farmers do not sell, workers do not buy, factories do not employ or produce.

The fault lies with Congress.

Congress must take action to circulate money.

Wall Street interferes. Wall Street seems to be the boss.

Congress almost let money go out of existence entirely.

Money disappeared because Wall Street seized it all.

The Frazier-Lemke Act to save farmers from foreclosure was necessary because the administration refuses to let money circulate so that farmers can pay their mortgages.

One way to do, the Supreme Court now says, is to tax excessive wealth and let more money circulate.

SUPREME COURT ADVISED INCREASED CIRCULATION

The Supreme Court finds conditions among farmers terrible, with usury or interest charges by private money lenders running higher than 6 percent in some cases. Wall Street bankers get Government-printed money for one-thirtieth of 1 percent. High charges for money are a curse to mankind.

Farm land values were beaten down 30 percent in 10 years up to 1930. Farm-land taxes were increased nearly 50 percent in the same 10 years.

Living prices and a decent income for farmers were beaten down so low that most farmers are tenants now. In Iowa nearly 3 farmers in every 5 are tenants, as revealed by the Iowa Year Book of Agriculture for 1933, page 213. In the State of Georgia 7 in every 10 farmers are tenants.

Wall Street deflated everybody and grabbed all the cash.

Our greatest troubles began when Wall Street forced America into the World War to murder men for profits.

After the war Wall Street deflated to rob everybody.

Europe's after-the-war deflation spread all over America.

Deflation brought back the Dark Ages.

Congress voted to circulate $40,000,000,000 for Wall Street bankers to win the World War for the benefit of the bankers.

Men were killed to make the world safe for Wall Street.

Ten million farmers were told to increase crops.

Every farmer was told to increase production.

Money was loaned to farmers to increase mortgages.

Everybody was told to buy Liberty bonds "till it hurts."

Then what happened?

Farmers were marked to be ruined and were plowed under.

Foreclosures began. Bankers conspired and organized a secret program. They agreed:

First. To foreclose mortgages.

Second. To confiscate homes.

Third. To call loans and drop all farm values and other values.

Fourth. To deflate and deflate until hundreds of thousands of farmers and others were wiped out. Deflation caused strikes, riots, bloodshed, hunger, distress, crime, and starvation in the midst of plenty. Until these conditions have been corrected there can be no good times or prosperity in this Nation.

The challenge and decision goes to the people who elect Members of Congress.

THE FARMERS HAVE BEEN GRANTED A SHORT RESPITE BUT NOT RELIEF

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, word came to the House this afternoon that the President had signed the Frazier-Lemke Bankruptcy Amendment Act and that means that the million farm homes in this country, now on the way to the auction block, will be saved for the time being. Without this act those farm homeowners would have been entirely defenseless and unprotected. Through this act, if taken advantage of by the farmers, the fatal sale day will be postponed, and thousands of farm homes in every State will rejoice tonight to know that for a short time, at least, they will be assured of their old homes.

WILLIAM LEMKE and his little band of Congressmen who fought day and night for this legislation can now get some sleep. It can, however, be nothing more than a little rest. The job is not finished. Permanent relief is the goal and along the way many more emergency attacks must be launched. Actual situations, and not theories, must be met and met quickly in order to prevent a million farmers from going on relief rolls, or requesting a share of the $4,880,000,000 appropriated to take the place of the dole system. In the drought area, where again this year the greatest crops in all the history of the Middle and Northwest States have been almost totally destroyed by black rust, we are met with the first actual problem. Wheat, badly rusted, weighing 40 pounds, and valued by the grain trade at 50 cents per bushel is now being delivered by the farmers to the elevators for market. The Farm Credit Administration has issued a ruling that 50 percent of the sale price must be paid over to the Government to apply on feed and seed loans. The expenses of harvest and threshing will consume the balance of the price returns, and the farmer will get nothing out of his crop to carry his family over the winter.

The ruling of the Farm Credit Administration in this area must be recalled, and the farmer must be allowed to save enough out of his wrecked crops to carry his family over the winter. The Farm Credit Administration has assured me that they will be lenient and considerate, but the actual facts are that this crop is now being held by the Government, by orders to the elevators, until they can collect from the farmers. The Farm Credit Administration promise one thing and issue an order for an entirely different thing. The country ought to know this, and it is my purpose to let the country know.

What blind business direction! To take the crop away from the farmer, who is helpless, in order to collect a Government debt; then after it is collected, and the farmer is left without means to sustain his family, the Government will have to reexpend the money to feed the family. This may be brain-trust business, but it is as short-sighted and foolish as it is unnecessary and asinine.

If these farm homes are to be saved and the occupants allowed to continue as self-respecting and self-sustaining American citizens, help of the right kind at the right time is not only essential but absolutely necessary.

In addition to this we must look ahead. To hold up foreclosures and refrain from collecting debts is all right as far as it goes, but the time will come when the books must be balanced. We should provide the farmer with a program by which he can refinance himself and at least see a flicker of light in the far distance that will eventually open up to him the clear daylight of a fair and just finance system. We must still fight on for the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill. Two hundred and nine Congressmen have signed the petition to bring out this refinance bill, but it seems impossible to secure 218. This refinance bill will be an important issue in the next campaign, and I am sure farmers will not keep up the program of sending Congressmen here who will not support the farmer in his program.

The greatest deliberative body in the world, the Congress of the United States, should never have rules that will permit a few men to thwart the will of the people. That was never intended by the framers of the Government, but through the unbridled control by special privilege the rules are made to defeat rather than support the popular will of the people. Before the farmer's fight to extricate himself from unconscionable interest rates and unbearable taxes is over it will be necessary for the farmers to change their system of electing Congressmen. In the past they have been elected on promises. Those promises mean nothing. Hereafter they should be selected on their records, made in or out of Congress.

The farmer, too, must cooperate with labor. Of the 38,000,000 who voted for the office of President at the last election only 21 percent of the vote was cast by the farm population. The farmer must unite with labor and stay united. In this Congress the farm leaders have stuck with labor through thick and thin, but the same cannot be said for labor.

Two outstanding labor leaders of the House refused to sign the petition to bring in the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill. Unless labor can send different leaders here, then the effort of labor to associate with the farmers in a united program will utterly fail. I am sure that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will demonstrate beyond any semblance of contradiction that the farm leaders in Congress have been fair to all classes and especially so to labor.

Fundamentally, all the farmer now asks for, or ever did demand, was an equal opportunity. That equal opportunity has been taken away from him through acts of special privilege granted by Congress to other classes. What the farmer's real dream is that some day all special privileges will be revoked and that all classes shall have an equal opportunity to live and prosper under a Government such as was described by Abraham Lincoln in his speech at Gettysburg.

RADIO REGULATION OF THE POWER TRUST

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I addressed the House on the subject of radio and the monopoly of the networks made possible by the refusal of the Federal Communications Commission to recognize the need of educational, labor, religious, fraternal, and other organizations being permitted to secure licenses to operate radio-broadcasting stations.

Evidence of the discrimination which is in effect at the present time was recently called to my attention by the Secretary of the Los Angeles Central Labor Union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. That organization has directly and indirectly sought to obtain a franchise to operate a broadcasting station in Los Angeles. A hearing was recently held before an examiner of the Federal Communications Commission and, strange as it may seem, the examiner demanded of the applicants in addition to other material, a list of the contracts of all advertisers who will purchase time on the new radio station when (?) the franchise is granted by the Federal Communications Commission.

No such demand, so I understand, has ever been made upon any applicant for a radio-station license, and it is my belief that Members of Congress should be conversant with the onerous demands which are being made by the Federal Communications Commission on those who apply for a radio station broadcasting license when such applicants represent other than members of the Radio Trust or the Power Trust.

The Massachusetts Federation of Labor at its recent convention after carefully considering the monopoly of radio licenses possessed by the networks called upon the Congress of the United States to correct this condition and adopted unanimously the following resolution:

RESOLUTION 45—RADIO REGULATION

Whereas at the present time the Power Trust, through its influences and control, now is in a position through its domination of the Radio Trust, namely, the National Broadcasting Co., to mold public opinion; and

Whereas the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System, which two networks dominate the radio-broadcasting field, organized company unions and denied to their workers the right to organize and to bargain collectively; and

Whereas while the Government itself is denied the right or the power of censorship, the Radio Trust exercises the power of censorship, in that nothing is permitted to be broadcasted unless O. K.'d by those in control of the various radio-broadcasting stations; and

Whereas, as a result of the diversion of advertising from newspapers and magazines to radio, not less than 40,000 printing-trades workers are deprived of the opportunities of employment at their trade; and

Whereas such conditions are detrimental to the best interests of the members of all trade unions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Massachusetts State branch, American Federation of Labor, in annual convention assembled, petition the Congress of the United States to enact legislation whereby the Government itself will exclusively control and operate all radiobroadcasting stations and that advertising on the radio be restricted to not more than 2 hours of each day; and be it further

Resolved, That our officers be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to Senators WALSH and COOLIDGE and to each of the Congressmen from this State, and that copies of this resolution be sent to each State federation of labor that they may do likewise.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the next session of Congress will enact H. R. 8475, presented by Mr. MONAGHAN, of Montana, which bill will eliminate the monopolistic control of radio now in the hands of a preferred few.

APPROPRIATIONS, FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present herewith for the information of the Members of the House, and others who may be interested in consulting them, a statement showing the appropriations made during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, together with the permanent annual appropriations which are supplementary thereto for the fiscal year 1936. This statement does not include any amounts for private claims at this session, a total which is not yet available. It will eventually not exceed $1,000,000, and for the purposes of this review is inconsequential.

The following shows in summary form by appropriation acts the total of all appropriations, whether they are payable from the postal revenues, the processing taxes, trust-fund receipts, or other special receipts, as well as those that will be a charge upon the general revenues. It is the total of appropriations of all kinds:

Total appropriations, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, exclusive of amounts for private claims, but including permanent appropriations

Total appropriated during the present session		[1] 7, 373, 179, 416. 65
Permanent appropriations occurring each year without annual action by Congress under laws previously enacted:[3]
Interest on public debt	$875, 000, 000. 00
Public debt retirement funds (from ordinary receipts)	636, 434, 000. 00
Advances to Agricultural Adjustment Administration (offset by processing taxes)	570, 000, 000. 00
Trust fund accounts	97, 522, 027. 00
All other	21, 235, 100. 00
Total, permanents		2, 200, 191, 127. 00
Grand total		[1] 9, 573, 370, 543. 65

From the foregoing table it will be noted that the gross total of all appropriations is $9,573,370,543.65. Of this sum approximately $125,000,000 is for the fiscal year 1935 and prior fiscal years, and the remainder is on account of the fiscal year 1936.

The Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 carried a direct appropriation of $4,000,000,000 for relief, work relief, and for public projects for the furnishing of employment. In addition to the direct appropriation, there was reappropriated not to exceed $380,000,000 from balances in previous appropriations for like purposes, and a further sum of $500,000,000 was made available from any savings or unexpended balances in funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The $380,000,000 from previous balances has already been included in statements of total appropriations heretofore made, and is therefore not susceptible of being counted again. The $500,000,000 made available from R. F. C. funds is kindred to a new appropriation.

The stated total of appropriations of $9,573,370,543.65, combined with the amount made available from the R. F. C. of $500,000,000, makes a total of $10,073,370,543.65. This is a large amount and needs analysis, so that those who look only at the aggregate may understand something of its purposes. Considerably more than half of it is for emergency and relief expenses.

Included in this amount is the total of $4,500,000,000 from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, which became a law in April of this year. Everyone is familiar with its laudable purpose. The amount is designed to take from the relief rolls and give employment to 3,500,000 persons and to furnish relief during the period that projects are getting under way to furnish the employment. It encompasses projects of every public character for Federal, State, and local government purposes, and is expendable over 2 fiscal years. A considerable portion of the amount is available for loans by the Public Works Administration to be returned with interest.

Other sums in this total of appropriations are chargeable against special receipts of different kinds. The Budget carries an estimate of $645,000,000 of postal revenues against which the major portion of postal appropriations will be a charge. Items totaling $97,522,027 of trust-fund appropriations are chargeable against trust-fund receipts. The sum of $570,000,000 for advances to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is estimated to be offset by the collection of processing taxes of an equal amount. Public-debt retirements from ordinary receipts automatically increase under the provisions of the sinking-fund law and such appropriations are estimated at $636,434,000. A special fund amounting to a sum equal to 30 percent of the duties from customs is made available to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to assist and relieve agriculture. It is estimated that this will amount to $86,913,738.59 for the fiscal year 1936.

Taking all these sums into consideration, there will remain in the total of appropriations after they have been deducted a net amount of $3,537,500,778.06 for all other purposes and activities of government.

For convenience the gross total and these sums are set forth in the following table:

[1] In addition to this sum for relief purposes, $500,000,000 was made available from any sayings and unexpended balances of funds of Reconstruction Finance Corporation and $380,000,000 from previous balances of appropriations.

[2] Of this sum, $96,913,738.59 is appropriated in the act amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act, consisting of $10,000,000 for eradication of tuberculosis and Bang's disease in cattle and $86,913,738.59 (equal to 30 percent of duties from customs for calendar year 1934) for agricultural adjustment and relief.

[3] Amounts which are indefinite in character are estimated as of dates prior to the submission of the Budget in January 1935.

Seventy-fourth Congress, first session

Total appropriations, including the sum of $500,000,000 for relief made available from R. F. C. funds		$10,073,370,543.65
Less:
Postal Service (portion payable from Postal revenues)	$645,000,000.00
Public-debt retirement funds (payable from ordinary receipts)	636,434,000.00
Advances to Agricultural Adjustment Administration (offset by processing taxes)	570,000,000.00
Trust-fund appropriations (payable from trust fund receipts)	97,522,027.00
Relief, work relief, and public projects to increase employment, including $500,000,000 from R. F. C. funds	4,500,000,000.00
Special fund for agricultural adjustment and relief (equal to 30 percent of duties from customs for calendar year 1934)	86,913,738.59
		6,535,869,765.59
Total remaining appropriations for all other purposes, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session		3,537,500,778.06

Mr. Speaker, the last complete session of Congress when the Republican Party was in control of all branches of the Government was the third session of the Seventy-first Congress. The total of appropriations stated for that session, including the permanent appropriations supplementary thereto, was $5,178,524,967.95. If there be deducted from this sum the portion of postal appropriations chargeable against the postal revenues, the amounts chargeable against trust-fund receipts, the automatic public-debt-retirement funds chargeable against ordinary receipts, and an estimated amount for emergency and relief, there will remain a total for all other purposes of $3,608,903,916.95. This sum is comparable with the sum in the preceding table for this session of $3,537,500,778.06.

The following table shows the total appropriations for the third session of the Seventy-first Congress:

Seventy-first Congress, third session

Total appropriations, Seventy-first Congress, third session		$5,178,524,967.95
Less:
Postal Service (portion payable from postal revenues)	$695,000,000.00
Public-debt retirement funds (payable from ordinary receipts)	468,509,905.00
Trust-fund appropriations (payable from trust fund receipts)	95,111,146.00
Emergency and relief (estimated)	311,000,000.00
		1,569,621,051.00
Total remaining appropriations for all other purposes, Seventy-first Congress, third session		3,608,903,916.95

Mr. Speaker, in a recent press statement my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] predicted that by the end of the fiscal year 1936 the public debt of the United States would be $40,000,000,000. On the basis of estimates made at the time the Budget was submitted in January last, the estimated debt at the end of this fiscal year would be approximately $34,000,000,000. It is my hope that it will be less than that. With improved business conditions in the country and consequent increased Government revenues and more employment and a lessened need for Government expenditure for relief from unemployment, I sincerely believe that it will not be necessary to expend all of the funds that were estimated to be expended for emergency purposes. To the extent that this is possible the anticipated deficit and consequent estimated total debt will be lessened. This same statement gave the total of appropriations for the third session of the Seventy-third Congress at more than eleven and a half billion dollars, a figure which exceeds the actual total by more than three and a half billion dollars.

The session just closed has been a momentous one. The effects of the depression and its consequent unemployment and paralyzing economic conditions are still upon us. Progress is being made toward recovery in substantial form. Large appropriations and expenditures have been necessary for emergency purposes. At the coming session the appropriations must be materially reduced and if possible the Budget balanced.

EMERGENCY RELIEF IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, while I have not supported all appropriations brought before this House for approval, I will support the bill no. 3140, Senate, for the relief of the Puerto Rican people suffering from insanitary conditions. This bill is opposed on the grounds that the appropriations will go to a mixed colored race and not wholly to a white population. This will be a reason for my support. The colored people of Puerto Rico were brought to the Western Hemisphere by white men, who have assumed the responsibility for their condition. And under our form of government they are entitled to every consideration which can be claimed by other classes.

I do not know the reason why we hold Puerto Rico, with their so-called "mixed and colored" population. But while we hold these islands we are duty bound to provide for the welfare of their colored population the same as other parts of the population.

This bill does not increase appropriations one dollar. It is only to make a part of appropriations already made available to be used in Puerto Rico. This is to provide relief from hurricanes, pestilence, and famine, and to restore conditions in the island to normal.

Ethiopia stands out today before the nations of the earth representative of the colored races, and, as a nation and people, commands not only the respect but is claiming the sympathy and concern of the civilized people of the world. It is the universal desire and hope that these struggling primitive people, emerging from thraldom and servitude, be encouraged, aided, and allowed to work out their own destiny as a race of people of the earth, free from interference or exploitation or the domination of other races.

Let it be said to the credit of the colored race, taking advantage and following the examples of others emerging from a primitive state, they are making greater and more rapid progress in the arts of peace and civil life than other races in a given time and are far on the way to a higher plane of life.

And this appropriation for sanitation, for the eradication of germ-infested conditions, and to lift the level of the colored race, will appeal to every philanthropic breast as a cause worthy and deserving, as an appropriation for other people.

It may have been a mistake for this country to have acquired and held jurisdiction of the island of Puerto Rico, but having assumed this obligation we cannot absolve ourselves from the duty by denouncing responsibility for a mixed or colored race. Under our form of government they are entitled to every consideration accorded to other people.

During the course of the depression it was generally observed that, comparatively, a less number of colored people are supported on the relief rolls than the number drawing relief by white people. In the sphere in which they live and move and have their being, the colored people are industrious and thrifty, they meet their public obligations with more than equal promptness, and their loyalty and patriotism is always above question and apprehension.

My grandfather was mobbed in Indiana in 1856 for preaching the abolition of slavery, for declaring slavery was the sum of all villainies, and predicting that the colored people would prove worthy of their liberty and freedom and of confidence, if reposed in them. For this reason I realize a pride of vindication in the industry and thrift of colored people and their progress and advancement made in the arts of peace and civil life.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, although we are in the closing hours of the session, I believe that the worthiness of the bill now under consideration should prompt its immediate passage. Let me call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that the present bill has already been passed by the Senate, after its introduction by Senator BARBOUR. At the request of the members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, I introduced a similar measure in this House early in the session. Since the Barbour bill to incorporate this splendid veterans' organization is now before us, I urge for it your full and whole-hearted support. This measure is identical with that which I introduced and its passage will serve the same purpose as if the House bill were enacted. As you gentlemen realize, this measure incorporates a group of veterans who not only served their country in battle but who were also wounded in the line of military duty. No possible harm can be caused to any other veterans' organization by the recognition of the courage and valor which the members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart have displayed in the defense of liberty.

Any arguments which I might make in defense of my own bill are equally applicable to the measure now under consideration. I therefore urge, on behalf of the members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, that the Members of the House support this bill, even though the President, with his usual attitude toward the veterans, will probably veto it.

CONSERVATION AND USE OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the world was made for all the people and not for a certain special few. Every child born into the world inherits a part of its surface and substance, enough upon which to live and labor to live, and which inheritance it takes and holds by a natural, higher, and superior title.

By this higher law, inheritance, and title, whenever by strategy, manipulation, or intrigue a few men obtain claim and possession of such greater and unequal part of the earth that others are left without sufficient ground upon which to live and move and have their being, then such man, woman, or child dispossessed has a natural right to appeal to the higher law, the law of nature and human necessity, and to maintain ejectment proceedings to vindicate and recover possession and claim his higher and superior title to live upon the earth, to breathe its air, to drink its waters, and eat its fruits accordingly as he is willing to work and labor.

This higher law and natural right to live upon the earth carries with it certain incidental rights, the right to labor to live, the right to enjoy the fruits of that labor, and all the wealth of the world for the happiness and well-being of man.

This is not only a beautiful world, with silvery streams and rivulets, with plains, valleys, hills, and mountains of varying forms and heights, with forests and different plant life, profuse, resplendent with colors brilliant and gorgeous, and all painted by the hand of the artist designing the glow and tints of the morning sunrise and the sunset hours, and the star-decked canopy of the nighttime set with a thousand jewels of the sky. But this is a bountiful world, yielding in great abundance, prolific of all the fruits, grains, and viands, and all the delicacies and staple food products for the use and enjoyment of man.

And by means of storage and refrigeration all these are held and preserved in pure and perfect consumable state, without loss, waste, or deterioration, long beyond their natural seasons. And supplementing all this, increased transportation facilities have brought the products of every clime within the reach and enjoyment of the people of every land. And if all was justly apportioned accordingly as men contribute their labor to produce and prepare for use and enjoyment, every man who is willing to labor and toil would not only enjoy the bare necessaries but the comforts, conveniences, and luxuries of life in plenty and great abundance as well.

But over and above the fruits of the earth the world abounds in latent powers and resources, lying dormant, awaiting development, waiting the touch of the hand of man to awaken forces and energies untold, all to be harnessed for the use and enjoyment of the inhabitants of the earth as a part of their natural birthright and inheritance.

The rivers and streams with their falling waters are a part of the natural wealth of the earth, inherited by the people born into the world and the blessings of which they are entitled to enjoy and use from the copious bounties provided by nature. The natural water powers and latent resources, the powers of the elements, and the natural energies of the earth are a part of the people's inheritance which they take with the right to inhabit the world into which they are born. And it is the duty of governments, it is the object and purpose of governments, in the exercise of their sovereign powers to conserve this natural inheritance for the use and enjoyment equally for all.

The conservation of natural resources means the policy of holding nature's wealth for the use and benefit of all the people, and will make every rippling river, every murmuring stream, every onward-flowing current, every rushing mountain torrent, every swelling tide of the sea a force, a factor, a power to work and serve the wants and needs, the convenience, happiness, and welfare, contributing to the enjoyment of men, and to make the earth a Canaan of plenty and great abundance, a veritable paradise of dazzling glory, of light, colors, and illumination, as well as for power and for useful service.

By science, discovery, and invention these great latent powers of the elements, the falling waters of the streams, the ebb and flow of the resistless tide, the electric forces from the air, the pent-up oils and gases struggling for freedom and release, held in the bowels of the earth, are all to be harnessed and controlled for the use and service of man, and are to be transported for distribution and apportioned to and among all the people by a network of lines and conduits carrying these powers and energies many hundreds of miles, far distant from the place or location of their development. And all these services are to be provided to lessen and lighten the burdens of the daily tasks of the people and to make the days longer for pleasure and useful occupation and to carry the daytime into the night for greater happiness and enjoyment of life.

But while laboring men and the toiling masses have largely contributed to this devolopment and to the inventions and discoveries making available the natural wealth of the world for the use and enjoyment of all the people, these developments of nature's resources, of the natural wealth of the world, are being scrutinized, watched over, and observed, not to make the services available for use free of the burdens of excessive profit and gain and at the lowest cost of production and distribution, but are watched over to be seized upon for levy and exaction from the people for sordid gain, profit, and advantage, and to burden to the limit of endurance the people to pay exacting tribute for the enjoyment of their own natural wealth, their rightful inheritance of the earth. Already the struggle is on for the fight to control the production and the distribution and apportionment of these great natural resources of the earth, made available for the use and enjoyment of man by science, invention, and discovery, and from which to exact from the people tribute for the right to use their own wealth, the inheritance rightfully in nature their own.

There was a time when the individual man was more assured and independent to live, to use, and enjoy the vital necessaries of life, a time when he could range the valley free, to gather and take the fruits of the earth for food, to quench his thirst for water from the spring, and to breathe the open air with freedom. But increasing population has changed all this and made his existence more and more precarious and more and more dependent upon his fellow man for some part of the vital necessaries of life, for light, heat, power, and water to live. This increasing dependency of the individual man has brought new problems before society, has enjoined new and greater duties to be observed and discharged by governments, and new and greater services required performed to assure and safeguard men in their natural rights to live upon the earth and use the vital necessaries.

The right to live upon the earth is not more vital than the right to take, use, and enjoy the necessaries of life. The monopoly of these vital necessaries, of the natural wealth and fruits of the earth is not only a restraint upon human welfare but upon the very right of man to live. In this advanced age of specialized industry and our organized social order these services of light, heat, power, and water have become a part of the vital necessaries which the people require furnished them to live. And they are entitled to their use and enjoyment as a part of their natural inheritance, free from the burdens of dividends and exacting tribute and at the actual cost of production and distribution.

All just man-made laws are enacted in aid of natural laws and to apportion the wealth of the world, the inheritance of all the people, out among men for their use and enjoyment. And to this object, purpose, and end, laws are made to enable the people to cooperate for their enjoyment and use of light, water, heat, and power, and for other necessaries and comforts of life which they can provide more advantageously by united or cooperative efforts under the form of their own local governments.

With the natural wealth of the world held free from monopoly by the certain special few, and conserved to the use of all the people, light, heat, and power can be developed from the falling streams of water and all can be carried and distributed to every hamlet and farm home in the land, all the rural population can be furnished and enjoy the same service for their convenience and comfort as the people living in the towns and cities, and at a cost low and reasonable and within the reach of every family. And from such low and reasonable charges under cooperation or public ownership, the earnings and income over cost of production and the distribution of service to the patrons, such surplus earnings and income have been and are now being used in many places to defray the expenses of local governments and to reduce their burdens of taxation. These powers and uses may be developed and these services may be distributed directly by the people themselves acting collectively under the forms of their own town, city, and county governments, or, where effective competition exists to safeguard against burdensome charges, these services may be properly provided by grant of franchise to private-utility corporations under ordinances assuring reasonable rates and charges.

WORK OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE, FIRST SESSION SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members of the House, I should like to submit a summary of postal legislation considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The following bills were reported favorably by our committee, passed by the House and Senate, and signed by the President:

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS ENACTED INTO LAW

H. R. 3612 (Public Law No. 249). To provide for adjusting the compensation of post-office inspectors in charge to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended

The purpose of this act is to permit of the adjustment of compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge in the post-office inspection service to correspond with the rates established by the Classification Act for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia, and will provide more adequate grading and salary, commensurate with ability and experience.

H. R. 5049 (Public Law No. 338). Providing punishment for forging or counterfeiting any postmarking stamp

This act makes it an offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to forge or counterfeit postmarking stamps or impressions thereof with the intent of making them appear to be genuine. The need for safeguarding postmarking stamps has both legal and philatelic significance.

H. R. 5159 (Public Law No. 317). To authorize the Postmaster General to contract for air mail service in Alaska

This act gives the Postmaster General authority to contract, in his discretion, for the carriage of all classes of mail in the Territory of Alaska by airplane. It will aid in developing Alaska and provide a speedier means of communication not only to the interior of the Territory but also between the Territory and the States.

H. R. 5162 (Public Law No. 339). Providing for punishment for attempts to obtain mail by fraud or by deception

Under this act the penalty for stealing mail is extended so as to cover attempts to obtain mail by fraud or deception.

S. 932–H. R. 5218 (Public Law No. 12). Authorizing the Postmaster General to extend certain air mail contracts for a further period not exceeding 6 months

This act merely extended the date in section 15 of the Air Mail Act of June 12, 1934, as amended, so as to give the air mail operators further time in which to comply with the restrictions upon the holding of air mail contracts on primary routes.

(NOTE.—The title to the above was amended by Senate Concurrent Resolution 10 so as to read: "An act to postpone the effective date of certain restrictions respecting air mail contracts.")

H. R. 5360 (Public Law No. 340). Providing for punishment for the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys or property

The purpose of this act is to bring within the provisions of the Penal Code the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys.

H. R. 5540 (Public Law No. 341). Extending the period during which no demurrage is charged on collect-on-delivery parcels and excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions

This act extends the free storage period on C. O. D. parcels from 15 to 20 days. It further specifies that no demurrage shall be charged on C. O. D. parcels exchanged between post offices in continental United States and post offices in the Territories and island possessions of the United States.

S. 1539–H. R. 6374 (Public Law No. 118). Relating to undelivered parcels of the first class

This act is to compensate the Post Office Department, through the authorization of the collection of fees, for the return of valuable letters and parcels to the senders.

H. R. 6511 (Public Law No. 270). To amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service

This act permits air mail route extensions up to 250 miles and an extension in the national air mail system from 29,000 miles to 32,000 miles. It classifies routes, directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to examine the accounts of air mail contractors and fix the rates of compensation, and provides for safeguarding the rights of pilots.

H. R. 6717 (Public Law No. 174). To amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932

Under this act the offense of mailing extortion letters is indictable and the prosecution maintainable at the place of delivery of the letters, as well as at the place of mailing.

H. R. 6990 (Public Law No. 275). To fix the hours of duty of postal employees, and for other purposes

This act is commonly known as the "40-hour work week bill for postal employees." It provides a shorter work week for supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, and laborers in first- and second-class post offices, employees of the motor-vehicle service, carriers in the City Delivery Service, and in the village delivery service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, clerks at division headquarters of post-office inspectors, employees of the stamped-envelope agency, employees of the mail-equipment shops, and cleaners, janitors, telephone operators, and elevator conductors paid from appropriations of the First Assistant Postmaster General, and all employees of the custodial service except charwomen and charmen and those working part time.

H. R. 7709 (Public Law No. 366). To provide time credits for substitute laborers in the post office when appointed as regular laborers

The purpose of this act is to give watchmen, messengers, and laborers in the Postal Service credit for time served as substitutes, so that when they are appointed to regular positions such substitute service may be computed in determining their proper grade.

H. R. 8790 (Public Law No. 322). To amend section 6 of the act of February 28, 1925

A $4,300 grade for superintendents in the motor-vehicle service is created by this act, and the former top grade of $5,000 abolished.

S. Con. Res. 10. (See S. 932 and H. R. 5218)

S. J. Res. 92 (Public Resolution No. 24). Making final disposition of records, files, and other property of the Federal Aviation Commission

The purpose of this resolution was to bring about the closing and disposition of all records, files, and accounts of the temporary Federal Aviation Commission following the completion of the Commission's studies and the making of its report to Congress.

One other postal bill, S. 1439, was passed by both Houses, but failed of enactment:

S. 1439. Amending the postal laws to include as second-class matter religious periodicals publishing local information. (Vetoed by the President.)

The purpose of this bill was to give religious organizations the privilege of mailing publications of local interest at the second-class rates of postage.

The following bills were reported favorably to our committee, passed by the House, and are now pending before the Senate Post Office Committee:

H. R. 1993. Giving superintendents at classified post-office stations credit for substitutes serving under them

The proposed legislation contemplates that all substitute service be credited to a station in determining the compensation of superintendents, their salaries being based upon the number of employees assigned to the station and the postal receipts.

H. R. 4036. For the relief of Ralph C. Irwin

H. R. 4450. To provide for the appraisal of the pneumatic mail tube systems in New York and Boston

This bill directs the Postmaster General to provide for an appraisal by competent engineers of the properties comprising the pneumatic mail tube systems in New York and Boston.

H. R. 5596. Granting equipment allowance to third-class postmasters

This measure is intended to correct the injustice and unbusinesslike practice of requiring approximately 8,000 postmasters of the third class to provide fixtures and equipment for use in the post offices at their own expense.

H. R. 5723. To give certain railway postal clerks the same time credits for promotion purposes as were given others who were promoted on July 1, when automatic promotions were restored

Approximately 550 terminal clerks are affected by this bill and will be promoted to grade 5 if it is enacted into law. It applies to those clerks who had earned their promotions but were prevented from being advanced in grade by the economy acts and later the Terminal Reclassification Act.

H. R. 7506. To provide for a stenographic grade in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service

The purpose of the above bill is to define clearly the position of stenographer in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service.

H. R. 7688. To provide for the appointment and promotion of substitute postal employees, and for other purposes

The bill has four objectives: (1) To give experienced substitutes in the Postal Service a higher rate of pay; (2) to promote substitutes to regular positions; (3) to give substitutes sick and annual leave; and (4) to establish fixed ratios between the number of substitutes and the number of regular employees in each office.

H. R. 7936. To adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes

Additional compensation for rural letter carriers serving heavily patronized routes is provided in the above measure. It also extends the operation of the savings clause, limiting salary reductions in the event of transfer to another route.

H. R. 8002. To increase the compensation of letter carriers in the village delivery service

The bill provides increased compensation for both the regular and the substitute village letter carriers.

H. R. 8369. Relating to laborers in the Railway Mail Service and motor-vehicle employees of the Postal Service

This bill is to protect the rank and pay of railway mail laborers and motor-vehicle employees who are transferred temporarily to another branch of the Postal Service.

H. R. 8730. To provide special rates of postage on reading matter and sound-reproduction records for the blind

The purpose of the bill is to extend to certain magazines or periodicals for the blind the cent-a-pound rate of postage.

H. R. 8869. To amend sections 181 and 186 of the Criminal Code

This measure is to amend the so-called "private express statutes" in order to protect the governmental monopoly of the carriage of letters.

The following bills were reported favorably by our committee and are pending on the calendars of the House:

H. R. 2793. To amend the provisions of laws relating to appointment of postmasters

This proposed amendment to existing law regarding the appointment of postmasters gives the Postmaster General the right to appoint an acting postmaster upon the expiration of the term of any postmaster.

H. R. 8541. For payment of compensation to persons serving as postmaster at third- and fourth-class post offices

This proposed legislation is for the purpose of compensating persons who perform the duties of postmaster in cases of emergencies and pending the designation of an acting postmaster.

In addition to the above, the following resolutions were acted upon by the committee and tabled by the House:

H. Res. 76. Requesting information from the Postmaster General.

H. Res. 81. Directing the Postmaster General to furnish certain information to the House of Representatives.

H. Res. 181. Calling on the Postmaster General for information concerning contracts for transportation of mail by airplane.

H. Res. 332. Directing the Postmaster General to furnish information respecting alleged violation of the postal laws by the Federal Housing Administration.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Monday morning at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, August 26, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

489. BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3470) for the relief of Axel J. Beck; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3471) for the relief of George Jacobson as father and natural guardian of Harold Jacobson, a minor, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3472) to provide a preliminary examination of Onondaga Creek, in Onondaga County, State of New York, with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3473) to amend section 601 (c) (2), title IV, of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

TAXATION OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9185) to insure the collection of the revenue on intoxicating liquor, to provide for the more efficient and economical administration and enforcement of the laws relating to the taxation of intoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR MAIL AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 204), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures authorized by Senate Resolution 349, Seventy-second Congress, second session, agreed to February 25, 1933, and supplemental resolutions relating thereto, is hereby increased by $5,000.

STATUS OF SUPPLEMENTAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it does not appear to me to be necessary to review at length the proceedings in the Senate under which the concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment last Saturday was reconsidered and the proceedings, by reason of which the deficiency appropriation bill was placed in a confused situation. My object now is to make a brief statement concerning the subject.

The House has adopted a second concurrent resolution of adjournment identical with that which was transmitted to the Senate last Saturday, with the exception that the time for adjournment is fixed as of this date.

A number of Senators profoundly interested in the subject matter of the controversy relating to the Byrnes amendment and the deficiency appropriation bill have been working since the recess today of the Senate in the hope that some arrangement might be effected under which it may be possible to pass the deficiency appropriation bill.

I stated on last Saturday that the Executive and some others believe it may be possible to carry on certain activities, including those pertaining to social-security legislation, during the vacation of the Congress without enactment of the provisions of the deficiency bill relating to that and other subjects. It is the general opinion that such a course would be attended with difficulties and may be surrounded with a measure of doubt.

It seems to me that a tentative arrangement is in contemplation, under which the deficiency bill may be passed, but if that cannot be done it will be necessary for the Senate to consider the new resolution of adjournment.

Before proceeding to any request relating to the bill, it should be stated that the Agricultural Department has announced a modified plan for loans on cotton. This plan does not contemplate any change in the method of dealing with the subject of wheat. It is to be remembered that wheat is in a different situation from cotton. The Government, as such, is not making loans on wheat, and it is my understanding that the market price of wheat is substantially at parity.

The arrangement regarding cotton, briefly stated, is as follows:

The plan recently announced, the plan which occasioned the controversy which now exists in the Congress over the subject of cotton loans, is to be revised and put into effect just as speedily as the machinery that is necessary may be set up. Instead of making loans at the rate of 9 cents per pound, the rate is to be 10 cents per pound, and the cotton producer is to be paid the difference between the sale price of his cotton, based on an average obtained daily, and the price of 12 cents. The effect of the arrangement would be to give to the producer 12 cents per pound. None will get more, the problem being worked out on the basis of middling cotton.

In order that there may be no uncertainty as to what may be expected, I shall read a memorandum which has been presented to me. This is the announcement by the Department of Agriculture:

The objective of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has been to get an average return of at least 12 cents for the producers of ⅞-inch Middling cotton. The plan announced last week would have obtained this result, but further study shows that certain modifications of this plan will make it simpler to understand and more equitable to individual growers, and will make clear to each producer, when he markets his cotton, the exact amount he will receive for it.

Under the previous plan it would have been possible for growers of ⅞-inch Middling cotton to receive, because of Government aid, more than 12 cents per pound for their crops and also for some to receive less than 12 cents per pound. The new plan proposes a loan of 10 cents per pound for ⅞-inch Middling cotton, and the total received by the growers of such cotton cannot exceed 12 cents per pound. It will make more certain the amount each grower will receive for his cotton.

Instead of making the adjustment payment on the basis of the 4 months' average of the 10-point spot markets, this adjustment agreement will now be based on the daily average of the 10-point spot markets. In other words, the adjustment payment will be made on the basis of the 10-point spot markets' average of the actual days the cotton is sold by the producer.

These adjustment payments will be made through the cotton year up to August 1, 1936. As before stated, they will be made to those producers who have cooperated in the adjustment program and who agreed to participate in the 1936 crop program.

This program of loans and adjustment of the 1935 crop will go into effect as soon as it is physically possible to set up the new machinery. The loan form will be available for the 10-cent loan during the week of September 2. This will be restricted to actual production not in excess of the Bankhead allotment.

It is my purpose to propose to recall from the House of Representatives the deficiency appropriation bill. It seems proper to state in advance of the request or motion for that action that a proposal will be made to reconsider what may be known as the "cotton and wheat amendments" to the deficiency appropriation bill. If that is done, the bill may be passed and returned to the House of Representatives, which body, I hope, will concur in the remaining Senate amendments and pass the bill.

It seems to me it should be stated that I have no assurance that all of the remaining amendments—that is, the amendments which the Senate adopted other than the cotton and wheat amendments—will be concurred in, but it is in contemplation that this may be proposed to the House.

Having in mind all the facts which have been stated, I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the deficiency bill passed the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I propound an inquiry to the Senator from Arkansas?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Senator if there has been anything in the negotiations today which contemplates the same consideration toward the producers of wheat in the Pacific Northwest as is contemplated for the producers of cotton?

I may say to the Senator that it is my feeling that the reason why the people engaged in the production of cotton are entitled to particular consideration from the Congress or from the administration is the percentage of their production which must necessarily go into foreign export.

We in the Pacific Northwest who produce wheat, which is a wheat of low standard, and who are confronted by the high railroad rate to the eastern market, must necessarily look to the foreign markets for the utilization of a great percentage of our product. It is my feeling that the wheat producers of the Pacific Northwest are entitled to the same sort of consideration as is accorded the cotton producers of the South.

I should like to know whether in the negotiations today the Department of Agriculture has given any consideration to that particular problem so far as the wheat producers of the Pacific Northwest are concerned?

Mr. ROBINSON. The subject of wheat loans already has been briefly discussed. As I stated in the beginning of my remarks there is nothing in the agreement as revised which obligates the Government to make loans on wheat. The practice heretofore has prevailed of making advances under conditions with which the Senator is probably more familiar than am I, and the market price of wheat is substantially at parity. The arrangement contemplates a rescision of the two amendments to which I have referred.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the rules of the Senate why does the Senator ask unanimous consent to recall the bill? Is it not in order to make a motion to recall it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly it is in order, but if consent is given, it will not be necessary to make the motion.

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I intend to make the motion if necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the deficiency appropriation bill to the Senate.

Mr. LONG and Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the motion to recall is not debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LONG. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until called to order by the Chair.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion also is not debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to ask unanimous consent to make a statement; and I apprehend that before the night is over that opportunity must come to me under parliamentary rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I think someone has a right to say what the announcement, as I understand it, amounts to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Georgia that the Senator from Arkansas has made a motion to take a recess.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; the Senator from Arkansas has made the motion, and I ask unanimous consent that I may address the Senate for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I withhold the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas withholds his motion so that the Senator from Georgia may make a 5-minute statement.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. SCHALL. I am wondering if the Senator will yield to me for the purpose of——

Mr. GEORGE. I am not yielding, Mr. President. I could not yield under the consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. SCHALL. I desire to make a request to have a letter to a constituent printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. That may be done later. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should be the last man in this body to object to anything that may have been brought about by virtue of negotiations undertaken today between the Senators representing the cotton-growing States and the President; but I must say what it means, and I shall say so without hesitation.

The loan of 10 cents, coupled with the condition that at the end or following each trading day the difference between 10 cents and the average sales price in the 10 spot markets, as outlined by the leader of the majority, shall be computed and paid to the farmer, means that the entire cotton crop produced in 1935 must go on the market by August 1, 1936. It is the shippers' bill; it is the shippers' proposal; it is in the interest of the cotton shipper and the shipping interests, including some brokerage concerns in the United States.

Why? Unless cotton be sold by August 1, 1936, there is no assurance of the continuance of the subsidy that is given the cotton farmer. What must I do, and what will I do? Sell my cotton, dump it on the market, break the price. Mark my prediction: The price will probably go even below 10 cents.

Who will be hurt by this agreement? In the first instance the Government, which now has 5,000,000 bales of cotton in the aggregate—4,600,000 bales, I believe—and on that the Government has an advance today equivalent to 13 cents a pound. The market will go to 10 cents, probably below 10 cents, and the Government will sustain an out-of-pocket loss of $75,000,000 to date, and 12 months hence an additional 1 cent per pound, or $5 per bale.

What will happen to the cotton mills? They will be seriously crippled. Their inventories must go down, because the price of cotton now is 10 cents. They bought it at 12 cents, plus the processing tax.

What will happen to every wholesaler and every retailer in the remotest hamlet of the Republic? Their stocks must go down, because henceforth the price of cotton will be 10 cents.

Who will benefit by it? The farmers, for 1935—mark my words, for 1935—but we are fixing the price of cotton at not exceeding 10 cents per pound for all years thereafter. Under an administration committed to an advancement of commodity prices by every device conceivable to the mind of man, we are crucifying our farmers, because after 1935 the maximum price is 10 cents per pound. We are giving the farmer, on his 1935 crop, 2 cents additional to the market, pegged at 10 cents by the loan, as a subsidy, that is all. The basic price is not exceeding 10 cents a pound.

Whom are we helping? We are helping the shipper; we are helping the shipping interests; we are helping the foreign manufacturer and the foreign buyer.

What are we doing? We are saying that everything the Secretary of Agriculture ever said, and everything the A. A. A. ever preached—to wit, that the agricultural-control program was not destroying foreign markets, was not building up foreign production, was not defeating our commerce in cotton—is untrue. Why are we doing it? Because now we are coming, truculently, reducing the price of cotton under 12 cents to 10 cents, admitting that we cannot compete in the markets of the world, admitting that we cannot meet foreign competition.

Mr. President, this proposal is in the interest of the cotton shippers, primarily among whom may be named Anderson & Clayton, of Texas; McFadden, of Philadelphia; and Weil Bros. We are benefiting the foreign buyer of cotton, because we are reestablishing foreign commerce in cotton. We are benefiting the foreign mills. We are crucifying the American mill, with its inventory based on a 12-cent price, not a subsidy. We are crucifying the merchant at the crossroads to the extent that he has any cotton stocks bought on that basis; and in the future we are crucifying the American farmer—make no mistake about that—because we are fixing the price of his cotton at not exceeding 10 cents, and we are thereby fixing the price of his land devoted to cotton production, of his livestock, and his machinery, and his implements.

That is all I wish to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the Senate take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I was in favor of and did everything I possibly could to secure the adoption of my amendment providing for the continuation of the 12-cent loan. The deficiency bill containing the amendment was referred by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Committee on Appropriations. I am informed that under the rules of the House it could be considered only by securing a special rule from the Rules Committee, which is impossible, or by securing the signatures of 218 Members of the House in order to force a discharge of the Committee on Appropriations, which is equally impossible.

Gentlemen in the House from States in which cotton is grown were satisfied, once the House today adopted the resolution to adjourn today, that there was absolutely no chance for the House to act upon the deficiency bill. The failure of that bill with my amendment meant the cotton program announced last week would be continued.

Under the program which had been announced by the administration, loans were to be made, not at 10 cents but at 9 cents. The effect of that program was that instead of the price going to 10 cents, as my good friend the Senator from Georgia fears, it would have gone to 9 cents.

It is a practical matter, and I think I am a practical man. The difference between 10 cents and 9 cents means $5 a bale. On 11,870,000 bales, the estimated crop, that means $59,000,000, in fact, nearer $60,000,000, which would be lost to the cotton farmers of the South.

By the proposed agreement that amount of money is certainly saved to the cotton farmers.

The contemplated agreement would do more than that. One objection I had to the program announced by the administration, and one of my principal objections, I expressed upon this floor, namely, that the little farmer would be forced to sell, as he is always forced to sell, within the next 30 days; that during that period, because the cotton crop was being forced upon the market within a short period, the price of cotton would go down to 9 cents. Under the plan that was announced on last Friday the farmer sold for 9 cents, would receive no bounty or subsidy until some time next year, when a mathematician would figure the average of sales between September 1 and January 1 and deduct that average from the sum of 12 cents. If the average over 4 months was 11 cents thereafter, at some time after January 1 he was supposed to receive a check for this difference of 1 cent per pound, making 10 cents per pound for his cotton.

Under the plan now proposed the cotton farmer will receive the difference between the average price on the day he sells and 12 cents. If he sells his cotton tomorrow, and cotton is bringing 10 cents per pound in the 10 designated spot markets, immediately after tomorrow he can make his claim for 2 cents a pound, or $10 a bale, for his cotton, and can receive it soon thereafter instead of next year. He will receive from the Government 2 cents per pound in addition to the amount received from the buyer of the cotton.

There is an additional reason for adopting the agreement. The Senator from Georgia fears this new plan will force the ten and one-half million bale crop on the market between now and August 31, 1936. It may have that effect, but under the plan which this proposed agreement would supersede, that ten and a half million bale crop would be forced on the market between September 1 and January 1. Whenever we can succeed in inducing a change of program so that the crop will be sold between September 1, 1935, and August 31, 1936, instead of being dumped on the market in the next 4 months, it is a vast improvement. It means that the crop will be marketed throughout the entire year. There will be a chance for the manufacturer who paid 12 cents for cotton to have the benefit that will result from a higher price for cotton if he happens to have an inventory at this time. His competitor will not be able tomorrow to buy cotton for 9 cents per pound.

There is an additional reason. All of us know that cotton must move to market, that cotton must be exported, that the carry-over must be disposed of. I have said heretofore that the Senators from cotton States have not urged the 12-cent loan as a permanent policy for the Government to pursue. If as a result of the proposed policy cotton should go to 10 cents and should move to market in export, as the crop is moved out of this country, cotton will increase in price and the cotton held by the Government will increase in price. But this is certain—and it is the benefit that comes as a result of this agreement—that the cotton farmer is going to receive the difference between what he gets for his cotton the day he sells it and 12 cents a pound. After all, our fight has been for the cotton grower, and not for the cotton manufacturer, or the banker, or the cotton merchant. Those of us who represent the cotton-growing States of the South know that the proposed plan means not only a saving of $60,000,000 to the cotton growers. It means that the cotton farmer will get 12 cents for his cotton.

For these reasons, and knowing that no action could be secured upon the deficiency bill, and knowing the plight of the cotton farmer, I determined that we could not justify ourselves in permitting Congress to adjourn and do nothing for the cotton farmer because we could not get all that we wanted. I thought it wiser to accept this compromise rather than to sit by and see the deficiency bill die and see nothing done to relieve the cotton farmer in the distressful situation in which he finds himself.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, what the Senator from Arkansas says about the Government in the past not having made loans on wheat is correct, but I desire to say that the hard spring wheat farmers especially are in a much worse condition than are the cotton farmers of the South, if it is possible that such a thing could be, and I think it is possible at this time. We have had a drought for 3 or 4 years in the hard spring wheat regions, and this year we had rust, and the wheat is below average. It is true that the wheat at the terminals is selling for a fair price at the present time; but wheat on the farms is not up to parity. The dollar a bushel which is quoted as the local price in the hard spring wheat States does not mean anything, because there is not any hard wheat to sell this year. There is no hard wheat raised in the spring hard wheat States which will sell for a dollar a bushel.

The wheat that is raised there is low-weight wheat, running down as low in some instances as 30 to 40 pounds per bushel, making it unfit for grinding into flour, and it can be sold only for feed. There are millions of acres up there the wheat from which at the price received will not pay for the cost of harvesting and threshing, yet the Crop Production Division asks for 50 percent of the amount which the grain brings to pay for the seed loans. We have succeeded in getting the Crop Production Division to modify that ruling and allow the farmer to pay his expenses out of the wheat which he sells, whether the farmer is able to pay anything on the seed loans or not.

However, Mr. President, if this seed-loan provision could be enacted into law so that the farmers with the light-weight wheat could borrow a cent and a half a pound on it, that would mean on 40 pounds per bushel wheat, 60 cents a bushel; and it would keep that wheat off the market. I believe it would enable those farmers to get a better price for the wheat later on when the wheat is sold if it were kept off the market at the present time.

Those wheat farmers are in just the same condition as are the cotton farmers. If 10 cents a pound for cotton is below cost of production—and, of course, it is generally admitted that it is—the cotton farmer is going to continue to go broke if he gets anything below cost of production, and the farmer who produces wheat, when forced to sell below cost of production, must also go broke. He cannot help going broke.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that the wheat farmers, especially the hard spring wheat farmers—and they are the ones who ordinarily produce the best quality of wheat from which to make flour—are getting the worst of it from this new-deal program. I will not say any more now, but will have more to say later.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, as I understand, it is contemplated that we are to have an agreement to make a change in the deficiency bill and that the bill is to be returned from the House and acted upon by the Senate. What, in effect, will constitute the change?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in effect a change in the plan of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the change of plan of the Department require the enactment of legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; as I explained before, it is done for the purpose of passing the deficiency appropriation bill. It is absolutely impossible to get consideration of that bill at the other end of the Capitol under present conditions. We might stay here a week, 10 days, or 2 weeks, but I satisfied myself that this or some similar method is the only way in which we can hope to pass the deficiency appropriation bill at all. However, whether we can or cannot pass the deficiency appropriation bill, it is my purpose to move the adoption of the concurrent resolution providing for adjournment, because I am satisfied that nothing is to be accomplished by the Congress remaining longer in session. Any Senator who obstructs the bill must take the responsibility.

THE M'CARRAN SILVER AMENDMENT

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. On the 13th of May the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] offered a bill to amend what is known as the "Silver Act", which passed on June 19, 1934. The bill referred to sought to repeal sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Act. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and by it reported to the Senate on the 1st day of August. On the 24th instant the bill passed the Senate. I had intended to address the Senate in opposition to the bill, but was temporarily detained from the Senate in a conference committee, so had no opportunity to present my views. The disagreement between the two branches of Congress concerning the deficiency appropriation bill and the imminence of adjournment now denies me the opportunity to address the Senate. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I intended to submit to the Senate, which deals with the bill offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The McCarran silver amendment leaves untouched the declaration of policy embodied in section 2 of the Silver Purchase Act that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver; and the amendment also leaves untouched the authorization and direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver whenever and so long as the proportion of silver in the stocks of gold and silver of the United States is less than one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks.

The bill seeks to repeal those sections—6, 7, and 8—of the Silver Purchase Act, and the regulations issued thereunder, which vest in the President and in the Secretary of the Treasury power to regulate and deal with transactions in silver. Such power is absolutely essential if the Secretary of the Treasury is to execute in an orderly way and in aid of the silver policy declared by the Congress, the obligations and duties imposed upon him to acquire silver under the Silver Purchase Act and if the true purposes of the act are to be effectively carried out.

The Silver Purchase Act is under fire from some quarters. There are some business interests, as well as various elements of the press, who are protesting against the program. It would seem that those who believe in the program have an obligation to prevent unnecessarily harmful effects from its further prosecution.

Leaflets recently issued by the Tobacco Association of the United States attempt to attack the entire Silver Purchase Act on the ground that it is an interference with our foreign trade, particularly in connection with tobacco and cotton. Nothing that Congress does should be permitted to give aid and comfort to these opponents of the silver policy. The sections of the Silver Purchase Act providing for the control of the international dealings in silver are vitally necessary to prevent the abuse of the entire concept. Their repeal at this time could only result in giving further ammunition to those who are seeking a complete termination of the Government's silver purchases.

Section 6 of the Silver Purchase Act authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to regulate the acquisition, importation, disposition, and exportation of silver and to require the filing of reports. This provision is comparable with the provisions of section 3 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 relating to gold, and section 2 of the Emergency Banking Act of 1933 which relates to gold and foreign exchange. Section 7 of the Silver Purchase Act authorizes the President to call in silver just as sections 2 and 3 of the Emergency Banking Act of 1933 authorize the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to call in gold.

If we would detract from the dignity which these provisions are designed to give, as a part of the monetary system of the United States, to silver, then we should vote for their repeal. The purpose of the Silver Purchase Act was to place silver in a position of equal dignity with gold as a part of the metallic reserve back of the money of the United States. The power of Congress to coin money and regulate its value is as much involved under the Silver Purchase Act in the provisions for the control of silver as it was under the Gold Reserve Act in connection with gold. The powers of the Federal Government over silver must be equal to its powers with respect to gold.

Because of the increased monetary uses of silver contemplated by the Silver Purchase Act, any tendency in the United States to speculate in silver or to hoard it would be inimical to the public interest, just as was the like tendency over the last few years to speculate in foreign exchange and to hoard and speculate in gold.

The only effect of the repeal of sections 6, 7, and 8 would be to benefit a handful of Wall Street brokers and the speculators in silver. No substantial interest concerned with the silver industry is adversely affected by the provisions of these sections.

The report of the Committee on Agriculture accompanying the McCarran bill states that sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act have operated to damage American shipping lines by reason of forcing shipping of silver to the London market, and to damage American insurance companies by loss of business to the London insurance companies. The fact is that American shipping companies and American insurance companies have not been damaged by sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act, but, on the contrary, American shipping companies and American insurance companies have benefited very substantially by sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act. If speculative trading in silver were to be resumed in New York, it would be necessary to make larger shipments of silver to the United States. These shipments would be made pursuant to orders for account of private persons. In accordance with the long-standing practice in the trade, such shipments would be arranged by London brokers and would be made on British ships and insured by British companies. Where purchases are made for the account of the United States, it is expressly stipulated that all shipping is to be done on American boats, all insurance handled by American companies, and all trucking done by American concerns. The result has been that for every 5,000,000 ounces of silver shipped from London to New York for the account of the United States $27,000 worth of business has been given to American shipping, trucking, and insurance concerns, a business which would be lost to such concerns if the speculative markets in silver were to be resumed in New York.

A total of approximately $1,755,000 of business has been given to legitimate American shipping, trucking, and insurance concerns in connection with acquisition of silver abroad by the United States. This is many times more than the amount of commissions that it is claimed would have been made by New York silver brokers acting for American silver speculators if the New York speculative silver market had not been closed down.

It should also be borne in mind that the price paid on behalf of the United States in the London market for silver is sufficiently lower than the price paid for silver in the New York market to cover the cost to the United States of shipping silver from London to New York.

Even if the New York speculative silver market were to be reopened and large quantities of silver were to be shipped to New York from abroad, the strong probability is that for at least a considerable period of time owners of silver would first ship their silver to the London market because for more than a hundred years they have been accustomed to deal with London brokers. The result would be that when the United States bought silver in the New York market the United States would be paying a price for the silver which would not only include the fees, commissions, and charges of New York brokers but would also include the fees, commissions, and charges of foreign brokers and dealers in silver.

The report of the Senate Agricultural Committee is also incorrect in stating that American smelting and refining companies have been damaged as a result of sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. Because of the slightly higher price for silver that exists in the New York market as compared with the London market, it is worth while for owners of silver ore to ship the same to this country for smelting and refining and for sale here. Reports received from American smelting and refining companies indicate that they are entirely satisfied with the working of the Silver Purchase Act.

The only persons who are injured by the provisions of sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act are the silver speculators typified by the Wall Street speculators and also the New York brokers who were active on the silver exchange which did not serve the legitimate industrial silver interests but was merely a speculative market comparable to the speculative silver exchange market more recently created in Canada. If sections 6, 7, and 8 were to be repealed the result would be that the speculative silver market in New York would be reestablished. The silver brokers, in order to make money, would seek to increase speculation in silver. Rumors about silver would emanate from Wall Street in increasing amount and high-pressure salesmanship, at which the New York brokerage crowd is so adept, would again be brought into play. At the same time pressure would be brought to bear on the Treasury Department to purchase silver at such times, in such amounts, and at such prices as would result in enormous benefits to such Wall Street silver speculators and silver brokers regardless of the effect on the Government's silver policy and the disadvantages that might result to the people of the United States as well as to foreign countries. The various rumors and the various types of pressure that would emanate from the Wall Street silver speculators and silver brokers would have the inevitable effect of hamstringing the proper and adequate administration of the silver-purchase program in the interests of the people of the United States.

The legitimate industrial users of silver and the American silver miners are in no sense injured by sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Silver Purchase Act. Adequate provisions are made in sections 6, 7, and 8 and in the Treasury regulations issued thereunder for the acquisition, use, disposition, and exportation of silver for industrial purposes.

Section 8 of the Silver Purchase Act imposes a tax upon profits arising from an increase in the market value of silver. This tax does not apply to any newly mined silver deposited under the proclamations of the President authorizing the mints to receive such silver for coinage. Furthermore, provision is made for the abatement of any tax arising from nonmarket profits, such as all profits arising from refining and processing silver. In other words, the purpose of the tax is to limit undue profits by persons who buy silver in competition with the Government for the purpose of selling it later at a higher price, directly or indirectly, to the Government, and not to impose any tax or restrict the profits made in connection with the mining or industrial use of silver. In the administration of the silver tax the Treasury has been careful to maintain this distinction marked out by the Congress.

One of the purposes of the Silver Purchase Act is to increase the monetary use of silver. At the same time that the Treasury is acquiring huge quantities of silver and adding the same to the monetary stocks of the United States it is important that foreign countries using silver as monetary metal should not be driven, as a result of our silver-purchase policy, to discarding silver as a monetary metal. Accordingly, the Treasury should continue to have the powers now given to it under sections 6, 7, and 8 in order that it may mitigate any unnecessarily harsh consequences to foreign countries using silver as a part of their monetary system. An example where this was done without in any way hampering the silver-purchase program of the Treasury was the order of May 20, 1935, prohibiting the importation without a license of certain foreign silver coin.

It seems to me Congress and the administration owe it to the country to see that the United States is not hampered or injured by a small group of silver speculators who are contributing nothing to the cause of silver. The Treasury of the United States must not be made subservient to any special interest, and particularly to those who have been relying on the Government's silver policy to add to their profits. This Government must demonstrate unmistakably that it and not the silver speculators are in control of the future of silver in this country.

No time could be made more unsuitable than this very moment to deprive the United States of the very weapons and implements which are so necessary to achieve the completed program for the rehabilitation of silver.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I renew my motion that the Senate take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The Senate reassembled, when called to order by the Vice President, at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with the accompanying papers.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1878. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.;

S. 2324. An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart;

S. 2364. An act relative to the retirement of certain officers and employees;

S. 3085. An act authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose;

S. 3204. An act to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes;

S. 3433. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases;

H. R. 3783. An act for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co.;

H. R. 6776. An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7858. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 7974. An act to withdraw and restore to their previous status under the control of the Territory of Hawaii certain Hawaiian homes lands now in use as an airplane landing field;

H. R. 8511. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8512. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8513. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton school district, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8516. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; and

S. J. Res. 175. Joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	La Follette	Schall
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Schwellenbach
Austin	Dickinson	Logan	Sheppard
Bachman	Donahey	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bailey	Fletcher	Long	Smith
Barkley	Frazier	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	George	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gerry	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Gibson	McKellar	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Walsh
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	White
Chavez	Holt	Radcliffe
Clark	Johnson	Robinson
Copeland	King	Russell

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of Senators, and the causes therefor, as indicated in my statement in connection with the last roll call; and in addition I regretfully announce the absence of our brother the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] because of a very sad event in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

STATUS OF SUPPLEMENTAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my information that, pursuant to the request of the Senate, the House has returned the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the amendments to House bill 9215 were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill ordered to a third reading and passed, be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senate is to be obstructed by a filibuster, if it is to be made impossible to pass the deficiency appropriation bill, I have in my mind a well-defined course which I shall ask the Senate to pursue.

I realize that at this late hour any Senator who desires to take that responsibility may accomplish the defeat of the deficiency appropriation bill. The reasons for passing it with the cotton and wheat amendments eliminated are apparent. I am not willing to contribute to a procedure in the Senate by which this controversy may be indefinitely prolonged. As already stated in other remarks to the Senate, it is clear to me that the only way in which the deficiency bill may be passed is by the elimination of the two amendments referred to—the amendments relating to cotton and wheat.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the motion I am about to make, debate be limited so that no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 5 minutes on the motion; and I move to reconsider the votes whereby the amendments to the deficiency appropriation bill were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate reconsider the votes whereby it ordered the engrossment of the amendments, and ordered to a third reading and passed the deficiency appropriation bill, House bill 9215; and, pending that motion, he asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to 5 minutes by each Senator on the motion. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in entire sympathy with the program which the Senator from Arkansas wishes to carry out; but I should regret very much to have us agree to adjourn tonight and make it possible for some Senator to filibuster and defeat the appropriation bill. I would rather that the adjournment be postponed, if that is necessary. I hope it will not be necessary; but, at least, I should regret exceedingly to see the possibility put before the Senate that the adoption of the adjournment resolution will bring; namely, that of defeating the appropriation bill. We can afford to stay here longer, if necessary, in order to pass the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am very firmly of the conviction that if the Senate is to follow the course which has been suggested it can do so within the time that transpires after the adjournment concurrent resolution has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we could; but it would make it possible for someone to talk until 12 o'clock, and then the bill would be dead.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am saying to the Senator, frankly, that I think the Senate should adopt the concurrent resolution providing for adjournment and that the Congress ought to conclude its labors today. Every possible effort is being made to bring about conditions so that they may be done without interfering with the administration of a number of laws which the Congress has passed. But I am not willing to leave this matter open, and have the House in a situation of having agreed to adjournment twice, the Senate having agreed to it once, and refusing to agree now, and incur the liability of having the Congress sent home by the Executive, under the constitutional provision authorizing him to do so if the two Houses cannot agree on the time of adjournment.

I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 40), which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Monday, the 26th day of August 1935, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Chair hold that the question is not debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT IN AIRPLANES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in keeping with Senate bill 3420, to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, and in keeping with safety in aviation, in which many of us are interested, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a letter of August 17, addressed by me to the Secretary of the Navy, and the reply of the Acting Secretary.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 17, 1935.

Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: We all deeply mourn the tragic loss of two of our most valued aviation friends, Mr. Will Rogers and Mr. Wiley Post.

It has come to my attention that your Department has been engaged in the development of an airplane control that gives improved lateral control when an airplane is at or near stall. I understand that this consists of a slot and interceptor and has definitely proved to be a forward step in providing a means of helping to avoid the incipient spin or nose dive that results from a loss of control, as often happens in case of engine failure at take-off.

I wish to congratulate your Department on its far-sightedness in the development of the above-mentioned airplane control, and in this respect I would like to assist in whatever way I can, in keeping with my general activity extending over two sessions of Congress, to contribute to the safety of civil aviation in this country.

I would appreciate it very much if you could see fit to release to me what pertinent information you may have on the subject above mentioned.

Respectfully yours,

PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senator from Nevada.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 26, 1935.

Hon. PATRICK MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In reply to your letter of August 17, I am pleased to submit the following information: The lateral control of airplanes at or near the stall has proven to be one of the most difficult problems presented in the development of this type of craft. A conventional aileron is effective within certain limits because of the variation in lift it produces on the wing surface in front of it. At the stall the airflow breaks down, the aileron becomes ineffective, and loss of lateral control follows.

It may be said that there is no general cure-all for airplane crashes. Loss of traction due to loss of power cannot be compensated for by perfect lateral control. If the entire wing is stalled, lift disappears, and the airplane will, of course, descend. If the altitude at which the wing stalls is sufficient and lateral control excellent, the airplane may be prevented from falling off until it is nosed over and flying speed regained due to gravity. This is not true, however, if power is lost close to the ground, when a crash is inevitable, although it may be much less serious if control is accomplished beyond the stall.

The Department has been concerned with the development of excellent lateral control because of its necessity in connection with landing aircraft on carriers. If good control is had just below the stall, safe landings may be made under the conditions obtaining in carrier operation. The improvement of lateral control becomes increasingly important as the wing loading goes up. The advent of monoplanes with the trend to heavier useful loads increases the unit loading and makes good control imperative.

There has been developed a control which makes use of a leading edge wing slot containing at the wing tip a spoiler combined with the slot. This spoiler is connected with the aileron and there results an action which materially assists the lateral control at the stalling speed of the airplane.

Sincerely yours,

H. L. ROOSEVELT,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

NOMINATIONS OF POSTMASTERS

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the President transmitting nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nominations of several postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of the several postmasters be confirmed en bloc without reference to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] for the immediate consideration of several nominations for postmasters? Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

(For nominations this day received and confirmed, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

AMENDMENT OF INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1994) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended, which was, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "or San Joaquin Rivers" and insert "San Joaquin or Savannah Rivers."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment? This is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a very brief bill, which simply amends by striking out the words "or San Joaquin River" and inserts in lieu thereof "San Joaquin or Savannah Rivers."

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND HIS RADIO ADDRESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD two brief articles in the nature of editorials on the subject of the President and his radio address.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Franklin D. Roosevelt is the hope of the American people. He saved America from impending revolutions. His recovery program is the most magnificent experience in human welfare this Nation has ever known. He will go down in history as a great American who patriotically, loyally, and unflinchingly met a great test in American affairs; just as Washington met it against the British; as Abraham Lincoln united it; as Teddy Roosevelt glorified it; and just as Woodrow Wilson met it in his fight for freedom of the seas.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is fighting for the salvation of the American Nation. He is engaged in the greatest war this Nation has ever known—a war to assure every man of the opportunity for a full and happy life, a war to save millions from want, a war to reduce crime by providing gainful employment to men and women who have heard their children cry for bread.

Any man who traduces the name of the great and good man who is directing the Nation's recovery program is a traitor to every noble instinct of Americanism.

Any man who villifies the name of the great leader of the American people in this crisis is breaking faith with the country that harbors him, feeds him, and makes it possible for him to enjoy the precious heritages of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This is a testimonial of faith in Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The American people looked to him in one of the darkest hours of their history. He has justified their confidence.

He has made marvelous progress in stabilizing this country.

He has made it possible for men who otherwise would be criminals and menaces to public safety to earn food for themselves and those they love.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is the hope of the American people.

So in this testimonial of faith in Franklin D. Roosevelt we say: "We believe in him, trust in him, hope in him—and love him."

GEORGE A. HADDAD.

MR. ROOSEVELT ON THE RADIO

Even the opponents of the President can take little exception to the address which he made Saturday evening to the convention of Young Democrats at Milwaukee. It was couched in generalities, thus provoking no criticism of special policies of his own. It was also nonpartisan in tone, and in excellent taste. The President spoke to youth everywhere in the Nation without regard to party—just as truly, he said, to young Republicans as young Democrats. The main point of his radio speech was that the Nation must continue to look to the oncoming generation to freshen and reform our public life, to improve our municipal and State governments, and to bring about still further social betterments. He urged the young men and women who listened to him to preserve the great and precious heritage which had come to them from the past, seeking only to enlarge it as they hand it on to their children, and not to destroy it, always clinging to sound and established principles while searching for new methods by which to apply them. The whole was an inspiring message to American youth.

Being a short one, the President could not stop to dwell upon the dangers which lie before ambitious young persons when they set their hands, as Mr. Roosevelt would desire them to do, to the work of political and social reforms. Self-seeking may so easily creep into it. One who is ostensibly striving to better the lot of his fellows may end by trying to better his own lot. He may profess the widest sympathies with the poor and underprivileged, while all the time comforting hmself with the thought that they have votes to be won, by means of which he may get for himself political power, offices, and salaries. Such things have been known in our political history, and we have only to lift our eyes to see them still with us. Those who do them we do not, as Al Smith said the other night, call false prophets. We call them demagogues and denounce their plans and promises as insincere and fantastic. If Mr. Roosevelt had had more time, he might have been inclined to warn his hearers against politicians who would throw over their personal motives and gains the cloak of public welfare and of humanity. As it was he left it to the youth of the land to distinguish between honest and unselfish reformers and skillful players on public credulity who think, by deceiving the people, to win prestige and high places for themselves.

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC SUBJECTS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Pennsylvania Bar Association; a poem, printed in the Northwestern Miller, entitled "Tired"; an article in the Butler (Pa.) Eagle, entitled "Democrats in Congress"; a short poem by John P. Coffin entitled "Americans Awake"; another entitled "When de Boss-Man Speaks"; an article from the Duluth News Tribune entitled "Olson Accused of Trickery", by J. N. Moonan; and a resolution to increase the price of butter fat.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TIRED

I'm tired, oh, so tired, of the whole new deal,
Of the juggler's smile and the barker's spiel,
Of the mushy speech and the loud bassoon,
Tiredest of all of our leader's croon.

I'm tired of the tax on my ham and eggs,
I'm tired paying toll to political yeggs,
Tired of Jim Farley's stamps on my mail,
Tired of my shirt with the tax-shortened tail.

I'm tired of farmers goose-stepping to laws,
Of millions of itching job-holders' paws,
Of fireside talks on commandeered mikes,
Of passing more laws to stimulate strikes.

I'm tired of the daily increasing debt,
I'm tired of promises not to be met,
Of eating and sleeping by Government plan,
I'm tired of forgetting the forgotten man.

I'm tired of every new "brain-trust" thought,
Of the ship of state turned into a yacht,
I'm tired of beating the courts by stealth,
And terribly tired of sharing the wealth.

(I'm tired seeing Eleanor on page one,
Of each royal in-law and favorite son,
I'm tired of Sistie and Buzzie Dall,
Nobody knows how I'm tired of it all.)[1]

I'm tired and bored with the whole new deal
With its juggler's smile and its barker's spiel.
Oh, Lord, out of all Thy available men,
Please grant us a Cleveland or Coolidge again.

PENNSYLVANIA BAR ASSOCIATION,
Harrisburg, Pa., August 15, 1935.

Resolution offered and adopted by the Pennsylvania Bar Association in annual meeting assembled at Bedford Springs, Pa., June 28, 1935

Whereas following the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, holding unconstitutional the National Industrial Recovery Act, public officials have made proposals for sweeping changes in our form of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, that no amendments to the Constitution should be made which would transfer to the Federal Government the long established rights of the States in matters affecting the lives and affairs of their citizens and that it is essential to the continuance of our form of government that the coordinate powers of the Executive, the legislative, and the judiciary be preserved inviolate; further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Members of the United

DEMOCRATS IN CONGRESS CAN RESTORE CONFIDENCE AND BRING RECOVERY

By T. W. Phillips, Jr.

Democrats, who give more than lip service to the platforms and traditions of their party, view with dismay and chagrin the betrayal by their chosen leaders of the solemn pledges of their party, made doubly sacred by more than a hundred years of its history.

The Democratic Party has always been the avowed champion of State rights, strict construction of the Constitution, and economical government. This trinity, at whose shrine millions of faithful Democrats and loyal American citizens have been wont to worship, is now being crudely crucified, not by its professed enemies, but by its supposedly devoted friends.

If only every Democrat in Congress would openly renew his pledge to the principles of his party and rededicate himself to the fundamentals of our constitutional Government in word and in deed, confidence would be restored immediately and recovery would speedily follow.

The following article by former Democratic Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri (a Member of the United States Senate 1911–29) published in the Pittsburgh Sunday Sun-Telegraph of August 4, 1935, is a clear and forceful exposition of how honest and thoroughly consistent Democrats feel about the betrayal of their party.

TAX SCORED AS ROBBERY—REED OF MISSOURI FLAYS ROOSEVELT RULE AS UNAMERICAN

Former United States Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, long an outstanding figure in the Democratic Party, in the following scorching comment on new-deal policies, calls the Roosevelt administration's tax-legislation program "robbery and a denial of the right to own property."

Written with his characteristic directness, former Senator Reed's article charges the administration in Washington with a policy of repudiating the American Constitution.

(By James A. Reed, former United States Senator from Missouri)

"The Government at Washington is not Democratic; it is not Republican; it is not American—it is an unholy combination of communism, socialism, and bolshevism. But it lacks the virtues of all of these systems if indeed any virtues they possess.

"He who conspires with others to overthrow by force the Government established by the Constitution is guilty of treason. He who conspires with others, by fraud or abuse of power, to destroy the Constitution is morally as guilty of treason as those who employ armed force. He who exercises a power granted by the Constitution for one purpose to accomplish another and different purpose is guilty of an act of usurpation. Particularly is this true when the act wrongfully sought to be done is violative of the letter or spirit of other provisions of the Constitution.

"The soul of the Constitution is liberty. Liberty is impossible if the citizen is denied the right to gain and keep the fruits of his toil.

"Our Government has no right under the Constitution to take the citizens' property except for the support of government.

"When, therefore, it is proposed under the pretense of levying taxes for the support of government to in fact exercise that power for the purpose of redistributing wealth, it is in effect a proposal for the despoliation of one class of people for the benefit of another class. It is the denial of the right to own property. In simple terms it is robbery perpetrated by the Government in defiance of the other provisions of the Constitution. The party indorsing such policies is not Republican; it is not Democratic; it is not American—it is a party of repudiation, revolution, and confiscation. The men who indorse such policies are not Democrats; they are not Republicans—they are repudiationists; they are breakers of oaths.

"Nearly every citizen at one time or another has taken an oath 'to support, uphold, and defend the Constitution of the United States.' Many of them have taken that oath often; Roosevelt took it I know not how often, but certainly when Assistant Secretary of the Navy, certainly when inaugurated as Governor of New York, certainly when he laid his hand on the old Bible and took his inaugural oath, 'I do solemnly swear * * * that I will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.' Every Congressman swore, 'I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic. I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same. I take this obligation freely without mental reservation or purpose of evasion.'

Constitution violated

"On March 4, 1933, when these oaths were solemnly and publicly pronounced, who could have imagined that the President would advise Congress to pass laws 'even though regarded by Congress as of doubtful constitutionality'? Who could have imagined it possible that within a few months the majority of Congress would be passing laws known to be of doubtful constitutionality? Who could have imagined the President and the Congress laboring to devise means by which unconstitutional ends could be gained by the subversion and misuse of constitutional powers? Who could have imagined the President of this great Republic sneeringly referring to the Constitution, which he had sworn to uphold and defend, as 'it belongs to the horse-and-buggy age'? A phrase which, if it meant anything, was a declaration that the Constitution was obsolete and of no further binding force or effect.

"The Ten Commandments are as true today as they were at the hour when they were delivered to Moses amidst the thunders of Sinai. What would be thought of the Christian minister or the Jewish rabbi who would declare that the Ten Commandments belonged to the age of sandals, or the age of camels, or the age of the Pharaohs, and therefore to be disregarded and scorned?

Americanism still lives

"I repeat these principles are not Democratic, Republican, or American. If they had been announced in advance of the convention at Chicago, Roosevelt would have been overwhelmingly defeated. If they had been announced by candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives in the ensuing election, these candidates would have been ignominiously rejected. The principles of democracy cannot be destroyed because betrayed by a single man, or by a group of Congressmen who 'crook the pregnant hinges of their knees that thrift might follow fawning.' Americanism still lives.

"'The Pilgrim spirit has not fled
It walks in the moon's broad light
And it guards the graves of our holy dead
With its sentinel stars at night.
It watches the graves of the brave who are dead
And will guard our rock-bound shores
'Till the waves of the bay where the Mayflower lay Shall foam and seethe no more.'

"Why talk of broken platforms when confronted by violated oaths?

"'False to an oath,
Then whether churl or king
Who breaks faith with his God
Is false to everything.'"

AMERICANS AWAKE

(By John P. Coffin, founder Society of Loyal Americans, Johnstown, Fla.)

Awake! Arouse ye sleepers,
Ere yet 'tis not too late.
Awake! Arouse ye freemen
For 'tis the hour of fate.

The very fundamentals
Which made this Nation great
Are broken into pieces
By those at helm of state.

Your weapons are not carnal
But with the power of God,
March forward to the battle
In path your fathers trod.

Uphold the Constitution
Nor let a word be moved
Until the thought is ripened
And has by time been proved.

Beat back the waves engulfing
The people's rights and powers
Nor never cease your watching
While still the storm cloud low'rs.

Awake! Arouse, ye voters,
While still the ballot's free.
Arise ye men and women,
The Nation pleads with thee.

Awake! ye patriot freemen,
And rally to the call—
Justice be your watchword
And right be over all.

The God of Nations aid you
In this your hour of need,
Keep place upon the ramparts
Until the Nation's freed.

Gird on your battle armor
For freedom, truth, and right;
May God of Nations aid you
In this most righteous fight.

Your flag will float unsullied
In liberty's pure air,
And not a trace of serfdom
Will mar its beauty there.

WHEN DE BOSS-MAN SPEAKS

(By John P. Coffin, founder Society of Loyal Americans)

When de Boss-Man speak to Congress,
'Bout that great big tax he ask
Say he never thought a minnit
Of dere rushin' to de task,
Den de Congress smilin' broadly
Took he word and pass de bill
Keepin' all de Noosanse taxes
From dere slidin' down de hill.

Now when dat fo' hundred million
He done thot were shore to stay;
He done shouted back to Congress
Now yo' make dose big 'uns pay.
I shore wan' dat big tax levy,
Pass by you 'uns P. D. Q.
An' I doan wan' any loafin'
In de aisles by none ob you.

Yo' jus' keep yo' feet a hoppin'
An' yo' tongues widin' yo' cheeks.
Else I'll keep yo' here a sweatin'
For de nex' fo' hundred weeks,
You 'uns ought to larn by dis time,
To obey when Boss-Man speaks
Else de chinery of Congress
Will need oil to stop de squeeks.

Be good boys and gib de billions,
Which I need for cigarettes,
Den yo' can go home till winter
An' can place yo' 'lection bets.
Den de whole worl' will be happy
'Cause we'll hab Re-cov-er-ree.
An' we all will spen' de billions.
Which taxpayers gib to ME.

OLSON ACCUSED OF TRICKERY BY J. N. MOONAN—DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN SAYS GOVERNOR GAVE LIP SERVICE FOR VOTES

WASECA, MINN., August 14.—Governor Olson's criticism of President Roosevelt rebounded today on accusations from Joseph N. Moonan, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, that the Governor had given lip service previously to get votes of the President's friends.

Moonan, charging the Governor resorted to "mere trickery to advance his own selfish ends", said in a statement that Democrats "are getting now just what they always received by dealing with Olson and the Farmer-Labor leaders."

As long as the Governor had "almost dictatorial control" over Federal relief funds in Minnesota, Moonan said, he "masqueraded as a friend of the national administration."

"When finally that control was taken from him," Moonan said, "after complaints of wide-spread extravagance, inadequate accounting, excessive administrative expenses, and the playing of politics with human misery, he turns to denounce the national administration."

Off-handedly criticizing Joseph Wolf, national Democratic committeeman, because he "led his followers" to support Olson twice, Moonan charged the Governor "posed as a great friend and supporter" of Roosevelt, but now "appears in his true light."

"Governor Olson's vicious attacks on President Roosevelt's program, and his public announcement that he has alienated himself from the administration", Moonan charged, "definitely discloses that the lip service he has given the President in the past has been mere trickery to secure the votes of friends of the President to advance his own selfish ends."

RESOLUTION TO INCREASE THE PRICE OF BUTTER FAT

Whereas the dairy farmers of Minnesota and other States are receiving an average of 25 cents per pound for butter fat, which is less than the cost of production; and

Whereas the dairy farmers must meet the increased price on the commodities and articles they must use on their farms and for farm operation; and

Whereas the tariff on butter is not high enough to prevent foreign butter from coming to the markets of the United States in competition with locally produced butter; and

Whereas oleomargarine is being sold in active competition to the sale of butter: Be it hereby

Resolved, That the tariff on butter be increased and a tax on oleomargarine be levied sufficiently high so that a minimum price of 35 cents per pound be established on butter at the production centers of dairy farmers; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be mailed to our Representatives and Senators at Congress.

RABBIT LAKE FARM BUREAU UNIT,
ARTHUR FELLERMAN, Secretary,
Crow Wing County, Aitkin, Minn., Route 3.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I also ask leave to print in the RECORD a letter bearing the name of the former Governor of North Dakota, Mr. Langer. The letter speaks for itself. If such things can happen to the Governor of one of our great independent States, what will happen to the common, ordinary man who gets in the way of the "raw deal"?

The letter well might have been written by a subject of Russia instead of the Governor of one of our independent States, and seems to me to be well worth a congressional investigation; and if I find, upon further study of the matter, facts to warrant the statements contained in it, I shall introduce a resolution at the next session.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BISMARCK, N. DAK., August 21, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHALL: I have your letter of recent date in which you make inquiry as to the facts pertaining to the trial of the United States Government against myself and others.

As Governor of this State at no time did I have anything to do with the actual administration of relief in this State. Nor did I ever at any time in any way, shape, or form handle any of the funds that were sent into this State by the Federal Government for the purpose of relief; that I was sick in the hospital early in January 1933 when a representative of the Federal Reconstruction Corporation called upon me relative to relief matters in North Dakota. I at that time informed him I could not personally handle the same, but I agreed to appoint a committee which would have their whole-hearted approval, and later did appoint a committee, which committee received the approval of their representative, Mr. Ewing. The committee I appointed was composed of chief justice of the North Dakota Supreme Court, A. M. Christianson; Mr. R. M. Stangler, manager of the Bank of North Dakota; Mrs. Minnie Craig, speaker of the house of representatives; Arthur M. Thompson, State superintendent of public instruction; and Lee R. Nichols, who had served Morton County as county auditor for nearly 20 years. Two members of this committee were people of my own political faith, two were politically opposed to me, and one was neutral. The only capacity in which I acted in relief matters in North Dakota was to sign the requisitions as they were made up, and to endorse checks which the committee brought to me for my endorsement as Governor, and which they immediately took back with them to their relief office. At the time I appointed this committee I had a thorough understanding with them that they must assume full responsibility, and that they would have the full handling of all relief matters in the State of North Dakota, and I never at any time made any suggestions or interfered in any way whatsoever with the activities of this committee.

I was removed as technical administrator of relief in North Dakota by Mr. Harry L. Hopkins without being given even the courtesy of a hearing, and to this day I have never been allowed the privilege to be heard. When rumors were first circulated in this State that I was about to be indicted, there was a grand jury in session at the time in the city of Fargo, N. Dak. Instead of presenting any evidence they may have had to that particular Federal grand jury, the United States district attorney, the new-deal appointee of James Aloysius Farley, impaneled a special grand jury to present their evidence in my case to.

When the names of the Federal grand jury panel were announced I was shocked to learn the panel was composed entirely of deadly political enemies as well as my personal enemies. I wired Federal Judge Andrew Miller, expressing a desire to appear personally before the grand jury, but to this telegram I never received a reply.

The grand jury indicted me and others and my case was tried in Federal district court, starting on the 22d day of May 1934, and I was convicted on June 17, 1934. Senator, please bear in mind that this trial was so timed by the Democratic district attorney that it took place during the time of our primary campaign, and I was unable, except for a very few days, to enter into the campaign. I was, however, nominated for the office of Governor on the Republican ticket by the largest majority ever given a Governor in the history of this State.

After the conviction in the Federal district court, I immediately appealed my case, as well as the other defendants, to the circuit court of appeals in St. Louis, being represented in my circuit court of appeals case by Francis Murphy, attorney at law, of Fargo, N. Dak. In May of this present year the circuit court of appeals, by unanimous decision, reversed the decision of the lower court, the circuit court opinion being written by Federal Judge A. K. Gardner. In the written opinion of the circuit court of appeals they state emphatically that there was not one iota of evidence of a violation of a Federal statute, and the court even went further and said there was no evidence and, in their opinion, no violation of a State statute.

I was removed from the office of the Governorship by a 4 to 1 decision of our North Dakota Supreme Court, which court is composed of 5 judges. Two of these judges, Judge Burr and Judge

Neuessle, were running for reelection and had been endorsed by Farley's new-deal party in North Dakota. The third member of the supreme court who voted for my removal was John Burke, former Democratic Governor of this State and Treasurer of the United States under Woodrow Wilson, and whose son, Thomas Burke, was one of the campaign managers for the new deal's candidate for Governor in the State of North Dakota who was running against me. Judge George Moelring, now deceased, and who had served the State of North Dakota as a district judge for years, filed a scathing dissenting opinion.

The facts pertaining to the trial itself are these: The United States district attorney, who is a thorough Farleyite, and whose appointment had not yet been confirmed by the United States Senate, absolutely refused to submit to my attorneys or the attorneys for any of the defendants a list of the jury panel that was to try me until 10 o'clock the morning that my trial opened. To my surprise, when I was handed a list of the jury panel from which we were compelled to select 12 men to try me, I found that without exception the panel was composed of men who were bitter political and personal enemies of mine. It was just a case, Senator, of trying to pick 12 good eggs out of a basket of rotten ones. For example, a man by the name of John Jones, who sat on the jury which tried me, was running for the legislature in Ramsey County, N. Dak., on a ticket which was politically antagonistic to me, and this gentleman was endorsed for this office by the Farleyites in North Dakota. The records of the secretary of state of the State of North Dakota will confirm this fact. Then, there was a man by the name of L. C. Huelett, of Mandan, N. Dak., who was an active officer in the Security Credit Co., of Mandan, N. Dak., whose company I had just 2 or 3 weeks previous to my trial, as chairman of the North Dakota Securities Commission, temporarily ordered suspended from doing business in this State pending a hearing, and which matter was still pending when Mr. Huelett sat as a juror in my case. I had ordered their company, of which this gentleman was an officer, to pay back thousands and thousands of dollars to the farmers of this State, which the said security company had refused to do. Then, there was another party by the name of Brady, who is in the automobile business in the city of Fargo. During my term as Governor I had enacted into law a statute prohibiting usury in connection with the sale of automobiles on sales contracts. Mr. Brady later headed a group of men who started a court action to have this law declared unconstitutional. Yet he was allowed to sit on the jury which tried me. A man by the name of Lester T. Crist sat on the jury as one of my peers, and he in the last few weeks was arrested and plead guilty in district court on a felony charge in the State of North Dakota. I have affidavits in my possession from the law-enforcing officer of this State that this man was allowing his place of business to be used for immoral purposes by young girls and boys of tender years.

This will give you somewhat of an idea, Senator, of the caliber of the jury that was selected to try me. Upon the insistence of the United States district attorney the defense attorneys were not allowed to question the jurors as to their qualifications. I could go on indefinitely and take each one of the jurors, and without exception the panel was made up of men who were bitter political and personal enemies of mine, which could not have been brought about in any other way than through the careful manipulation of the United States district attorney in cooperation with the United States marshal's office, all being directed under the leadership of James Aloysius Farley. Upon the insistence of the United States district attorney the court bailiffs were instructed to install a radio in the jury room, and on the 6th day of June Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, whose resignation I had demanded in a resolution which was adopted at the National Farmers' Holiday Convention, attended by some 10,000 farmers, and which resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote, felt a very sudden urge to come to the city of Bismarck and deliver a talk over the radio, attacking, by insinuation, all those opposed to his asinine agricultural program, and which talk the jury was allowed to listen to in their jury room.

As you know, Senator, I was one of the one or two Republican Governors elected in the 42 States which President Roosevelt carried in 1932, and I have bitterly opposed the program of the new-deal administration, as it was then and as it is being continued, and as a member of a committee of Governors I called on President Roosevelt and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in Washington, and in no uncertain terms I protested to them against their policy of destruction of grain crops, of beef and hogs, and other agricultural foodstuffs in these United States, while at the same time they were allowing to be imported into these United States millions of bushels of wheat, rye, oats, and barley, millions of pounds of beef, and butter, and eggs, and other agricultural products to compete with the American farmers.

Immediately upon my return to North Dakota after this conference at Washington the Federal Government sent a number of detectives and auditors, spending thousands of dollars, all working under the direction of James Aloysius Farley. These auditors and detectives went over every act of my administration with a fine-tooth comb in a desperate attempt to get something on a Republican Governor; and after spending over $100,000 the only thing they could find was where a young boy had gone into the State emergency relief office and solicited some $75 or $80 for subscriptions to the Republican newspaper called "The Leader", and whose owner and publisher is one O. E. Erickson, chairman of the Republican State central committee.

These Federal operators—with the full approval of the Postmaster General and the Department of the Interior—tapped the telephone wires to the Governor's mansion and to the Governor's office; they opened my mail addressed to the Governor of a sovereign State and photographed the same. They opened telegrams and photographed the same, addressed to me as the Governor of North Dakota. In fact, they resorted to every means possible to endeavor to get something on me.

Then, under the direction of James A. Farley, they revoked the second-class mailing permit of the Republican newspaper, the Leader, without complaint of any sort and without a hearing. This whole lawsuit, Senator, was started by a bureaucratic, dictatorial administration in Washington under the guidance of Tammany Farley, because they found a Republican Governor would not bend his knees, nor would he give up the constitutional, inherited rights which this sovereign State possesses.

I know somewhat of the persecution which you have gone through yourself, and the people of this State will be mighty, mighty grateful to you if you can in some way cause a senatorial investigation to be made of the trial against me and the other defendants. I am positive that if the true facts are unearthed, with what has already come to light, the whole deal will smell to the high heavens, and the citizens of this Nation ought to know what sort of autocratic tyrants have, under false pretenses, taken possession of their Government and are seeking to repress, subvert, and destroy any opposition or means by which the people can come to know what they are doing to their Republic.

I will send you testimony sworn to by Congressman USHER L. BURDICK before a house investigation committee of the North Dakota State Legislature, and I particularly want to call your attention to that part of Congressman BURDICK's testimony relative to a conversation he had with the United States marshal, Osmund Gunvaldson, wherein Gunvaldson said they would get me if it was the last thing they did, and that they had the cooperation of the Democratic administration in doing this. This testimony is corroborated by one H. C. Schumacker.

I will send you also other affidavits and testimony which are very material to this case to show the depths to which the new-deal administration, under Jim Farley, went to in a desperate attempt to railroad a Republican Governor to the penitentiary; but I thank God we still have courts in this country which believe in upholding the Constitution of the United States as well as the laws of the land and that we still have courts which cannot be browbeaten or bribed into doing the will of this new-deal dictator now in Washington; but if this new deal, so called, is allowed to continue to appoint courts whose appointees are selected by James Aloysius Farley, the safety and rights and liberties of the citizens of this great country can no longer be guaranteed. The people of my State will deeply appreciate and will cooperate with you in seeing that this rotten mess is brought to the light.

With my kindest personal wishes for your continued success, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM LANGER.

A CONSTITUTION FOR CORPORATIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] delivered a very interesting address, August 25, 1935, over the radio in connection with the subject matter covered by an important bill which he introduced, Senate bill 3363, a bill to insure domestic tranquillity and to promote the general welfare by regulating and promoting commerce with foreign nations and among the States in commodities and industrial articles, to regulate the flow of such commerce, to prescribe the conditions under which corporations may engage in such commerce, to provide for the formation of corporations to engage in such commerce, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the bill is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a bill to provide, among other things, for the licensing of corporations doing business in interstate commerce.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Do you remember the story of the aged Isaac and his two sons, Esau, the beloved first-born, and Jacob, whom his mother, Rebecca, taught to dissemble that he might receive the blessing intended for his elder brother?

His hands covered with the skin of a goat so that the blind patriarch might mistake him for the hairy Esau, Jacob approached his father's bedside. "The voice is the voice of Jacob", said the old man, "but the hands are the hands of Esau." And Jacob, who had already traded his more simple brother out of his birthright, received the blessing that Isaac wanted to bestow upon Esau.

Today managers of great corporations, financiers who have already traded the States out of their economic birthright, which is the power to regulate corporate commerce, are playing the role of Jacob before the American people. Arrayed in the habiliments of defenders of the Constitution, they seek the blessing of the people that they may resume complete, unregulated, and irresponsible sway over the economic fortunes of America. The voice is the voice of Monopoly, though the hand seems to be the hand of the constitutional fathers.

MONOPOLY DEFENDS THE CONSTITUTION

From the headquarters of many a corporate giant there is pouring over the land an incongruous flood of literature in defense of popular rights. The president of a great nationally known corporation, the parent of a numerous progeny of affiliates and subsidiaries, doing business in every village and hamlet, only a few weeks ago sent a letter to every one of his four-hundred-and-fifteen-thousand-odd stockholders attacking a recent act of Congress and implying that the interests of the small stockholder are being put in jeopardy at Washington. The president of a powerful New York bank is sending copies of the Constitution to his stockholders and customers, telling them that legislation by representation is the heritage of all Americans and implying that the principle of popular government is somehow being endangered by the National Government.

In like manner, other captains of commerce and industry are raising the banner of the Constitution. Employees, stockholders, and the public generally are asked to believe that the foundations of our American system are being undermined by those who would rescue the people of America from the economic despotism which during a generation has driven 70 percent of our population below the poverty line though the general wealth of the Nation has been steadily increasing all the time. A great campaign is underway to reestablish, not the freedom of the individual, but the freedom of corporate monopolies to control the economic resources of the United States.

The Constitution of our country was drafted in 1787 to establish and perpetuate free popular government. How much popular government exists today with respect to the huge corporate agencies that dominate the economic life of this Nation? How much control does the public exercise over them? How much control do their own stockholders exercise over them? Every person who hears my voice knows that the principles of self-government upon which our political system is based have little or no application in the modern corporate economic system by which are carried on the industry and commerce that affect the happiness and prosperity of 125,000,000 people.

CORPORATE SYSTEM A MODERN FEUDALISM

I am perfectly well aware of the fact that the great majority of the officers and directors of American corporations are sincere, able, and patriotic men. I know that most of the stockholders and employees are likewise inspired by the highest motives and that they desire not only justice for themselves, their associates, and their customers, but also the maintenance of all the traditions of popular government and liberty which have made ours the greatest Nation of all times. I know that the corporate system has been and will continue to be an indispensable factor in the development of our country. But the fact remains that it is governed by the principles of feudalism, not by the principles of democracy.

If you are a stockholder in any national corporation engaged in national commerce, let me ask you what voice or representation you have on the board of directors of the corporation in which you have invested your savings. The answer, unless you are yourself a member of the board, is, none; and this is true whether you own voting stock or nonvoting stock, preferred stock or bonds; you are actually without representation in the corporation to which you have committed your fortunes. You have entrusted your capital to men whom you do not know and who, though they are in fact your employees, you cannot discharge or even direct.

Under the present corporate system you must act entirely upon faith. I freely acknowledge that in most instances this faith is wholly justified, but the managers of your corporation may, if they choose, use your money for their own personal advantage. They may, if they choose, use for wholly selfish purposes the tremendous economic power that has been placed in their hands through the investments of hundreds of thousands of trusting citizens. You have nothing in the world to say about it. You are absolutely at their mercy. The employees of these far-flung economic institutions, men and women who are numbered in the millions, are equally helpless though, unlike the stockholder who invests money, they have invested their very lives.

This, then, is the fact to which we cannot close our eyes, that neither stockholders nor employees nor the public at large have had any effective protection under our present corporate system. This is not because the power is lacking or because the need of establishing what might be called a national constitution for national corporations has not been recognized. It is solely because, though urged to do so for a generation by the ablest statesmen and jurists, Congress has not exercised the power which the Constitution unquestionably gives it to regulate national commerce in the public interest.

NATIONAL CONTROL FOR NATIONAL COMMERCE

We shall fail to understand this problem unless we keep constantly in mind the fact that when the Constitution was drafted there were no national industrial and commercial corporations. They are the product of the last 70 or 80 years. We have never had a national incorporation law, though a quarter of a century ago, in a special message to Congress, a president—William Howard Taft—who later became a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, urged one. Because we have had no such law, the corporations which shape the economic life of the whole people came into existence under charters granted by the several States under local and special laws. A corporation which receives its existence from Delaware or New Jersey under a charter which increases the powers of management to the highest degree and reduces its responsibility to the lowest, carries on its business throughout the land, regardless of State lines and, to all intents and purposes, above the law. These corporations are greater than many of the States, with more stockholders and employees than some States have inhabitants, with greater assets and larger revenues than many others.

The people of America would not think of allowing a self-perpetuating board of managers, operating under self-drafted regulations, to rule a political state. Yet that is exactly what we tolerate with respect to these great corporations which are the very nerve system of our economic life. And because there is no national rule to restrain them, a few ambitious and irresponsible men in positions of corporate authority have the power to destroy the security of our entire industrial and commercial structure.

There is not a banker or a lawyer or a business man in any community of the country who does not know how wide-spread, serious, and unwarranted have been the abuses of corporate power, abuses which have been made possible because the checks and balances which the Constitution imposes upon political government are utterly lacking in corporate government. To these abuses, more than to any other one thing, may be attributed the disaster of 1929; and it may be predicted with absolute certainty that no mere political change can effect permanent economic stability until as a Nation we have developed a means of establishing in commerce and industry the same principles of representative government of which we have been so proud in our political institutions.

As is so often the case in ordinary human contacts, our chief trouble arises from a misconception of a simple fact. As a people we have confused corporate rights and personal rights. We seem to have completely forgotten that corporations are the creatures of the people, with no rights or powers save those conferred upon them by the people through their governments, and that it is the solemn duty of the National Government, since the State governments are powerless, so to circumscribe the activities of the corporations as to preserve all of their undoubted advantages as instruments of social and economic progress while preventing the misuse of the powers with which they are endowed.

Of course, the managers and stockholders of corporations are fearful of Government interference. Of course, the people are fearful of too much government. Of course, it is not the business of government to meddle in personal and private affairs. The Jeffersonian axiom that "that government is best which governs least" is still the rule by which we should guide our course. But of what avail is it to curb irresponsible political power if we allow irresponsible economic power to remain unrestrained? It is only because we have permitted arbitrary economic power to dominate our national commerce and industry that it has been necessary for the Federal Government to use the emergency powers which alone rescued this Nation from the brink of irreparable disaster to which unregulated, irresponsible economic power had brought it.

INDUSTRIAL FEUDALISM AND BUREAUCRACY—TWIN DANGERS

We must recognize that not alone management but the stockholder has a stake in corporation control. We must recognize that not alone the owners and managers of capital but the wage workers have a stake in corporation control. We must recognize that not only capital and labor but the consumer and the numerous public also have a stake. For we have come to that point in our national development when we must realize that no man, no State, no industry can live an isolated life. The complexities of our modern existence are such that we rise and fall together—one great Nation of Americans under the Constitution in an indestructible Union of indestructible States. We cannot continue to permit industrial corporations, created by authority of the people, to handle the very subject matter of our existence without effective responsibility to law. Continued failure to act means one of two things; either that industrial feudalism will crush our boasted liberties and destroy the Constitution under a species of fascism, or those same liberties will be lost through an equally abhorrent centralization of power in bureaucracy. This twin danger has been growing almost unobserved for more than a generation. If we are to avoid it, all the patriotism, all the patience, all the vision of our people will be needed.

The answer to this problem is democracy in industry under a national statute which shall not put commerce and industry under the heel of some bureaucracy but which shall lay down the broad general rules under which national corporations must operate in the national interest. To this end I have recently introduced in the Senate of the United States what I believe to be a perfectly constitutional bill to regulate commerce among the States by providing a national licensing system and a national incorporation law. The purpose of the plan outlined in this bill is not to regiment business or industry, but to release it; not to suppress it, but to foster it; not to check the expansion of any unit, but to make possible a continuous growth by which the immeasurable and boundless potentialities of our national resources may be made available to all our people.

There is no reason for the existence of economic misery under our flag if we but have the will to push forward with common sense and tolerance under the Constitution.

DEVELOPMENTS UNDER NEW POLICY OF INDIAN BUREAU

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain data with reference to developments under the new policy of the Indian Bureau.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DICKINSON

My colleagues, there is a department of our Government which receives very little attention from any of us in this Senate unless we happen to be upon the committee which deals directly with that Department. I am speaking of the Indian Bureau in the Department of the Interior. I myself have given scant heed to this Department because of the fact that I have no Indians in my own State upon reservations.

But during this session of Congress, there have been some surprising facts called to my attention by the Indians themselves regarding the manner in which the money appropriated by this Congress, supposedly for the Indians, is being spent by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs. And that is a matter which touches every Member of Congress, particularly those of the more densely populated States where there are few if any Indians, because all taxpayers contribute to Federal taxes for the support of this Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Looking into the records, I find that the following sums of money have been appropriated to this Bureau since the present Commissioner, John Collier, was appointed in 1933:

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1934	$24,857,145.67
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1935	21,151,185.00
Supplementary deficiency bill just passed	1,558,312.02
Allocations from various public-works funds up to Feb. 1, 1935	44,475,500.00
Making a total of	92,042,142.69

And the cost for the current fiscal year of 1936 will be even greater; the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, total about $27,187,965; two other pending deficiency bills carry appropriations for some $30,000 and there are bills authorizing the appropriation of additional sums in the neighborhood of $235,000. These known appropriations make a grand total of some $199,495,107. There are no figures available at this time to indicate just how much of the $4,000,000,000 relief fund has been allocated to the Bureau but judging by the former allocation, it is reasonable to presume that it will be in between forty and fifty millions of dollars at least.

As long as the Federal Government continues to hold these Indians in a status of wardship and keep their entire resources under Government control I feel that there is properly a burden upon the Government to provide for these wards. I have no objection to money being appropriated which will settle their long overdue claims or actually benefit them by making American citizens out of them, as was the original intention and purpose of the Bureau.

But these are very huge amounts of money which are being turned over each year to this Bureau for the administration of the affairs of about 340,000 wards, and it is unquestionably the right of every American taxpayer to know whether that money is actually being used to make American citizens out of the Indians. The Indians themselves contend that the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, John Collier, is trying to make communists out of them, and that all of his efforts since becoming Commissioner have been to force his socialist ideas upon them under the guise of giving them self-government through the so-called "Wheeler-Howard Act", which was passed by this Congress in the last session. They maintain that this legislation, for which neither my distinguished colleague, Hon. Burton K. Wheeler, nor Representative Howard took responsibility, but introduced by request, had its inception in the American Civil Liberties Union, of which a subcommittee of the New York State Legislature in 1928 said:

"The American Civil Liberties Union, in the last analysis, is a supporter of all subversive movements."

The Indians contend that through this legislation the Commissioner and his appointees and associates are trying to gain control over their affairs and segregate them from the rest of the American citizenry; that they are being denied their constitutional rights of free speech through the denial of work relief to all those who oppose the policies of the Bureau; that both he and his employees discourage the teaching of Christianity among the Indians, to the extent that one missionary at least has been forced to give up his work among them and that religious services in the Government-maintained schools have been discontinued; that the constitutions which are being submitted to them contain no element of self-government but leave all power in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior and, through him, the Commissioner, and that very dangerous power is therein provided for the removal from a reservation of any who may be declared undesirables; that a continuous campaign is being carried on among them designed to incite race prejudice and disrespect for law and order as administered by State and Federal courts; and the further fact that a book dealing with the achievements of the new Russia, which openly attacks the American Government, has been introduced into at least one school, among children whose minds are at a formative stage and who do not have the adult background of knowledge necessary to properly judge this book. The Indians not only contend these things; they have documentary evidence which supports their contentions.

From the record of testimony taken before a subcommittee of the House Indian Committee there can be no doubt that the Commissioner is totally un-American in his ideas. He has been busy building what he terms a "Navajo world" down in the Southwest. Thus far the cost of the Navajo capitol alone is $950,000, and he frankly stated that it was not completed and more money would be needed to complete and equip it. Around this he is having constructed what he terms a "community centers", which cost from twenty to forty thousand dollars apiece, for construction alone, and which will take care of about 24 pupils apiece. Wells for these "centers" are to cost an additional, conservatively estimated, $350,000. About $2,225,000 for a Navajo world.

The idea of such a thing in America is preposterous. Are any of the other racial groups in America to have a world of their own, financed at the expense of all taxpayers? And the cost of the buildings is extremely excessive. All of them are built of native material and with native labor for the most part. Is there any rural community in America today that has a twenty- or forty-thousand-dollar schoolhouse for 24 pupils?

All of this is evidently with the full approval of the Secretary of the Interior, in whose Department this Bureau exists. In the Reclamation Era for May 1935, Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes, speaking of the various public-works projects, includes the "First Indian capital in the United States" and says, "May I suggest now that our people go and inspect—the first Indian capital in the United States—to see how their money has been put to work, how useful public works have been added to the capital wealth of the Nation." It is my opinion that if this Indian capital is an example of useful public works, then the people of this Nation are being defrauded out of hard-earned tax money. In these schools, it appears from the record, the Commissioner is planning to inaugurate not an American system of education for these Indians, but a Mexican system. Speaking before the subcommittee, he stated that he had been instrumental in having a Mexican educator, Dr. Moses Saenz, come to this country to give the Indian Bureau "very severe criticism for our overloaded and overmechanized and unrealistic school system" and to "give us the viewpoint of one who has developed a much more economical and practical system of schools." This advice cost the Americans $1,500, taken out of the money appropriated by Congress for the education of the Indians. The last available report shows that 25 percent of all Indian children of school age are not now in any kind of a school and the reason for this, according to the Indian Bureau, is that there is not sufficient money. Now, if the Commissioner wants criticism about the profligate way in which the Bureau spends money for the meager results shown—and these $40,000 schools for 24 pupils are an example of it—there is no need to go out of this country to secure that criticism. I am here to give it in no uncertain terms and there will be no need to deprive any child of schooling to pay for it either.

Of the Mexican school system, the Commissioner said that he thoroughly approved of it, although he denied any knowledge of the atheistic pledge required of all teachers in that country. He further stated that he considered the "Mexican ejita school system" as a wonderful system, "almost the most perfect in the world." What, might I ask, is wrong with our own school system and our American educators?

Even more outrageous than this, is the employment by the Department of the Interior of a man who had to take out his first citizenship papers before he could be given a high-paid position in the vast land-buying program of the Indian Service. Asked by a member of the committee whether America did not have a man to fill that particular place and had to send to Turkey, the Commissioner replied, "I doubt if there is anybody else available here who can do what he is doing and has such a combination of talents and learning. If there is another like him, we would hire him, even though he were from Baluchistan." Hightly trained Americans are walking the streets in search of employment but when our Government has a well-paid position to offer, it must needs naturalize an alien.

I have been examining that record of testimony before the subcommittee of the House Indian Committee that has just been released. There seems to be plenty of evidence to support the contentions of the Indians. At the referendum elections which are held among them regarding the Wheeler-Howard Act, so called, only those on the list of eligible voters which is prepared in the Indian Bureau are allowed to vote. All those who do not cast a ballot are counted as voting "yes." In one place they even counted the vote of a man who was actually known to be dead, as well as many others whose whereabouts were unknown. Where, in America, can any justification be found for such an unfair procedure? Such a policy, applied to all the registered voters of the Republican Party, would work a terrible hardship upon the Democrats in any election.

Saying that he is giving the committee "something from which he could not be persuaded by any fear of his future", we find the Commissioner clearly putting himself on record as approving of the leadership of Roger N. Baldwin and the activities of the American Civil Liberties Union, of which he is a leader. The records disclose that the close associates of the Commissioner for the past 20 years have been radicals and Socialists. Two of his present associates, at least—Nathan Margold, Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, and Robert Marshall, Chief Forester of the Indian Bureau—are known to be supporters of subversive movements in the United States. The Commissioner said, too, that he believed that both Secretary and Mrs. Ickes would agree with all that he had to say in approving Roger N. Baldwin and the American Civil Liberties Union, which upholds the right of a citizen or an alien "to advocate force and violence, murder, and assassination in the overthrow of government."

Here, as in other departments of our Government today, we have an example of these radicals who are boring from within to insidiously undermine the very structure of our Government. Here, again, is an example of the platform and principles of the Democratic Party being scrapped in favor of the platform of the Socialists. And here, again, are found in control not the members of the Democratic Party but the members of the radical and Socialist malcontents who have taken over control of the Government.

This question is not one of just Indian concern. It is the concern of every loyal American, of every Christian, and of every taxpayer. The Indians themselves constitute but a small minority group. But they are already, through their status of Government wards, so subject to Bureau control, both as to person and property, that they are helpless to defend themselves from this continued effort to force atheism and communism upon them. Millions of dollars have been spent by Christian missionaries to teach Christianity among the Indians. Millions of dollars have been spent by the American Government to educate them to become American citizens. Is all of this to be tossed lightly aside? Can we, as Americans, permit these wards of the Federal Government to be educated in the Government-maintained schools in the ways of atheism and communism?

The resources of the Indians, according to the Commissioner, amount to more than a billion dollars. The cash resources are being seized as rapidly as possible by the Commissioner with or without the consent of the Indians to promote his scheme of cooperatives—markets, hotels, stores, and what not. Any income from these enterprises, so it is said, is not to be based upon per capita distribution, in accordance with per capita contribution, but is to be based upon per capita consumption from the cooperative stores, thus effectively forcing the Indians to deal at these stores in order to realize any profit from their investment. There are indications that work-relief wages on some projects are being contributed, by order of the Commissioner, to the amount of 25 percent, for a fund to purchase tools, etc., while work aggregating 25 percent of the basic wage scale is being demanded of the Indians in advance of their employment, which means that the Indians actually receive only 50 percent of the basic wage scale for labor performed. Even Russia does not exact any such toll from her workers; and the work-relief funds themselves are being used as a means to force the Indians into submission, as is clearly evidenced by a letter dated April 30, 1934, and signed by the Secretary of the Interior, wherein he states that opposition to the Department plans will mean immediate dismissal; and by a further letter from a superintendent of a reservation stating that all persons who engage in opposing the policies of the Department will be dropped from the lists of those eligible for work relief. Not only have these orders been issued; they have been carried out.

Such autocratic, arbitrary measures have no place in America. They should be uprooted before the hold of this group of radicals upon the resources of these Government wards becomes any greater. The American Indian Federation, of which Hon. Joseph Bruner, of Sapulpa, Okla., is the able and fearless president, has requested the removal of Commisisoner Collier and his associates and the repeal of the infamous Wheeler-Howard Act, so called. In the interest of preserving those sterling qualities of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" and "equal justice under law" embodied in that great Constitution of this Nation which has brought us forth to our present high place of honor among nations, these pleas for relief from such totally un-American and obnoxious conditions should be heard and acted upon. The vast army of overburdened and forgotten American taxpayers have unwittingly and unknowingly contributed since July 1933 more than $119,000,000 to support in high public office, at very substantial salaries, these radicals, referred to by the Indians as "political mavericks", and to supply them the funds with which to establish communistic government in free America. My colleagues, it is our duty as Americans to take cognizance of these facts and to stop these practices within our Government.

I thank you.

IMPORTATION OF WHEAT IN BOND FOR MILLING PURPOSES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received the following telegram, and I might say it is one of many similar protests I am receiving, from Farmers Union Local No. 882, Lindsborg, Kans. I read the telegram, which is brief:

> The members of the Farmers Union Local No. 882 urge you to use your influence to secure immediate legislation to prohibit importation of wheat in bond for milling purposes.

This telegram is signed by David Rain, secretary.

Needless to say, Mr. President, I realize that nothing can be done to correct this situation at this session of Congress. Also, I realize that it is not a simple proposition, nor one easy of correction.

But I do say it is manifestly unjust to American wheat growers and to American millers away from the Canadian border, and particularly unfair to the southwestern mills and wheat growers, to allow Canadian wheat to be imported into this country, practically free of duty, for milling purposes.

I hope the Senate Finance Committee, at the next session, will work out an amendment to the tariff act which will adjust this provision in the interests of American agriculture and industry.

I ask unanimous consent to have the telegram printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LINDSBORG, KANS., August 24, 1935.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

The members of the Farmers Union Local No. 882 urge you to use your influence to secure immediate legislation to prohibit importation of wheat in bond for milling purposes.

DAVID RAIN, Secretary.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON POST

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very much disappointed that the Senate failed to pass the bill providing for the reorganization of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection service. As I view it, the measure is in the interest of safety, and everyone considers it a matter of great importance. However, it was impossible to obtain action.

There appeared an editorial in this morning's Washington Post entitled "Inexcusable Oversights", and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington POST of Aug. 26, 1935]

INEXCUSABLE OVERSIGHTS

To those whose memories run back as far as a year ago when the Morro Castle burned, to be followed only a few weeks later by the sinking of the Mohawk, it will be heartening to learn that the two tragedies have not been entirely forgotten; a marine bill has been passed by both Houses of Congress and forwarded to the White House for signature. It fixes the liability of shipowners.

Beyond that no complete action has been taken affecting the operation of ships at sea. The Senate has passed a bill extending load-limit regulations to ships in coastwise and Great Lakes service. The House has passed a measure to improve the organization of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection service. Whether, with trunks already packed, Congress can be expected to give further consideration to either bill before adjournment is highly doubtful, but no effort should be spared to recall these measures to its attention.

The Senate bill is designed to minimize dangers from overloading, such as beset the Vestris, and if passed would permit the application to coastwise shipping of safety provisions now applied to ocean-going ships under the terms of the international treaty of 1930. Much more important is the bill passed by the House. It would empower the United States officially to inspect and pass upon the construction of passenger and freight vessels and to enforce with greater efficiency existing regulations promoting safety at sea.

It would be an inexcusable oversight to adjourn without action on these two undebatable bills. If they are sidetracked, there will be nothing for Congress to do at the time of the next marine tragedy but to pass more resolutions of sorrow and demand still another angry investigation.

OLD-AGE PENSION ACTS—ARTICLE BY FLORENCE E. PARKER

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article entitled "Experience Under State Old Age Pension Acts in 1934", by Florence E. Parker, of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Monthly Labor Review for August 1935]

EXPERIENCE UNDER STATE OLD AGE PENSION ACTS IN 1934

By Florence E. Parker, of the Bureau of Labor Statistics

The greatest territorial expansion, in terms of actual effectiveness of the system, yet experienced since the introduction of the public pension system in the United States occurred during 1934. At the end of the year pension systems were in actual operation in the whole or part of 25 States and 2 Territories, including within their borders 56 percent of the total population of the United States. At the end of the previous year old-age benefits were being paid in only 17 States and 1 Territory, having 32 percent of the population. The number of paying counties increased during 1934 from 350 (45 percent of the total counties in States having pensions) to 924 (64 percent). This was due mainly to the putting into force of the State-wide systems in Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, North Dakota, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. At the close of 1934, 11 systems were in State-wide operation, as compared with only 4 in 1933. Within States where the systems were operative in greater or less degree in both years the pension plan was extended to 48 additional counties, the number rising from 350 to 398. Thirty-four of the new pension counties, however, were in one State—Minnesota—where the act became mandatory at the beginning of 1934.

The acts of Kentucky and West Virginia remained without effect in 1934 as in 1933, while the Maine law, passed in 1933, could not be enforced because of the legislature's failure to provide funds.

Of the 30 acts on the statute books in 1934, only 7 were optional with the counties, and 2 of these voluntary plans were inoperative. In the optional States counties having the plan in effect included only 48.2 percent of the population. In the mandatory States, on the other hand, the coverage was 93.5 percent.

More than twice as many persons received old-age assistance in 1934 as in the previous year, the number having risen from 115,547 to 236,205. The financial outlay, however, increased at a much smaller rate than the number of pensioners. Expenditures rose from $26,167,017 in 1933 to $32,313,515 in 1934, an increase of only 23 percent as against 104 percent in number of beneficiaries. The inevitable result was a marked decrease in the average monthly pension for all States combined, the rate falling from $19.34 to $14.69, or 24 percent. To a considerable extent this was due to the small allowances paid in the new pension States. In States having the system in both years the average pension fell only 1.7 percent.

Although individual pensions were reported equaling or even (in two instances) exceeding the maximum allowable under the State law, the average monthly allowances paid in even the most liberal States were only about two-thirds of the legal maximum. They ranged in the different States from 69 cents in North Dakota to $26.08 in Massachusetts. Six States paid pensions amounting to $20 or more per month, but 14 paid less than $10. The amount of the pension is theoretically based upon the need and circumstances of the pensioner. It is known, however, that many counties have simply divided the available funds equally among the pensioners without regard to individual requirements. In large part this is undoubtedly due to the fact that in many jurisdictions funds have been so inadequate as to make impossible the payment of even subsistence benefits to any considerable number of persons.

Upon the basis of the data reported, it appears that State-aided systems are relatively the most generous, with State systems next in order. In 1934 the smallest allowances were provided in States in which the whole cost was borne by the county treasury. Average allowances under the State systems increased 12.2 percent from 1933 to 1934. Under the other two types of plans they declined—0.8 percent under the State-aided plans and 9.3 percent under the county systems. In 1934, 49.8 percent of the money spent for pensions was contributed by the counties and 50.2 percent by the States.

With the pension roll increasing and the funds either actually decreasing or increasing at an appreciably lower rate than the pensioners, the financing of the pension plans continued in 1934 to be the chief problem facing legislators and pension authorities. The special taxes, such as per capita and property taxes, imposed by some of the newer acts seem not to have fulfilled the hopes of their proponents. Of the State systems with such financing provisions (Iowa, Michigan, Nebraska, North Dakota, and Wyoming) only one—that of Iowa—had sufficient revenue to pay allowances of as much as $10 per month, and in two of the States the benefits averaged less than $5. In Iowa the act did not go into full force until July 1, 1935; benefits were paid, beginning in November 1934, only in especially urgent cases. It appears that the most adequate support is accorded to the pension system in States where the cost is met from the general funds of the State rather than from the proceeds of a special levy. The actual collections from such special taxes frequently fall far below the estimated yield and the pension plan, of course, suffers accordingly.

The cost per capita of population averaged 60 cents in 1934, ranging in the various States from 2 cents in Michigan to $1.24 in Colorado. Alaska had a per capita cost of $1.83.

Judged by the three criteria of coverage, benefits, and proportion of persons of pensionable age being cared for, the systems of Arizona, Massachusetts, and New York ranked highest in 1934. At the other end of the scale were those of Idaho, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, Utah, and Washington.

SCOPE OF STUDY

The above findings were disclosed by the regular annual survey of pension experience which has been conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics since 1928. This 1934 study covered all of the 30 States having legislation providing for assistance to aged needy persons. In the majority of States the information was obtained through the cooperation of State officials, but in jurisdictions having county-financed plans and requiring no report to any State office,[1] the data were obtained from the individual counties. Reports were obtained for 1,393 (96 percent) of the 1,445 counties in the 30 States. It is believed that the data here presented give an accurate and generally complete picture of the situation in all of the States, with two exceptions: Because of conflicting reports from State and county sources, which could not be reconciled, only an approximation of the expenditures in Colorado could be made. In Massachusetts, one of the most important pension States, complete reports of disbursements do not become available until more than a year after the close of any calendar year, and the Bureau was therefore compelled to use the 1933 figures; average weekly benefits were, however, available and were used in the comparisons of average benefits in the various States.

PENSION SITUATION IN 1934

Summary data showing the operations in the various States in 1934 are given in table 1.

[18] Year of present act; original act passed in 1915.

The Iowa act, passed in 1934, did not go into complete operation until July 1, 1935. The law provided, however, for an emergency period (from Nov. 1, 1934, to July 1, 1935) during which allowances might be made to care for the most needy cases. In case of applications made before November 1, 1934, which were approved at any time during the emergency period, the allowance became retroactive to that date. Thus the approval of such an application on, say, April 17, 1935, would entitle the applicant to the allowance for the months of November through March, as well as for the succeeding months. At the end of 1934 there were 4,589 who had received allowances; between December 31 and the date of the State report to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (Mar. 11, 1935) the number of beneficiaries had risen to 8,300, all of whom had received their retroactive payments, and it was expected that even the latter figure would be increased.

The optional law of Kentucky, passed in 1926, is still inoperative. In 1934 the legislature passed an act providing for an amendment to the State constitution authorizing the legislature to "prescribe such laws as may be necessary for the granting and paying" of old-age pensions. The legislature directed that this act was to be submitted to the vote of the people at the next general election; the ballot of the 1934 election, however, did not include this measure.

In Maryland, for several years, the only part of the State in which pensions were being paid under the State act was the city of Baltimore. In 1933 a special State act made the system compulsory in Allegany County, and payments began there in June 1934.[2]

The cost of the system in Nebraska is met by the counties, which are permitted to levy a per capita tax of 50 cents for the purpose of raising funds.[2] The act went into effect August 10, 1933, but most of the counties had already made their levy for funds for the year. The result was to suspend in those counties the operation of the act during 1934, as the court held that the pension levy could not lawfully be made except at the time of the general levy. Eighty of the ninety-three counties in the State have reported to the Bureau. Only 24 made payments under the act of 1934; of these, 1 began payments in March, 1 in August, 2 in November, and 10 in December. Twenty-seven counties reported that payments began or were to begin early in 1935; these had more than 3,000 applications on file at the end of the year.

The State-wide State-financed act of Pennsylvania became effective January 18, 1934, and the first payments were due December 1, 1934. So great was the number of applications that some of the counties were unable to complete their investigations in time to decide all of the cases by that date. In order not to penalize those whose cases were unfinished, their allowances, once granted, were made retroactive to December, if their applications were received before that time. A report received from the Pennsylvania Department of Welfare as of April 8, 1934, stated that 18,261 had at that time been put on the December pension roll. It was estimated that the funds appropriated would care for 31,000 persons, and it was thought that within the next few weeks the roll would have increased to that number.

The Washington act was held by the court to be mandatory upon the counties and they were directed to provide whatever funds were necessary to put the law into effect.[2] In spite of this decision and the fact that some State aid was provided for by a later act, the reports to the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that at the end of 1934—18 months after the law became effective—only 12 of the 39 counties were actually paying pensions. Four additional counties expected to begin the payment of old-age assistance in 1935.

DEVELOPMENT WITHIN IDENTICAL STATES, 1933 AND 1934

Comparing only the States in which the law was in effect in both 1933 and 1934 the latter year showed a gain of 48 counties and of more than 17,000 old people cared for. Over $2,000,000 more was expended for pension purposes.

[2] New act passed in 1935 changes these provisions. See p. 332.

Among the industrial States the only outstanding change in the number of counties paying pensions in 1934 was the gain of 34 counties in Minnesota in consequence of the coming into force of the mandatory provision of the act.[3] Montana and Utah suffered a slight loss. In the remaining States the number of paying counties either remained unchanged or increased slightly.

In Montana, the oldest pension State, there were 44 counties which paid pensions at some time during 1934. One of these, however, discontinued payments in November, so that at the end of the year there were only 43 counties in which the system was in effect—a loss of 2 counties as compared with the end of the preceding year. Another county reported that it intended to discontinue the system. An additional county had stopped making cash allowances and was giving only grocery-store credit.

In all but three States the number of recipients of old-age assistance increased, in some States very markedly. The amount paid in benefits also rose in all but four States. In Nevada and Utah a decrease in disbursements was accompanied by a corresponding decrease in number of beneficiaries. In New York and Wyoming, however, the expenditures fell in spite of an increase in the pension roll.

The 1933 and 1934 operations are compared in table 2 for the 17 States in which the act was in effect in both years.

DEVELOPMENT UNDER OPTIONAL AND MANDATORY LAWS, 1934

The list of mandatory acts has grown longer with each successive year and that of optional laws shorter, as new mandatory acts have been passed and old voluntary ones amended to make them compulsory.

The voluntary systems in those States in which such systems were operative attained a coverage of 48.2 percent in 1934. Among the mandatory systems, on the other hand, the coverage was 93.5 percent. In 11 States the system was in State-wide operation at the end of 1934; at the end of 1933 only 4 States were in this class. State-wide operation, in itself, is not a satisfactory test of the efficacy of an act, however, as is attested by the situation in North Dakota where under a State-wide system benefits averaged only 69 cents a month.

SIZE OF MONTHLY ALLOWANCES

Average monthly allowances ranged in 1934 from 69 cents in North Dakota to $26.08 in Massachusetts. In 14 jurisdictions the monthly average was less than $10, in 21 less than $20, and in only 6 was it $20 or over. The average monthly payments in the important industrial States of California, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania were closely grouped in amount, with Massachusetts leading the others by from $5 to $6. New Jersey, another leading industrial State, has always paid pensions considerably below those of its neighbor, New York. Ohio, of course, was just getting its system under way, and its experience is too short to permit judgment as to the liberality of the allowances.

In 16 States the actual pension was less than half and in the other States about two-thirds of the maximum permitted under the act. The size of the pensions paid in 1933 and 1934 as compared with the maximum payable under the act is shown in table 4.[4]

TABLE 4. Average pensions paid in 1933 and 1934 as compared with those allowable under act

[4] For those States for which the data were obtained directly from the counties and those for which no average figure was supplied by the State official reporting, the averages given in the table somewhat understate the actual monthly amount. The average for such States was obtained by dividing the annual disbursements by the number of pensioners on the roll at the end of the year. Especially in State-wide systems the experience shows that the number on the roll tends to increase month by month, so that the pension list at the end of the year is greater than the 12-month average of the monthly list would be. A check for the States of California, New Jersey, and New York, for which monthly reports are available, shows that the average computed as above fell below the average of the monthly averages by 1 percent in New Jersey, 10 percent in California, and 13 percent in New York.

Conspicuous because of their extremely low average allowances were the States of Indiana, Nebraska, and North Dakota. Regarding the situation in Indiana, where benefits averaged only $4.50 per month, the State auditor reported that many of the counties expected to increase the allowances on January 1, 1934. In Nebraska the low benefits were due to the failure of the per capita tax as a source of revenue. North Dakota had the doubtful distinction both of setting in its law a maximum allowance which is the lowest in the United States ($12.50 per month) and of paying the smallest average benefit in 1934 (69 cents). The allowances awarded averaged $129.73 for the year. Inability to collect the $2 per capita tax was given as the reason for the disparity between the amounts awarded and the amount actually paid.

In February 1935, when the average pension in New York City was $25.37, it was stated that 11.25 percent of the 23,492 pensioners were receiving $36 or more per month.[5]

Theoretically every allowance made is supposed to have been set after detailed consideration of the applicant's circumstances and needs. In some of the better systems, in which investigation is carried on by trained and efficient workers and the number of such workers is sufficient to allow adequate case work, the theory is put into practice. A budget, varying in cost according to prices in the various sections, is carefully worked out and the pension allowed is based upon this budget and the circumstances of the individual case. This procedure can by no means be called general, however, and in practice the allowances in many places are more apt to depend upon the availability of funds than upon the pensioner's needs. Many of the counties reporting to the Bureau made a flat allowance without regard to individual circumstances.

The data are rearranged in table 5 to show the size of allowances paid under the different types of pension systems.

Comparing only those States whose act was in force during both 1933 and 1934, it is evident that by far the largest benefits were paid under the State-aided systems, with State systems next in order. The smallest payments were made in States where the whole cost was met from county revenues. From 1933 to 1934 the average monthly allowance declined 9.3 percent under county plans and 0.8 percent under State-aided plans, but increased 12.2 percent under State plans.

The above figures relate to cash payments only. Of the 30 States which had pension acts at the end of 1934, the acts of 24[6] provide that in case the pensioner dies without sufficient funds for burial, the pension authorities may pay the cost of burial; and 19 States[7] allow medical and surgical care. Data as to cost of burials are available for Delaware and New Jersey. Those two States spent $748 and $18,820, respectively, for this purpose in 1934.

COST OF PENSIONS IN 1933 AND 1934

The steady increase in the number of pensioners in relation to population, shown in previous years, was continued in 1934 except in those States where the natural increase was influenced by other factors, such as financial stringency. The pension roll is, of course, also affected by general or local economic conditions and by the incidence of aged in the State population.

The trend of the pension roll and the cost of pensions, by States, is shown in table 6.

[4] Not computed for this year.

The number of pensioners per 10,000 of population at the end of 1934 ranged from 3 in Maryland to 105 in Colorado. It is interesting to note the high proportion of pensioners in some of the new State-wide systems (Indiana, North Dakota, Ohio, and Oregon) as compared with that under the earlier acts (California, Delaware, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York). In Iowa the system did not go into full effect until July 1935; the figures given in the table cover only emergency cases. In Pennsylvania the authorities had been able to handle only part of the applications by the end of the year and the revised figures (the applicants eligible for pensions during 1934 will receive retroactive benefits) will undoubtedly be substantially larger.

The annual cost of pensions per capita of population has naturally also risen with the increased number of pensioners, although this tendency has been counteracted in part by the lack of sufficient funds in some places and the consequent necessity for reducing allowances. In 1934 the cost of old-age pensions averaged 60 cents per capita of population, the range being from 2 cents in Michigan to $1.24 in Colorado and $1.83 in Alaska. The effect of an emergency State and Federal subsidy is shown in New Hampshire, where the per capita expenditure rose from 30 cents in 1933 to 67 cents in 1934. The only other outstanding changes from 1933 to 1934 occurred in Arizona, Colorado, and Nevada. In Colorado the cost rose from 19 cents to $1.24, possibly because of the greater availability of funds through State aid. In Nevada the cost fell from $1.25 to 33 cents, due to the fact that the number of pensioners cared for in 1934 was less than one-third of the number in 1933.

In connection with table 6, two points should be borne in mind: (1) The total cost to the taxpayers is somewhat in excess of that given above, for in the table the per capita cost was calculated only from the sums disbursed to pensioners. The cost of investigation and the other administrative expenses were not included.[8] (2) On the other hand, practically all of the State laws provide that the State shall have a lien upon any property left by the pensioner, and some laws permit the authorities to take over the property of the pensioner even before his death should that be deemed necessary to protect the public interest. A certain amount of revenue is derived from this source. Thus, in New York, according to the annual report of the division of old-age security, $227,152 was obtained from property and insurance of deceased pensioners during 1932–33 and $308,668 in 1933–34. One county in Montana reported that pensions were being granted only to persons having property which could be willed to the county. A study made of the pensioners on the roll in Massachusetts, March 1, 1935, showed that 13.5 percent possessed real estate, 19.7 percent had some money in the bank or in stocks or bonds, and 42 percent had insurance.

ALLOCATION OF FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Of the 28 States and 2 Territories which had old-age pension or assistance acts at the end of 1934, 8 had laws under which the whole cost of the system was to be borne by the State or Territory. In 14 acts the payments were to be made by the county, but in 2 of these the city or town of residence of the beneficiary was required to reimburse the county; in one of these States (Washington), although the pension act itself placed the whole cost upon the counties, a later act extended some State aid. In eight acts joint provision of funds by State and county was required, and in one of these States the cities or towns were required to reimburse the county for sums spent in pensions.

Thus, some degree of financial responsibility was laid upon the counties by the laws of 21 States, and in 16 jurisdictions State funds were to be drawn upon wholly or partly.

The amounts and proportions actually supplied from State and county funds in 1934 are shown in table 7.

[8] In Delaware the cost of administration was 6.1 percent in 1932 and 1933 and 5.4 percent in 1934. The local administrative cost in New York during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, was 5.5 percent, and during 1933–34 was 6.7 percent.

[2] State and Federal funds.
[3] 25 percent was paid from Federal relief funds.
[4] Pension act does not provide for State aid but another act created special fund, from proceeds of tax on horse racing, to be used for pension system.

In general, the funds for the 1934 allowances were produced from the sources and in the proportion provided for in the laws. There were, however, a few outstanding exceptions. In Colorado, where it was the intention of the legislature that the State should finance the system, the counties disbursed a third as much as the State. In New Hampshire, as an emergency measure, the State paid half of the cost and used Federal relief funds to meet an additional 25 percent, so that the counties and towns charged in the law with the full cost were relieved of 75 percent of their burden. In Washington, where no legal obligation rests upon the State under the pension act, more than a fourth of the 1934 disbursements were met from the proceeds of the State tax upon horse racing. The State aid provided in Wisconsin has been falling further and further below the one-third set forth in the act, and in 1934 only 16.3 percent of the funds were actually furnished by the State.

SOURCES OF REVENUE FOR OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE [9]

The question how and where to find the money with which to finance the pension system has proved to be a difficult one. Legislatures in the different States have attempted in various ways to answer it, and with varying degrees of success.

The most general method of financing old-age assistance is by appropriation from the general fund of State or county. In two States (Idaho and Montana) the relief aspect of the system is emphasized by the provision that the allowances shall be paid from the county poor fund. Per capita taxes ranging from 50 cents to $2 are provided for in three laws (Nebraska, Iowa, and Michigan), and a general tax on property in three States (North Dakota, West Virginia, and Wyoming). In two States (Colorado and Pennsylvania) the proceeds of several special levies are utilized wholly or partially for pension purposes. Thus in Colorado the pension funds are composed of revenue from liquor, corporation, inheritance, and sales taxes, and from automobile registration fees, and in Pennsylvania partly from the profits from the State liquor stores and partly from appropriations from general and special funds of the State. The counties in Pennsylvania are required to bear the expenses of investigation up to a maximum of 6 percent of the old-age-pension appropriation for the county. The State contributions in New Jersey are financed wholly from the inheritance tax.

Of the three States having the per capita tax, Iowa levies the tax upon all citizens resident in the State who are 21 years of age or over, except inmates of public institutions, and provides that employers shall deduct the tax from employees' earnings and forward the amounts to the State treasurer. In case of failure to comply with this requirement, the employer becomes liable for the amount of the tax. In Nebraska the per capita tax falls upon all inhabitants between the ages of 21 and 50 years of age who are not public charges and in Michigan upon all residents 21 years of age or over. The Nebraska act provides that in the event that the collections are inadequate, pensions shall be paid on a pro rata basis, and the counties are expressly prohibited from raising funds in any other way than by the per capita tax.

The sources of funds from which to defray the expense of old-age assistance, as provided for in the various acts, are shown in table 8.

Based upon the experience thus far, the consensus appears to be that the most satisfactory method is that of appropriating the necessary amounts from the general revenues of the State or county.

FINANCIAL PROVISION FOR PENSION SYSTEMS IN 1934

Wide variation has existed in the extent of financial support accorded to the pension systems. In some jurisdictions the revenues provided have been fairly generous in amount. In others the funds have been wholly inadequate.

The situation in a number of the States for which some information as to funds in 1934 is available is sketched briefly below.

California: No data are available as to the adequacy of the yearly appropriations from the general funds. However, the fact that each year the increase in the pension roll has been greater than in the preceding year would seem to indicate that fairly generous support was provided. The relative advance of pensioners and funds from year to year is indicated below:

Percent of increase over preceding year

	Pensioners	Amount spent
1931	37.2	50.1
1932	26.6	30.6
1933	16.6	9.3
1934	34.3	22.5

Colorado: In Colorado the funds raised from estates reverting to the State and the proceeds of the liquor tax are earmarked for the use of the pension system and the State treasurer is directed to apportion the money among the counties according to their population. In 1934 the sum thus apportioned amounted to $925,500.

Beginning in 1935 part of the revenue from the State sales tax was set aside for pensions. During the first 6 months of 1935 the sum of $960,900 had been allotted to the counties, of which $366,400 came from sales-tax collections.

Delaware: The situation in this State is an example of what happens under the practice of fixed appropriations. The cost of the system (including administrative expense) has been limited to $200,000 per year. Even with allowances of less than $10 per person per month, the appropriation has been entirely inadequate to meet the need. At the end of 1934 there were 1,583 persons on the pension roll. This was a decrease of 3 from the previous year. On the other hand the waiting list had risen from 1,623 to 1,775.

Indiana: The Indiana Legislature appropriated $1,254,169 for pensions in 1934, of which $1,134,250 had been spent at the end of November 1934. The appropriation was increased to $1,996,067 for 1935.

Iowa: During the emergency period before the Iowa act went into full effect (July 1, 1935) the allowances were financed by a $1 per capita tax. At the end of 1934, payment had been received from 69 percent of the 1,460,929 citizens subject to the tax, the amount collected being $1,004,403. On July 1, 1935, the assessment became permanent, at the rate of $2 per year. An act approved May 4, 1935, appropriated $1,000,000 for pension purposes.

[9] Discussion relates to situation as of end of 1934. New or amendatory provisions, enacted in 1935, have changed some of these provisions.

Maine: This act has been held in abeyance until some means of raising funds could be decided upon. Various measures were considered by the 1935 legislature, and a bill which would have financed the pension system from the proceeds of a State lottery was passed by the house. When the regular session of the legislature adjourned, however, the problem of funds was still unsolved. A report from the State to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as of May 10, 1935, expressed the opinion that a special session would probably be called in the event that a Federal act was passed.

Maryland: Since the city of Baltimore adopted the voluntary State system it has been making yearly appropriations of $50,000 to $55,000 for pension purposes. The inadequacy of these sums is shown by the fact that the waiting list in 1933 was about 1,600, as against an actual pension roll of 141; in 1934 there were 142 pensioners, but the waiting list had risen to 2,900. This situation doubtless will be remedied under the mandatory 1935 act, under which the counties pay only one-third of the cost.

Michigan: The law under which this State operated in 1934 was a mandatory one, to the cost of which no county contribution was required. The system was financed by a head tax of $2. On the basis of the 1930 census, it was estimated that this tax would yield $5,878,818, or more than sufficient to meet the maximum estimated cost. At the end of 1934, however, only $365,618 had been realized from the tax, of which $103,180 had been paid out in allowances.

Although the act set up a State-wide system, the State welfare department adopted the policy of allocating funds according to the tax collections in the counties. In 27 of the 83 counties no allowances were being made at the end of 1934, because of the inadequacy of the sums collected. By the beginning of May 1935, however, there were only nine counties in which the system had not gone into effect.

A new act in 1935 abolished the per capita tax and provided a State appropriation of $2,000,000.

Nebraska: The task of raising money for pensions very seriously hampered the development of the system in Nebraska. Indeed, one county reported that the law was "so impractical that our county has ignored it except as to collecting a very small amount of the tax so far." Others were able to collect amounts far below those needed. The result of this general failure of financial support was that only 24 counties, or about one-fourth of the total in the State, had put the act into even partial effect. The 1935 act continues the $2 per capita tax levied by the counties, but provides for appropriations by the State legislature.

New Hampshire: The old-age-assistance act of this State placed upon the county the responsibility for payment of pensions, with later reimbursement to the county from the city or town of residence of the pensioner.

Under an emergency act passed by the legislature in June 1933 the State took over the administration of the pensions as part of the general relief problem. The administration of the scheme during this period was, therefore, frankly on a relief basis. The act terminated December 31, 1934. During the 18-month period 50 percent of the cost of old-age assistance was paid by the State, 25 percent by the Federal Government, and 25 percent by the town or county.

It is understood that on January 1, 1935, the original financial arrangement contemplated by the pension act was reverted to.

North Dakota: The North Dakota system was to have been financed by a tax levy of one-tenth of a mill on the assessed value of all taxable property. It was estimated that this tax would produce about $50,000 annually if all of the tax was paid. Actually it yielded only $28,533.51.

The pension granted to the 3,914 persons whose applications were acted upon favorably called for an expenditure of $507,744 during 1934. These persons actually received one payment only, at an average rate of $6.19 per person.

Ohio:[10] In 1934 the sum of $3,000,000 was appropriated from the general funds of the State, plus $150,000 for administrative expenses. The November special session of the legislature appropriated an additional amount of $700,000 for pensions and $125,000 for administrative expenses.

For the first 6 months of 1935 the sum of $6,000,000 for pensions and $375,000 for expenses was set aside from the proceeds of the State sales tax. It is estimated that the old-age-assistance system will cost about $14,000,000 during 1935.

Oregon: In Oregon the counties were expected to meet all the expense of the mandatory pension system provided for by the act of 1933. At the second special session in 1933 the State legislature earmarked 75 percent of the liquor revenues to assist the counties in paying mothers' aid, old-age pensions, and unemployment relief. It is reported, however, that the money was not actually paid for these purposes but was turned over to the State relief committee. Consequently the counties were forced to bear the pension burden unaided. Under the new 1935 act the counties will pay one-fourth and the State one-fourth, it being assumed that one-half will be received from Federal funds.

Washington: The Washington pension law made no provision for State participation in the costs. A later act provided that collections from the State tax on horse racing should be used for pension purposes, and the reports to the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that $27,292 was paid to the counties during 1934—more than one-fourth of the total sum spent in pensions. Under the 1935 act the State is required to pay the whole cost of the system.

Wisconsin: The Wisconsin law provides that the State shall reimburse the counties for one-third of the amounts spent in pensions. For each of the years from 1925 to 1928 the legislature appropriated the sum of $200,000 to meet the State's share of the expense, and during this period the appropriation was more than sufficient, as the amounts actually needed for the purpose ranged from only $60 in 1925 to $22,642 in 1926. In 1929 the appropriation was cut to $35,000, but this was still sufficient to pay one-third of the cost, as was also the $55,000 appropriated in 1930. For each of the years from 1930 to 1934, $75,000 was set aside by the State, but in each successive year the amount has fallen further below the one-third supposedly borne by the State. In 1931 only 26.42 percent of the funds came from the State, in 1932, 20.44 percent, in 1933, 18.95 percent, and in 1934, 16.3 percent.

RELATIVE ADEQUACY OF STATE PENSION SYSTEMS

A pension system can be said to be adequate when (1) it covers the whole population for which it was designed, (2) it pays benefits sufficient to maintain the beneficiaries in modest comfort, and (3) it extends such benefits to all of the qualified needy aged in its jurisdiction who do not require institutional care.

In order to test the adequacy of the State systems which were in effect in 1934, table 9 brings together the data on the above three points. The figures as to the proportion of persons of pensionable age who were receiving pensions at the end of 1934 are by no means conclusive nor comparable State by State, for the extent of dependency may and does vary from State to State, but they are given as a possible indication of the relative extent to which the problem of old-age care is being met.

Judged by the three criteria enumerated above, it would seem that the best systems in operation in 1934 were those of Arizona, Massachusetts, and New York. California and Pennsylvania ranked high as regards coverage and average pensions; the proportion of pensionable population being cared for, however, was relatively low.

At the other end of the scale were the systems of Idaho, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, Utah, and Washington.

When funds are insufficient to meet adequately the problem of old-age care the pension authorities have a choice of several procedures: (1) They may elect to divide the money on hand among the pensioners already on the roll, either refusing to accept new applications, refusing the pension after receiving application, or placing the applications on the waiting list; (2) they may continue to grant new allowances, reducing the average grant proportionately; or (3) they may make new grants only in the most needy cases.

No data are available as to the extent to which officials refused to receive applications. Waiting lists and cases pending at the end of the year for the few States for which information is at hand are shown in the last column of table 9. These figures are admittedly unsatisfactory, for the number of cases pending may be kept down by a policy of refusal by the pension authorities to receive new applications if funds are inadequate.

For California, where new applications averaged about 685 per month during 1934, the monthly reports show that the number of cases pending at the end of the month was reduced from 1,286 in January to 513 by October, but rose again to 851 at the end of December. Restorations of former pensioners to the roll numbered 523. Rejections numbered only 223, as compared with 8,217 applications granted (including restorations).

In Delaware the pension roll was smaller by 3 than in 1933, although 1,865 applications were received. The waiting list totaled 1,775 at the end of the year, being greater than the list of pensioners (1,583). The State old-age welfare commission commented as to this, in its annual report, as follows: "It is unfortunate that State relief should be withheld from so many deserving persons, but this cannot be overcome except by increasing the annual appropriation."

RELIEF ASPECTS OF THE PENSION SYSTEM

In the beginning of the movement to provide cash allowances for dependent aged in the United States, effort was made to emphasize the idea of pensions, i. e., of benefits in recognition of past services (as a citizen). All of the older statutes provided, at least in theory, for old-age pensions. Gradually the emphasis shifted and the later acts have established systems of old-age security, assistance, aid, or even relief.

In practice, administration of the systems from the relief standpoint has been general. Several factors have brought this about. In the first place, many of the plans are carried out by the officials responsible for poor relief, and are administered in the same spirit. In the second place, emphasis on the relief aspect is inevitable as long as need (based upon a "means" test) is the determining factor in the granting or withholding of benefits; and the need test is probably a necessary corollary to any noncontributory system.

There is an especially close connection between pensions and relief under the county plans. Under such plans, when pension funds are low, the needy aged are usually transferred to the relief rolls.

The Oregon act, like many of the other acts, provides that no pensioner shall be allowed to receive any other public relief. Nothwithstanding this specific provision, it was reported that in 1934 some of the counties unable to pay adequate pensions had arranged "to supplement the income of their pensioners by providing additional support from relief funds." [11]

In some States it appears that the pensioners would have fared better on the relief than on the pension rolls. Thus, comparison of the average monthly allowances paid under the pension acts in 1934 with the average amount of relief granted in December 1934 shows that in seven States (Idaho, Indiana, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, and Washington) the pension was less than the amount of relief. The amount of pensions and of relief, by States, is given in table 10.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE OLD-AGE-PENSION MOVEMENT SINCE 1923

More headway was made by the old-age-pension movement in 1934 than in any preceding year. That year showed an increase of 163 percent in paying counties, of 104 percent in number of pensioners, and of 23 percent in amount disbursed.

The status of the movement at the end of each year since 1923 is shown in table 11.

LETTER FROM SENATOR SCHALL TO J. FRANK FRASER, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter addressed by me to J. Frank Fraser, Minneapolis, Minn.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 26, 1935.

Mr. J. FRANK FRASER,
1114 Flour Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR NEIGHBOR FRASER: Your country's enemies and mine will call this letter a vituperative song of hate. It is the truth, as God gives me the light to see it from behind the administration censorship curtain in which I hope to tear at least a peephole.

If I am not to betray my oath of office, the cause of the bewilderment, suffocation, and helplessness of a people who have been crushed and stifled by the results of this overburdened, overbearing, un-American bureaucracy must be voiced.

The Constitution is the greatest of human documents. It establishes government on the basis of laws—laws made by the elected representatives of the people and representing their will to the end that we may have government by and for the people, without any figurehead impostor laying claim to ruling power either by the pretense of divine right or by the highwayman's method of armed might, or by the present mercantile method of purchase, subsidy, and planned emergency.

The third session of this "double deal" Congress has expired. A docile Membership has completed the "must bills", and the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy permits the Members to go home, hoping that under the strict censorship of his majesty on news out of Washington the people will not know of the betrayal of the Constitution.

But if any should inquire it can be explained only that might makes right in following the example of the humble and prostrate legislative bodies of Italy, Germany, and Russia; that the royal command of "must", now prevailing here as in Rome, Berlin, and Moscow, could not be resisted. The "new dealers" just won't allow their leader to be criticized. "The king can do no wrong", and he ordered thus, and was obeyed, "I hope your committee will not permit doubt as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation." They must tell you that the king took away the drafting of bills, the due and intelligent consideration of bills, the duty of rejecting unconstitutional bills; in short, all of our sworn legislative duties under our pledges to you and mandates from you, and under our oaths to support and uphold the Constitution. In 1935 Congress added insult to the injuries dealt you in 1933 and 1934.

A review of its enactments I know is lese majeste, as my every action during these last three sessions has been an unpardonable crime to the crown.

The order has gone forth to get my head, and his agents, singling out Minnesota as one of the "must win" States, have sent hundreds of millions of dollars into Minnesota for that express purpose. When he and "his lords, high captains, and chief estates" are met at the feasting table in celebration of their expected victory in November 1936, he will ask my head be presented to him on a political charger, for I have truly been the voice of one crying in the wilderness "make straight the way of the Constitution."

I stood alone and insisted that our Constitution is built upon the teachings of Christ. The spirit of truth that Christ taught is embodied in that Constitution, and when it is changed it should be changed according to the method prescribed by that Constitution and by the will of the people, our sovereign power, not by the will of some usurping Caesar building his throne upon the shattered ruins of our Republic.

On August 24 we passed the Revenue Act of 1935; in other words, the soak-recovery, soak-the-producer, soak-the-consumer, soak-the-wage earner, soak-prosperity act, to crack you down to the point of a Moscow socialistic regime, when a Rothschild-Wall Street conspiracy may buy you in cheap.

It will block your recovery until the emperorship has been thoroughly riveted upon you or until a responsible oath-keeping administration is seated here which has some concern for your life, liberty, property, and pursuits of industry. It was not passed for the constitutional purpose of revenue, because it cuts down and blocks the expansion of the economic forces and income that yield the revenue supporting Government and the wages and employment supporting labor. And it increases the living costs of every home and the production costs of every farm and other industry.

Because the present issue of Government bonds are not selling so readily, for the money is being driven out of the country, it was passed only as a blackjack to drive the wealth into taxation-exempt Government bonds, so that Franklin the First will have less difficulty in securing money to carry on the bribery campaign for his reelection in '36 and meanwhile further the Machiavellian plan of riot, strike, and revolution that is necessary to mature before the above-board bold strike of the superman of the hour, who, in his great love for his country will have the courage to declare for absolutism and thereby save the Nation from utter chaos by taking over the country for peace sake, for starving humanity, women and little childrens' sake with the Esau steel hand of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

On August 24 we passed the Public Utility Act of 1935, better known as the "electrocution act", which soaks every third family in the United States that has a small saving investment in utility shares, several million wage earners, the trust funds of widows and orphans, and schools and charity institutions—and gives a Tammany-Wall Street combine in Washington the power over utilities now exercised by the respective States, and further culminates the planned chaos.

On August 23 we passed the little N. R. A., which adds $1 to $5 per ton to the cost of every ton of monopoly produced coal shipped from eastern coal mines to Minnesota and the Northwest—an unconstitutional monopoly tax on every home and farm in Minnesota that is able still to buy coal, on every store and factory, on the cost of gas and electric power generated by coal, on every railroad and utility using coal, on every economic activity and institution in Minnesota to benefit one of the greatest monopolies in the country and increase its unearned increment, in order that a Tammanyized autocracy, under the usual pretext of benefiting labor may rob the "forgotten" consumer and by subsidy purchase the support of the Coal Trust.

It strikes at every Minnesota industry and home, at all of its thousands of manufacturing establishments in order that a billion-dollar Coal Trust in the Pennsylvania district, a dog in the manger seated on a coal deposit which God Almighty made for all to use, may add its economic and political mercenaries to a Tammany-Wall Street autocracy entrenched in Washington.

Fortunately this bill goes into the game bag the first time the nine Justices of the Supreme Court get a shot at it. Let us hope that it gets before the Court before zero weather.

On August 15 we passed the A. A. A. Amendment Act, which seeks to make permanent the temporary processing tax, unconstitutionally levied by an executive bureau by usurpation of the tax power which belongs exclusively to Congress. This act likewise seeks to evade our fundamental law and throw out of court any citizen who has demanded his just rights from a Government that has taken from him money under false pretenses.

I voted for the original A. A. A. as a temporary expedient for the supposed benefit of the farmer. I voted against this A. A. A. Amendment Act which seeks to make permanent a system of processing taxes which destroys the industries that constitute the home market of the farm and rob the consumer and wage earner $2 for every $1 of corn-hog and other Federal checks paid to the man who will neglect his farm and grow weeds and in the end strike down the chief industrial mainstay of Minnesota and the Middle West, a tax that has brought upon our farms and factories, through increased production cost, the greatest inundation of foreign imports known to American history.

I voted against processing taxes now amounting in all to $1,000,000,000, unconstitutionally levied and collected, that through the commercial pyramiding process has added $2,000,000,000 to the living costs of our homes and wage earners and made our farms and factories the victims of a foreign flood of imports that have taken two billion more from the mouths of the hungry and unemployed, from the meager family incomes, from the wage earners who are fortunate enough to have jobs, under this despoliation administration, and from every business house that pays taxes and employs labor—a tax that has brought to our shores within the past few months millions of pounds of butter and made our tariff on dairy products a nullity—a tax that has destroyed the export business of our flour mills and transferred as a gift to Canada the world milling championship, so long established at Minneapolis, the leading wheat market of the world—an unconstitutional tax that has crippled every farm home-market industry in Minnesota—cut down the expansion of 4,000 mills and factories that 10 years ago paid out $100,000,000 in wages while buying $400,000,000 worth of farm products—a tax that has brought loss to every town and city in Minnesota, and to all who raise crops in preference to becoming subject serfs of a paternalistic feudal system patterned on the Russian system where farmers are robbed and their wives are hitched to plows and their daughters dig in ditches 7 days a week, now that religion and morals have been made a crime and 10,000,000 in 1933 were allowed by their government to starve to death and the news of this hideous tragedy kept from the world through strict censorship.

We passed on August 12 the second deficiency bill of 1935—the First Deficiency Act of 1935 having been passed March 21—just before the $5,000,000,000 Executive Allocation Act of April 8, for relief of the President's 1936 emergency campaign.

We passed 13 appropriation or allocation bills or deficiency acts to swell the $3,500,000,000 Treasury deficit of the fiscal year 1935, and bring up to mountainous height the $12,000,000,000 of accrued deficits since March 4, 1933.

When the young men and women of Minnesota get a chance to see the Treasury statement of August 23, 1935, they will realize what they and their children are "let in for" during the generations to come—$18,279,009,676.11 of emergency expended by a Tammany "brain trust" machine to make safer for a "new-deal" pork-and-pie Democracy their election to 4 years more of autocracy.

If our high-school boys and girls shall investigate the field of funded public debt, they will find that the total will approximate by June 30, 1936, according to Senator GLASS, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, a mountain of $50,000,000,000—or $24,000,000,000 higher than our total World War cost. If they will study their history they will see that this administration will have spent in 3 years and 10 months $16,000,000,000 more than the entire 35 administrations up to and including the first Wilson administration which included the costs of five wars during that 125 years.

The bond-coupon-clipping industry, the only American industry running at 100-percent capacity during new-deal times, is tax-exempt through the subrosa expressed will of the President, and the young people of this generation will be carrying as a millstone around their necks an interest burden that has mortgaged their children's children.

But the greatest peril of all is to our liberty—the rights and immunities guaranteed to us under our Constitution, the right to a day in court for redress of grievances, the right to run our own farms and factories, the right of our State to the republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution, and the powerlessness of the people to a voice in tax making, in tariff making, or any other fundamental legislative power of their elected representatives in Congress.

Still I have faith to believe that the tide of American freedom has turned. That the people are beginning to understand what is being done to them. That shift of vote in Rhode Island the other day, if made Nation-wide, would do the "business." And we have a year in which to make that American recovery movement Nation-wide. For our altars and our fires, for our freedom and our hard-won bread, the fight is on and it will require the help and effort of every boy and girl, woman and man in the United States who understands that it is their individual right, their personal freedom, their chance of advancement through merit, their chance to grow an understanding that is being struck at.

As your sentinel on the ramparts of the citadel of our liberties, I have at least tried to emulate the geese whose cackling saved the Roman Republic from stealthy night attack and overthrow. This is no time for soft words. If this administration is reelected, your Republic is a thing of the past.

The enemy's leader with cunning connivings, simulating a smile of love and brotherhood, bearing gifts of promises he had no intention of keeping, smoothed the path by such false pretenses upon the Jeffersonian Democratic platform for which he pledged himself a hundred percent, to haul his horse of Troy within your constitutional fortifications and already his horde of Communists are pouring out with drawn swords to put to immediate death any who dare protest his usurpation of your Government. So efficient has he been in the breaking of his official oath and the betrayal of your Constitution, that he has recently been endorsed for reelection to the Presidency of the United States by the International Organization of Communists. This supreme body of the Communist organization, through the identity of its directed personnel with the administrative organization of the U. S. S. R., is the Russian Government.

The Russian dictator, Stalin, and all his chiefs were there together with representatives from the United States and they passed, not only an endorsement of Comrade Roosevelt for President of the United States but a resolution to bore from within the United States Government through laws that would sabotage its citizens income and thus through want, misery, strife, and turmoil break down the natural resistance of its citizens when by force the final overthrow of the United States can be, in their opinion, easily accomplished. This endorsement will remind you that Roosevelt's picture was published in all Russian newspapers during the election and contained the statement that he would be elected and that he would be the first communistic President of the United States. To camouflage this endorsement to the American people he causes to be widely published in this country, a note of protest to Russia which he knows well the people there never will be able to read since their press is controlled by Stalin who will understand the comrade method of say one thing and do another. Since there is no public opinion in Russia and since these state notes of protest are normally transmitted without newspaper display it becomes self-evident that the note is for consumption of the people of the United States and none other. If you need further proof of the red network, look at the complete red circle of red communistic advisers with which he has surrounded himself, headed by "Comrade" Tugwell, as he is known in Russia, and Professor "Karl Marx" Felix Frankfurter, who lives at the White House and writes every important speech and message delivered by Roosevelt, and is his close confidant and adviser.

And if you need still further proof as to this administration's intent, I cite you six great holding companies he has caused to be organized in the State of Delaware whose articles of incorporation I caused on February 6, 1935, with much difficulty to me because of the administration's opposition to publicity, to be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. These corporations are set to take over every industry in the United States; they are organized with the people's money, they are perpetual in existence and they were marked "Secret. Do not publish." Up to the time that I exposed them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD no one outside the immediate administration knew of them and since that time it has been impossible to get any information as to why they were organized and today the ordinary citizen of the United States, I'll warrant, has never heard of them and doesn't know what their import is to this republican form of Government. But to any sane man, reading the articles of incorporation it is clear that through these corporations the administration intends to make of the United States of America a United States of Russia. They are set there like a trap in the dark to grab their prey when the time has been brought about.

These six corporations can take over and control, make and dispose of every avenue of business in this country from the button on your cap to the sole of your shoe, including electric power, which the administration bill just passed seeks to control.

The divine Lenin said that socialism plus control of electric power equals communism. Our President says that he has a mandate of the people. The platform he was elected upon he has ignored entirely and carried out the communistic, socialistic platform for which about 2 percent of the people voted. He is carrying out the mandate, not of a majority of the people but of 2 percent which is the communistic, socialistic, fascistic element of the country and heartily deserved the full-hearted endorsement of the Third Internationale but not the endorsement of the people of the United States whose sovereign power he has stolen, and if they do not wake up to it before the election of 1936 he will have them bound hand and foot and gagged to do with as he, in his great wisdom, chooses.

With infinite cunning of our conniving President, backed by an international group of schemers the stage is set to tear down our Constitution because it stands in the way of world revolution which is designed to center all might, majesty, dominion and power in the hands of a selfish few international dictators.

If Congress can be seduced to nullify the Constitution and its checks and balances then Congress itself can be nullified by this indirect method of a certificate of incorporation in any one of the States. The way has been prepared for the United States, Inc., and the immediate disappearance of all private rights.

This supine Congress has given away everything in God's country but its ability to appropriate funds. Only the intervention of the Supreme Court has saved us. When these corporations are thrown into full speed ahead there will be no need of appropriation of funds from Congress and therefore no need of Congress and the circumvention of the Supreme Court will be attained.

We must fight the evil-minded men who talk representative government but undermine it in Congress, in the States, in the schools, and in the churches. The grand plan of our founders was based on a new declaration in the history of the world—that the citizen is the sovereign and government his servant. For that new vision men have died by hundreds of thousands, and more must die in the near future unless we are content to have alien ideas and doctrines accepted as a greater revelation than that vouchsafed to Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and Lincoln.

These corporations show the way to centralize all property in the hands of a few and beyond Federal constitutional control. Through them the Nation can easily be put on its way to Moscow through Delaware. Are we ready for that trip? Do we understand what is being done to us? Do we understand we are "On the Way", as the President's book tells us, and his communistic spokesmen assert the revolution has already been consummated and henceforth we are a government of men—and such men!

The $5,000,000,000 allocation to the President without strings was so arranged that the President might underhandedly develop these fascistic or communistic corporations, and yet our smiling President, you will remember, said that he didn't even read the bill.

If that is true then there is a most sinister, most cunning, most conniving brain back of him and of whom he must be the tool, for it is strange that all of these things could happen so in sequence and in perfect order, with such definite and purposeful ends without a satanic master brain and hand behind him.

No wonder Senator COUZENS said whoever wrote that resolution should be hanged. But whoever is planning the actions of this administration, whoever is condoning them, it is a stealthy, cunning circumvention of the Constitution and its culmination a treasonous plot which has tied hand and foot and gagged a docile, trusting, obedient, law-abiding, bewildered people, preparing them for absolutism, and the signal for that change will come with the reelection of this administration in 1936. Do you want it? If you don't, you have got to get out and be heard from, and your friends have got to be heard from, and you can't stand by shivering with fear on account of the administration's punishing policy through property interest for yourself and your families' welfare, waiting for someone else to make the fight. It has to be made by yourself, and now. The time is short. Wake up and act. I am doing my part as best I can in calling to your attention the advancing of the well-organized and disciplined forces, and we will be at their mercy if we do not organize our defenses and speak the truth everywhere with God's help to all who may come within the sound of our voices or the reach of our pens. If I can help you with information, write me. I have made scores and scores of speeches; some of them I have in pamphlet form. I'll be glad to send them, and you'll get them if the Farley gang of mail diverters do not find and burn them.

It will be of interest to Minnesota to know that the Farmer-Labor platform last election contained some of the very clauses of these articles of incorporation and that its intent and purport carried the same objective, to wit: "Immediate steps must be taken to abolish capitalism. All the natural resources, machinery of production, transportation, and communication shall be owned by the Government. We demand public ownership of all mines, water power, transportation, and communication, banks, power plants, factories, and all public utilities."

It will further be of interest to you to recall that our Governor Olson said at the convention that adopted that platform that he was not a liberal, but that he was what he wanted to be—a radical—and that he further said that within 6 months the National Government would be taking over all industries of the Nation. Such "divinity doth hedge the word of a king", that no doubt Floyd felt that this statement was truly a revelation. He was in the inner circle of this communistic administration and knew of the existence and purpose of these Delaware corporations.

Comrade Olson is not a recent convert to the cause of communism. He has been a member of the International Workers of the World since a young man. In 1924 he had the well-known Communist William Dunn as his floor manager at the Farmer-Labor convention in St. Cloud, where Mr. Dunn also spoke in his behalf, and he also had Norman Gallentine, a paid organizer of the Communist Party, as one of his lieutenants lining up delegates, and in the 1934 convention was full and overflowing with his communistic pals and his communistic racketeer appointees.

The congressional House committee investigating foreign propaganda reported that they found 24,400 paid Communist agitators in this country, and their sympathizers number hundreds of thousands. A goodly number of these have rallied to the standard of our Minnesota Governor and are sojourning there today. This congressional committee also found that the charges made by Maj. Gen. Smedley Butler, that a New York international group had proposed he lead a "putsch" to establish a Fascist dictatorship in this country were true.

Roosevelt no doubt expected that his well planned war on recovery would have produced starvation, strikes, riots, revolution in October last in compliance with Floyd's prediction, but the resistance and savings of the American people were greater than calculated. He has not now time before election to mature that desired revolutionary condition and must win another election in 1936 to realize his grandiose ideas of building his empire upon the shattered Constitution.

You will remember that the administration appointed Comrade Olson, the "code fish", as he himself put it, of the N. R. A. for Minnesota, and Olson strenuously tried to persuade the legislature to pass a similar poll-parrot Minnesota racketeers' association, and you will remember that when Roosevelt was in Minnesota he lovingly put his arm around Floyd and invited him to come to Washington and help him run the new deal, and you will remember that he was foremost among those men who used the words "guerilla", "buzzard", and "traitor" of the men who dared protest the Federal usurpation of our Constitution. He has that same yen for power that Roosevelt has. They are as alike as two peas in a pod. Their personal wills are always being substituted for the law of the land. They are both calculating and relentless. Inherently they are both natural, ruthless tyrants who use the English language not to express their thoughts but to conceal them. Their every act and speech are but "springes to catch woodcocks." Both are clever public speakers and can make the uninformed believe the worst to be the better reason. Neither one of them gives a rap for any promise made, any platform avowed, the right of petition, the right of free assembly, the right of freedom of the press, or the Bill of Rights—guaranteed by Minnesota's constitution as well as the Federal Constitution, or the oath they took to defend them. After them the deluge. Such men are the rare tools being constantly sought by international schemers to steal party nominations. Just as they succeeded in stealing the nomination of the Democratic Party in 1932, so they are now setting about to steal any third party that may arise to defend the interests of the people, and Olson is being carefully studied. The Republican Party is not exempt from their tremendous money influence that is constantly being brought to bear in our national conventions which meet on a strip of "no man's land" over which neither State nor Federal Government have any control, and too often become the cesspool of foreign political intrigue. The highest essential of any party candidate is his God-fearing Americanism and his known and undoubted support and maintenance of the Constitution of the United States.

You will remember when Floyd was Hennepin County attorney he put out of business two little weekly newspapers in Minneapolis who were not fawning upon him, one of them run by Howard Guilford; and in the interest of a free press the Chicago Tribune had the decision carried to the Supreme Court of the United States and knocked out. You will remember when, under the truck strike engineered from Moscow, he placed Minneapolis under martial law, emulated Roosevelt's censorship of newspapers, and placed a ban upon all newspapers of the State and threatened their extinction if they dared publish anything unfavorable to his administration. In no respect does Olson's order 12 of the martial proclamation differ from the denial of the Bill of Rights—free speech, free assembly, and freedom of the press—as declared by Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin.

Olson's usurpation of power to help his own candidacy for reelection as Governor was against all precedents and constitutional provisions when he led 3,000 tin hats down Nicollet Avenue and at the loss of only 6 lives and 150 prisoners inflicted upon the enemy, the business men and wage earners of Minneapolis and the farmers of the State, an expense conservatively estimated at $1,000,000 a day for 6 weeks. An administration which sets itself above the law and ignores the fundamental principle of American institutions, namely, government by law, invites to the State by this very act all groups of persons antagonistic to the law, and no one will deny that Minnesota has been the mecca of communistic pilgrimages and notorious criminals from all over the Nation and Floyd their hero. And don't forget how Editor Howard Guilford had his head blown off with a shotgun immediately after he stated over the radio that in his next speech he would expose the Olson administration. You will remember that Floyd, new-deal wise, shoved your tax rate up 300 percent; and you will remember that he, like Roosevelt, sought and seeks to get control of our public-school system and see to it that our textbooks teach the communistic, fascistic doctrine, and his man Creel, then on the Farmer-Labor Leader, formerly with Appeal to Reason, the well-known communistic, socialistic paper in Kansas, had charge of the making of the textbooks to be used through the State education system. Creel has now been replaced by the communistic, socialistic State Senator Henry Teigen, as editor of Governor Olson's Farmer-Labor Leader, which with its misinformation is being distributed throughout Minnesota by the million, paid for out of the unjust 3-percent tax levied by the Governor on all his 15,000 State employees, which brings for slush fund, campaign purposes, bribery, hiring of Olson boosters, and general misinformation the tidy sum of about $45,000 a month. An Olson admirer last December informed me that Olson had a fund of a half million dollars already to be used in the campaign of 1936; and over and above all this, the Washington administration designates Olson as Santa Claus for Minnesota in 1936, as he was in 1934.

You will remember how, consistent with the Roosevelt international policy, Olson advocates a low tariff and ridicules the suggestion that a tariff will help the farmer, and as Governor buys matches for the State institutions of the State of Minnesota from Russia and Japan, instead of patronizing our own industry at Cloquet, and in the next breath he argues that the processing taxes are the farmers' tariff, which with a moment's reflection by any farmer will convince him that the processing tax eliminates his tariff protection. These actions are inconsistent and in direct opposition to each other.

That Olson is in with the Federal conspiracy to destroy our Constitution there is not the slightest doubt. He openly boasts of it and proclaims that he is radical as hell, and, apparently, like his leader Roosevelt, without a qualm of conscience advocates one thing and does the other. Whatever is popular at the moment he is for by voice, and also, like Roosevelt, his actions belie his promises. He is truly a "raw dealer" and is entitled to all the support he can gather from that particular brand of double-dealing duplicity. If we are not alert, if we do not exert that constant vigilance which is the price of liberty, our home and family ties, the right to worship God as we choose, liberty of speech and press and person, religion, may be things of the past, as in Russia, where the late Commissar of Education Lunarcharsky said: "All religions are poison. They put the mind to sleep and destroy it; they kill both will power and conscience. War to the knife must be declared against all religions. Our task is the destruction of all religion and all morality."

The President told me personally that no appointments would be made in Minnesota without his—Floyd Olson's—consent, and there is today an agreement between Olson and President Roosevelt that the President will support Olson and refuse support to any Democratic opponent, therefore it is of the highest importance to the people of Minnesota not to be misled by any camouflage of this coconspirator. For Olson to attempt to mislead the people of Minnesota at this late day by pretense of criticism of the administration for not being "leftish" enough is only camouflage and hypocrisy, and his and Upton Sinclair's and other Communists', Fascists', and Socialists' advocacy of a production-for-use plank fits right in as a hand in the glove and will be the excuse that Roosevelt and Olson want for bringing into full play these Delaware corporations and will be the passing of initiative, the denial of the right to grow in mind and in soul, the passing of the teachings of Christ that the individual in order to grow in understanding must have the right to choose between good and evil. The ambition of all mankind was voiced by Solomon when he was asked what he most desired, replied, "Give me a heart of understanding that I may discern between right and wrong."

Whenever you take away the right of individualism you remove ambition. When you regiment mankind, when you standardize the efforts of labor, you destroy freedom and retard the growth of the soul. In 148 years under the Constitution we became so accustomed to the enjoyment of civil and religious liberty, to being protected in our freedom of personal and property rights, to looking upon the Government as a protective force of our inalienable rights, our God-given rights, and now suddenly to have that Government impose the dictatorial will of little prejudiced men placed in authority over us without our consent is beyond the ordinary man's conception, for liberty to us has been taken as a matter of course, like the air we breathe and the water we drink and the health we enjoy. To have a complete revolution of our Government of laws to a Government of absolutism without our consent smuggled over upon us, under the protection of censorship and false malicious and hypocritical propaganda paid for by your money, is just beyond our easy comprehension, but nevertheless that is exactly what is stealthily being done and will be successful if you and your neighbors don't wake up and prevent its consummation by your votes in 1936.

Our people, docile, confiding, liberty loving, are accustomed to people who keep their oaths and their promises. Are the 22,000,000 on the dole and the over 13,000,000 unemployed ready to sell out their country? Will you and other good citizens still hanging on to your self-respect, your character, and your morals be shaken loose by our smiling President's war on recovery, though he in his Fabian characteristic calls it a "war on depression"?

The forces of dark and light ever contend. Every move of this administration has been to tear down and destroy. The killing of six and a half million hogs and the paying of from $5 to $15 for a $100 to $150 cow, the destruction of your livestock, the plowing under of cotton and grain, and the building up of an unheard-of debt of $56,000,000,000, in every way the new deal emulates the work of the bollweevil, the corn borer, the grasshopper, the drought. It is not recovery, but chaos this administration has sought, for only by the excuse of an emergency could he secure the dictatorial powers which he has secured from Congress—the powers that mean when the time has come through planned riot, strikes, and revolutions the excuse will be furnished for the mailed fist of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to take over. Financial chaos can only result in revolution. Our only hope of avoiding it is the immediate defeat of the ambitious conspirators trying their damndest to bring it about.

You will remember Roosevelt intimated when he came to the Presidency that he would, in all probability, be the last President of the United States. He didn't tell us that he intended to be the last President and the first emperor, but anyone behind the scenes watching his sinuous course of usurpation of power could come to no other conclusion.

The $9,000,000,000 in gold which he has unlawfully segregated to himself and has had laws passed by a spineless Congress so that no one may inquire concerning its disposition, he now arranges to put for safe-keeping in the caves of Kentucky, where it can be protected by a few picked regiments from the wrath of the people when they come to know the truth. Half the gold of the world, he hopes, will be enough cement to seal solid his emperorship. What he promises and what he does are always in opposition. The voice of Jacob soothes with a vision of more abundant life, but the hand of Esau grasps more power and more power, and the tyranny of government of men in opposition to the constitutional government of law drills with tyrannical heartlessness into the resources of those citizens yet independent of his dole. In order to insure chaos, desperation, and sear fear into the hearts of you American citizens, the first thing this President did was to usurp the power and close 17,000 banks—all the banks in the United States—15,000 perfectly sound.

Twenty-five days after he swore to defend and maintain the Constitution he sent to Congress, and drove it through the House without allowing it even to be printed, a bill that would have put a publisher in jail for 10 years and fined him $10,000 for daring to publish anything he didn't approve. This was the move that brought foresight to my eyes and drove from my soul the hope that this administration could mean any good, anything but sinister evil to our free speech, free press, free religion, representative government. Every subsequent move but confirmed this sense of impending danger to our Republic and determined me, despite the silence of those far wiser than I, to take the floor and do what I could, even though I must be alone.

In order to kill off resistance of the American independent business man and cow labor, he drove through Congress the so-called "National Industrial Recovery Act", the N. R. A., the National Racketeers' Association, built to give big, crooked business monopoly everything and nullify the already existing antitrust laws and vitiate his platform. This N. R. A. took from the people in higher prices, which is nothing more than a tax, over $12,000,000,000 in the 2 years it ran, and the little business man, along with the consumers, were the goats. Figuring the farmer a quarter of the population, he received in processing taxes not to exceed 30 percent of the billion-dollar levy and paid out under the N. R. A. $3,000,000,000.

The N. R. A. fitted well the international policy, as does the processing tax. The N. R. A. raised prices so that foreign products could be shipped into our country, and unemployment grew by leaps and bounds, so that today 9,000,000 more unemployed have been added since its inception. Barney Baruch, America's headman of the International Fabian Association, whom many believe to be the real President, and his crowd had purchased 1,800 factories, at a cost of $9,000,000,000, in foreign countries, so Barney's old associate and partner, General Johnson, was placed in command of the N. R. A. and began, with your money and mine, the hullabaloo of brass bands and Blue Eagle parades to crowd it down your throats, put a blue duck in every window instead of two chickens in every pot, and line the pockets of the foreign manipulators. This foreign policy was further extended by our President, who demanded of Congress, and got it, a treaty-making power whereby he could lower the tariffs to foreign countries at his own sweet will without interference of any kind, without even giving American industry a hearing. In his treaty with Belgium he lowered the tariff on 76 articles affecting 47 industries of this country, and we have 60 nations all told having treaties with us that include the favored-nation clause, which gives each one of these nations the same right, the same privilege, we give to any other nation by treaty; therefore, when a treaty is made with Cuba or with Belgium or Brazil or France giving them concessions, it immediately takes in the same articles of the 59 other nations; and so these treaties, in the reduction of our tariff protection, have aided and helped, together with the processing taxes, in building up the unemployment and added millions to the doles—and the planned chaos goes on apace.

If our President wanted recovery, he could get it in 60 days by placing a tariff, which he has the power to do, though unlawfully acquired, upon those things we make and raise in this country that would insure the production by our own people for our own market. Instead of that, under lower tariffs and processing taxes, he is giving away our market to foreigners while the planned consternation and chaos continue to grow. He has given Japan our textile industry, to Russia and Japan our match industry, and our match factory at Cloquet with 1,000 employees must go out of business; to Argentina our beef-raising industry; to Australia our hide industry, in short our entire farm production is being thus dissipated.

I have not space to go into detail of industries and agriculture ruined thereby but will take a word or so to explain the effect of shutting out just one farm importation. If blackstrap molasses were barred, the millions and millions of barrels of commercial alcohol used in this country would of necessity be made of corn or potatoes, and there would be no need of paying our farmers not to farm in one part of the country and then spending hundreds of millions of dollars in another part of the country to reclaim nonproductive land. All the corn and potato land we have in the country could be used and our corn sell around $1 a bushel if this one item were prohibited.

It will be shown by a letter I wrote to the President, December 3, 1934, that the makings are here for the greatest farm and industrial boom we have known:

"MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For the purpose of furnishing a working example by which a majority of the 10,000,000 persons now unemployed may be returned to profitable employment, without taking one dollar from the United States Treasury, the following list is a rough draft of how those people can be cared for within 6 months.

"By acting as England, Canada, Australia, Norway, and Sweden have done; that is, by stopping imports which compete with what we produce, we find we must reemploy the following:

"Two million persons to cultivate new corn land when blackstrap molasses is barred.

"Three hundred thousand miners to operate our copper mines.

"Two hundred and twenty-five thousand additional pottery and chinaware workers.

"One hundred and seventy-five thousand to make carpet, rag, and grass rugs.

"One hundred and fifty thousand fishermen and canners when these imports are stopped.

"One hundred and fifty thousand iron and steel workers.

"One hundred thousand persons to raise cattle now imported as frozen and canned.

"One hundred thousand silver miners, if we buy our own silver.

"One hundred thousand shoe workers.

"One hundred thousand to produce gunny cloth and gunny sacks now imported.

"Seventy-five thousand textile workers.

"Fifty thousand persons in electric lamp, toy, and novelty factories.

"Fifty thousand persons to can meats.

"Fifty thousand to produce cement and bricks.

"Fifty thousand manganese miners.

"Thirty thousand vegetable canning workers.

"Twenty-five thousand additional coal miners.

"Fifty thousand distillery and wine workers.

"All these people at this moment are on Government relief. With the power vested in you by the last Congress, Mr. President, you can raise the tariffs on all these articles and thereby return about 6,000,000 persons to profitable employment. It is reasonable to assume that this number of persons will employ another 3,000,000 to supply their wants. After that, Mr. President, we have no unemployment problem and no depression. I trust this matter will be given your earnest consideration."

Prosperity would be here today if this repudiating international administration would cease its policy of immediately attacking any enterprise that seems to prosper that is outside of the control of his favored international trusts. In the best of times our exports were only 5 percent of all our production. Today they are about 1½ percent. Ninety-eight and one-half percent recovery would be sufficient to make all our people prosperous and contented, but prosperity will not be allowed to come until this administration wants it, until it has things set to secure its ambition of permanent dictatorship, and until it can claim that recovery came only through such dictatorship.

I stood on the floor of the Senate day after day and protested and protested and pointed out what the administration was attempting to do to us. I was called "guerilla", a "buzzard", and a "traitor", but I kept on though the censorship of news out of Washington detrimental to this administration was almost complete. I made scores of speeches that are there in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be seen and speak for themselves. Had I had the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court on May 26, 1935, declaring the N. R. A. unconstitutional and unlawful before me, I could not have spoken differently than I did. All Americans should offer a prayer of thanks for the Supreme Court, not only because of the effect of the decision but because it was through this decision that the truth of what this administration was attempting to do to our Republic began to leak out, and it has only been since that decision that the people have been able to gather here and there the hideous truth that is staring them in the face by putting together this fraction of a speech, this part of a newspaper editorial, this remnant of a conversation. The event was so stupendous that even the well-planned censorship could not hold. All the people need to know is the truth and the truth will again, through their knowing how to cast their votes, make them free. Today, if those who called me "buzzard" and "traitor" are fair, they must now join with me under those cognomens the entire Supreme Court of the United States.

Every bill this session has passed has been outside civil service, contrary to his platform. Almost every bill this administration has driven through Congress has grasped more power, has been secretive in its execution, and surrounded by censorship. Every department today is clothed in secrecy and censorship. Written hand-outs carefully supervised are the only news. About 300 of the best newspapermen in the Nation have been employed at Government expense, contrary to any law, with salaries up to $9,500 a year. It is their business to insure propaganda and picture glowing dreams of what this benevolent administration is doing. Their stories are often of whole cloth, but mostly with half a percent of truth carefully tucked in for observation purposes. This stuff is printed at public expense and sent broadcast over the country under the Government frank. You can hear the voice of some Government propagandist over the radio every few minutes. The radio dare not refuse them. They have a license for only 6 months and that license can be withdrawn at any time and the Commissioners whom the President appointed can be fired at his whim. The newspapers tell as much of the truth as they can and live. The local banks are controlled from Washington through the administration's insistence upon having directors from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on their boards. If any newspaper dare get fresh and start telling the people too much truth the bank will hear from Washington and the bank will see to it that the newspaper gets good.

The administration has created some 57 bureaus, whose rules have the effect of law passed by Congress, contrary to his platform. These rules filled volumes and volumes and are nothing more nor less than the whim, fancies, and prejudices of some little dictator of the bureaucracy and men all over the country have gone to jail under their edicts.

The so-called "Communications Act" was a complete dictatorship as it passed the House under the gag rules and devious manipulations of the House by the President. The Senate succeeded in taking out a great deal of the poison, but there still remains in that bill the power of the President to declare an emergency, and then upon that declared emergency to take over every avenue of communication the people have in the country.

It is all set, every little thing has been attended to in this bill and that bill, and that is why we have been held here in Washington, to be sure that nothing has been overlooked to prevent when the time has come the permanent establishment of the coming empire. Everything is all ready for consummation of the great movement to destroy our Republic if only the election of 1936 comes his way. If need be, he can, under the communications bill, use the war clouds across the ocean as an emergency pretext to take complete censorship over every communication avenue in the United States to keeping his movements concerning what he does from the people.

The $5,000,000,000 appropriation is to be used in any way his own sweet will might direct for his own emergency in 1936. The indications that another five billion will be demanded next session is complete proof that he has no idea of allowing recovery until the stage is all set for his emperorship. Thus with $10,000,000,000 of the people's money to be spent for the emergency of his election in 1936 he feels quite sure that no mistake can be made, for the censorship of the real news and truth will go on, and anyone who attempts to break loose from the censorship will be persecuted by the devious ways that this Fabian administration know so well to perform.

My little daughter placed my finger on a hole made in the back of my car by a .45 bullet. The next day, between 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning, my barn was set afire and my two sons, who roomed over the barn, were nearly burned to death. The "raw deal" took occasion to send out through the press propaganda of my palatial residence and magnificent estate of some 320 acres, with buildings galore, and advertised that seven limousines were burned. The fact is that my magnificent estate consists of 7 acres, with an ordinary farmhouse with the usual smaller buildings, and the cars were junk that the boys had accumulated, not worth all told $300, and I purchased this magnificent estate and palatial residence for $4,500.

Further illustration is the persecution of the Republican Governor of North Dakota, William Langer, who vigorously opposed the sinister methods of this administration. Langer was framed through the connivings of Tammany Farley, Postmaster General, national Democratic committeeman, Democratic committeeman for the State of New York, patronage dispenser, and the personal representative of the President. By his appointee, the district attorney of North Dakota, with the assistance of the United States marshal, both appointees of Farley, a special grand jury and a special petit jury were selected from the Governor's enemies to indict and convict him. The juries knew what the verdict was to be before the pretended evidence was heard, and, upon insistence of the Farleyite district attorney, the Governor's attorneys were not allowed to examine the jurymen's qualifications. A conviction was inevitable, but recently the circuit court sent the case back for retrial and stated that there had been no Federal law broken and no State law broken. Again, thank God for our courts. But today, with Farley naming the judiciary, how long will it be before our courts are "raw dealish"? Special care was taken to provide for additional judges galore by the last Congress.

In order not to overlook any bets, the personal representative of the President caused the tapping of the Governor's telephone wires and his office rifled and contents carefully gone through, his mail opened and photographs taken. All this has been done to me so I know something about it. They haven't yet found anything with which to indict me, but they did have me up on my income tax, though my income is only my salary despite the whispered prevarications sent out profusely throughout Minnesota by paid mouths. The history of this case reads like the persecution of some common citizen of Russia. If enough Jeffersonian Democrats were permitted to vote their convictions in the Senate to allow an investigation in this matter, I am sure it would reveal some hideous crawling things beneath the surface of the propagandist news that the people are now fed.

If such things can be done to a Republican Governor and a Republican Senator who speaks unreservedly the truth, and there is at least another Republican Senator and a Democratic Senator, HUEY LONG, who has had similar treatment, what will be done to the common ordinary man when the full effect of this punishing, censoring regime reaches its full stride? They are drunk with stolen power and will stop at nothing. Already secret agents and informers are flooding and pestering the country. Seven million added to the Government pay roll. Under the direction of Farley and the President, the censorship and bedevilment and belittlement of me and my speeches in the Senate of the United States has been constantly carried on during these last two sessions of Congress with no other purpose than to depreciate and belittle the truths that they cannot successfully deny.

I want to say to you and want you to tell your friends that if you write me and do not hear from me immediately, you'll know that letter has gone into the hands of the censorship committee. Please tell your neighbors and ask them to write again—perhaps that will get by. I have always answered my mail promptly and if you do not get a prompt answer you'll know I haven't received it. My mail is being interfered with constantly. They have used every means by which to close my mouth. It is not the United States of America, it is the United States of Russia and our country is overrun with spies, manipulators, despoilers, racketeers, and grafters.

Hundreds of millions of dollars have been sent into Minnesota to accomplish my silence and see to it that such a cackling goose be forever kept from the Senate floor. This does not deter me, for money in plenty has been used before to that purpose but never before has the Federal Treasury been put to such an end, and used as a campaign fund, and it may be accomplished, but only upon the condition that the people of the great State of Minnesota are kept in ignorance of what is actually going on down here behind the scenes and my part in doing what I can to expose it.

I want to hear from everyone who is interested in preserving our Republic. I want your advice and moral support. If you don't agree with me write and tell me why, for it is in the very conflict of opinion of parties and men that lies the secret of our strength, education, and success.

The question for your decision in 1936 however camouflaged is, "Shall we have a constitutional government or a despotism?"

Faithfully yours,

THOS. D. SCHALL.

P. S.—I am herewith enclosing your letter which, because of its length, I have had printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Also the Tom Schall creed. I hope you'll consider these prints as a part of this letter and read them and after you have read them, I'd appreciate hearing from you.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1994) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

SUPPLEMENTAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the amendments to the deficiency appropriation bill were ordered to be engrossed and the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not desired to interrupt the proceedings this evening. I did not ask my friends to yield to me a moment ago when they were considering the matter of recessing until the House could send to the Senate the papers relating to the deficiency appropriation bill. There are a few things which have transpired, however, which the records show in part, which I consider it my duty to disclose fully for the future consideration of the country, as well as of Members of the Senate.

I wish to say first to my friends of this body, as well as to those who may not be politically friendly to me—and I hope most of the Members are my personal friends—that when the motion was made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to suspend the rules in order that we could protect the cotton farmer from the ravages of this administration, I undertook to assist the Senator from South Carolina to get two-thirds of the Members of the Senate to vote to suspend the rules in order that an amendment might be tacked onto the deficiency bill to protect the farmers against what had been ordered by the administration.

We did not have enough men interested in cotton in this body or sympathetic with cotton, I was afraid, to get the two-thirds vote to suspend the rules, so I approached Members on both sides of the Chamber who were concerned over this agricultural problem, and upon being informed that they were desirous of doing something to protect the wheat farmer, I urged them to join with those of us trying to protect all kinds of farmers, those interested in cotton and those interested in wheat, and told them that I thought we could mutually pass an amendment which would protect the cotton farmer and the wheat farmer.

It was with the combined votes of the Senators from the South and the West and a sprinkling from the East that we suspended the rule by two-thirds vote, and thereupon adopted an amendment, proposed in part by the Senator from North Dakota and in part by the Senator from South Carolina, that gave a substantial protection to the wheat and cotton farmers of this country.

Mr. President, after that amendment had been tacked onto the deficiency bill it went over to the other House of the Congress. I hope I may be permitted to state what happened in the other House, inasmuch as other Senators have so stated.

I have the RECORD to show that when the bill got over to the other House—and I speak only from the RECORD—it was not put to a vote of the House. There has never yet been an opportunity in the House of Representatives for the Membership of the House to say whether they do or do not favor the bill as amended to protect the wheat and cotton farmers. On the contrary, an ultimatum has in effect been served on the Senate to the effect that "Unless you withdraw an amendment which has been adopted to protect the wheat and cotton farmers, the House of Representatives will never be given an opportunity to vote on this bill." That is what has happened.

Mr. President, it is not a matter of legislative difference as between the two Houses; that is not what is before us. We are called on to decide whether or not there is such a thing as a republican form of government in this country, because one branch of the Congress has had an opportunity to vote, and, on the other hand, the situation is in such shape that at the other end of the Capitol a legislative branch of this Government is denied the right to vote on whether or not it wants the deficiency bill, as amended by the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from South Carolina, enacted into law.

Mr. President, we have come to a rather peculiar pass. My friend the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is not present. I ask that one of the page boys ask the Senator if he will not come into the Chamber, because I wish to mention his name, and I do not want to say something which might misquote him.

Mr. President, we have agreed to an amendment, and it has been sent back now because, as I understand from the RECORD—and I speak only from the RECORD and from what has been uttered on the floor of the Senate by others, and I presume I am therefore within the rules of the Senate, and if I am not, I will desist—I understand from the RECORD and from what has been said here that the chairman of a committee has taken the deficiency bill and has served notice in open session of the House that he will not report the bill with the amendment which has been placed on it for cotton and wheat. Therefore the great legislative body at the other end of the Capitol becomes impotent; it becomes functus officio; it is suspended; its members, who are sent here by the votes of the people, are not allowed to speak; it sits there almost like an Egyptian mummy——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think it is in order for the Senator to criticize the proceedings in the other House. Of course, I do not wish to interfere with his remarks, but there is a well-established rule, and I ask the Senator to discontinue that line of debate.

Mr. LONG. I will stay within the rule. However, more or less of what I am saying has been said on the floor of the Senate, but I will stay within the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. One violation of the rule does not justify repeated violations.

Mr. LONG. Very well, I will stay within the rule. I will not say that the House of Representatives has done anything.

Mr. President, I have had a great deal of advice concerning legislative proceedings, and I have given a little study to legislative proceedings which have occurred in this country in national and in State governments and in foreign governments and from my study I will say that once upon a time there was a legislative body, so I was told, not this body, however, in which I am now speaking—which declined to allow its membership the privilege of voting on whether it did or did not wish to help certain farmers raise their wheat and cotton, and in that particular legislative body to which I refer, making no mention whatever of anything which is concerned here, this particular institution was held powerless to permit its own members to say whether they did or did not want a protection given to the wheat farmer and to the cotton farmer which had been ordered by others interested in that subject.

I have always said that everyone had a code. I do not mean an N. R. A. code or anything like that. I am now speaking about respectable codes. It is said that every sort of element always has had a code, written or unwritten. Bankers have a code. Legislators have a code. And even those who are interested in ferreting out organized crime tell us that even the burglars have a code. Whether it is written or unwritten, nevertheless there is certain ethics that everyone lives up to.

We had an agreement here among the gentlemen of the Senate—not exactly an agreement, but I went over to the Senators who were concerned with the cotton amendment, and I said to some of them whose States are concerned with the cotton problem, "The only way we can save cotton is to get the help of the men who want to save wheat"; and so they joined with me and with the Senators from the States where wheat is raised, and we voted cotton into the bill, and we voted wheat into the bill, and provided a meager pittance of protection for the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer.

Lo and behold, a conference no doubt took place. I do not know anything about it. There might have been a thousand conferences which took place outside the Capitol today. Perhaps one at the White House, perhaps one at the Department of Agriculture, perhaps one at the Treasury Department; but a conference or conferences have taken place, and what has been the result? No wheat-farmer representative has been called into those conferences. The rendezvous knows nothing about the agreement which is going to protect the wheat farmer and afford him margin against the ravages of the elements and the markets.

Nonetheless an agreement has been reached, but they have not said "yea" nor "nay" about it; they have neither invited nor refused admission to any Senator who was undertaking to protect wheat, and therefore to protect cotton in order that he could protect wheat—they have not invited him nor told him anything about the agreement. But we find ourselves in the situation in which our partners have been left out in the dark.

Now, I desire to appeal to the Senators from the cotton-growing South. Senators from that section have done a grave injustice to the cotton farmers here tonight, and I am going to show them so in a moment. I do not intend to take up much time explaining this matter. You have done a grave injustice to the cotton farmers tonight; you have done a graver injustice to the cotton merchant tonight; and you have done a still worse injustice to other unprotected interests who are concerned with cotton goods, who have loaded up on inventories based upon a certain price plus processing tax.

All of those people you have thrown into the mire to sink or swim. And practically, you have done what? You have taken the word of Mr. Henry A. Wallace, when he said, "If this does not work, I will be the first to say so", and you have allowed him to say, "It has not worked. I have thrown the thing down. Now I want you to give me something else that I can do according to my ideas." That is what has happened, instead of having Mr. Henry A. Wallace come here and say, "I have asked for this thing. It has not worked. Show me the way to go home."

What Mr. Wallace should have come in with was this: After he had thrown down something that he urged upon the people of the United States, and then demanded, after throwing that down, that something else be done, the only message Mr. Wallace ought to have sent into the United States Senate was "Show me the way to go home." He is the only man who has not realized today, apparently, that instead of giving orders he ought to be taking orders.

My friend the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has not yet returned. I will have to propound a question and depend upon his coming back at a later time. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has announced that an assurance has been given by the Department of Agriculture that now they are going to lend 10 cents a pound on cotton. The Senator from South Carolina announced on the floor of the Senate, and another Senator on the floor of the Senate whispered in my ear that he heard it said to the Senator from South Carolina, that he was told by the President of the United States that we were going to have a 12-cent loan on cotton. The Senator from South Carolina who told us we were going to have a 12-cent loan on cotton, and who told us in effect that the faith had been broken, hears someone else saying that we have been promised 10 cents on cotton.

I want to know if the promise of 10 cents is any better than the promise of 12 cents was? If the promise of 12 cents was no good—and the only way we made them live up to anything at all was by a law that we were undertaking to pass—if it took holding this Congress in session last Saturday night—and I was one of the men that helped to do it—if the only way to make them respect part of their promise was to keep Congress in session on a 12-cent promise, then what more is the promise of 10 cents now worth than the promise of 12 cents was worth then?

My friend from South Carolina is not here yet. He has gone. I am speaking of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I am sorry he has gone, because I should like to look my dear friend in the face and ask him how much more he believes in this promise than he did in the last promise which was made? I would just like to find out what has occurred that gives us any more assurance that they are going to keep this promise than that they were going to keep the last promise.

What is the bill meant for, Mr. President? Why are we going to drop the wheat farmer? Do not forget that I say to Senators from the cotton States—and they have got to come back here again—this means a destruction. This means a 10-cent cotton market at the best. It means far less than a 10-cent cotton market in what its practical effect will be.

It seems that the men who have filled their warehouses with cotton goods and with cotton which they have bought at a price of 12 cents, plus the processing tax, have got to take the inventories and the cotton stocks they have on hand and revalue them tomorrow on the basis of 10 cents. True you have got in there what pretends to protect the farmer for 1935 crop only, but after that time the farmer must go into a market with a cotton crop which is going to sell away under 10 cents, but at the very best could only sell for 10 cents. In the meantime, while you are protecting the farmer from the eventual day that will not be long postponed, you have got the man with the cotton goods in the warehouse, with the cotton in the warehouse, with the cotton goods on the shelves, with the few bales of cotton the country crossroads merchant has bought and stocked up waiting, perhaps, for a better price.

That man gets nothing. I see nothing to protect. The farmers who have already sold their cotton this year, they are going to lose millions and millions of dollars. And the mills that stocked up on cotton at a price fixed by the Government including the processing tax, the merchants who have loaded their shelves and their warehouses with cotton goods, the merchants who have bought cotton and still hold cotton, and the gins and compresses that have loaded up on cotton at a price of 12 cents, and a processing tax fixed by the United States Government, have been condemned to absolute financial bankruptcy ab initio; it starts right now.

Now about this deficiency bill before I proceed a little further on the merits of this cotton and wheat situation, let me say when the Senator from South Carolina expressed some feeling that the failure of the bill to pass was going to be disastrous, we were told the other night by the Senator from Arkansas that the deficiency bill failing to pass would not hurt any thing much, that is, he said that the $4,800,000,000 relief money or work money, or whatever it may be called, would be sufficient—I want my friend from Oklahoma to hear this—and there would be enough money in the omnibus bill to take care of anything that was required under the deficiency bill. I hope that is true. The Senator from Arkansas is the man who guided that legislation through most of the way and, no doubt, knows what it means better than I do; and I therefore must agree with him and accept his word as he gave it to the Senate last Saturday night that if we should not pass the deficiency bill it would not deprive any of these several institutions of any of the needed money, for the reason, said the Senator from Arkansas, that the President has plenty of money in the $4,800,000,000 pile to take care of anything the deficiency bill was supposed to care for.

I assume the Senator from Arkansas knew what he was talking about; in fact, I am confident he did, because many others, including many newspaper reporters, had given me the same information. Therefore, inasmuch as the Senator from Arkansas has hastened in here with a motion, the effect of which would be that Senators would have to stand under the mouth of the gun and be heard for 5 minutes and no more, or else the Congress of the United States would adjourn; that is the same as saying that a deficiency bill does not mean anything or otherwise the Congress would not be told, "You have got to get out of here before midnight; you are such characters that the Capital City can no longer stand you." I do not know what has happened to Representatives and Senators, but there is a hurry to get them away from here. Now they all seem to think alike. I thought and I said it was a bad thing to let them come back at the begininng of the year; but they did not think so. I thought it was a bad thing to stay in session 30 days, 60 days, or 90 days, and now, after having experimented with things for 8 months, they have decided it is bad to have Congress stay here any longer than tonight.

Here is a bill on which the Membership of the House of Representatives has never been given the slightest chance to vote, and, nonetheless, we find that we are not going to be permitted to give them that right, but the Senate has got to recede. Mind you, Mr. President, I would not undertake to have the Senate of the United States keep the House and the Senate in session one moment if this matter had ever been submitted to the House to be voted on. Take this bill with the cotton and wheat amendment on it over to the House of Representatives and let the Members of the House vote on it; and if they vote it down, I will not ask that the House or the Senate remain in session a moment longer than that shall have been accomplished; but I decline to be stampeded and to be run out of the city of Washington, D. C., in order to prevent the House of Representatives on the deficiency bill from having an opportunity to vote on wheat and cotton being protected by the United States Government.

I am only contending for legislative government; I am only contending for constitutional Government. Take the bill tonight over to the House of Representatives as it went out of the Senate and give that House a chance to vote on it up or down, either way, and I will abide by the decision and consider whatever they do to be all right, but I will not have anyone tell me "You are not going to be allowed to speak more than 5 minutes because of the fact that it is not dared to trust the House of Representatives in the action it may take."

I read the statement given out by a friend of mine a while back in which he said that this was as good a Congress as has been in session for 30 years, and he was kind enough to say that the Members of the House in caliber were the equals of the Members of any other House in which he had ever sat. I hope I am not reflecting on the House when I say that its Speaker said that its Members were of as high a caliber in statesmanship and intelligence as the Membership of any preceding Congress in which he had ever sat. But, with all their intelligence, they have not been allowed to vote on this bill. That intelligence has not as yet been allowed to express itself, and we are asked to adjourn because if we do not there is a possibility that they are liable to have a vote in the House and the Members elected by the people will get a chance to say how they feel about this bill. That is the situation.

All right. We cannot do any harm defeating this bill now, but here is what we can do: We can say to the President here tonight that this is a legislative tribunal; that we have a republican form of government; that the Houses of the Congress elected by the people have a right to say whether they are for or against something; and we can say, if it takes 1 day or 2 days or 3 days or 2 or 3 weeks or 3 months, that Congress has a right to stay in session long enough for both Houses to say whether they do or do not want cotton and wheat or anything else protected in accordance with what has been adopted by one House.

I ask Members of the Senate, realizing that Members of the other House are listening to me, how will they feel when they go back home tomorrow morning and tell the people, "I was not permitted to say whether I favored the cotton and wheat amendment or not; I was not given an opportunity to say." What would their constituents say to them? I will tell you what they would say. Their constituents would tell gentlemen of the Senate and of the other legislative body, "Do you mean to tell me that you were a Member of the Congress of the United States and that you were not allowed to vote on whether you were for or against the cotton and wheat amendment? Is that what you mean to say?"

In the experience of Members of this body, I venture the assertion that never has anything like that occurred since they have been here. No one has told me that such a situation has ever previously prevailed.

Now I want my friends to think about that. I have not overpainted the picture. It may be that that is the kind of Government they want; I do not say it is. Without my losing the floor, because I have a few more remarks I wish to make on this subject before taking my seat, I will yield for any Senator to inform me if he advocates that as the kind of a Government we should have for the legislative department; that he agrees there should be a shenanigan in this body, as an example, that would prevent 96 Senators or 435 elected Members of the other body from saying whether they were for or against something. I ask my friends to think of this matter. I ask them have we had representative government in this Congress? I ask my friends from the State of New Mexico; I ask my friends from Utah, from Nevada, Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas, North Dakota, Idaho, Iowa, Pennsylvania, New York, is that the kind of legislative government, representative government, through the viva voce of the people's elected representatives we are going to tell them we have.

I am unwilling that the Democratic Party should go out of here tonight—a party that I helped to bring into power—and inform the people of the United States that it has concluded its session after 2 or 3 days of struggle in an effort to prevent the Members of one House from having the right to vote. I am unwilling to have this legislative body adjourn with that kind of a curse upon it. I am unwilling to have this body condemned in the West and in the South and in the East. I am unwilling, unless the men of this body and of the other body have concluded that they are firmly of the opinion, after due deliberation, that they want a government of the kind that hides the votes of the one House and prevents the expression of their will on matters prevailing at this time.

I want Senators to think of that. I heard yesterday in this body—not yesterday, either. It seems like it was only yesterday, but it was 3 or 4 days ago. I heard in this body a speech made by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], followed by a speech made by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I heard a speech which the junior Senator from Oklahoma made in which he recited the turbulent legislative struggles prior to the declaration of war in 1917. As I heard these speeches from these two Members of this body, the only two Members of the Senate who voted against the declaration of war in 1917, I thought to myself, "Is there in the American Congress left that kind of statesmanship, that kind of honor, that kind of courage that was shown by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?"

I wondered if the time would come when the lashing whip of the public press, the shouts from the streets of the munitions makers, and the clamor of the Chief Executive would be so strong that it might mean destruction to one's career and might even mean more harm than that—whether or not, beyond these two men remaining here, there would be found the kind of men who would stand up as did the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Nebraska in 1917 and vote their convictions.

As I listened to the remarks of those two Senators I heard the Senator from Oklahoma say, "I was one of the seven who declined to plunge the young manhood of this country into that vortex of blood 3,000 miles away and", said he, "it brought about an involuntary retirement for me of 10 years in my public life", later, however, I might add, to receive the vindication of a grateful people that when they were wrong he was right in standing for a principle in this country which meant more than any career in this body.

Tonight that principle is practically being fought all over again. Here we have a legislative situation more serious than prevailed in 1917. In it there has been relief promised to the people of the United States by the authorities in power, and that promise has been broken. If the words of honorable Members of this body can be believed, we had promises by the Chief Executive of the United States of America that there would be a cotton loan of not less than 12 cents and, according to some Senators, that promise was made to be given to this body and to be given to the country, and was so made and was so given.

According to the statements made here, the dew was scarcely dry on the promise that had been made when, lo and behold, the next thing we know an ultimatum was sent forth that instead of keeping the promise of 12 cents a pound as a loan on cotton, that promise would be reduced to 9 cents a pound as a loan on cotton thereafter, and the cotton market fell $7.50 a bale the moment that announcement reached the cotton exchanges.

Congress, acting through the Senate to begin with, took the matter into its own hands. They said, "We have trusted the executive departments to keep their word and they have not done it." They said, "We have trusted the executive departments to exercise certain legislative functions rightfully belonging to the Congress, and they have abused those functions entrusted into their hands. Therefore", said the Congress, "having been deceived, therefore", said the Congress, "having seen the power which we abdicated into their hands abused and discredited, therefore", said the Congress of the United States, "we will take back into our own hands the burden rightfully, initially, and properly resting upon the Congress, and we will prescribe by sacred legislative will what is to be the law and the rule and the custom prevailing in respect to cotton loans and other farm loans, in order that this kind of abuses shall not be reflected adversely upon the cotton farmers and the wheat farmers of the country." So we did.

Then what did we do? We could not adopt a cotton amendment by itself, as I have already said. There are not enough men here interested in cotton to have suspended the rule. One of the foremost advocates passed by my desk while we were debating the question of suspending the rule and I said, "Can we get the necessary two-thirds?" He said, "No; we cannot get the necessary two-thirds." Whereupon I engaged friends on both sides of the Chamber and sought to convince them that it was right that they should vote to suspend the rule, and further I gave them my assurance, after having communicated with Senators from cotton States, that if they voted to help us maintain what was necessary for the cotton farmer, we would vote with them to give what was necessary for the wheat farmer. Therefore we had the promise of the cotton to the wheat and the promise of the wheat to the cotton, and we got two-thirds of the votes in this regard and made it possible to suspend the rules.

I have not been doing any logrolling. I was simply arguing the merits of the matter. I was simply trying to convince Senators about the fair thing and the necessary thing for all sections of the country. I have never engaged in any logrolling since the last tariff bill was before the Senate, as Members of the Senate know.

However, the Representatives of the wheat farmers came with us, and the wheat men and the cotton men voted "yea", and the man who was not particularly concerned in either one of them voted "nay", and we suspended the rules.

Now, how do you feel? Even a burglar—and we are certainly not doing a burglar's business; we have been doing an honorable country-saving piece of work—but even a burglar with a partner who rob a box car in the night go off somewhere behind the mountain or behind a hill and take what they have gotten from their robbery and divide it, "one for you and one for me." Here is a case in which we are doing an honorable business. Certainly our code of ethics can be as good as the code of ethics of a burglar, and a great deal better.

Here we are, going in with the wheat people and the cotton people to save them from suffering an injustice, and then we are killed off by our opponents who say to us here, "We are willing to give you a part of the help you are demanding provided you drop the wheat men." To my astonishment and to my great regret it is a Senator from a cotton State who is called upon to announce some kind of an agreement through which wheat is unceremoniously, without a hearing, dropped entirely. The wheat farmer can get 3 cents, 10 cents, 25 cents, or 30 cents a bushel or whatever he can get. He has been left to sink or swim, mostly sink. The cotton farmer has been given a little toe hold on life which will last for a few months, and in the meantime the man who has bought his crop of last year is left to suffer and to die and to perish and to fail, and everybody has dropped his partners in this business and let them go adrift—why?

It would have been bad enough, gentlemen of the Senate, to have left the wheat men out in the cold if we had got our price. That would have been bad enough; but it is twice as bad to let half of our own people be destroyed, and drop wheat altogether. Then, again, it would have been bad enough to have dropped the wheat bloc if the House of Representatives, by a vote of that body, had voted down this amendment, or had been allowed to pass on this amendment; but I say, gentlemen of the Senate, Senators from cotton States, it is a terrible thing for you to make a deal that involves dropping the wheat farmer and taking care of a little bit of the cotton farmer's troubles—not all of them, by a whole lot—but involved in that trade is that the wheat farmer will not have a right to present his case to a vote of the elected Members of the House of Representatives.

You have done worse than simply make a legislative trade. You have not only made a legislative trade here but you have dropped those people, not in a legislative trade, and in such a way they will not have a right to have their case heard in court. That has been done, and that is not a fair way to do.

I can go to the Senators from the wheat States, the next time we have anything to do in the Senate, provided I am back here—I may not be back here. This may be my swan song, for all I know. I have to go through an election between now and the next time Congress meets, or about the time it meets, soon afterward. Probably I shall not get back up here; but, if I should, if the extraordinary and unusual thing should happen, and I should be reelected to this body by the people of Louisiana, I shall be able to stay on this side or cross over to the other side, and say to the man from the West and the man from the North, "I want you to help us take care of our people"; and when he says to me, "Will you help me take care of my people?" I can tell him, "Yes", and he will know that I am going to keep my word. He will know that the telephone that rings in the White House will not be music to lull my ears. He will know that whatever bargain he has with me—I do not call it a bargain, rather, whatever solemn understanding, based upon fact and virtue, he has with me—will be kept, and I shall be able to talk to those men.

The sad thing about it is that some of the men interested in this cotton question said to me, "Can't you talk to Senator So-and-so?" I said, "Yes; I can talk to Senator So-and-so." "Well, then, can't you talk to Senator So-and-so?" I said, "Yes; I can talk to Senator So-and-so"; and I could talk to them, and they would take my word. They wanted me to go to see some of them, and I did, and I gave them my word, and I thought I was giving them the word of our whole crowd; and, lo and behold, I understand from them that not one of the men who were interested in wheat was called into the conference today, when they decided to leave them out in the cold in order to give a little half-baked proposition to let the cotton farmer live about 8 months and then cast him into outer darkness, the like of which he had never seen before.

I can go back to these gentlemen, if I come back to the Senate, and talk this kind of a matter over. I want my colleagues on this side to be in the same place. I want them to stand up for the wheat men. I do not say you have to stand with them under all circumstances—no. I will, but you do not have to; but I say this, gentlemen of the Senate: The least you can do for the wheat farmer is to say, "I am going to give you a right to have your proposition voted on by Congress." That is all I am asking you to do. If you want to drop the wheat farmer, if you do not think his cause is just, if you do not think the principle is right, then I will yield the floor any moment that you want me to, and we will let this matter go back to the House, with instructions to be given by the proper authorities, from whatever source they have to come, and wherever they may be, in the House or outside the House, that this matter is to be voted upon by the elected Members of Congress over there. If the elected Members of Congress say they do not want this amendment, I, for one, am perfectly ready to say, "Take it off the deficiency bill if you wish. The Members of both Houses have had a right to vote; and whatever may be the influences affecting either one of the Houses, I do not care. That is none of my business; but give both Houses the right to vote"; and if they have had the right to vote, I will say, "These men have voted, and therefore it stands."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question which will lead to another question?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I understand, before we passed the Bankhead Act there was an understanding that the loan price on cotton should be 12 cents. I am not at all interested, save and except from the standpoint of fairness and justice. On Saturday last I asked the same question of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The answer was in the affirmative. Then, following that, I was informed that the policy now proposed by the administration was not in keeping with the promises made, and that 9 cents was the pegged price for cotton. Now I am informed, and I ask the Senator if he knows whether or not it is true that a promise has been made by the administration that the loan price on cotton shall be 10 cents. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. That is my understanding.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. LONG. I yield for another question.

Mr. McCARRAN. With that in mind, I ask the Senator one more question, and I ask it with a view of terminating this entire situation.

I wish to say to the Senator, preliminarily to my inquiry, that I have discussed this matter with those who, like himself, are primarily interested in the development of the price of cotton and the welfare of the cotton grower. I have discussed the matter with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], affectionately known by the sobriquet of "Cotton Ed", and I have discussed it with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Both of those able Senators, both of them interested in this industry, have expressed themselves to me that they were entirely content to go along with the promise that the loan price on cotton shall be 10 cents, and they have expressed themselves as willing to go along because they believe it is a step in the right direction and that it will lead to something beneficial in the future.

With that in mind, does the Senator from Louisiana not believe that we could well afford to take the promise of the administration, now given, undoubtedly, to the senior Senator from South Carolina and the junior Senator from South Carolina, and others who are interested in the great Cotton Belt of this country, and permit this proposed legislation to be enacted?

Mr. LONG. Let me explain to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before the Senator replies, I want the Senator to realize that I know nothing at all about the raising of cotton. The only cotton about which I know anything is the cotton in a shirt or the cotton in overalls. I do not represent a State in a Cotton Belt, and I am not familiar with the problems of the cotton farmers; but I am trying to familiarize myself with them, and I know the Senator from Louisiana is familiar with them.

Mr. LONG. Let me explain to the Senator so he will understand. The Senator from Georgia explained the matter this evening very well, and I will undertake to explain it in my language.

The price of 12 cents a pound on cotton is what is sought, and calculated in this whole matter is a processing tax, which has to be paid by the man buying cotton. As an example, a miller has been told by the United States Government, and the promise has been made, that the price of cotton is 12 cents a pound. That miller buys the 12-cent cotton, he loads up on it, he makes goods with 12-cent cotton, he stacks his warehouse full of cotton goods that are made with 12-cent cotton, and he is not protected.

When today they are notified that the loan value of cotton for 1 year only is 10 cents, the man who has paid the processing tax, who has been told that 12 cents is the price of cotton, who has been promised that, must, on his inventory and on his stocks purchased on the face of the Government, go into bankruptcy. It means the bankruptcy of the domestic miller. It means, on the contrary, that the foreign miller has clear sailing. He gets American cotton and foreign cotton at 10 cents, and below 10 cents, and his goods are therefore brought in, and bankruptcy becomes the lot of the domestic man, who took the word of the Government.

There is another thing: What they have promised is that they will lend 10 cents on the 1935 cotton, this year's cotton, and then that the cotton farmer from this time on will get 2 cents a pound bounty. That is how the farmer gets his 12 cents. But the store, which already has bought the cotton at 12 cents, or whatever the price may be, including the processing tax; or the miller, who has already bought the cotton at above the 10 cents by several cents, and the merchants who have bought cotton goods at this price—those men are left out in the cold, and the crossroads merchant, who buys 20 or 25 bales of cotton, paying the 12-cent loan and the processing tax, is left out in the cold, and has to take his loss. Nothing in this agreement protects the farmer who has already gathered his cotton and sold it at the market price which prevailed the other day, before it could go lower.

In other words, they have not provided against the bankruptcy of those people at all. They have just as much assurance as the man who grew a crop—and I call the attention of Senators further to the fact that this loan of 10 cents, and a bounty of 2 cents, can only prevail 1 more year, because it must go down next year if they are going to throw this on the market.

They have decided that the A. A. A. will not work, and instead of the Government taking the blow—instead of it taking the blow out of the fund it has accumulated—it has thrown down the men who have bought the goods and have taken their notes, and now must go into bankruptcy because they did.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is enlightenment that I desire, because a group of western Senators went along with the southern Senators to set aside the rule. We were zealous; we were earnest; we believed that the great Cotton Belt was being affected, just as we thought the Wheat Belt had been affected, and the western Senators voted with the southern Senators to set aside the rule just the other day.

So when I ask a question of the Senator who has the floor I do it, not to hold up the Senate or to take the time of the Senator, but rather to receive enlightenment.

It does impress me—and I should like to have the Senator enlighten me, and I want him to do it fairly—that this whole matter has grown out of a condition which has been brought about by what is known as the "A. A. A." In other words, I might refer to an expression by Jefferson, and I ask the Senator to answer me in the light of that expression, when he said:

> If we have to look to Washington as to when we shall sow and when we shall reap, some day we will be without bread.

Mr. LONG. That is correct; and we are without bread.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, cotton is not bread, but wheat is; and with that in mind, does it impress the Senator that we have gone too far in theory in keeping with the A. A. A. policy and that that has led up to this unfortunate situation?

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator expresses the case very aptly. We have, nonetheless, still tied the little cotton farmer down. We said to him, "If you did not plant cotton last year, you cannot plant it this year. You can gage what you can plant this year by what you planted last year." There may be a few exceptions to that, but very few. A man cannot start out now and plant cotton at all. He would have no market. However, the millman has to look to Washington practically for the plowing up and planting and the gathering of what he eats, as well as for the protection of the cotton which he is supposed to have.

The A. A. A. has fallen flat. Again I say to the Senate, "I told you so. I told you so." I said this thing would blow up. It has already blown up, inside and outside. There are not any hogs. A few days ago the housewives went over to the White House, I have been informed, and complained about the price of pork, and the White House spokesman, whoever he may have been, said, "The only way to reduce the price of hog meat is to raise more hogs." They did not say, "We went out and killed 6,000,000 last year to keep the price of meat up."

There is also the same calamity in the cotton-producing States. So where this fictitious pegging, which was going to raise the price, and all of this conglomerated scheme of things, which no one could keep in his mind, nobody knew head or tail or hair or hide—finally falls of its own weight, and the pitiful thing is that the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer are now being picked out to take the brunt of it.

Why do they not come in and say, "The whole thing will not work", and call in some of the sensible people who told them it would not work, and let us devise a scheme of getting out of this orgy of conglomerated misfits and misunderstandings.

Let them call me in, and I will tell them how to get out of this thing as they ought to get out of it. I can tell them how. Do not call one of them in. Call in some of us men who told them not to do it. Call in some of us who said that thing would not work, who tried to tell them how to fashion a plan that would work in this country, instead of this same set that is up there, which devised this outrageous scheme of things, and is now devising another plan, and when that fails, there will be another plan.

More farmers' homes have been sold this year. Some of them are out of their homes. They have their earning power reduced even below what it was in the Hoover year of 1929. The most that a farmer can make is 50 percent as much as the Hoover period farmer was earning in 1929. And he is getting only a 59-cent dollar, as against a Hoover 100-cent dollar based upon the gold content, according to the laws of Congress and the regulations of the Treasury Department.

That is the pitiable plight we are left in tonight, and our plight will be worse than that if in order to maintain that system of things we have got to keep the people's elected representatives from voting. Think of it! Think of it! "Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed?" Think of it! In order to maintain this hydra-headed abominable system of wreckage and ruin and starvation and pillage they have got to adjourn the Congress of the United States without letting the elected Representatives of the lower House have the right to vote. Think of it! The people's representatives will depart from here by midnight, and they will go home, and they will be asked by their people, "Why is it that you allowed this thing to persist? Why did you allow the wreckage to become a double wreckage?" And their representatives can only say, "Well, had we been allowed an opportunity to vote we would have voted with HUEY LONG, but we were not allowed to vote."

That is what they have got to say. The only thing I can say is that they did not want me to talk but 5 minutes, and I insisted that I had a right to talk. If you will not let our elected Representatives from Louisiana vote, then, bless my soul, their Louisiana Senator will talk for their vote. That is one thing he will do. [Laughter in the galleries.] That is all the right we have left. If you will give the eight elected Representatives of the State of Louisiana the right to vote—I do not know how they will vote; they are their own judges—but if you will give the eight elected Representatives of Louisiana the right to vote you will not hear another word out of me. They have a right to have their position known. They come here elected by the sovereign people of that State. They have a right to say whether they want this or do not want it, and they have a right to say whether they are to keep faith with the wheat Representatives and Senators the same as they are keeping faith with one another.

But, oh, no. What I am clamoring for here has become almost laughable. Think what the issue is tonight, Mr. President! I am contending for such a radical proposition that it will be laughed about in administration circles from now on. I am actually trying to give 435 Representatives a chance to vote on an issue before the Congress. Think of it! It is becoming almost silly. Think of it! There is no point of difference on the merits of the bill. I have not contended for that, because I believe I can take the word of the other House and the word of the Senate about that; but the only thing is that the Members of Congress are being strangulated tonight and denied the rights and the privileges and the prerogatives of elected representatives of a free people to say whether they do or do not want an enactment which has been passed by two-thirds of the Members of the United States Senate. That is the issue before us, and that is all.

I received some information over the telephone tonight. I said to a friend of mine today, "Who was it that got up this 9-cent loan?" A newspaperman, whom I know to be reliable, telephoned me tonight and said, "I have found out for you that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, has given out a statement in confidence, more or less, but nonetheless I tell you as a fact that Mr. Morgenthau says that this 9-cent plan was devised by Mr. Oscar Johnson, of Mississippi." I said, "Mr. Oscar Johnson, of Mississippi; that may be where he lives, but that is not where I know him to be from. If it is the Oscar Johnson, of Mississippi, that I know about, he was the manager for a chain of British plantations." The newspaperman said, "That is the same man." And so I am glad to confirm what I thought to be the fact. I knew this idea could not have been given birth in the brain of an American cotton owner, nor an American cotton planter, nor any American who understood the situation. I knew that the idea had foreign parentage; and lo and behold, the gentleman who was formerly a manager of a number of British plantations, and has lately returned from London, has given birth to this plan, and his brain child has become the adopted child of the A. A. A. of the good old United States.

That is why I am afraid for the 40 Senators and Representatives who are going to Japan.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is this the same Oscar Johnson who has charge of the cotton division for the A. A. A.?

Mr. LONG. I think so.

Mr. FRAZIER. He is the man who came before the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate at the last session and made the statement that because of the cotton program the farmers in the South were getting along better than they had been getting along previously. He said they were quite prosperous. I asked him how much they were making. He said the average farmer had made a hundred dollars clear that year.

Mr. LONG. A hundred dollars!

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Think about the farmer making $100 a year! And this man thinks that is doing well on the part of the farmer. He had been over there in London, England, before he made that statement. And he thought the cotton farmer was doing well if he made a hundred dollars a year.

That was Mr. Johnson's testimony, which I understood the Senator from North Dakota managed to elicit—that he thought the southern cotton farmer was getting along fine. My friend from North Dakota asked him, "How much is that farmer making?" And Mr. Johnson said, "Why, on the average about $100 a farmer." Think of it! This same gentleman takes another trip over to London. Possibly while he was over there they had one of these swell affairs going on, some sort of ceremony over there in the land of King George the Fifth and Queen Mary the Four-fifths, with dukes and earls and lords and other things. [Laughter in the galleries.] He comes back again and he decides that the cotton farmer who was making $100 a year for his family was getting a little bit too much, and so he cuts him down 25 percent and makes it about $75 a year; and now this gentleman, who has confounded his interest and his idea with the welfare of the British interests, comes back to America again and sits not at the feet of the Agricultural Department, but puts the A. A. A. at his feet and gives us more balm in Gilead by which for the next year or two he will only reduce the earnings of the cotton farmer a little bit, provided the wheat farmer is thrown out of the door at the same time.

Those men think they are doing the farmer a favor when they let him have the $100 in money a year. They honestly think they are doing him a favor. Oh, my friends in the Senate, you should have had to make some of the political campaigns I have had to make. You ought to have seen some of those foreign and even native plantation owners who honestly in their souls feel, when they allow a white farmer or a colored farmer $100 a year to live on, that he is getting along well, provided they themselves have sufficient prosperity to pursue their foreign trade and now and then introduce one of their daughters at the Court of St. James.

Mr. President, this man thinks $100 is a good income for the farmer. That is the brain child that we have here before us, and which we are discussing, and it comes from this same man who is willing to allow the farmer $100 a year.

Now I will speak of A. & C.—Anderson & Clayton, of the State of Texas. Mr. Clayton was up here at one time and said that the only way a man could tell what the price of cotton was going to be was to guess his mind. I was told that some time ago. The Anderson & Clayton people are a very large concern. They have been taken care of under this scheme of things. Such men as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] mentioned Anderson & Clayton and others are taken care of. But did anyone know that Anderson & Clayton have certain interests located in Brazil? Did anybody know that? Great American cotton factories, I have been told this afternoon by what I am confident to be very reliable authority, already have certain interests and have located in Brazil in order to handle the cotton situation, and the American cotton farmer is being dealt with from both ends at the same time. That is their condition.

Gentlemen of the Senate, it is not fair that I pursue this course without giving my friend from North Dakota and my friend from Nevada, who have informed me that they wish to be heard on this matter, an opportunity to speak. If they do not cover some of the matters that are affected by this situation, I can come back at a later hour and address the Senate further on this matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes——

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask one or two questions. The questions I hope may be sufficiently elucidated by the answers so that the Senate may be advised.

As I understand—and I want the Senator from Louisiana to know that I am very much unenlightened on the cotton subject—America today is about to enter into competition with foreign countries in the production of cotton and the manufacture of cotton textiles; and that competition, as I understand, has largely been brought about by the conditions that have grown up in the great Cotton Belt.

I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that it seems to me we cannot solve that problem in an evening; and, in view of the fact that this appropriation bill carries many appropriations most vital to the welfare of the Nation during the next 4 or 5 or 6 months, and in view of the fact that a study should be made of the problems which he understands and which many others of us do not understand, would it not be well, and would it not be in keeping with the Senator's very earnest views, to permit this bill to go through, with the understanding that has been recorded on the floor of the Senate by Senators equally as interested as is the Senator from Louisiana? Then, with the same assurance that I gave the junior Senator from South Carolina just last Saturday, which is of record here, I believe that the western Senators will join with the southern Senators to the end that their great product in the South shall not be abandoned.

I only make that suggestion in view of the hope I have that we may arrive at a conclusion here tonight and that the Congress may adjourn.

The senior Senator from South Carolina and the junior Senator from South Carolina and other Senators from the great Cotton Belt of the South being apparently satisfied, and believing that this is the best they can do for the moment, and further, in view of the fact that we would otherwise destroy some of the valuable work we have accomplished during this session of Congress, would not the Senator consent that this matter may go through, with the understanding that the amendment as to cotton and as to wheat may be dropped and the bill go on to accomplish its other results, with the idea that eventually we will come together for the benefit of the product in which the Senator is so much interested?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator in this way: If this administration is no more concerned with the welfare of the people than that it finds it necessary to adjourn the Congress tonight in order to keep the House of Representatives from voting on a bill, then, evidently, the administration has not anything to lose. If it is so concerned that it has got to adjourn the Congress for the sole purpose of keeping the House from voting, then, evidently, it has not enough illustrious statesmen that it thinks amount to very much to be lost by adjourning at 12 o'clock tonight. If it is so dead set on adjournment that it has got to get us out of town tonight, then, evidently, it has not got very much confidence in the Congress. What harm is to be done by the Congress staying here Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday? Representatives and Senators draw $10,000 a year whether they remain here or not; it does not cost the Government anything to keep Congress here. Congress is the only thing that goes on, anyway. But it is said the administration has got to adjourn the Congress, and the Senator from Arkansas announced that it would not affect any of the appropriations in the deficiency bill, because, said he, the administration will take it out of the relief money, the $4,800,000,000 already provided.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted the Senator to yield for a correction. I think the Senator did not intend to misquote the Senator from Arkansas, who said that he had been told that money might be available for some of the agencies provided for by the bill, but that he himself did not know from what fund they could be obtained.

Mr. LONG. That is all right. If he understands that they can get the money, it does not make any difference where they get the money if they get it. So it is all right; I do not mind. If the Senator knows the administration will get the money, then, that is all right.

Let me say further to the Senator that there was once a little battle at Lexington, Mass. The battle did not amount to much; it was a very small battle; but at that battle there was fired "the shot heard round the world", and it resulted in the freedom of this country. Also we have been told about other similar skirmishes that amounted to very little; but here is one of the most momentous affairs that have ever arisen in the history of this country. The Senate is about to decide tonight whether or not we have got legislative government. It is about time to decide it. We have got only one question before this body, and that is whether or not we will permit the administration to pass any bill that it wants, and, in order to do it, that it will be allowed to keep another House of Congress even from voting on something which it may or may not want. That body has the right to have this deficiency bill voted on, and the Congress then can get out.

Gentlemen of the Senate, do you know why the administration wants Congress out of here? It is because in the backwoods and out in the open spaces they are getting up in arms over what is being done to them in this Congress. They are tired of it; they are learning about what is happening here. The administration has got to get this Congress out of here tonight because tomorrow morning by 10 o'clock the wheat farmers will be getting their pitchforks and the cotton farmers will be getting their hoes and will begin to gather around and inquire; and the administration has got to get this Congress out of here so the farmers will know there is no need to get together, and so by tomorrow morning they will understand that they cannot do any good by demanding legislative government in this country. We have got to give them to understand that their cause is hopeless. That is why we have got to get Congress away from here. If it is not done, away up in the forks of Minnesota and away down in the panhandle of Texas there will be farmers who will get together tomorrow and telegraph their Representatives, "We demand, sirs, that our elected sponsors have a right to vote on whether or not we are to be protected."

That is why the administration wants to get Congress away from here. One of the best features of the situation is that it has indelibly fixed it in the minds of the people that the administration has kept the elected representatives of the people, Members of the other House of Congress, from having an opportunity to vote. I want it to be known from one end of the country to the other that this Congress will adjourn tonight over my protest; that I voted against adjournment, and that it was adjourned in order, and with the result that 435 elected Members of the other House of Congress might not be allowed to cast a vote on whether they would or would not give the wheat and cotton farmers what had been voted by a two-thirds majority of the United States Senate. I want it brought to attention that I am only making one demand, and that is that the Members of the Congress be given the right to vote.

I see my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I should like him to consider for a moment whether or not he feels this is a matter of proper legislative procedure when one man in one House of Congress stalls the entire legislative machinery and prevents action by that body, and the Senate recedes because the other House cannot act. Is that the conception Virginia had of a republic—Virginia, the mother State of the Union? That is not the conception I have gotten from my reading of what was promulgated by that first of all States. One man in the lower House of Congress has said, evidently acting upon orders that he got somewhere else, or maybe acting on his own initiative—I do not know——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator complains that one Member of another branch of Congress is preventing that body from doing what it wishes to do, but the able Senator is guilty of the very same vice here. One man in the Senate is preventing the Senate from doing what it wishes to do.

Mr. LONG. I am trying to prevent the Senate from going home.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate wishes to go home.

Mr. LONG. I have nowhere to go. Where am I going to go? I have no place to go! [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. I might whisper to the Senator where I should like to have him go.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, would the able Senator from Louisiana like to have some Senator tell him where they would like him to go? [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will suspend. The present occupant of the chair has not cleared the galleries since he has been Vice President, but he will do so unless the occupants of the galleries pay some heed to the rules of the Senate, which prohibit the occupants of the galleries from audible laughter or conversation or otherwise expressing their approval or disapproval of what is being said on the floor of the Senate.

We like to have you here as visitors, but in order that you may remain as our visitors you must observe the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does not the Chair think the rule might well be applied to the Senate also?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's suggestion is correct. The statement of the Chair applies to our visitors on the floor of the Senate as well as to Senators themselves. The Chair made no distinction intentionally.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in answer to my friend the Senator from Illinois first, and then I shall take the other Senator's question—the first shall be last and the last shall be first—as to whether or not I would be concerned in knowing where other Members of the Senate would like to have me go, I do not know, but I do know there is no good in sending me anywhere where there would be no improvement over my surroundings of the present moment.

As to the other question which has been asked—I forgot what the question was, but it does not make any difference. What is the principle at issue? My friend from Arizona, Mr. President, is probably the greatest student in this body. He studies too much sometime, though.

The Senate heard him on a recent Saturday deliver such an eloquent speech that his picture was printed on the front page of every newspaper and magazine, and his remarks were carried in extra-bold and large-sized type. The ordinary newspapers print their paper in 8-point type or a little bit smaller than 8-point type. The papers the following day after his speech printed the remarks of the Senator from Arizona in 10- or 12-point type, and printed his picture and made him nearly as good looking as he really is, and went on to say how the Senator from Arizona had shown that all the logic and all the things being advocated by the senior Senator from Louisiana were the turbulent kind of things and creatures that are washed up in storms at sea and hurricanes on the land.

Lo and behold, he had scarcely received all of that great amount of praise and publicity until about 2 days later the President of the United States sent a message here that the one thing to do was to redistribute the wealth of the country. It looked to me like the Senator from Arizona would never come back here again. I watched for him for 2 or 3 days to see what he would say.

That was a wonderful speech, absolutely obliterating all the logic of my argument from the face of the earth. I had pored over it for several days and it was so well studied and so carefully considered that I thought there would be no possibility of making any reply at all, when, lo and behold, the great gentleman in the White House saw fit to send a message here, the effect of which was to say that the Senator from Arizona did not know what he was talking about.

That is the kind of unusual thing that happens to a man in this body when he disagrees with my logic. It is a dangerous thing to controvert my argument in this body. The Senator from Arizona will tell you that the White House will rise to my defense almost in a moment. I warn my colleagues against becoming involved in that kind of situation.

Getting back to the question before us, I want to be told if I am not correct in everything I say here. I wish to propose a unanimous-consent agreement. I shall not propose one, but I shall propose to propose one. If I propose anything here I would probably lose the floor. I realize I am treading on thin ice. I am going to be mighty careful the balance of the night, so I am not going to propose any unanimous-consent agreement, but I have one in mind that I might propose if I could propose it without being opposed in having the floor again.

Here is what I have in mind. Let us take the deficiency bill which came from the House, which had been amended by the Senate, and send it back to the House of Representatives. Let them vote on it as amended. If they vote to take off the cotton and wheat amendments, then come right back here with the bill and we will pass the bill and all go home. But let us send the bill over there and let the House vote on it.

I challenge all sides and beg all sides, the high, the mighty, the powerful, to let the House have a chance to vote. That is all I ask. Take this bill and send it back to the House, and I will risk whatever I may have said. I will withdraw the splendid speech I have made here tonight from the RECORD and never have it printed if you will send the bill to the House and let the House vote on this matter tonight. Send it over there and let the House vote. Let them vote. Who is afraid?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator know the only opportunity the House would have to vote on the bill again would be for the Senate to vote on the motion now pending to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill, then vote on whatever subsequent motion may be made with reference to sending the bill back to the House in whatever shape the Senate sees fit to send it? Without that procedure there is no chance for the House to vote on anything more connected with the bill.

Mr. LONG. Of course, I am not going to charge the Senator anything for giving him some parliamentary advice, and here is the better way to do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The better way to do it would be for the Senator to cease speaking.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is wrong. Mr. President, I must call the Senator to order and ask him to get permission of the Chair to interrupt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky has no right to interrupt the Senator from Louisiana without getting permission of the Chair, although——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have just obtained permission of the Chair, and it was in pursuance of the colloquy that I thought I had the right to interrupt the Senator further. I apologize both to the Chair and the Senator from Louisiana if I have transgressed the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana is invoking the rule which has not always been invoked or respected when he has sought to interrupt.

Mr. LONG. I ask you, Mr. President, to "forgive them; they know not what they do."

This is what ought to be done; here is the way to handle this matter: Let the Senator from Arkansas ask me to yield for the purpose of withdrawing his motion to reconsider the vote; then let the bill go back over to the House and be voted on.

We need not befool ourselves about what is happening in the United States. There is no need of drawing a false curtain around the Senate and refusing to know what everybody else knows. We know that it is no trouble at all to get the bill voted on. That is a small matter. Nobody need tell me that he does not understand how that can be accomplished. Why be foolish? We all know what the situation is. I do not care. The main point I have in mind is that if the legislative body elected by the people want to take the responsibility of voting one way or the other that is their funeral. That is not my funeral. I do not care who is the guiding influence over them.

I do not care what is the motive. It is not any of my business to inquire into the motives of men in the other House. If they are given the right to vote, that is all I ask; but once they are given the right to vote, I have no further quibble or quarrel. If you will give the House of Representatives the right to vote, I shall have no further quarrel or quibble. I shall have no further right to complain if they vote it up or vote it down; but do not come in here and say, "We are going to recede." Why? "We are going to recede because the House has not had a chance to vote on this matter."

Well, let the Senate stay in session until the House does have a chance to vote on it. If the House wants this thing to go to its committee, let it go to its committee. We can wait here until the committee has an opportunity to report. If they want a report from the committee or if the committee does not want to report, then the House can take the bill away from the committee and vote on it; but we all know, gentlemen of the Senate, that if the whole matter is put up to them the House will vote on this matter; and what I am saying here is in defense of a legislative system which has prevailed in this country ever since 1789. That has been the system of government here since 1789.

I am interested in the Democratic Party. I do not want the Democratic Party to commit an act of political suicide. I tell you, Mr. President, it is mighty hard to keep a man from committing suicide. Whenever a man sets out to destroy himself, it is a very difficult matter to persuade him not to do it; and when a political party sets out to destroy itself it is an awfully hard matter to convince it that it ought not to do it. Never in my lifetime have I seen so many deliberate acts committed, apparently with no purpose whatever in mind except to destroy a party, as have been committed by the Democratic Party since 1933. Never have I seen any such designs of self-destruction inflicted upon a party as the Democratic Party has inflicted upon itself.

You come in with the N. R. A. It fails. The Supreme Court knocks it out. What do you do? You turn around again and begin to mouth because the N. R. A. has been knocked out, with all the destruction it has done. Then you come in with the A. A. A. It is practically admitted by its sponsors to be a failure. Then we stick around with it and try to carry along with that kind of proposition. Time after time have we seen these so-called "emergency experiments" fail, fall flat, a complete blunder on our part for having ever enacted them, and nonetheless we profit at no time by the mistakes we have made. That is what we are up against here.

I remember one time when I had a lawsuit with a Jewish merchant, and we compromised the lawsuit. I said to him, "Here! I will give you $125 if you will give me a receipt in full for this $800 claim you have against my client." He said, "All right; I will agree. I will take the $125." I said, "You will take my word for it, won't you, that I will give you the $125? I am a reputable lawyer here at the bar. I have not the $125 right now handy, but within a day or two I will mail you my check for the $125." He said, "That is all right; I will take your word for it." A few moments later, however, he began to talk to himself on how my client had swindled him, he claimed, in one way or the other, and finally he said to me, "Here; you want to settle that thing for $125. I don't know you as well as I thought I did. You are still representing that scoundrel. You go get me that $125 now and bring it back."

I want to say this: If you want this deficiency bill by 12 o'clock tonight, if you are in such a big hurry that you have to have it by 12 o'clock or not have it at all, then you let the House of Representatives vote on the bill. If you want the bill as badly as you claim you want it, I say to this administration: You let the House of Representatives vote on the bill. Evidently things have come to a pretty sorry pass if you have a bill here that you just have to have; but you will not have it unless you can get it without letting the House of Representatives vote on it.

That is a nice presentment we are making here of a legislative situation. We have to have this thing right now. Oh, it has to come; but we do not have to have it so badly that we can stand to let the House and Senate stay here any longer, and we do not have to have it badly enough that we will allow the House of Representatives a right to vote.

That is the situation. No, sir. There is a very important principle involved here. If you do not think so, you wait until you hear from the people out yonder in the open spaces. I know how what I was saying was looked on by my colleagues here two and a half years ago. I know my colleagues here, who were my good friends, advised me that I was going to absolute political destruction when I began to fight things this administration began to bring in here in the month of March 1933. I did not wait for the popularity to pass out to begin to fight these things and vote against them. I began voting against them on the 5th day of March 1933.

I know I was advised by my friends as I went along that I was traveling the course of political destruction. Now, how has it come out? The only persons who are worried about how they are going to come out are the ones who voted against me so steadily. I am not worried. It will not affect me a bit. I have not even got an opponent down there yet.

Think of it! Four months from now they will have an election down there, and I have not even got an opponent. Why, I am fixing to go up here to Pennsylvania to spend a day or two with my kinfolks, and then go over in Oklahoma to visit around over there a few days. I am having a high-heeled old time. I am going over there to the good old land of Oklahoma, where I went to the university for 6 months, or 5 months, or such a matter. I am going over to Oklahoma, because it is wonderful country. It is the country that produced the junior Senator from that State, who sat here and voted—one out of seven—against plunging this country into the World War; and, if for no other reason, I owe a trip to Oklahoma that I am going to take over there this year.

I have plenty of time—nothing to do; the election 4 months off; just having a high-heeled good time, and nothing to do at all. That is why I want these gentlemen to stay here with me a few more days—nowhere to go; nothing to do. Where will I find such company as I have had here in the Senate if they adjourn now—where?

There may be such talent elsewhere, but I know of none such to be found; not in my young life. It is a little bit early. The football season does not begin until the 28th day of September. I have a whole month. I should like to see the Senate stay in session until the football season starts, if it could be done; so let us stay here, if this is necessary. Why be in a hurry until these important matters come along?

When the important season arrives, then it is time enough to talk about getting out of Washington in such a hurry. But in the meantime, remember that I have friends in the House of Representatives, some friends and some enemies. I feel kind of like my old friend in Dodson, La., who joined the Baptist Church in a protracted summer meeting. The poor old man was kind of half-way kin of mine. He is dead now, poor old soul, and I know he has gone to his reward, and a good one. His name was Uncle Adam Andrews. He was converted there and joined the church about August, about this time of the year, and he was up before the congregation. The preacher said to him, "Uncle Adam, do you love all your neighbors?"

He said, "Yes, sir."

"Do you forgive all your neighbors everything they have done to you?"

He said, "I do. I love everybody. I love every neighbor I have. I love everybody."

About that time his son walked down the middle aisle, and Uncle Adam said, "Nearly everybody."

Well, Mr. President, I love nearly everybody over in the House of Representatives. I think a lot of them, a lot of nearly everybody over there. There are a few over there I should like to see out; but at that, taking them as a whole, they are pretty good fellows, all 435 of them.

Now, an old friend of mine, the Speaker over there, says the House has just as good a Membership as he has ever seen; and if that is the case, I would just as soon see the 435 looked on in a good light as any other, if my friend the Speaker knows what he is talking about.

But I do not want to go back to the people and say that I joined with the national administration of the Democratic Party at this particular time to scalp that body from having the right to pass upon legislation. Is this the right thing for me to do, when I found out that there was a Member over in that body who for some reason, I care not what—do I want to say, as the newspapers did, that the President of the United States did not want the House to vote? Then do I want to say that I gave my arm to that effort, to see that those 435 men were scalped of their prerogatives as legislators in this country? That is why I am undertaking to have the Senate draw its mind's eye tonight to this matter. That is what I am undertaking to do.

Many men who formerly sat in the House of Representatives now serve with distinction in the Senate of the United States, and in undertaking to take from the Members of the House prerogatives they have, the right to vote, I say the Senate of the United States is going a long way.

Let us get back to the merits of the matter. I want the Senate to understand that while there may have been times when I have been charged with having filibustered in this body, no one will allege that I am doing so tonight. I am speaking on the pending question. I am speaking on a momentous question, which can hardly be discussed in a day's time in full, and I believe I am gaining converts as I go along.

At first there were several men in this body who did not seem to appreciate that what the Senate was being called upon to do was to adjourn the Congress in order to keep the House from voting, but as Members of this body are listening to this speech and to my logic, I can see that a change is about to occur in the body, and that there is going to be a size-up of the situation if I continue here and I get the ears of the Members of this body.

There are more Members here now listening to me than have listened to me at any time during the whole year. Right now there are more Members of this body listening to me than have listened to me during the whole year since I have been speaking here, one of the largest attendances on this floor that I have ever had.

The Members of the House who have been hearing about this important matter being discussed over here are coming to the floor of the Senate and are beginning to think, these men with fine-looking countenances, who line the walls here tonight. I am looking them over. Every one of them is a fine looking man, everyone of them—as fine a set of men as I have ever seen—from their looks. Of course, I have not investigated them, and do not intend to inquire about anything but their public conduct, and not much about that.

Are you going to humiliate these 435 gentlemen? Well, there are 430, I believe; there are five or six lady Members. I want to tell you I will stake my reputation that if this thing is left to the House tonight the House will concur in the Senate amendments. I am willing to stake whatever little reputation I have ever earned, whatever I have ever been known for, I am willing to stake it all, that if you will send this bill back to the House and let the Members of the House vote on it, they will concur in the amendments of the United States Senate on the deficiency bill.

Why ask me to do more than that? Why would anyone ask me to do more than that? Some one might ask me to do something about the matter. Why ask more than that? I have only asked that the House have a right to vote, that is all.

I am not supposed to be talking to the Members of the House, and I am not; but after they listen to me addressing the Members of this body I want the Members of the House to go back on the stump and say to their people, "I was a witness to a Senator from the great State of Louisiana, I was a witness to a fight made by a Senator from Louisiana to give the House of Representatives the right to vote."

The only Senators standing here tonight asking that the Members of the House of Representatives be given the right to vote are the senior Senator from the State of Louisiana and the other friends whom I have with me, who have upheld our stand in this situation all the way through. We are the only ones left here asking for it.

I know, gentlemen of the Senate, that we make many mistakes for the sake of the party, and it is good that we should at times. Sacrifices in the name of the Democratic Party are great things. It is great to give one's life for the country, but it is still greater to give one's life for the party, provided you give the right kind of life.

I am willing that the Members of the United States Senate should give their political lives. They have that right; it is theirs; and if they want to give their political lives tonight, I am willing that they should do so. But I am not willing for them to sacrifice the lives of 435 innocent Members of the other House of Congress. I am not willing for the political existence of 435 innocent Representatives to be snuffed out without a right to resist. That is the situation to which I address myself tonight.

Ah, believe me, I know something about these boys; what kind of trouble they have when they run for Congress. Every school teacher, and every district attorney, and every judge, and every country merchant, and every Fourth of July orator in the congressional district has his eyes on Congress. There may be many a man in Congress who does not think he has an opponent, but he has just as many opponents as there are people in his district who have heard about Congress.

They have their eyes peeled on the Capitol Dome, which is lighted up by the electric lights at night, and which reflects the sunlight in the daytime. They have all heard about Pennsylvania Avenue, do not forget that. They would not think so much of it after they got here as they think of it before they get here, but everyone has his eyes on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LONG. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. Will this take me off the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course it will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	La Follette	Schall
Ashurst	Costigan	Lewis	Schwellenbach
Austin	Davis	Logan	Sheppard
Bachman	Dickinson	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bailey	Fletcher	Long	Smith
Barkley	Frazier	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	George	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gerry	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Gibson	McKellar	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Wagner
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Walsh
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	White
Caraway	Holt	Radcliffe
Chavez	Johnson	Robinson
Clark	King	Russell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, for the last 18 months or longer there has been a cry in the United States, which I do not assert of my own knowledge, that the Members of the Congress were largely controlled by the lash and whip of the Executive. I do not make that statement, but, as we all know, that statement is made every day. It was said that the Members of the Congress were voted under the lash and whip of the Executive.

Today what do the people say? Tomorrow they will say, "No longer is Congress voted by the Executive, but he refuses to let the Congress vote." How can any Member of the Senate go out and allow that to be said? It has been said that the Congress was voted under the lash and whip of the Executive, and now it will be said that the Executive will not let the Congress vote at all. Instead of having it said that the Executive compelled the Congress to vote, it will be said that the Congress was not even allowed to vote. Whether that is right or whether it is wrong I do not undertake to say, but that is the proposition today.

If this bill shall be sent to conference I will have no objection and I shall have nothing further to say. If the House of Representatives shall be allowed to vote on the bill I will have no objection and nothing further to say. But we are told that the wheat farmers and the cotton farmers of the country may have a majority of Congress wanting to do a certain thing for them, and that the wheat farmers can be turned out of the door altogether and the cotton farmers two-thirds of the way out of the door, and do it by a process that keeps them from even having the right to a vote in one branch of the Congress. That is the issue which faces the American people tonight. Am I afraid to have it said to the people of Louisiana that that is my stand? Not "on your tintype", not by any means at all, not in the slightest. It may be the belief of some of the 96 Members here, I do not know how many, that the time has come when we had better yield, sit down and quit. That is all they have to do to win. They do not care how long and how hard you talk if you quit when the time comes and if they win. They do not care as long as you quit, but when you do not quit it is a different proposition.

If they want to quit, let them quit. If they want to fuss, let them fuss. If they want a Government under which the Members of one House cannot vote, I want a Government under which the Members of the House can vote. I stand by the consequences until I shall bring this matter sufficiently to the attention of the Members of this body that they will stand with me for what seems to be a responsible Government.

How was this bill handled according to the RECORD? When the bill got over to the House the other night I had somebody watch it. I said, "Watch this bill. The rumors are around here that they are not going to allow the House Members to vote on it." I heard the rumor and heard conversations around here before we voted on the bill that there was a way to keep the Members of the House from voting or reaching a vote on it. Before we had even got the bill voted, when we had voted to suspend the rules by a two-thirds majority vote, it was said all around here that there was a way by which they could keep the Members of the House from having the right to vote on the bill.

How did they finally do that? I have the RECORD here in my hand. I can read it from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This bill got over to the House. The House did not vote on anything. The Speaker of the House under the rules of the House referred the bill to the committee. Mr. BUCHANAN, I believe, is chairman of the committee to which the bill was referred. I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here containing the proceedings of the House. Let us look at the RECORD and see what occurred. Here it is: Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. RANKIN, Mr. WOODRUM, then the Clerk read, then certain amendments were sent forward, then Mr. WOODRUM said:

I desire to be heard briefly.

Then the Speaker said:

That is the point on which the Chair desires to hear the gentleman.

Then Mr. RANKIN said something and then Mr. BUCHANAN:

Does not the gentleman understand that when that bill came back from the Senate, carrying $500,000,000, * * * the rules provide that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that they might investigate those amendments and report on them, and not be required in 3 or 4 minutes or 3 or 4 hours to pass upon that vast amount of appropriation to see whether it is justified or not?

According to him, as interpreted by the Speaker when this bill went over to the House, it was ipso facto referred to the Committee on Appropriations, of which Mr. BUCHANAN is chairman.

Whether I choose to ask unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table is a privilege that I have, and I knew that unanimous consent would not be granted.

In other words, he said, "Only I have the right to take up that bill, and I am not going to do it, and therefore this thing is going to my committee."

All right. Then they had a little more talk:

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The rules of the House and all of the precedents of the House provide just what should be done when a bill has been returned to the House with Senate amendments. Under the established precedents the bill must be referred to a standing committee, unless unanimous consent has been obtained to send the bill to conference or a special rule has been reported.

Now, mind you, the very same day this bill went back there, when the Speaker said that a special rule could have allowed it to be heard by the House, they had up a ship-subsidy bill there, giving some money to Mr. Vincent Astor and Kermit Roosevelt and Mr. Franklin, giving still more money to these men who put up $500 and drew down $6,900,000 out of Government subsidies, on $500, and one of them put up $110,000 on a promise, and drew down, I think, $4,900,000 in profits from Government subsidies, not including $2,100,000 that he charged off. They got a rule that day for that. Oh, that is a rule!

Here are two things that came into the House at the same time, the same day, the same way. One of them was to give 30 or 40 million dollars of the people's money to illegal, grafting subsidies that even Jim Farley said were fraudulent and irregular. Even Farley said they were no good.

They had the report of the Postmaster General, Jim Farley himself, saying that those contracts, out of which they had filched from the United States Government $6,900,000 on a $500 investment, and four million and some hundred thousand dollars on a promise of $110,000, were illegal and fraudulent. The committee of which Mr. HUGO BLACK was chairman came into the United States Senate and reported that the contracts were fraudulent and crooked and rotten. When the bill went over to the House of Representatives, by a two-thirds vote they refused to suspend the rule, and word came from the White House, "Hurry! Get a rule. Provide immediately to vote on the ship subsidy that is about to be canceled"; and, lo and behold, out came Mr. O'Connor, and said:

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which was considered today under suspension of the rules but failed of passage. It is a matter about which there was some confusion. It is a very simple matter and has nothing to do with ship subsidies. It merely extends the time within which the President can determine whether or not to cancel or modify the contracts. The President has before him this important situation: Many of these contracts will expire between October of this year and January of next year. I am authorized to say that the President feels he needs this authority.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Oh, Vincent is the boy who has the Nourmahal. Oh, he wants to go out on a fishing trip with Congress balked, and not allowed to vote on that bill! Why, he proceeded to knock the rule right out, and they put it through, and Vincent Astor went right out on the open sea with another contract in his pocket. Yes, sir!—and Mr. O'CONNOR was ordered by the White House to bring out the rule.

Ah, how wonderful it is to have a ship subsidy, and to have a yacht. Oh, my! But they came in there at the same time with a bill that gave the poor cotton farmer $100 for a year's work—$100 for a year's work—and that gave the poor old wheat farmer about 50 cents on the dollar for what he had been making on wheat. Did they get a rule? No! They backed up the United States Senate. They turned the clock back. They choked it down our throats. They ordered us to adjourn and get away from here, because we were about to interfere with this Government money, and there would not be enough to pay Vincent Astor by the time we got back the next time.

Oh, no! Fish for one and gourd seed for the other. Give them a little gourd juice. That is what this treatment is.

Well, it will not be long until 12 o'clock, and I shall be here. Remember that. Whenever you think the Congress of the United States is going to be perverted into an institution by which it can be commanded from the outside, and that you will pass any kind of a rule or regulation or whatever may be necessary, even when Congress has voted adversely on ship subsidies, but in the same breath that you will not only back up Congress but that you will back up the Senate and make it reverse itself in order to keep the House from even having the right to vote on whether or not the farmer is entitled to something, we will see about that thing; yes, sir.

Now, send word down to Louisiana and tell them I blew this thing up. Get me out an opponent down there. They have not got one out yet. Get one out. Let us have him. Let us see the color of his eyes. It is not long. We will try this thing out if you think I am afraid of it. No, sir! I will read these things. I will rock the "dad-gummed" thing from coast to coast when I get through. I will rock that thing so that you will hear it from one end of the country to the other. They had better let me alone down there with this thing, believe me! It is a good thing to let somebody alone with this kind of stuff going on.

Ship subsidy! Take care, my boys; you are liable to want to go out yourselves sometime. They are liable to take me out before the summer is over. I might go, for all I know. Why should not I have something to do with this thing with the Government paying out the money? Why should not I have a trip? It is a great system of government we have here—equality before the law!

I am astounded at some of my colleagues here. I am astounded that they will sit here in the United States Senate and permit this example to be made of the Congress of the United States tonight. I am astounded that they will allow a ship-subsidy contract to compel a suspension of the rules, when the House has voted adversely, for an outfit that has been pronounced to be a damnable fraud against this country by a committee of the United States Senate, and by the Postmaster General himself, and then at the same time they say that they will allow the same House of Congress to be defrauded of the right to have a vote. Go tell the people of the United States what it is all about. They are going to know what it is all about. I looked into those ship-subsidy contracts. I want to tell you something about them. I want you to know about them. It is a nice page to be read here into the RECORD.

My good friend from New York [Mr. COPELAND] looks around as though he wants to take issue with me, but he will not get a chance to reply tonight. You know, Mr. President, there is only one kind of man that is better than an honest and a truthful man, and that is the man who will take the slurs for his friends and his party; a man who will sit by and let them pour the oil on him until he can hardly stand it, and nonetheless he will rise up through all the slime, shake his head, and say, "I think we ought to vote it", in order to save his party and his friends. He is the only kind of man who is better than an honest man or better than a truthful man.

I want to tell you, I have seen some of my friends show caliber and virtue that I never shall be able to rise to. They not only rose to principle but they rose above principle, and they did it most magnificently. I will not say who they were, but there have been some terrible blows. I am going to give you my picture of the situation, and then let you give your own view and your own title to it.

As to this International Mercantile Marine business—the I. M. M. and the Dollar Line and the whole caboodle of them—I stood on the Senate floor over a year ago and told what was happening about them. There were being appropriated sums of money so unconscionably large that no one thought the Government would tolerate them even for half a minute.

I will tell what they did. They entered into an agreement, divided up the mail contracts, and by fixing prices, they were going to get their mail contracts. That is not a matter that is denied; it is a matter which is not only in writing, but they swore on the stand in the Black investigation that by collusion they had arranged the bargain, and that they had set the price. So far did they go that after they had let most of them in, they said, "We left out the United Fruit Co., and they have a liner over here, and we are liable to have trouble if we do not put the United Fruit Co. in for a little of this money." Whereupon one of them said, "We can draw the specifications with a certain route, fixing the length of the ship and the height of the ship and the term of service it has to run so that the United Fruit Co. will be the only one that can bid on that certain route, and they will get a piece of the change"; and that was done.

In my figures before I made a mistake, and I correct it. It is not very significant, however. One company obligated itself, it claimed; it did not obligate itself to any such thing, but it claimed it did, and let us take its claim for what it is worth. It claimed they would spend $110,000 getting itself fitted out for the business. Another company invested $500, and one of the men incorporating the company gave his note to the company for $499,000 and $500 more.

What did those two companies do? The man who gave his note for the $499,000, to himself, paid off his own note, depreciated the property he bought by $2,100,000, and had $4,900,000 left, from subsidies, in profits, above all expenses.

The man who put up the $110,000—he did not put it up, he claimed it was obligated to do it, he never put up anything to amount to anything—kicked in, and he made, after all depreciation and costs, six and a half million dollars.

Mr. President, that is just part of it; that does not half-tell the story. I have not all the figures, I cannot carry them all in my head, I remember only those I am stating. What did we prove? It developed that these contracts had been let under the Hoover administration, but we found in the files of those steamship companies and in the files of their lobbyists and their lawyers memoranda reading like this:

> We are at work to see that the men in charge of the Shipping Board are kept by the Democratic Party long enough to confirm these subsidies we have been granted, and we are at work on them.

There was in the files of one of these men a telegram, with a memorandum, supposed to come from Kermit Roosevelt, as follows:

> Mr. Vincent Astor and I have the party in charge on the Nourmahal, and everything is going to be all right. Nothing to worry about.

What happened? They were trying to keep Admiral Cone as head of the Shipping Board, and they did, and they kept in existence these illegal contracts, which they got through fraud and collusion. They drew the money by the millions of dollars, and, notwithstanding the fact that the Postmaster General said they were fraudulent and crooked and rotten, notwithstanding the fact that Senator BLACK and his committee said they were crooked and fraudulent and rotten, the rules were suspended in the House of Representatives on last Saturday in order to continue those contracts in existence, when they could not get it done otherwise. They brought in a special rule, and before they brought in that rule, they had already sent this bill over there to give the wheat and the cotton farmers these allowances. They brought in a rule and brought up the ship-subsidy measure after it had been voted down, and they would not allow the House to vote on the other matter at all, and brought no rule in.

Mr. President, that is government for you. If I have to be a party to that sort of thing in order to keep a seat in the United States Senate, then the Senate seat costs too much. I spent more to be elected to the United States Senate than I ever thought I would have to spend. My friends and myself had to put up around $30,000—lots of money. I would not have had to spend a cent, if I had just known it, but I was told by my opponents they had spent somewhere near a million dollars against me. I was down in Louisiana being lured by this ship-subsidy propaganda, being told that it was a great thing for the United States, and they got me to sign wires to Washington along about the time they were pulling off these things. They would write out a wire and I would sign it, as Governor of my State, and lo and behold, at the very time I was signing those wires, the Black committee dug up checks which they were sending back to the campaign committee with which to beat me for the United States Senate.

At the very time I was signing the wires asking the Government to give them a break, they were sending the money back just as fast as they got it in order to beat me for the Senate. [Laughter.] Anyone that smart is entitled to be taken care of; and they were.

They tried to suspend the rule in the House. They voted against suspending the rule, whereupon Mr. O'CONNOR came out and Mr. O'CONNOR said, "Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the White House they want this rule, and here it is, here is the thing"; and it just went over in the twinkling of an eye. The White House wanted it.

I do not go over there, but I am just the same as over there, and I say to them, "Here we are, representing the wheat farmers of the United States and representing the cotton farmers of the United States. We only ask that you let the House vote on whether or not these destitute cotton farmers and wheat farmers shall be allowed the mere pitiful subsistence that we have granted them in the United States Senate."

What do they say? "Oh, no, we are not going to let the House vote on that." They said they were not going to let the House vote. We revoked our resolution to adjourn, and what do we do tonight? We come in and say, "Withdraw the House amendment, and then we will let the House vote."

How are you going to let the House vote if you do not let the House vote on it, amended as it is? Are you going to let them vote on it if they take it over there without those amendments? Is not that a marvelous thing, gentlemen of the Senate, for these House Members to hear? We will let the House vote on this bill if you will take off the wheat and cotton amendment, but we will not let the House vote on the bill unless you take off the amendment.

Members of the Houses of Congress, think of it. Think of what is before this body tonight. We will let the Members of the House vote on the deficiency bill only provided the Senate takes off all the relief that has been given to the farmers raising wheat and cotton, but if you leave cotton and wheat in this bill we will not let the House vote on the bill. We will adjourn the Congress of the United States before we will let the House vote on it.

Put your heads in the sand and weep, weep, weep. It is time to weep, it is time to weep whenever the time comes that it is said to the United States Senate: "Here is a bill. You have an amendment on it. Take the amendment off and the House will be allowed to vote on it tonight, but unless you take the amendment off, we will not let the House vote on it, and we will adjourn the Congress of the United States."

It is time to weep, I tell you, gentlemen of the Senate. I tell you, I tell you the world, it is time to weep, it is time to weep.

Think of it! Do you call this government? The House is not allowed to vote unless there is stricken from the bill the crop-loan amendment and the House is denied the right to do what it wants to do for the farmers of the United States. "Why, Mr. Speaker", or "Mr. BUCHANAN", or somebody like that, we might say, "How about the ship subsidy? The House voted on that and voted "no." "Yes, it did." "Well, then, you brought a rule up." "Yes." "You brought a rule up saying that if the House did not vote right it should be made to vote right." But now the House Members are not permitted to vote on this bill unless the part of the bill which says the farmers can have some money on wheat and cotton is taken off.

Then I would say, if I had such a conversation—and I am now imagining that I have such a conversation—"You do not mean that you would let the House vote on the bill one way? Let the House take off the amendment if it wants to." But no, the House will not take off the amendment, and that is why they are not going to let the House vote on it, because the House will not take off the amendment.

Stand and deliver! Stand and deliver! Congress will not only be dominated, but will not even be allowed to prove that it is dominated. That is the situation. Gentlemen of the Senate, I tremble for the sake of the Republic. I tremble for the sake of law and order in civil government when we are faced with such monstrous possibilities.

Oh, we hide this thing in the nighttime. Here in the dead and dark hours of this night we undertake in the dark recesses of the Capitol to hide what is going on here in the Capital City tonight. Ah, Mr. President, on last Saturday night as I undertook to find some of the worthy gentlemen who were in charge of the destiny of this legislation—as I would undertake to approach one of them he would go around one post, and another one would go around another post, and I would dart into this alley, but he would go out some other way and I could not catch up to them. I was not even allowed to look the men in the face. I do not say there was a conspiracy. I do not say anything of the kind. I deny having said that. But what is to keep me from quoting a few lines from Shakespeare? [Laughter.]

> * * * O conspiracy,
> Shamest thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
> When evils are most free? O, then by day
> Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
> To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;
> Hide it in smiles and affability.

And so it is the Congress is sent away, and, laughing and gleeful and mirthful, Vincent takes the Nourmahal out, and sends word to the Duke and Dutchess of Kent, "I will be out on the briny deep shortly. Everything is hunky-dory now. Everything is rosy now. I am looking at the world through rose-colored glasses." The 435 dumbbells who threatened to do something for the farmers of the United States have been sent home. [Laughter.]

O Mr. President, that is how we got everything going. Yes, sir. I am pleading for the lives of those 435 innocent victims of this performance.

God help them when the next election comes around. What will be done to them? Some of those men are my friends. Some of those men I have campaigned for day in and day out. Through the long and dark hours of the night I have worked and fought for them, thinking of the time when they could go and serve a long and honorable career, and then when they have reached the declining years of life that they might sit in front of the fireplace, watching the fire glow, and say to their children and their grandchildren, "Your father and your grandfather were once honorable Members of the Congress of the United States. Those laws are a part of my handiwork", and thus and so.

On the contrary, those same children, who have been taught to read and write, as they are taught in Louisiana—they are given a free schoolbook out of which to learn, and a free school to go to, and a free bus in which to ride, in Louisiana—those children will say, "Oh no, look here. As we read these lines, as you sat in the Congress they permitted you to vote on a ship subsidy and you voted wrong. They made you vote again under instructions to vote another way, but again they declined to allow you even the right to vote."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not called the Senator to order for some 15 or 20 minutes, thinking his dramatic second act, or third act—whatever it is—would probably come to an end; but the Chair will say to the Senator that, under the rules of the Senate, a Senator cannot talk about the House of Representatives or the Members of the House as individuals. The Chair has heard the Senator talk about the House of Representatives now for the last half hour, and the Senator has mentioned the names of three different Members of that House. The Chair wishes to call the Senator to order in that particular.

Mr. LONG. All right, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes the Senator will not violate the rule of the Senate in that particular.

Mr. LONG. All right; then I will not say anything more about the House.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My point of order is that under rule IX a Senator who transgresses the rules of the Senate must take his seat until given the opportunity to speak by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has called the Senator to order only for the purpose of calling his attention to the fact that he has been violating the rules of the Senate for the last 30 or 40 minutes; but he seems to be putting forth a dramatic effort, and the Chair wanted him to get through with it before he called his attention to his violation of the rules.

Mr. LONG. All right, Mr. President.

I previously had mentioned to the Senate that I was quoting from the RECORD of the House, as my colleagues have been quoting all day. Now I will desist. What I have been saying has been said by my colleagues on the floor for 2 days. But I shall now forget, from this time on, that there is a House. I shall forget in my future remarks that there is such a body. If, perchance, I should make mention of another body, a body other than the one in which I am immediately speaking, I do not mean the House. [Laughter.] I have forgotten the House. The Senate must forget the House for the purpose of my remarks. I warn the Senate that henceforth in all of my remarks Senators must not consider that I am considering or even thinking of the House, or that there is a House, or even if there was a House, so far as I am concerned, that is over with. [Laughter.] I have quit that.

I have obeyed the rules and admonitions of the Vice President. And no longer, henceforth, will I disturb the troubled minds of the Senate or of the people of the United States with anything which occurred in the House. Never again will I say that. I do not know that I will even say it outside of the Senate either. I think when I leave here I will also say to the people, "I want to get accustomed to the rules of the Senate and, therefore, I decline to discuss the House with you." [Laughter.]

Let us now get down to more serious business. Let us discuss the merits of the question. I am soon getting to the point where I shall not have anything to talk about. It is getting to the point where one is limited as one stands here, and one cannot talk about this, and he cannot talk about that, and the aisle is getting very narrow, and the conversation that can be indulged in is pretty well limited.

I have never yet undertaken to place anything except the merits of the matter before the Senate. That is all I intend to do tonight.

Let us now go back to the issues of this case as they are best understood. It is now 9 o'clock. I have not talked here long today. For all I know this might be my swan song. I come back to where I previously was. What I intended to say many hours ago I shall now speak of. I will go back to my people in Louisiana, and I will say to them, "My platform is this: No. 1. That this Government is divided into three parts—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. In theory they are supposed to be three separate parts. That is the theory of our law.

Suppose I get elected to the Senate, and suppose I keep running after I am elected? I shall say to them, "As long as I am your servant I shall defend the system of republican government." I shall not say, as I contended in my State many times, that a Governor has no right to suggest to a legislature what it ought to do. I have never been one to believe that. I have never taken the position that a Governor or an executive does not have the right to make recommendations to a legislative body. There are some who take the position, and there are some States which have taken the position that executives, such as the Governor of a State and the President of the United States, kings and emperors of foreign countries, have no right to dictate, to suggest to a legislative body what it ought to do. I am not one of those persons. Under our republican form of government, it is generally understood that a Governor has the right to lay out a program, to make recommendations, to make suggestions, to counsel with the members of the house, to counsel with them in personam or to counsel with them collectively, as the case may be.

I am one of those who believe in that system of government. While I was Governor of Louisiana for 4 years—and there are about 15 of the Members of this body who have been Governors—there were times when I have made recommendations to the legislature. Frequently, every now and then, I would recommend to the legislature of that State something I would think would be good or something I did not think they ought to do.

That is not only the right of the President and of a Governor of a State but it is the right of the humble citizens. Since I have become a humble citizen of my State I have not hesitated to make public expression on laws which I thought ought to be enacted and with reference to laws which I thought ought not to be enacted. But, as Voltaire said:

> Though I disagree with what you say, I defend until the last your right to say it.

I must have quoted that correctly because the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] maintained a very calm expression when I finished the quotation. I have ways of telling whether I am right or wrong in my quotations. As I quote I watch my friend from Illinois. I have learned how to decipher his countenance. Without making a single motion to me I can tell whether or not I have quoted correctly. For instance, I was giving a historical reminiscence about the sacred geese the other day. I have a friend back here from Tennessee, the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], who had never heard of the logic of the sacred geese, but on reassurance from the Senator from Illinois that I was correct he subsided and ceased any further colloquy with me more or less under cover.

I am one of those who maintain the constitutional prerogative that every man has a right to be heard and every man has a right to speak. I do not know but that the Congress of the United States might not well sometime take a recommendation of the President or even of a newspaper or even of one of its own Members or of some outside man, whether he was or was not of influence.

I wish to place myself on record as saying that I am not one of those with the narrow idea that Congress should be confined in its activities to receiving no outside advice or outside information. But in my discussion before my people on State matters and on National matters—Ah, there is my friend from Tennessee. I thought he had gone.

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BACHMAN. The statement I made with reference to the Senator's reference to the sacred geese was that I had killed thousands of geese in Louisiana, but that I had missed one.

Mr. LONG. I believe that is right.

Mr. President, as I shall say to my people, my idea of a republican form of government is that whenever the time comes that the elected representatives of the sovereign people refuse to assemble within a reasonable time to pass upon laws about to be enacted, or under the laws and orders governing matters, or when any force or circumstance is exerted either by direction or indirection which prevents the legislative body of a State or of any other sovereignty from exercising those prerogatives, it ceases to be a republic. That is my view of the matter.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose?

Mr. LONG. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BONE. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor, but I should like to have the Chair advise me whether I am correct in assuming that our failure tonight to pass the bill will leave the Railroad Retirement Act a nullity by reason of lack of funds to execute it, and whether or not it is possible for the President to provide funds to carry out the provisions of that law which we enacted in behalf of the railway men and to provide funds for carrying out the provisions of the social-security law which are carried in this bill. If the Chair is unable to answer and the Senator from Louisiana will permit, I should like to have some Senator answer the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the question.

Mr. LONG. I will answer the Senator. I can give the Senator the information he wants.

Mr. BONE. I suspect the Senator possesses a fund of information, and if he can supply the information I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to do it. There is no one to whom I would rather give information than my friend, the Senator from Washington, because he has a facile mind and will quickly understand and grasp the significance of what I say.

I may say to the Senator from Washington that the President of the United States has $4,800,000,000 which he can devote to the purposes covered by the deficiency bill, and some other funds which are not being used, amounting to $1,500,000,000, which he can use for those purposes, and declarations to that effect or similar effect have been made on the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question, because I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator realize that in condemning others for not permitting another body to take a vote on certain provisions in the deficiency appropriation bill, he engages in a glaring inconsistency when he takes the floor and filibusters to prevent the body of which he is a Member, the United States Senate, from registering its will on a very important piece of legislation?

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to answer the question. If I should be permitted to read the RECORD, I could answer it a little more carefully.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator can answer the question "yes" or "no."

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes; I could answer it that way, but the trouble is that the Presiding Officer previous to the one now occupying the chair has ruled that even the remark of the Senator from Arkansas and his question are out of order. The Senator was not here at the time. The ruling was that I could not mention the House nor anyone in the House or anything done in the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas has not mentioned the House.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Arkansas did mention that I was not obeying the rule in that I was mentioning things done in another branch.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; in another "body", which is entirely within the parliamentary law.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator for instructing me.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, I think, by evading a direct answer to the question, admits that he is doing the inconsistent thing which he charges others with doing.

Mr. LONG. No; the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. How can the Senator justify himself in wasting the time of the Senate by a prolonged speech, designed for the sole purpose of denying to the Senate the opportunity of registering its will? Is it not true that he is doing the very thing he condemns?

Mr. LONG. No. I want to answer the Senator. He has asked me a question, and I will not yield further, because I wish to answer the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; the Senator will certainly yield.

Mr. LONG. Not until I have answered the question. I want to answer the question.

The Senator from Arkansas was on the floor of the Senate August 24, Saturday night, and I am reading from his remarks. The Senator said this at page 14518:

> Mr. ROBINSON. No; no formal message. The fact is that no action has been taken on the bill since it was returned to the House, and no action is contemplated unless it be to refer the bill to a committee.
>
> The Senate would have no official information of such action unless the House saw fit to send a message, which, seemingly, it does not intend to do.
> I am offering no ground of offense to the other body. I am simply apprising the Senate of the situation in order that the Senate may take such action as it sees fit to take. If we wait for a message from the House of Representatives on the subject the hour of adjournment will arrive, and we will have adjourned without any action being taken on the bill.
> I think I ought to add that it is my information that the officials charged with the administration of the several measures mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina will not be prevented from functioning. My information is that means will be found to carry on the activities authorized under those various measures. Details as to how that is to be done I cannot state, because I do not know them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question within my parliamentary rights.

Mr. ROBINSON. Since that statement was made—which was entirely correct and is correct—it is my information that the Comptroller General, who passes finally upon the question as to the right to expend other funds than those carried in this bill for the administration of the various acts described by the Senator from Washington and others, has indicated to Members of this body that in his judgment there is no fund available for the purposes stated.

Now, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. LONG. Go ahead.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Congress shall not pass the deficiency appropriation bill, carrying items for old-age pensions, old-age insurance, crippled children, railroad pensions, and the dependent blind, it will be 4 months, will it not, if the Comptroller General's informal expression of opinion shall be registered as a formal opinion, before any of these measures can be carried into effect?

Mr. LONG. I will answer the Senator by saying that if the Senator was wrong the other night, as his question would indicate, the thing for the Senator to do is to move to reconsider the vote by which he has undertaken to adjourn Congress—that is, assuming that he is unable to get the other House of Congress to vote on this bill tonight.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas was not wrong when he made the statement. Some of the executives, the administrative officers, still feel that it would be possible to set up the organizations carried by the deficiency bill for the purposes I have just mentioned. In view of the facts I have described, does the Senator desire to prevent for 4 months the administration of the old-age-pension law, the old-age unemployment provisions, the arrangement for crippled children, for railroad pensions, and for dependent blind, just because the Senate happens to have an unwritten rule, which no other deliberative body on earth permits to exist, which allows a Senator who takes the floor to talk just as long as he pleases, on any subject he chooses, and which rule, so long as he does not indulge in disorderly statements, enables a Senator to retain the floor, and, under the circumstances which now exist, permits him to defeat the enforcement of wholesome legislation? Is it the policy and desire of the Senator from Louisiana to continue his remarks until the hour of 12 o'clock shall arrive, and thus defeat the enforcement of the legislation I have mentioned? If so, how does he justify that action on his part when he professes to be in favor of the legislation I have described? How does he justify that action on his part when he declares that one of the fundamentals of a republican form of government is that the branches of the Congress shall have the opportunity of registering their will on legislation?

Mr. LONG. I have to answer about seven or eight questions, and I will answer them.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator may speak from now until midnight, if he is determined to do it, to answer any of them or all of them.

Mr. LONG. All right.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I should like to have the Senator answer first——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. Have I the floor now?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, the Senator has the floor, but he has yielded.

Mr. LONG. I have yielded for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I should like to ask him to answer first the question whether it is his intention, taking advantage of the rule of the Senate I have described, to talk until midnight?

Mr. LONG. Now, I wish to answer the Senator in the order I wish to select.

Of course, I have here in writing the remark of the Senator that this will not prevent anything from functioning; that is, that he had been advised to that effect by administrative boards. That is no. 1.

If the Senator is right that it is necessary to pass the bill, then I insist that the bill ought to be passed. It is said that the Congress cannot for 4 months function on this matter, and nothing else can function, though we were advised to the contrary the other night, and I have been advised to the contrary from other sources which I thought were pretty reliable. It is my opinion of the act, reading it as it was enacted, that they can use that $4,800,000,000 for anything they want to. There is not a limitation of any kind or character in the act. Find any limitation at all. If you will find me any limitation in that act, then I shall be guided by it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. LONG. No; I will not yield right now. Wait until I get through. I will yield a little later.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not wish to make a misstatement?

Mr. LONG. I decline to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has made a statement, if he will pardon me, that I know to be erroneous.

Mr. LONG. Well, if the Senator wishes to ask me a question, let him go ahead.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has said that the $4,800,000,000 carried in the work-relief joint resolution may be used for the purposes of this proposed legislation. That act is limited to providing employment.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; and that is all there is in any of these measures—employment.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator rests his conclusion on that statement, he is entirely wrong.

Mr. LONG. Hand me the act. I will read the act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, please do not do that! [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LONG. No; let me get through. Then I will yield. It will take me only a little while to answer the Senator—about 3 or 4 minutes—and then I shall be through, and I shall be glad to yield to my friend from Nevada.

That in order to provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President—

"Work relief." At the time the bill was up I read here that in order to provide relief you did not need anything else in the bill, you did not need another word in the bill—"That in order to provide relief." You can strike out everything else, and there is not a thing on earth that you cannot use that money for.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator maintain that if the Railroad Pension Act had not been passed the President could have paid out of the work relief fund railroad pensions which the act contemplates? I know the Senator will not maintain that.

Mr. LONG. It is a little broad to say that, but inasmuch as the railroad pension bill has been passed, it certainly can be used for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator maintain——

Mr. LONG. But I have not been able to get through answering the Senator. I wish he would let me get through answering him about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. A point of order. I will not yield at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. Now, I want to complete my answer, then I will yield to my friend.

If this is true—and let us for the sake of the argument concede that it is true—if we cannot do anything except this bill be passed, then I for one insist by all means the Congress ought to pass it tonight, or that Congress ought to stay in session until the bill is passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LONG. I do not yield; no.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has again——

Mr. LONG. I refuse to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, can I get protection from the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. Very well. The point I wish to make is this: Let us assume that the last exposition of the Senator from Arkansas is more correct than the exposition he rendered here Saturday night. Circumstances alter cases. Therefore I join with him in saying, by all means let us pass this bill. By all means let us pass the bill. It was sent over to another branch of the Congress, which has not voted on it at all up to this time. We called for it, and brought it back to the Senate. But we assume that the only way a bill can be passed in another body is by providing that we would eliminate what some Member of the body says must not come before it, or what someone else says must not come before another body.

Why not let the bill be passed on? You are here saying that you need this law. Why do you not let the Congress vote on the law, if you say we need the law?

Who is it that has kept this bill from being voted on?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. Who is it that has kept this bill from being voted on?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for me to answer that?

Mr. LONG. No; I am asking myself a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I will answer it, anyway. It is the Senator from Louisiana who is keeping the Senate from voting on the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I will not yield to anybody for anything.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Chair whether or not the Senator from Louisiana has a right to refuse to yield for a question just because of the fact that he is afraid to have the question propounded to him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to refuse to answer.

Mr. LONG. Yes; and I decline to yield to anybody until I get through. I ask not to be interrupted at any time by anybody. I do not want any questions, except that I will yield now, as I promised, for a question, to my friend the Senator from Nevada, having previously promised to yield to him.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in furtherance of my question, I desire to have the Senator from Louisiana realize that, while I agree in the major premise of his argument, to wit, that Congress should vote on all measures, let me draw the attention of the able Senator from Louisiana——

Mr. LONG. I can yield only for a question, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield to anything but a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not the Senator from Louisiana realize that the House of Representatives has had an opportunity to vote on this bill, and that they could have voted on it had they seen fit to do so?

Now, one more question. This is a kind of a double-jointed question. Does not the Senator from Louisiana realize that all of the measures involved in this important bill must fall because the $4,800,000,000 cannot apply, because, further, the $3,300,000,000 which we appropriated in 1933 cannot apply, and therefore all these important measures, including the Railroad Pension Act, and all others, must fall if the Senator persists in his effort?

I desire to say to the Senator now, if he will permit me, that I have always been sympathetic with his view, and I am stating that I am a Democrat, and I know he is, and I believe that both Houses of Congress should vote on this measure, but that when the House of Representatives refuses to carry out its own prerogatives the Senate cannot force it to do so.

Mr. LONG. I wish to agree to everything the Senator says. The Senator says that he believes both Houses have a right to vote, but he says that the House of Representatives has refused to vote. Now I shall read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if it is within my right, to show that the Speaker and the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ruled that the House did not have a right to vote, and would not be given the right to vote. If I establish—and I want my friends to stay with me—if I establish from their own lips that they said that the House of Representatives had no right to vote, and would not be given a right to vote, then I want him to stay with me. I shall read from the RECORD. Have I the right to read from the RECORD regarding that matter, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator has the right to read from the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator is asking a question of the Chair, however, the Chair will answer it.

Mr. LONG. Very well. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD about this matter:

> Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman understand that when that bill came back from the Senate, carrying $500,000,000 more appropriation than the House bill carried, and new legislation as well, the rules provide that that bill should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that they might investigate those amendments and report on them, and not be required in 3 or 4 minutes or 3 or 4 hours to pass upon that vast amount of appropriation to see whether it is justified or not. Whether I choose to ask unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table is a privilege that I have, and I knew that unanimous consent would not be granted.

Mr. RANKIN then said:

> I do not agree that it is the privilege of the chairman of the committee to paralyze a bill that the Congress has passed on and that now depends upon adoption or rejection or ironing out of the amendments on the differences between the two Houses. This is a matter that involves the integrity of the House.
> Mr. LEHLBACH. If the Chair desires to hear me, I will state briefly what the situation is, as I see it. The point of the gentleman from Mississippi is this: If the course of action under the rules of the House can only be taken by unanimous consent, and if that unanimous consent is sought or granted, the matter automatically becomes a question of privilege. That is so insane that there is not any sense in arguing it.

In other words, he stated that what the Senator from Nevada has said is so insane that there is no need to argue it. What did the Speaker say about it? The Speaker stated as follows:

> The Chair is ready to rule. The rules of the House and all of the precedents of the House provide just what should be done when a bill has been returned to the House with Senate amendments. Under the established precedents the bill must be referred to a standing committee, unless unanimous consent has been obtained to send the bill to conference, or a special rule has been reported and passed upon by the House, providing that it shall be sent to conference.
>
> The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to section 3108 of volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, which reads as follows:
>
> "A House bill returned with Senate amendments, involving a new matter of appropriation, whether with or without a request for a conference, is referred directly to a standing committee and on being reported therefrom is referred to the Committee of the Whole."
> As the Chair has stated, it was the duty of the Chair to refer this bill to the Committee on Appropriations, the standing committee having jurisdiction of it. That practice must be followed unless the chairman of the committee or some Member of the House should obtain unanimous consent that the bill be sent to conference, or a special rule is presented making disposition of the bill. In this case no request for uanimous consent was made. It is the custom of the Chair always to recognize the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the bill in question. Neither has a rule been presented. The Chair fails to see how the integrity of the House proceeding has been violated in this particular instance. The Chair does not think that, under the guise of a resolution presented as a matter of privilege, involving the integrity of the House, the established rules of the House can be overturned. The Chair does not think there is a question of privilege presented by the resolution or that there was anything in the action taken with reference to this particular bill violative of the integrity of the House or its regular proceeding.
> The question as to whether or not we are now in the closing hours of a Congress, the question of the importance or unimportance of these appropriations and the legislation contained in this bill are matters with which neither the Chair nor the House, under its established rules, has anything to do at the present moment.
>
> As the gentleman from Texas has said, there is a reason for the practice of the House in referring these bills to the standing committees where unanimous consent or a special rule to the contrary has not been obtained. It is, of course, manifestly for the purpose of giving to the committee an opportunity to examine the amendments and report back to the House its recommendation as to whether or not those amendments should be agreed to or disagreed to.
> The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia.

If you send this bill over to the House tonight, even after taking out wheat and cotton, still they will not have to hear it if this same gentleman does not want it heard.

What more have we, I ask myself—and I answer the question—what more have we to show us that the bill will be considered over in the House tonight than we had last night? What more is there before this House tonight than there was last night to show us that they will permit the bill to be heard over there? What have you before the Senate tonight to show you that the other body would allow this thing to be voted on any more with the farm amendment taken out than with it in the bill? I ask somebody to tell me, if they can, if it is within the rules of the Senate, what more have you got before you to show that the House will permit this thing to come up tonight than you had the other night? Here is the rule. Now will somebody get up and say, "Mr. BUCHANAN told me he would let it come up"? If he should, it would be the same as saying that Mr. BUCHANAN is running the legislative machinery.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the Senator from Louisiana to order. The Senator is asking certain questions. If he wishes the Chair to answer, the Chair will do so. The Senator has no right to refer to the House of Representatives. The Chair has called his attention to that rule before, and does so now for the second time. The next time the Chair calls the Senator's attention to it the Senator will have to take his seat.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I asked if I might read the quotation from the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Senator, after having read the quotation, referred to the Member of the House, using the name "BUCHANAN."

Mr. LONG. I read from Mr. BUCHANAN'S statement, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Senator also referred to Mr. BUCHANAN, aside from the quotation.

Mr. LONG. I referred to these remarks, which I read with the permission of the Chair. I hope the Chair will accord me the privilege, after having given me permission to read the remarks of Mr. BUCHANAN, of asking what reason there is to say that the same Member of the House would not make the same statement tonight. I appeal to the Chair to tell us, after I have asked the privilege of reading from the RECORD——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is familiar with the rule of the Senate—it has been called to his attention a number of times—with reference to referring to an individual Member of the House of Representatives, or to the House of Representatives itself in its procedure. The Senator did ask the Chair if he could read the RECORD of the House of Representatives. The Chair thinks he could; but the Chair does not think the Senator ought to speak with reference to the Membership of the House, or of the House itself, in a derogatory manner. That is in violation of the rule of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not done so.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. In behalf of an outraged Senate, may we not have the rules of the Senate enforced, as the Chair has twice seen fit to call the Senator from Louisiana to order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair tries to be liberal in the administration of the rules; but he has just remarked to the Senator from Louisiana, so far as the Chair is concerned, that he has twice tonight called his attention to the violation of the rule. If any Senator or the Chair himself calls it to the Senator's attention again, the Senator will be asked to take his seat, and a vote will be taken as to whether the Senator may proceed in order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Under the rules of the Senate, when a Senator is called to order he shall take his seat, and the question shall then be put as to whether he shall be permitted to proceed in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the rule.

Mr. CLARK. The rules of the Senate provide that the Chair shall, or any Senator may, call a Senator to order for transgressing the rules of the Senate. The Chair simply performs the duty imposed upon him under the rules of the Senate; and I suggest that under the rule the Senator from Louisiana is required to take his seat, and the question should be put as to whether he shall be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Chair has not called the Senator from Louisiana to order. There is a way in which he may be called to order, and the Chair has not called him to order. What is more, the Chair has merely admonished the Senator and stated that if he had to be called to order again the Senator would have to take his seat. There is not any short-cut in this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has stated the situation. The Chair was trying to admonish the Senator from Louisiana to stay within the rules of the Senate. It is rather a harsh thing to call a Senator to order and have him take his seat and have the Senate vote on whether he shall proceed in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana has transgressed the rules of the Senate in his reference to a Member of the other body. I raise that point of order, and under section 4 of rule XIX of this body I ask the Chair to rule that the Senator from Louisiana must take his seat and permit the Senate to vote on the question as to whether or not he shall proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Louisiana will take his seat. The question is whether or not the Senator from Louisiana may proceed in order. The occupants of the galleries will be in order, or else the galleries will be cleared.

Does any Senator desire to make a motion as to whether or not the Senator from Louisiana shall proceed in order?

Mr. MINTON. I make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senator from Louisiana shall proceed in order. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the Senator from Louisiana will proceed in order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, having propounded a parliamentary inquiry which I thought gave me the right to answer the Senator from Arkansas, I must decline to be interrogated further, because I admit that in answering these questions about another body I am liable to transgress the rules of the Senate. I therefore cannot accommodate my colleagues by answering those questions. Furthermore, I decline to use the expression "the other body", because even that, while it does not transgress the rules of the Senate, does violate in my own mind what this matter contemplates.

Let me say this: Who can say that anybody or any court is going to pass one thing or the other? I cannot tell you what any other body is going to do. I can only tell you what we ourselves do. I have no lamp to guide my feet. If anybody wants to point out, in order to do himself a service without its being held chargeable to me, and the Chair rules it within the rules of the Senate that any Member of this body may make the point or give us proof that anything we have before us will become a law in one way better than the other, I am willing for him to show it, if it is allowable under the rules of the Senate. I am willing that he shall do it; but I will not take a chance of illustrating something that might transgress the rules of the Senate. I will not do that.

Perhaps this bill will become a law more readily with the farm provision out of it than in it. Perhaps it will. I do not know. The present motion pending before the Senate, as I understand, is to reconsider the vote by which we adopted the Byrnes amendment? Is that what is now before us?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator makes a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair, the Chair will answer it. Does the Senator make a parliamentary inquiry? Does the Senator submit a parliamentary inquiry which he desires the Chair to answer?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LONG. I want to know what is the pending motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending motion is that of the Senator from Arkansas to reconsider the action by which the Senate passed the deficiency bill.

Mr. LONG. The next thing we would have to do, if we should reconsider the final vote by which the bill was passed, would be to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] as amended by the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] was adopted.

Assuming that motion was agreed to, then we would have to move to reject the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. That would mean we would reject the amendments relating to cotton and wheat, and then we would have to move to engross the other Senate amendments, read the bill the third time, and then, if we passed the bill, that would send the bill out of the Senate. That is the parliamentary situation I suggest we would have to go through in order to get the benefits contemplated.

What good is that going to do? What good is it going to do?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question only.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator asks what good it is going to do.

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question only.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that this bill carries an appropriation to put into effect the Railway Retirement Act?

Mr. LONG. I have been told so.

Mr. CLARK. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that this bill carries an appropriation to put into effect a grant to the States for old-age pensions for old people?

Mr. LONG. Yes; that is what I have been told.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is familiar with the fact that this bill carries an appropriation to aid the blind?

Mr. LONG. Yes; and the needy.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that the bill carries an appropriation to put into effect the act to aid the crippled children of the United States?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that if he succeeds in his filibuster, those crippled children and those blind people and those old people will not have the benefit of these appropriations?

Mr. LONG. My understanding is that the bill will have to be passed by another body.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that the bill cannot be passed by the other body if he succeeds in his filibuster and the Congress adjourns at 12 o'clock midnight tonight?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill has already passed the other body. This is a House bill. That is how the Senate gets jurisdiction of it.

Mr. LONG. But the Senate has added other amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, but the proposal would be to rescind the action on the amendments.

Mr. LONG. Not all of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendments which are known as "the cotton and wheat amendments."

Mr. LONG. What about the others?

Mr. ROBINSON. The other amendments would probably be concurred in by the House and the bill passed.

Mr. LONG. How do I know that?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am telling the Senator.

Mr. LONG. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have that assurance.

Mr. LONG. Where?

Mr. ROBINSON. From Members of the House.

Mr. LONG. Who?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator doubts the statement I am making——

Mr. LONG. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator understands there is no chance to pass the bill unless we take the action that is proposed, and that if he shall continue to talk until midnight the bill will be defeated. The House can adjourn at any time, and if it does adjourn before we have sent the bill back there and given them an opportunity to concur in the remaining Senate amendments after the two mentioned have been eliminated, even if the Senator discontinues, all the Senate can then do is to pass the original House bill without any Senate amendments. If the Senator talks much longer, it will mean, if he then yields to a vote on the bill, that the only thing that could be done would be for the Senate to strip the bill of all Senate amendments and pass the House bill as the House originally passed it.

Mr. LONG. I want to rehearse this little conversation we have had as I get it. The Senator from Arkansas has said that the bill cannot be passed with the farm amendments on it, but it can be passed without them. I said, "How do you know?" He said, "I have been told." "By whom? Who has the right to tell the Senator from Arkansas?"

Mr. ROBINSON. I am informed, if the Senator will permit, that a motion will be made to concur in the Senate amendments. The House does not have to do anything if the Senator succeeds in defeating the Senate amendments by his filibuster. There is nothing remaining then for the House to do.

If the Senate had an opportunity to vote on the bill, there would probably be 1 vote against the passage of the bill in the revised form, and that would be the vote of the Senator from Louisiana. Does the Senator from Louisiana know that he stands absolutely alone in his effort to defeat this bill? Does he understand that all his colleagues, without regard to politics and without regard to the side of the Chamber upon which they sit, wish to pass the bill, and that he alone, by what may be termed arbitrarily employing the privilege of debate, is seeking to defeat a very wholesome measure?

Mr. LONG. Now, I want to answer that question. I am not undertaking to defeat the measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why will not the Senator let us vote on it?

Mr. LONG. Let me finish. I do not want to yield until I get through. My friend from Arkansas knows I have lots to answer.

I do not want to defeat the measure. I want it to pass. I am trying to find out with only such light as I have, and light has not been given to me yet. There are a number of amendments on the bill. I have the RECORD here. The RECORD does not show the House voted on it. I have read the RECORD. The Senator from Arkansas has said a motion will be made to concur. How do I know but what a motion would be made to concur if it should go over there as it is? Who has said in any body other than this motions will be made to concur in one form and will not be made to concur in another form?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Sentor if he does not realize that whatever may have been said by anyone in any other body, it is wholly impossible for us to expect that other body to act upon the measure unless the bill goes there, and that it is clear it will not go there unless the Senator ceases his filibuster, and that it is also clear that the Railway Retirement Act, in which thousands and hundreds of thousands of men are interested, will be deprived of being set up for their benefit if he continues his filibuster; that the appropriations for the needy blind cannot be put into effect; that the appropriation for crippled children will be destroyed by the Senator's filibuster; that the appropriations for the aged poor will be destroyed by the Senator's filibuster?

It is difficult to believe that the Senator should continue the filibuster when he knows, and is bound to know, with his intellect, that his filibuster will succeed in preventing those laws being put into effect under this bill?

Mr. LONG. Now let me answer the Senator. I hope I shall not be interrupted again, but I will appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to withdraw the motion pending here and let the bill go to the House. I shall be glad to yield the floor in order that the motion the Senator from Arkansas has made may be withdrawn, and then the bill will be hastily sent over to the House.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LONG. Just a moment. No; I do not want to yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator wants to filibuster and defeat the bill.

Mr. LONG. No; I do not want to filibuster.

Mr. BLACK. That is the result.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary, I am trying to save the last phantom form of republican legislative government that is left in America.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is trying to defeat the bill which carries the appropriation for crippled children, and the blind, and the needy poor.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no! I voted for this bill, and everything that is in this bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator may have voted for it, but now he is trying to kill it.

Mr. LONG. I voted for it, but do not fool yourself: I know what this bill has in it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; not until I get through.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LONG. Pardon me just a few minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. Just a few minutes. Then I will yield to my friend from Nevada. I always keep my word.

Here is the point. Let us get this bill over to the House as quickly as possible. There is one man in this body who can get it over there. If the Senator from Arkansas asks me to yield for the purpose of withdrawing his motion, so that the bill may go back to the House, I will yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows that we passed this bill, sent it over to the House, and it developed that the bill was to be referred to a committee, and that no action was to be taken, because the Senate had incorporated in the bill certain amendments which made it necessary, under the rules of the House, to refer the bill to a committee.

Does not the Senator know that the only way to pass this bill now is for him to sit down in his place, stop wasting the time of the Senate and the country, and give the Senate an opportunity to register its will on this matter? Does he not know that he is standing alone in preventing the Senate from acting by the employment of a rule of the Senate which proceeds on the theory that a Senator will not abuse his privilege, and that he may speak just as long as he chooses?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to answer the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question to my friend from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator from Louisiana were assured by his friends here that the policy would be carried out whereby this bill would pass, save and except as to the cotton and wheat amendments, as to which certain agreements have been arrived at, would the Senator then yield to a motion so that the legislation might be enacted?

Let me be explicit in regard to that. Other than the cotton and wheat amendments, on which agreements have been arrived at, would the Senator yield so that certain motions might be made here, and the bill passed, and the agreements on the cotton and wheat amendments carried out pursuant to their terms? Then could we go on?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in just a moment I will yield to my friend from Wisconsin. If I am permitted to answer the question, I will say that if, by action of the House, it be shown that the cotton and wheat amendments are undesirable to that body, I will instantly yield, that the bill may be passed without them. If there be any action of the House showing that they do not desire the cotton and wheat amendments, I will give up at once. I will yield instantly so that the bill may go back to the House for action by the House to see if they do not desire cotton and wheat. If they do, and the House does not want it, I will not stay here a second.

Now, I yield to my friend from Wisconsin, for a question, of course.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to refer for just a moment——

Mr. LONG. I yield only for a question, because otherwise I should lose the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire for a moment to refer to the question which the Senator raised a few moments ago; namely, concerning his desire to know upon what authority the Senator from Arkansas referred to the fact that——

Mr. LONG. Just a moment. Mr. President, have I a right to yield to this?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No one has called the Senator to order. If that should be done, the Chair would hold the Senator out of order; but no Senator has done that. Therefore, the Senator from Wisconsin may proceed.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was referring to the question raised by the Senator from Louisiana a few moments ago as to the authority of the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator to assure the Senate that the amendments, aside from the cotton and wheat amendments, would be concurred in by the House.

I wish to ask the Senator whether he does not realize that if the House should fail to concur in the Senate amendments, other than the cotton and wheat amendments, inevitably the bill would have to go to conference, and therefore it would still be in the control of the Senate. So may I ask the Senator this further question: In view of that situation, would not the Senator be willing to permit an opportunity to be had by the House to vote on the question of concurring in these amendments, which are so vital to those who are concerned—namely, those who are engaged on the transportation system of the country, those who are interested in the Railroad Retirement Act, and those who are interested in old-age pensions? If the House should refuse to concur, the matter would inevitably have to go to conference, and the bill would still be in the control of the Senate, in case the outcome should not be satisfactory to a majority of this body.

Mr. LONG. Now let me answer my friend from Wisconsin. I am surprised that he does not hold up my hand here tonight. I am surprised at my friend from Wisconsin. I am going to answer him. No; the answer to the question he asked is "no." I have read the rules as the Speaker of the House stated them in the RECORD; and under his ruling, if this matter goes over to the House tonight in any form whatever, it must go to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, unless there is unanimous consent to take it up at once, or unless there is a special rule.

Here is what I wish to say to my able friend from Wisconsin—he heard me a moment ago: I say, standing under the light of the eternal God Almighty, the Republic of this country is all we have left. The Legislature of this country is all the people have left for lawmaking. I ask, would you take away the right of a Senator only to ask that the bill be referred to the House before being sent back to this body? Would you have me say that I would assume that another body would vote adversely, in advance of the action to be taken by the body?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I will not yield another bit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LONG. No; I will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. I will not.

Mr. President, speaking now on this matter, I took occasion to look at the proceedings as they came up in this body. This was a very important matter to me. I will decline henceforth to yield to anybody for any purpose until I announce that I will yield. I am going to come to the point, so that the proceedings may be reviewed.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was speaking. He said here, as I shall read:

> Mr. President, some statements have been made, I believe, about the accumulation of additional cotton under the 12-cent loan. I want to predict now, as a long-time student of this subject, that you will find a good deal more cotton in the hands of the Government under the 9-cent loan than under the 12-cent loan, because there is nothing else for the cotton farmer to do, those who are able to do it. As the Senator from South Carolina stated, the tenants and the poor farmers are the ones who are most likely to suffer under this program. I was told by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that cotton is now selling at 10 cents a pound in southern Georgia. Those farmers sell at that price. No one should think that this plan guaranties them the other 2 cents to make up to them 12 cents.
> Let me point out that if by virtue of a holding movement on the part of those who are in a position to hold their cotton during the last 2 months of the year—November and December—the average price for the 4 months should be increased to 12 cents a pound, then the poor devils who sell now would not get a single dime in addition to the market price they are today getting for their cotton. If the average price during the season should get up to 12 cents, those who sold it for less would be the "forgotten men"; they would be out of the picture.

The Senator from Alabama is a man well experienced in the cotton affairs of this country. The Senator from Alabama has sponsored considerable legislation on the question of cotton. The Senator from Alabama understands this question of cotton I think as no other man in this body understands it, with the possible exception of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who has made quite a study of the matter, and anything I read from the Senator from Alabama naturally carries logic and weight behind it. I have frequently had the opportunity of conversing on this question with the Senator from Alabama. I consider him an authority on it, just as I consider the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] an authority on wheat and farm problems of like nature.

I read further from the Senator from Alabama:

Those who are able to hold, and, finally, possibly force the price up, get the price, of course, and do not need the 12-cent guaranty; but those who need it most are the most likely to be the sufferers under the plan recently announced.

I concur in this view which has been expressed by the Senator from Alabama. I might state that I am of the opinion that the Senator from Alabama has well expressed himself in the matter. I shall read further from his speech. After a while I am going to read from the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In the absence of the Senator from South Carolina from the Chamber this afternoon I mentioned him, and I will say to him that my remarks were taken down, and are in the reporters' room, and I will ask that if the Senator from South Carolina should ask to see the pages containing what has been taken down, he be permitted to see them, because I may say that I referred to him in an entirely complimentary manner, as to his understanding about this 12-cent and 10-cent and 9-cent proposition.

I read further:

In addition to that, they will not get the money until next year sometime. The price-fixation period does not end until the 1st of January. Then, all the records must be made up, all the accounts of the farmers must be presented and go through the General Auditing Office. Vouchers must then be made, and we know, as a result of the programs relating to wheat and corn, that it would take months for the money to reach these poor needy men under this delaying, complex, and confusing plan.

It is to the financial advantage of the Government to fix the loan at 12 cents. Nearly all the cotton would move into trade. As Mr. Davis stated, 11,500,000 bales will be needed for this year's consumption. He said the mills must have it. That will cover this year's crop. When it is said the farmer can get a loan of 12 cents, then the trade will pay him 12 cents and he would much rather sell his cotton for 12 cents than to put it into a loan upon which carrying charges would accumulate.

I agree with this statement thoroughly. I am in accord with all that has been said on this question by the Senator, and if it were left to me, there would be no argument here tonight. I am very much aggrieved that there is any difference of opinion on this subject. I am sorry that everything is not as the Senator from Alabama has stated it. I read further from his remarks in order that they may be heard by the Members of the Senate, and I give this information:

If the Senate should adopt the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina—

Referring then to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

If the Senate should adopt the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, prompt returns would be assured and we could be sure that very little cotton would go into the cotton loan. I believe less than a million bales out of the crop would go under the 12-cent loan. I predict that 5,000,000 bales would go under a 9-cent loan.

Think of it! There is a prediction of the Senator from Alabama that 5,000,000 bales will go under a 9-cent loan and a billion bales under a 12-cent loan. In other words, there will be a great deal more going under the low loan than under the high loan, and it will cost the Government that much more money. If this amendment on cotton and wheat is taken out of the bill the United States Government will lose in the neighborhood of $294,000,000. I estimated a loss of $294,000,000 at one blow if this half-baked legislation shall be passed. The farmers of the United States formerly raised in this country anywhere from thirteen to fourteen millions up to seventeen million bales of cotton, and I want Senators to remember that never was there a time when we had a 10,000,000-bale crop of cotton when we did not get from 15 to 40 cents a pound for cotton. Whenever we could hold cotton down below 12,000,000 bales we always got 15 to 20 to 25 to 30 to 40 to 42 cents a pound for cotton. This is a time when we have had two short crops instead of one and we are fighting over 10-cent cotton. Think of it, gentlemen of the Senate. Always, when we had one short crop of cotton, always, I say to my friend from Oklahoma—and I am glad that he is listening to me so attentively—always when we have had one short crop, we have gotten a high price for the cotton.

Here is a case where we have had two very short crops of cotton, and the price is down to around 10 cents a pound. That is the proposition which worries me in this entire transaction.

I read further:

From all these standpoints it is better to proceed with a plan which is tried and satisfactory, especially as we have now reached the point of beginning to reduce the Government cotton under the reduction program next year. That cotton will be brought out of the pool as a necessary contribution to the world's consumption of American cotton.

Regardless of politics, regardless of all the complications, but looking at this matter from the standpoint of the best interests of the Government, exercising our judgment here as Members of the Senate, looking at the welfare of a great section of the country, I hope the Senate will vote to continue the 12-cent loan, not because it will initiate a plan, but because it will decide between two plans and decide that the tried plan shall be continued. It is to the interest, as has been pointed out, of the cotton trade. Practically all the cotton mills favor the 12-cent loan.

Therefore, he said the best thing to do would be to make the loan at 12 cents. Twelve cents a pound means about $60 a bale.

Cottonseed sells for anywhere from $5 to $20 a bale now. I do not think there is nearly the market for cottonseed there used to be.

During the war times and shortly after the war times cotton would sell for 42 cents a pound as cotton, and a man would get twenty or thirty or forty dollars for the seed, paying for the bagging of the cotton, the ties, the shipping, ginning, and everything else. Just the seed alone would pay that much and give the man a handsome profit out of a bale of cotton.

Seed is now having a hard time getting a market. The trouble is that instead of seed finding a market, there are all kinds of vegetable oils shipped into this country, and copra is shipped in from the Philippine Islands, out of which they can squeeze vegetable oil. All of this confuses the market and congests it, and as a result they have never quite been able to get anything like a decent price for cottonseed oil, and therefore cottonseed brings a very low price.

I do not know entirely what is to be the effect of our freeing the Philippine Islands. We have had a lot of arguments in the Senate over just what to expect from freeing them. I am not very much up on foreign matters; that is, I have studied them, as most Members of the Senate have, off and on, when questions have been before us, but I never made any particular study of foreign products and of foreign matters of that kind.

Therefore, I am hardly in position to tell just what is going to be the result when the Philippine Islands are finally free. I wish I knew. I do not know, and I do not know of anyone who does know. There are all kinds of opinions about the question. One man thinks one thing and another something else, and the opinions vary. One opinion is just as solid, apparently, as the other.

Some people think that getting out of the Orient is a good thing. Other people think that staying in the Orient would be a good thing. I do not know. I have voted one way, and I would hear an argument, and I would feel like changing my mind on it every time I heard another man make a speech.

Be that as it may, I do not know what the future holds for cotton. This is a very deep question. I have spent a lot of time studying the cotton question. As I have said, there are two ways of our approaching the question, and the cotton question ought to be studied very deeply, and separately from the wheat question.

No man can tell just how it ought to be tied into the entire case. I should prefer to have the cotton question eliminated from politics. I do not believe it will ever be a good thing to carry it too far. My idea is that it ought to be gotten out of politics.

Wheat should be gotten out of politics. My idea is, further, that whatever laws you make for wheat you ought to make for cotton.

I do not desire to keep the floor here discussing this matter too long tonight. I do not want to take too long. I have felt that others have advice and suggestions which I should like to have the Senate receive.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana refuses to yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Louisiana will not yield to have his attention called to the fact that the States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator declines to yield to have his attention called to the fact that the States, by his action, will be deprived of money to aid mothers and crippled children?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. As I was saying a moment ago, the motion before the Senate is one made by the Senator from the State of Arkansas. The motion pending is to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I do not know the parliamentary situation. I was just wondering about this. Had a Senator moved to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed, and had a motion been made to lay that motion on the table, what would be the parliamentary situation? I do not know whether or not that was done last Saturday night. I did not look it up in the RECORD.

When we passed this bill last Saturday night, I do not know whether or not a motion to reconsider and a motion to lay on the table were made. If that was done, my opinion is that it would put a clincher on this matter. I do not know. I am not a particularly good parliamentarian. If we vote to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, that ends the matter of reconsideration.

As I said, I did not notice the matter as I passed out of the Senate Chamber that night. I wish I had looked it up in order that I might have argued the point to the Senate tonight. I wish I had looked it up, to have seen whether or not we moved to reconsider the vote, and then whether someone moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

That brings up a very pretty parliamentary point. My opinion is that it would clinch the matter if that had been done; but I do not know whether or not that was done. We may all be arguing here something which is futile. The first thing we ought to have done, I really believe, was to look up the RECORD to see whether or not someone had made a motion to reconsider, and then whether someone had moved to lay that motion on the table. Now, after we have argued the thing here for 4 or 5 hours, we may find out that a clincher has been put on it. That is going to create a very peculiar situation.

I am going to ask my friends, some of them, while I am speaking here, addressing myself to the issue, to look in the RECORD and see whether or not a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I do know, Mr. President, that a motion was made to reconsider the wheat and corn amendment, and to lay that motion on the table. If that was done, how are we going to get out of it? If we have already moved—and I do know that we did move—to reconsider the vote by which the corn or the wheat and cotton amendment was passed and to lay that motion on the table, how are we going to get beyond that, unless in a conference report? How can we do it?

We have already voted, I am saying, to lay on the table a motion to reconsider. Now, if another body were to send a bill in here for a conference, and we were to agree to a conference, of course, that conference report would be voted up or down. That is all right. But how are we going to reconsider a bill, our own bill, when we have voted to lay on the table a motion to reconsider? I do not see how it can be done.

I want Senators to think about it. Already it will be found, as Senators look through the RECORD, that a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina was adopted, and that motion was laid on the table. How is that going to leave the situation? That does not give you a chance. There has been a motion to reconsider, and it has been laid on the table. Therefore, you have no chance.

I know that the wheat and cotton amendment had that motion made with respect to it. Perhaps it was not made with respect to final action on the bill, but that does not make any difference. The bill is here before us just as it always had been. It is here before us as though it had never left the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. For a question.

Mr. BLACK. Even conceding that there is some parliamentary question which the Senator has raised, does he not realize that by his filibuster he is defeating an appropriation of $2,850,000 to take care of mothers and little children in the States, and $2,137,000 to take care of crippled children in the States, in addition to the fact that he is about to defeat the carrying-on of the work for the railroad retirement fund, to carry on the pensions, and is about to deprive the States of an appropriation to help take care of their aged poor? Does not the Senator know that the inevitable result of his filibuster, which may be successful—which does not require any particular skill to be successful, just a little physical strength—is to deprive the aged poor, and crippled children, and blind people, and the railroad workers all over the country, of having this law put into effect for their benefit?

Mr. LONG. I do not think the Congress should adjourn without passing the bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows that if he talks from now until 12 o'clock, Congress will not pass the bill, and he will be responsible for its defeat.

Mr. LONG. I do not wish to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield further.

Mr. LONG. I will gladly yield to send the bill back to another body at any time.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows, irrespective of the way he demands it, that his continued talk is going to deprive the railroad brotherhoods and the railroad men of having this law put into effect for their benefit.

Mr. LONG. No; I cannot believe that my colleagues are less humane than I am and, therefore, I must say that I cannot believe, even if the Senator from Alabama is correct, although the Senator from Arkansas did not think so Saturday night, that my colleagues will vote me down and adjourn, as they have before, because at the proper time I shall enter a motion requesting the other House to send back the papers in order that we may rescind the adjournment resolution, as we did last Saturday night.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. No. Think what good I have done!

Mr. BLACK. The railroad people probably will not think of that. The poor mothers and the crippled children will not think of that.

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes, they will!

Mr. BLACK. The blind people, and the sick children, and their mothers will not.

Mr. LONG. Yes; every one of them will vote for me.

Mr. President, think of all the good I have done! If all the Senator from Alabama said is true, we ought to include in this bill an appropriation for me, because I stood here Saturday night and kept the Senate from taking a recess, and we had only 5 minutes left, or there would have been no deficiency bill. It was I who held the floor and would not let the Senate take the second recess. It was I who sat here and held this floor, as I am holding it tonight, but for which, within 5 minutes, we would have gone into recess. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] was fixing to have the clerk read a speech that would have taken 15 minutes. I went over and got him not to do that, and I saved that 15 minutes right there.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. If there is good in this bill, then crown me for having saved it, because it was locked up and nothing was going to be done, and I stood right there in the seat across the aisle of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], and I objected when the Senator from Arkansas started to move a recess. I caused the papers to be sent over to the House 15 minutes ahead of time by asking my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, to stop having his speech read. If I saved the bill Saturday night, I have a right to save the American people Monday night.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. I do not yield, because it does not do any good, Mr. President. If it did any good, I would yield.

Mr. BLACK. I myself do not think it does any good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. The trouble is, my friend from Alabama does me grave injustice now. I will tell my friend from Alabama and the other Members of the Senate that I am going to let them in on a secret. If they will just read the RECORD they will see how the ship subsidy was passed last Saturday. I should like to have them read that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot take the Senator having the floor off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry, but he may state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONG. I am not yielding.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Has the Senator from Louisiana the right to refuse to yield just because he is afraid to have me propound a parliamentary question?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I am afraid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No.

Think of it, Mr. President! The Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Alabama all this night have been telling what blessings there are in this bill, when it was HUEY LONG who got the bill here.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator from Louisiana have a right to refuse to yield just because he is afraid to have me ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator from Louisiana have the right in his speech to assume the credit for the bill going this far, when the facts are that he is not entitled to that credit, and then declines to permit any other Senator to get the floor to correct his statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, under the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana may claim anything he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, another point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator from Louisiana have the right at this time to filibuster against a bill which carries millions of dollars for the purpose of taking care of the aged and the poor, crippled children and sick children and sick mothers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, under the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana does have that right.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, Saturday night I went over to the Senator from Minnesota—and I want to read from the RECORD, if I can find it, without having to stop my conversation with Senators who are listening to me, for it is in the RECORD here—I went over to the Senator from Minnesota when the Senator from Minnesota rose and asked permission to have his speech read, and nobody objected, although they had been objecting previously, and the clerk started to read. I went over and asked the Senator from Minnesota, "Please do not", but he insisted. I stood there and my friend, the senior Senator from Wisconsin walked up to me and said, "Can you not convince the Senator from Minnesota not to have the speech read?" I said I had tried it. He said to me, "Try him again", and so I went back and tried him the second time, when he granted my request; and there I saved 15 minutes and got the bill over to the House 15 minutes earlier. If it had not been gotten over there 15 minutes earlier, it would have been 10 minutes past 12 o'clock.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I refuse to yield. I am afraid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator from Louisiana have the right to refuse to yield just because he is afraid to answer a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again state that that is not a point of order.

Mr. LONG. I am a scared man, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

I want to say that that is not all I did. I stood there when the Senator from Arkansas rose to move a recess. I knew what that recess meant. I held the floor in my own right; I only yielded when someone wanted to take up and have passed a bill, and then took the floor again and held the Senate here. So why should I not have the credit? If this bill is all that is good, the only reason the Congress of the United States is in session tonight considering it is that the Senator from Louisiana was here. That is the only reason.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator from Louisiana have a right to refuse to yield just because he is afraid to answer a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say again to the Senator that that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator from Louisiana does have that right.

Mr. LONG. Now, think of it; think of the good I have done. I never knew I was such a great man. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate, and expressions of amusement, approval, or disapproval are strictly forbidden by the rules of the Senate. The Chair hopes that they will not be repeated.

Mr. LONG. I ask my hearers, Members of the Senate and guests on the floor and guests in the galleries, to please observe the admonition of the Chair so that Members of the Senate may hear what I am saying in the time I have left. Remember, I need this credit and I want credit done to me. Ah, my friend from Alabama would do no one an injustice. He may make an honest mistake, as we all sometime make mistakes, but he would never do a colleague or any other man an injustice. Ah, no, Mr. President; the Senator from Alabama and the other Members of the Senate know that we had already passed a resolution providing for final adjournment.

The Senator from Alabama knows that the Vice President did not call the Senate together on Saturday night until rather late. The Senator from Alabama knows that the messenger from the House only walked in the main door of the Senate Chamber 5 minutes before the hour of 12 o'clock. The Senator from Alabama knows that had he come 6 minutes later the Congress would have already been adjourned, and the deficiency bill would have gone.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. That the Senator from Alabama does know, and conceding, for the purpose of the argument, that the Senator from Louisiana is solely and singly responsible for all that has ever been accomplished in the Senate since he has been here——

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; I deny that.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator think that would justify him in filibustering at this time to deprive the railroad men of the United States having put into effect a bill to give them retirement and pensions, and does he think that that would justify him in filibustering to death appropriations to take care of crippled children and blind men and women in this country and sick children and sick mothers? Does he believe, even if he has done all that he claims, that justifies him now in killing and destroying a bill that, if enacted, will carry happiness, comfort, and some sort of light to the aged poor, to crippled and sick children, and sick mothers?

Mr. LONG. Let me answer that by asking where was the Senator from Alabama last Saturday night when we were holding the session open?

Mr. BLACK. I was here.

Mr. LONG. Does the RECORD so show?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Alabama was here, but he was not attempting to take all the credit for the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina so ably presented; and the Senator from South Carolina did not need the assistance of the Senator from Louisiana to put over that amendment.

Mr. LONG. He did not? Is that so?

Mr. BLACK. That is true.

Mr. LONG. Well, I am glad to hear that.

Mr. BLACK. And everybody but the Senator from Louisiana knows it.

Mr. LONG. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask, Mr. President, if, under the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana has the right, in order that he may make publicity for himself before the galleries, to prevent the passage of laws which will give to the people of the United States the privilege of old-age pensions, widows' pensions, allowances to crippled children, and allowances to the blind, in the same way as he has done as dictator of the State of Louisiana ever since he has been in charge of the affairs of that State?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana has that right.

Mr. LONG. Of course, Mr. President, I do not reply to that kind of statement, and I am going to ask the Chair to protect me against a repetition of such inquiries. I believe the Chair has already ruled once or twice that they are not parliamentary inquiries. I have stood these things once or twice, and I want to protect the remainder of the Membership of the Senate. I do not want my trembling and fear to be reflected on other Members of the body. I do not want any more of those than I can help.

Let me say this: With the clock showing the approach of the dead line the other night we were trying to save minutes in order to save the deficiency bill. I do not care whether the Senator from South Carolina wants my help or not. That does not make any difference to me. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] had an amendment as well. He prepared his amendment and offered it to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. It does not make any difference with me. I do not care whether he wanted my help or not.

I am not representing Senators. I am representing the people of the United States of America. I am representing 125,000,000 people as well as my own State, and so does every other Senator represent his country first. Therefore, representing my country, I have never asked any Senator in this body how I ought to represent my country and my State. I do not think that they will tell me how I should represent my country and my State. I do not think they will ask me how they should represent their country and their States. This Government is the property of all the people of the United States of America. It belongs to nobody, to no Senate, and to no Senator. That is the situation which prevails at this time.

I did what I set out to do. I shall show the RECORD. When the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] rose and moved for another recess, what occurred? When he rose and moved that the Senate recess, does the RECORD show that anybody else rose except the Senator from Louisiana? It does not. It shows that nobody rose but the Senator from Louisiana to object to the recess, and to say, "Oh, no; I want to hold the Senate in session."

After the Senator from Arkansas had said that in his opinion the bill would not come back, I said I wished to hold the Senate in session and take the one chance that perhaps we could bring it to a vote and get it passed. Five minutes before the stroke of 12 the messenger came to the door, whereupon, as I think the RECORD will show, I asked the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], then occupying the floor, to yield that we might have the message brought to the desk. That is a matter of record.

Oh, I do not expect credit in the Senate. I do not expect credit from Senators. We do not need that here among us. I do not need credit. I do not need a job in the Senate. I do not need a public position. I am one man who has never needed a public office since I started holding them. I am one man who can say that every year I have held a public office, I have spent more for the public office than the public office ever paid to me.

Why did I take the stand I took here from and after March 5, 1933, against an administration that was being deified here? Because I do not need public office and do not care for public office. I want to serve the people of the United States even though they do not understand I am fighting for their welfare along the line that means most to them. I have no fear of losing public office because it does not mean a thing under the living sun to me. Public office means nothing.

I would give my own example as advice to my colleagues even though it should brand me with a lack of modesty. I would say to every Member of the United States Senate. I should like to put up the example of a man who did not have a newspaper in his State with him.

I should like to call attention to the example of the man who had every political organization in his State against him. I should like to call attention to the example of the man who had every big corporation in his State against him. If that man, with less than one-tenth the employees that his opposition had, with no newspapers at all, could, nonetheless, fight the national administration and still be unopposed, I would say that man knew what he was talking about. I would recommend to my colleagues who prefer to stay in this body a great deal more than I do that they look up that example and follow it just as much as they think it throws light upon a good course of conduct, but no further. Perhaps they might not approve of it.

That is why the people of the United States tomorrow morning, tonight, and tomorrow morning, back at the forks of the creek, will understand. I do not care what the occupants of the gallaries think, I do not care what the public press may think. I do not care what someone else may think. But back over there on the forks of the creek and in the blacksmith shop and filling station, tonight they are saying: "I hope to see the Houses of Congress commence legislating in the most regular way." They are saying that. They would uphold my hands. They will uphold our hands in that pronouncement, I am sure.

Mr. President, If I may now proceed in order, I have a high regard for my friend from Alabama. I think more of him than he does of me, a whole lot more. I do not care what his opinion is of me. That does not need influence my opinion of him.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator does think anything at all of my judgment——

Mr. LONG. I think very little of the Senator's judgment.

Mr. BLACK. And of my desire to do something for the people who need it, why does he not stop? It is only an hour and 25 minutes to midnight. Why does he not stop and give us a chance to vote on a bill which would put the Railroad Pension Act into effect, which would aid the blind, which would aid the old people, which would aid the crippled children and the sick children? Why does the Senator not stop and permit this to be done? He knows he can defeat the bill.

Mr. LONG. I wish to say in answer that there is a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. If the Senator from Alabama will tell me that the Senator from Arkansas, making the motion to undo the vote that has already passed the bill, will withdraw it then I shall yield, and we will send the bill out of here.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows that it is impossible for him to make the country or the people at the forks of the road or in the blacksmith shops believe otherwise than that if this bill shall be defeated and this money shall not be appropriated for the crippled children and to carry on the Railway Pension Act, the Senator from Louisiana, and the Senator from Louisiana alone, will be responsible for depriving them of those benefits. It is only an hour and twenty-two minutes until midnight.

Mr. LONG. I know it has been announced on the floor that the purpose of the whole proceeding is to take the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer out of the bill. I know that is the only reason why the Senator from Arkansas has tried here tonight to pursue the course of conduct which has brought us into the present situation. The bill has already passed, but has come back to go through a series of parliamentary maneuverings so as to take the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer out of the bill.

Does not the Senator from Alabama know that back in those States where wheat is raised some of those poor people are getting only 10 or 15 cents a bushel for wheat which has been damaged by the inclement weather and the dust storms? Does not the Senator know those poor people will probably be snowed in before long and have little to eat? Does he not know that there are thousands of starving people in those areas which are covered by the cotton- and wheat-growing sections of the country? Can he not envision the snow and storm engulfing those poor people this winter? Has the Senator no heart? Has the Senator from Alabama lost all sense of feeling for those poor people?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to reply to his question.

Mr. LONG. I cannot yield except for a question.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator asked a question and I believe he ought to allow me to reply.

Mr. LONG. If there is no objection——

Mr. BLACK. Let me ask the Senator a question in reply: Does the Senator not know it is impossible for him, by these pyrotechnics and this display here, to deceive the wheat farmers into believing that he is helping them by this activity here tonight? Does he not know it is impossible, back in the farming sections of the country, to convince the wheat farmers that he is doing anything for their benefit?

He knows the bill will not be passed, but does he know that by filibustering against the bill he can defeat the appropriation for the aid of crippled children?

Does he know he can defeat the appropriation and prevent the acts for the relief of the railway men from going into effect, the men who work long hours on the railroad trains and who want to get a pension? Does not the Senator know—and he does know—that by his activity, if he keeps on filibustering for an hour and twenty minutes, he is going to deprive the people of this country of the benefit of improvements for crippled children——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. May the Senator from Louisiana yield for a speech and hold the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only for a question. The Chair assumes the Senator from Alabama is coming to the question.

Mr. LONG. I yield only for a question. Now I will answer the question, and I will not yield for any other question, because I want to get through with my speech.

Mr. BLACK. I see. The Senator wishes to filibuster this bill to death.

Mr. LONG. I wish to get through with my speech.

Now, I desire to say a word on a subject that I have not been able to get to. Gentlemen of the Senate—men whom I love, men whom I admire, many of whom I read about when I was a youngster, wondering whether or not I should have the distinguished opportunity of meeting in person and talking lip to lip and face to face with such men of study, learning, intellect, and refinement—I ask of you a consideration of this crude, unintelligible, more or less animal suggestion:

We of the cotton country live in a warmer climate than the poor people of the North and the West. Down in my good State of Louisiana and in the States which adjoin it the flowers bloom away up into the month of November and sometime clear through the month of December. It is a warm, balmy climate, Mr. President. You can always find fish and oysters and shrimp and crabs and fur-bearing animals. All the year round there is something of that kind going on. It is a warm, nice, enticing climate. The sky of deep, beautiful azure remains permanent more or less through the nighttime and through the daytime. Every sign from the canopy of heaven shows——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am a new Member of this body; and I ask the Chair whether the older men and women of this country who have gone through their period of activity are to be deprived of an opportunity for a pension, whether the little children of the country who do not have the opportunity which they should be afforded are to be deprived of opportunity, whether the blind are to be deprived of the opportunity which this bill provides for them, simply because the Senator from Louisiana wishes to provide publicity for himself, and get himself in the newspapers, and talk to the occupants of the galleries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer that question at the present time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it does not make any difference who appeals to me, or who talks to me. It does not make any difference what is said or what is asked. I maintain a principle here tonight. I maintain that any other House should have a right to vote on a bill. I maintain a principle. I stand for the passage of this bill. I am for this bill. I am for every bit of it. My good friends here have a misconception of matters. It is not I who have undertaken to secure an amendment of the vote by which this bill has been passed. It is someone else in this body, more powerful than I, who now moves to undo the passage of the bill. Seek out, I beg of you, that man among you who has moved to undo the passage of the bill. Do not jump on me. I am the man who saved it. I am the man who kept it alive. I am the man who breathed life into a dying legislative enactment.

Ah! There was not a tear then. All the tears have been shed around me tonight over the proposition of permitting the wheat farmer to be left out. Oh, the tears! How the salty tide runs around me. I can feel it in every pore, how there is weeping, how there is everything expressing deep sympathy, to induce me to pause long enough to allow the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to prevail, to take the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer out of the bill. They never cried until the time came to take the wheat farmer out of the bill; but when the time came to take the wheat farmer out of the bill the crying began. Not a tear until the time came to take the wheat farmer out of the bill. Oh, no.

When I drive up through that part of the country in the coming year or so, I shall knock on the doors of those little wheat farmers, and I shall say to them, "I have come to see you. I am a United States Senator from Louisiana." "What! Are you the man who stood on the floor of the United States Senate on the 26th day of August 1935 and stood for my right to have the Congress of the United States say whether I should or should not have equal protection under the law? Are you that man?" I shall be the man visiting those people there, where there is more genuine human feeling and friendship for me than all the ability of the 95 other Members of the United States Senate can expect by the move they have made here tonight, if any one of them has made that move, for the amendment of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. No, no. I have not much time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask if, under the concurrent resolution which has already been adopted, the Senate will automatically stand in adjournment at 12 o'clock, and if the automatic adjournment of the Senate will mean that the paragraph on page 10 of the bill which appropriates $37,000,000 to the States to aid the aged poor will be defeated at this session of the Congress?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it will.

Mr. LONG. Ah, Mr. President, the bill appropriates some money for Louisiana, too. A lot of money for Louisiana is appropriated in all these appropriation bills, but it has to be sent to us from Washington. My men came up here to get their part of the money. "Why", the Secretary of the Interior said——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask whether under this bill, which appropriates money for old-age pensions and for relief of the crippled and relief of the blind, if the government of a State cruelly refuses to participate in any old-age pension law or any relief for the blind or any relief for the crippled, whether there is any appropriation for those States whose dictators are so cruel that they will not permit their crippled or their blind or their aged to have any help?

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to believe that it goes beyond a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONG. Now, Mr. President, let me say further, continuing my statement, there is a bill here to give a lot of money to all the States for roads and various other things. My men came up here and went in to see Mr. Ickes, the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Ickes had already given out a big, flannel-mouthed statement to the newspapers about me. "Why" he said, "that is the land of the Kingfish, isn't it? You want us to give the Kingfish this money." They said, "No; Senator LONG is up here."

They called me Senator LONG in his presence because he has never been elected to the Senate. He talks to the Members of the Senate as he wants to. He makes Members of the Senate look little. I do not go up there to see him. He does not get a chance to make me look little. I stay away from him. I have learned how to hold my dignity as a Senator. I do not go near these bureaucrats. No, sir! I stay away from them. I stand on my own ground; and when one of them comes to see me down in my neck of the woods, he knows I am on my home soil. Then I talk just as big as he talks; and he talks nicely, and I talk nicely.

You know, Mr. President, you can take almost any man up to the office of the Secretary of the Interior. I had a friend sitting in this body tonight—I believe he has gone home now—who went up to see Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, some days ago, and he had another United States Senator with him, my colleague [Mr. OVERTON].

Not a finer man ever sat in this body than my colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana, a gifted, kindly, polite gentleman, who went with another man, much of the same type, another man from the South, to visit the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harold M. Ickes. They walked in, and Mr. Ickes said, "How many more of these delegations are going to come up here to see me about this matter?"

My colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana, paused, but the Senator from the other Southern State stepped up and said, "Now, just a moment, Mr. Secretary. We do not have to take anything off of you at all. We came up to see you on public business, but if you do not want to see us you can get out, and I want to tell you, you be more respectful to me or we will get out."

"Well", he said, "Come in, if you want to. What is it?"

So they talked a moment, and got out.

About a month later a college president came here. Every man in the United States Senate knows how much time a Member of the Senate has to run much outside business and make a living. I think most of the Members of the Senate know about how much time any one of them would have to go around running other businesses. If we run our own business we do pretty well. But this other fellow went up there, a college professor. They loaned $1,700,000 to Louisiana State University, Sherman's old war school. That old university has become quite modern. Its standards have been raised. Mr. Jesse Jones, up at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be a pretty good fellow if they would let him alone; he means to be a decent fellow, and would be if he were let alone. Of course, he is in some bad company, like all of us, sometime, and he cannot help himself; but Jesse Jones would like to be an honest man.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation said, "All right; we want the credit of lending Louisiana State University $1,700,000. We want to tell you that it is your money."

But, the professor said, "Senator LONG told us we would not get the money."

"Well", he said, "I want to tell you, you will. Here it is, and you take this engineer away from here down there and you start to work and send us your bond, and the money will come right back."

They came into the Roosevelt Hotel lobby one night when I was sitting up at the desk with the assistant manager; in walked the president of L. S. U. and the business manager and some man who was an engineer of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I said, "What is all this?"

The president stepped off and said, "We have $1,700,000, and we are giving a statement out to the newspapers tonight."

I said, "Hold on. Wait a while."

"Oh", he said, "you do not know. This young man is the engineer they have sent down to start the work."

I said, "Hold on. I know those birds better than you do. Have you the $1,700,000?"

He said, "No; but it is coming."

I said, "It is not worth anything."

That is not what I said, but—— [Laughter.]

I said, "That does not mean anything."

But he said, "They have told us to announce it."

I said, "Do not announce anything of the kind. You will never get the $1,700,000 from the R. F. C."

He said, "They would not turn down a university."

I said, "They will do anything. Now you wait."

Lo and behold, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation gave out the statement themselves. When they found out Louisiana State University would not give it out, they gave out the statement:

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Reconstruction Finance Corporation announces today that it has loaned $1,700,000 to Louisiana State University.

They gave it out. What happened? The university authorities said, "We will go ahead now."

I said, "Oh, no; you had better not. You have me as a member of your board. I want you to call the board together if you are going to start before you get your money, because I tell you they will permit you to let the contracts and start the work, and then they will give out a big announcement that on account of HUEY LONG they have decided not to go ahead with it, and then you will be out on a limb and unable to help yourselves."

What did the officials of the university do? They fished around with them, and made as if they had started to work. They started a job for which we had the money, over in another part, but we made the R. F. C. think we had started on the job for which they loaned the money. They waited until we got the arts and science building up to take care of 5,500 students, and out came the R. F. C. announcement that they had revoked the loan.

What did we do? We just laughed, and said, "Boys, you ain't heard nothing yet. [Laughter.] We have two million more dollars. We do not need a damned cent of your money. Keep it. We can do without it." And we did without it.

You are not going to treat us that way any more. You talk about going to send some money to Louisiana in this bill. They are not going to send us anything.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. BLACK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. The bill which is now under discussion, in addition to $37,000,000 for the aged poor, provides on page 10 "Grants to States for aid to dependent children: For the grants to States for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy dependent children, $18,000,000."

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Chair, if the Senator from Louisiana continues to filibuster from now until 12 o'clock, will that defeat this provision for $18,000,000 for needy children all over the United States?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, it will.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, now that the Senator has propounded his usual inquiry——

Mr. BLACK. I will propound another one if the Senator desires.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator will not. Let me talk until I get through. I have very little time left.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has an hour in which to kill the bill.

Mr. LONG. I am not killing the bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is killing the bill, and he knows he is killing the bill.

Mr. LONG. No; I am not.

Mr. BLACK. He is deliberately killing a bill that would furnish food to hungry children and to blind people.

Mr. LONG. I am not. I want to finish telling about this Louisiana business down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. The Senator wants to talk about anything that will deprive blind people and crippled children——

Mr. LONG. No——

Mr. BLACK. And sick mothers and sick children of help.

Mr. LONG. I will stay right here, and do not tell me——

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows he is killing it, and that is what he is trying to do.

Mr. LONG. They say to me, "We will run off and not pass any bill. We will not stay here with you and pass the bill if you do not agree to cut out something."

Mr. BLACK. The Senator knows that in order to get publicity he is destroying the bill.

Mr. LONG. I object to this interference. I ask to be protected.

Mr. President, I wanted to read something from the rules, and I find I have not the place marked. This is what I am trying to do. Wait until I get through. We appropriated out of this $4,800,000,000 some road money, and I want everyone to listen to me; and if I am not telling the truth, judge me not to be a man fit to sit in this body.

They appropriated some money for roads. Louisiana's part was $6,000,000. The Louisiana Highway Commission is the best in the world. They will tell you over in the good roads bureau that we have the best road building institution in the world, the strongest roads, at the lowest cost, on the most difficult soil.

The highway commission got up its designs for the roads, it submitted them to the good roads bureau, the good roads bureau sent its district engineer from Dallas, Tex., over to Louisiana, and he approved every project and everything under the $6,000,000 appropriation.

What happened, Mr. President? They said, "This has to be approved by the State emergency administration." So the Federal engineer—get this—the State Federal engineer, and the district Federal engineer, and the chairman of the highway commission took those projects, approved by the United States Bureau of Public Roads and by the State of Louisiana——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I decline to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I make the point of order that I should be let alone.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I submit to the Chair the question whether or not, because of the desires of the Senator from Louisiana to secure publicity for himself, if he filibusters against the bill for an hour and five minutes longer, he will deprive the States of the grants provided on page 11 of the bill, as follows:

Grants to States for aid to the blind: For grants to States for aid to the blind, as authorized in title X of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, fiscal year 1936, $2,250,000.

Will the effort upon the part of the Senator from Louisiana to secure publicity for himself deprive these blind people of that aid?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Part of it is a parliamentary inquiry. The other part is not. If the Senator from Louisiana will make the point of order that a portion of the inquiry is not a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will act.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; I do not make any point. Let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that at 12 o'clock, under the concurrent resolution adopted by both Houses, the Senate will stand adjourned sine die; and if the bill shall not be acted on prior to that time, all the appropriations provided by the Senate will fail.

Mr. LONG. Now I wish to be permitted to finish my Louisiana story, which is relevant to this case.

Here is what happened: I was speaking of the road projects. These road projects were approved by the Federal Department and by the State. They went down to the Federal emergency relief administrator they have down there—a political enemy of mine, who does not hold any office in the State now—and he had another gentleman down there with him, and they said, "We cannot act on it." The Federal engineer said, "What is wrong?" He said, "We have orders to submit this thing to Washington before anything is done, and we do not know what to do. We must wait to hear from Washington before we can do anything."

With Louisiana being held up in that way, and such things being done, do Senators mean to tell me Louisiana is losing anything? Louisiana is not losing anything, and Louisiana knows it is not losing anything. Oh, yes; it is true it is provided in the bill that they have to send us a little pie dough down there, enough to take care of 1 out of every 400 men. That is what the bill provides—1 out of every 400. We do not think they will send us that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of making the point of no quorum?

Mr. LONG. I think, under the rules of the Senate, if I yield for the purpose of making a quorum call I will lose the floor. I ask the Chair if that is not so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; the Senator will not, because on the first point of no quorum there was unanimous consent that he should not lose his privilege of the floor.

Mr. LONG. I do not wish to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield for a point of no quorum?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not wish to yield.

So that is the way the matter had been handled and that is the way it has been done.

We are good sports. We are good fellows. We have had it done to us in such a way that we do not understand all about it. We can get by. We can make a good living and exist, but I do not know about anybody else being able to do it. That is something I cannot tell Senators. I do not know.

I will tell Senators that there is such a thing as putting a gun to the man's head and saying, "Either you do this, or I am going to shoot", and the one holding the gun will say that you committed suicide because you did not do what he said. In this case somebody says to me, "We will adjourn by 12 o'clock if you do not let us take this amendment out of the bill. "Well", I say, "I refuse to be a party to cutting the throat of the wheat farmers and the cotton farmers of the United States."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator continues his filibuster to 12 o'clock, even though he says he does not want to cut the throat of the wheat farmers, may I ask the Chair if it is not cutting the throat of the railroad men who have had a pension bill passed; and will not the action of himself, or himself and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], or anyone else, result in defeating the passage of the part of the billion, page 9, which provides $600,000 to carry on the work of the Railroad Pension Act?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will defeat the passage of that part of the bill, as well as all the rest of it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hate to hear my friend from Alabama ascribe to any one Member of the body authority which he is too good a parliamentarian to believe he has. He knows Congress can stay here. Congress does not have to run away tonight—not a bit of it. Why should the Congress have to leave tonight? It does not have to do that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; just a moment. I should like to be permitted to speak a little while during my time. Two-thirds of my time has been taken up by asking me questions and by parliamentary inquiries. Senators have talked about my filibustering. If Senators will read the RECORD, they will find that parliamentary inquiries and points of order have taken up two-thirds of my time. When, as a matter of fact, I am trying to talk, Senators are yelling about my making a filibuster. How is a man to get through if he is interrupted all the time? I have not yet finished answering all the questions which have been asked of me.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I refuse to yield, but the Senator can make another one of those parliamentary inquiries, and so I suppose that is what will be done.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not yield.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, the Senator does not wish to be reminded of what he is doing by his filibuster?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Mr. BLACK. I do not blame him.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary, last Saturday night, when I saved this bill——

Mr. BLACK. The Senator and Cock Robin saved the bill.

Mr. LONG. Yes; I and Cock Robin saved the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of making the point of no quorum, without his losing any privileges?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; I do not wish to yield for a quorum call.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Without losing any privileges?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not yield for a quorum.

I make the point that this bill may become a law. Everyone knows how to have the bill become a law. It is very clear how to have it become a law. All in the world that is needed is the action of the two branches of the Congress.

It has been acted on by one, and only by one, at this time.

No, Mr. President; I am willing to have the bill take its reasonable course. I have not moved to recommit the bill. I have not moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. None of those motions have I made. I have not made a single one of them, nor have I moved to have Congress adjourn. On the contrary, I have opposed Congress adjourning. I have opposed any Member in this body or out of this body being able to come in here and say, "We are going to leave here at this hour." I opposed a majority of the Members saying, "We are going to leave here at this hour, and we are not going to wait another minute. Either this bill shall be passed in a certain way or it will not be passed at all, and it shall be passed by a certain hour; otherwise, no other tribunal in the country shall give it consideration."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Chair whether or not, as the result of the persistent filibustering tactics of the Senator from Louisiana for the purpose of getting publicity for himself, if he continues until 12 o'clock it will be possible for him to prevent the passage of the bill, which provides, on page 23, line 12, grants to States for maternal and child-health service in the amount of $2,850,000?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that at 12 o'clock the Senate will adjourn sine die; and if a vote shall not be taken by that time the bill will fail with all its appropriations in it.

Mr. LONG. Two million dollars! That is not a drop in the bucket.

Mr. BLACK. It is more than they will get if the Senator continues as he is now doing.

Mr. LONG. Two million dollars, and one shipping concern gets $4,900,000 in clear profits, and another one gets $6,500,000, and you are giving $2,000,000 to 130,000,000 people! Two million dollars! Pie dough, not enough money to grease the skillet for frying ham and eggs for breakfast!

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Chair to submit to the Senator from Louisiana if he thinks either the Senator from Alabama or I have ever favored any ship subsidy of any kind?

Mr. LONG. I do not know about the Senator from Alabama or the Senator from Washington except that I wish the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Washington would let me alone. If they do not want the publicity, they can keep from getting it by letting me alone here.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I submit to the Chair the parliamentary inquiry to determine whether or not it is possible, despite the fact the Senator from Louisiana refuses to yield, for the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Washington to transmit to the Senator from Louisiana the information that our interest is not in publicity, as is his, but it is a desire to pass this very humanitarian measure, and have it enacted into law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That seems to be the parliamentary way.

Mr. LONG. I wish to say I have always accorded to my friends from Alabama and Washington the having of good motives, and I hope they will show good motives by not taking up my time which they say is very short, and which I assure them I have no intention of yielding. I wish to stand on my own feet and on my own judgment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LONG. I prefer not to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LONG. I wish I did not have to yield, and if I could keep from it I should not yield, but if I have to do so I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should like to know from the parliamentary clerk where in the bill any reference is made to ship subsidies, a subject in which I am profoundly interested?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no reference of that kind in the bill.

Mr. LONG. The Senators talk about $2,000,000 for maternity cases in the United States. According to the RECORD, a special rule was brought in in another body providing for ship subsidies of $6,500,000, of $4,900,000, or $2,000,000, and of $3,000,000, which were written in, and yet Senators talk about 2 by 4 pie dough of $2,000,000 for maternity cases.

Mr. President, I was the one who stood here and took the step that kept this bill from dying last Saturday night. Oh, no! Someone wants to be heard on the outside to say it would have all passed if it had not been for HUEY LONG on Monday night, but they do not want to say that we were all ready to walk away without it Saturday night.

I will take care of myself. Do not worry about me. I will take care of myself. I used to sit on the Railroad Commission of Louisiana when there were three members—the public-service commission of my State. Year in and year out I used to sit on that commission when I would be the only man in the hearing room to be heard on the side of the people of my State. I was called the "minority member" of the railroad commission. Month in and month out I sat there, and moved and saw it voted down, and resoluted and saw it voted down, until it became a funny thing. Nevertheless, I was not carried away by the assemblage of persons present. I was not carried away by the other two members. Where are the men who sat on the railroad commission with me? Their names are no longer on any public pay roll in any State or nation. Mine has been there ever since, as well as before.

Where are the men who served with me when I was Governor of Louisiana? Did I not see a body, by a majority vote of some 60 to 70 percent of its members, walk in and prefer impeachment charges, and a few months later saw the same men go in, or some of the same men go in, and withdraw the same charges? Where are the men? There are very few of them seen or heard of today.

I know how to take care of myself. I do not need any help.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not need any advice. Give advice to someone who needs it. I do not need it. I do not need any advice. I know that if this bill went over to another body and was voted down by another body, or that part of it which was not concurred in by another body, I ought to retire and yield to it. But I do not know, when another body is given no right to vote on it, why I should turn and run and say, "Let us have a vote by another body that someone is willing for that body to have." I am not going to do that. I am not taking that view of it in the Senate of the United States.

I understand from some article in some paper that I am standing tonight at the desk behind which John C. Calhoun stood many days ago, right in this body or near here, or in this continuing body where Webster and Clay and Calhoun defended the great Constitution and the legislative system of this country.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. Is that the anticlimax about which the Senator is speaking?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no way to answer the question.

Mr. LONG. It is not a climax. There is not enough power under the canopy of heaven to beat me in an election to come back to this body, but men like the Senator from Indiana will be back over in Indiana with an R. F. D. address when I am still here. [Laughter.] I shall be here many years.

I know, Mr. President, that I have been here watching these things, hoping, not that my will shall be followed—oh, no. I cannot expect the Members of the Senate to agree with me every time or most of the time for that matter. I have very singular ideas. I believe no man should be too big in the wealth of the land and no man should be too poor. I believe in the old doctrine which comes from the Scriptures and the ancient philosophers that no man should have too many times what the other man has. I expect very few Members to agree with me at times. Some of them do agree. I am sure some will agree.

At least I can say this: I ask that the Members of this body at all times be given the right to express themselves and to vote on bills that come here. What kind of a Member of this body would I be if tonight there should walk in the door of the Senate Chamber someone who gave us a bill and some Member of the Senate should say, "Oh, no; we will not let the Senate vote on this bill", and I would say, "As a Member of the Senate I demand the right to vote on the bill in the Senate", and the chairman of some committee would say, "Oh, no; you cannot vote on this bill", and finally some other body was called in to take the power away because of the fact that I was not allowed as a Member of the Senate to cast my vote on it.

Leave? Why should the Congress leave? We would have left here Saturday night, maybe much earlier. Why should we leave? Why do it? Why stand here with a motion to annul the vote which gave life to this bill? Why? Why? It is done to take the wheat farmers out. It is done to take the cotton farmers out.

Remember, the Democratic Party wanted me to go out and talk to the wheat farmers of this country for the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party will be calling for me again. Do not forget that.

The very Senator who is being assailed tonight by the Democratic Party will be the Senator the Democratic Party will want to go out to that wheat country again. I am not going, either. I have been there my last time. I am not going back. I was sent out there to tell them some things last time, and they have not been done. I am not going back to tell them again in that capacity. If ever I go back, I shall be able to tell them what the facts are. I shall be able to tell them what the law is, and what they may expect. I shall not be afraid to go anywhere. I shall be welcomed by these people for standing for republican government.

Every schoolboy who has ever read history, every schoolgirl who has ever studied civics, every man, woman, and child in this country who has ever read the Constitution of the United States and been given to understand that the Houses of the Parliament of America had a right to vote up or down on laws, will uphold my stand on this matter—every one of them.

Oh, no; there is not a question about it. We know where we are, and I know where I am. I know that if the tombs could open, and such men as Benton and Webster and Calhoun and Clay could rise from them tonight they would look upon this body with all humility in their faces and beg that for once the Senate be a Senate, as it is intended to be, in all respects and particulars.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I think that is true.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. If they could look at the Senate now, if they could see what the Senator has been doing here tonight, I think they would have a sense of humility and shame.

Mr. LONG. For one time the Senator from Alabama rises to give approval to me. He is improving. His conduct is showing marked improvement as we go along.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. The Senator has been so nice that I will yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is fine on receiving laughter from the galleries, but I ask the Senator if he thinks he will receive laughter from the old people who are deprived of their pensions by his filibuster; from the crippled children who are deprived of their medicine by his filibuster; from the mothers who are sick, the children who are sick, and who are deprived of their medical treatment on account of his filibuster; from the blind who are deprived of the money needed to take care of them by his filibuster; from the railroad men who desire to see their pension fund start in operation and who are deprived of having it done by his filibuster. Does he think they will smile and laugh at his witticisms and his smart sayings?

Mr. LONG. I do not suppose the Senator means that question to be answered, of course.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I thought perhaps the Senator would answer it.

Mr. LONG. Then I will answer the Senator. I did not know he expected an answer. On the contrary, I have stood here tonight and tried to get this bill passed, insisting that this bill be passed.

What is the question before the House? May I answer for myself? It is whether or not we will rescind the vote by which the Senate passed this bill, which has never been voted upon in another body. Here is a bill that has already been passed by this body with a clincher on part of it. A motion to reconsider has been laid on the table, which is supposed to foreclose the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? No clincher has been put on this bill, nor on any amendment that was adopted to it. The Senator has repeated that statement over and over again, but it is not correct.

Mr. LONG. Then I was mistaken.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator was mistaken, as he is about most things.

Mr. LONG. I do not know about that. I might be mistaken about a little clincher, a little something like that. I did not have time to look it up. My recollection was that a clincher was put on the motion that sent the bill over to the House.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator believe he can fool the railroad men of the country, with all the intelligence they have, into believing that he is not responsible by his filibuster for the defeat of this measure? Does he think the railroad men have little enough intelligence, with some of their representatives perhaps sitting in the galleries now, not to know that he, and he alone, by this filibuster, is preventing the passage of this bill, and will prevent the appropriation to set up their fund?

Mr. LONG. I do not think I can fool the railroad men, and I do not think the Senator from Alabama can fool either them or the wheat farmer.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. And I do not think the railroad men, or any other men, will forget that last Saturday night the Senators were all sitting here with not a tear in the eye of a single one of them, waiting for this thing to go to its death, and it took my voice and my hand and my ingenuity and every other thing I have—very little of which I claim in the way of any ability—to keep this thing from dying a natural death. There were no tears from them then. Tonight what are they doing? Tonight they are moving to reconsider, and in order to get the bill considered by another body we have to take the farmer out of the bill.

If the two Houses of Congress want to take the farmer out of the bill, I am willing for them to do it; but I am not willing to take the farmer out of the bill on the assumption that some other body wants him taken out of the bill. I want the other body to have the opportunity to take the farmer out of the bill, and I do not want it done by any individual.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator yield to have two letters read?

Mr. LONG. No; I will not. I will not. I do not want the Senator from Wisconsin to take my time in reading any letters. He can come down to Louisiana and read them, if he wants to. I can take care of myself down there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator permit their being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LONG. Let the Senator get up and read them in his own time. I know what the Senator wants to do. He can do anything he wants to do about me. Come down in Louisiana; tell the people not to elect me, and see whether they will or not. I am not going to surrender and allow anybody to tell me that we have to back up on a bill that passed the Senate, because another body will not be allowed by somebody to consider it. I do not want any advice about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All I am asking is that the Senator permit these two letters to be printed in the RECORD without his losing the floor.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to do that. I will not do that. I have a right to take the floor and go through with my speech. I have been interrupted many, many times tonight. I do not want any advice. I am trying to tell my colleagues that I do not want any advice. I am not asking any.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit these letters from railway organizations and union organizations to be read from the floor?

Mr. LONG. I will not yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BONE. Very well. Then, let the Senator take the responsibility.

Mr. LONG. I will take the responsibility.

Mr. BONE. The Senator will.

Mr. LONG. Certainly, I will.

Mr. BONE. The Senator will, whether he wants to or not.

Mr. LONG. I take my own responsibility. I have not asked anybody to help me. I have asked, and the only thing I ask now is that this bill go over to another body and that the other body vote, and that we not back up on a bill here before some other body has had a chance to vote on it; that is all.

What are you going to do about the wheat farmer? That is what I am asking you. Why are you throwing out the wheat farmer? Nobody knows. I have stood by labor, not for what labor could do for me. Union labor could not do anything for me. They could neither help nor defeat me in any election in my State, nor could they affect a thousand votes one way or the other—not a jot nor a tittle.

I have a 100-percent labor record. I never took a lawsuit against a working man in my life. Professional jobholders do not aide a bit. While I have made earnings up in the fifty and sixty thousands of dollars as a lawyer, and somewhere close to a hundred thousand dollars a year, I never took a lawsuit against a working man in my lifetime.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I do not have to ask anybody what I have to do when it comes to these matters. I have stood for the cause of labor, and whenever labor tells me to cut the throat of the wheat farmer, I will tell labor I will not cut the throat of the wheat farmer; and when the wheat farmer tells me to cut the throat of labor, I will not cut the throat of labor for the benefit of the wheat farmer.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I will not come here and sell out my own soul for anything on earth that I think impugns the entire existence of a constitutional, republican form of government.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I will not. Will not the Senator let me alone, and let me make my speech?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is occupying all the time before we are to adjourn.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator to let me alone. I decline to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr LONG. I will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. I will not yield; no. If I had not been interfered with, I might have been through by this time.

I will not take the position; oh, no! The big Senate leaders, the big politicians in the White House—some of them may convince the labor leaders that they have to do what they tell them to do, and with their fire and brimstone the labor leaders may think they have to do it, but they will not convince me I have to do what the White House says ought to be done. I will do what I know ought to be done. I have my conscience and the Lord only to answer to.

I know what my people say. I will be going into many a State for some of these Senators sitting around me tonight to help them.

Father, forgive them; they know not what they do. Oh, if they just had good judgment like that of old Andrew Jackson, whose backbone was as big as a wagon tongue, they would have said, "Oh, no; stand up and send this thing to a vote."

Think of it! Think of it! No other body has voted against the bill. The only body that has cast its vote on the bill has been the United States Senate. Nonetheless, we are told to cut the throat of the wheat farmer tonight when no other body has voted on the bill. No other body has even made a gesture of voting on the bill. The only body that has been permitted to vote on it has been the Senate, and they come in and cut the throat of the wheat farmer, and they have the wheat farmer to answer to.

They talk about people being deprived of benefits, because they say they will jump and run away and will not meet after midnight. They will not meet after midnight, and will not let the vote be taken, unless it is done this way or that way; no other body but the Senate will have a chance to vote on the bill. So under that kind of condition someone has to yield.

Louisiana stood and saved this Union once, in 1815. Louisiana stood with two companies of Tennessee mounted riflemen, that is all, and saved this Union. If you read the Treaty of Ghent and the proceedings at the conference where that treaty was made you will find that Pakenham's army, which was taken from the army of the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula Campaign, was sent to take charge of Louisiana Territory practically coincident with the negotiations being carried on at that time in Ghent, at the very time they were carrying on what were supposed to be the concluding proceedings in Ghent. They sent the army which the Duke of Wellington had started in the Peninsula campaign and carried to Paris, and brought them to America so that they might be in charge of American territory.

The Treaty of Ghent left it so written that the possession of the Louisiana Territory by that English army meant the ownership of the Louisiana Purchase by the English. If it had not been for the Battle of New Orleans, and the repulse of the forces of General Pakenham at the Battle of New Orleans on the 8th day of January 1815, all we would have had left would have been the Colonies on the Atlantic coast. It was Louisiana that stood for the country of America, for the Republic of America, and it was the citizens of Louisiana at the Battle of New Orleans who kept America from trading away its own great expanse of territory, which really made this a country.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that the State of Louisiana will back up the principle I am enunciating here tonight. The idea of a sovereign country being told, "Here is a bill. We will not let anybody but the Senate vote on it in this shape. The only outfit that will be allowed to vote on it is the Senate."

Who has the right to give that kind of an order? Who has the right to say what the Senate or any other body may do? Some other body might have the right to say that it does not prefer this or prefer that, but has someone on the outside or someone on the inside of another body the right to say, "We will permit no action by the other body on this kind of thing? Cut the throat of the wheat farmer, but you will go no further." That is what we have been given here.

They say they love the working people, they say they love the farmer. You do not have to go very far to do them a favor. Every little favor is being done them. The only favor they have to do is to let the Congress actually do them a favor. They come here and say, "Oh, no, we are not going to let the House vote on it."

Do you know what the people are led to believe? They are actually being told on the outside—and I deny it—that Members of the Congress, if certain bills come before them, the Senate particularly, would vote one way but wish the other, when I know that that is not true.

But actually some people undertake to have it thought that this body and another body, or other bodies, would prefer to have a thing done one way, or a certain thing not to happen, but if required to put themselves on record would vote the other way. That is the kind of thing which tends to undermine Government and undermine Congress, and, above all things, that is why it ought never be allowed to happen in such circumstances as these.

Mr. President, I have about concluded my remarks. I will not detain the Senate very much longer. I thank the Senate for the time which it has given me. Some of my colleagues fear that there might be publicity. Let me assure them that there will be no publicity given except that which tries to do me harm. Even the big metropolitan newspapers, who argue for constitutional legislative government, will nonetheless condemn my effort to preserve it tonight. I know it. Do I not know that there is never a line of publicity that ever went into a metropolitan newspaper and magazine that did not seek to do me all the harm in the world? I have no chance with them. I have only my voice and my personal appearance to make before my people. [Laughter.] Anyone can imagine how much I have to answer for when I say my personal appearance. I have that to answer for.

The last thing my father ever told me was never to enter a prize contest for anything. He said, "You can never win. For instance, in my early days there was a Jewish merchant in this town and myself. When they came around to judge the best looking man in Winnfield the Jewish merchant and I tied for last place." [Laughter.]

I realize, gentlemen of the Senate and hearers, given a voice that is my own, and a mind that is my own, and a conscience which I hope is amenable to a higher power, and a face that only my mother could love, nonetheless I will stand here on the floor of the United States Senate to the very last minute and the very last hour, arguing and pleading for the preservation of the right of the two Houses of Congress of the United States to pass upon issues for which the people have sent them to this forum.

Although I know that even though the public press, which pretends to be for it, will condemn any effort I may make to preserve it, nonetheless it matters not with me; it does not make any difference with me. What do I care for a seat in the United States Senate, or if it costs me my seat? What is a seat worth in a body which is told, "You had better back up" on a bill before another body has even had a chance to pass on it? What do I want with a job like that? I would rather be out splitting staves and stacking staves. I would rather be right out there in the woodpile. I do not like to do the work, but I had to do plenty of it.

I would rather be right out with by broadax and my saw when any other living man is going to come up and tell me that the job I have is one which says, "You do this and you do it in a certain way." But, nonetheless, we have decided that before we will allow another body to have the right even to say how it stands we in advance must recede from our stand. We must do that before the other body has a chance to say what it wants.

No; I do not want any job like that; and if the people from Louisiana want someone who will do it they have the wrong man in the United States Senate. They never could do me a better favor in their lives than to turn me out of the United States Senate, anyway.

It does not mean anything to me. If I have to take that kind of domination among 95 other men who will stand for it, the best thing that could ever happen to me is to turn me out of the United States Senate.

This bill will either go over to another body or it will not go. It will either go out of this House and give some other body an opportunity to say whether they want it or not, or it ought not to go at all. That is how it will go.

Nobody will say to me, "It cannot go except in this form." This is the Senate. Liberty and Union. This is the Senate. Liberty and Union, one and inseparable? Liberty of what? Liberty of conduct of the Parliament. How much? Why is the present motion pending before this body tonight? It pends because it has been said by the Senator from Arkansas that his motive for making it is that it is the only means of securing action on the matter.

Mr. President, I have been here long enough to know how Members stand on various questions. I wish every Member of the Senate to listen to the concluding words I am saying. We talk around here, we talk to one another from lip to lip sometime on the floor, and we talk out in the cloakrooms and in the halls, and sometime we talk up in a closed office, where very few people hear what we say. I have heard many conversations, and so have all the Members here. Sometimes I imagine that I hear somebody complain about something he is going to do. Sometime it seems to me I have heard—no doubt I may have been mistaken—someone say something to me in private, and then I have heard him speak on the floor in a manner which seemed somewhat different.

I hope Senators will bear one thing in mind: My remarks on the hustings and my remarks in the cloakrooms have been equivalent to what I have said here on the floor. What I have thought there I have thought here. I knew this thing was going to come to the present point. At the last session of Congress we had almost the same experience we now have. I knew it was going to come to this Saturday night, when we saved the bill Saturday night. I had had a similar experience before. Do I not remember when we voted to undo the Economy Act? The Senator from Missouri very aptly said, a few nights ago, after that time, "I told you that you were going up the hill, and that you would come down the hill." I did not come down, but a majority of the Members reversed their votes, and the Economy Act went by the board.

I knew another time when we made a terrible uphill fight, and then we came down the hill, and that was the last of it, and we did no more. I knew perfectly well on Saturday night that on Sunday morning there would be some influence at work, and that the final outcome would be that the Senate of the United States would be called upon to recede from its stand; but I never thought it would come before there was a vote in another body. I thought I should be called upon to recede from my stand. I thought at least there would be a conference between the two bodies; but I never for a moment thought it would be in such a manner as proposed.

I was reading, from the RECORD of the Senate, how this matter occurred. Now I will read a little bit further, in order that the position of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] may be heard by the Members here today in a little bit clearer light. I wish to have in my concluding remarks the remarks of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 24:

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The Senate reassembled, at the conclusion of the recess, at 9 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may be permitted, he will yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to explain the possible disappointment of some Senators over the fact that the Senate was not called to order at an earlier hour. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a situation has arisen respecting the deficiency appropriation bill which is now brought to the attention of the Senate.

The bill, incorporating sundry Senate amendments, was returned to the House of Representatives late this afternoon. The House has taken no action regarding the bill, and it is my information that it does not intend to do so.

This afternoon a concurrent resolution was agreed to providing that each body, when it had concluded its labors on this day, should take an adjournment sine die. The question arises as to what action the Senate will take. The body at the other end of the Capitol is in session. It is expected to continue in session for a short time.

Under the concurrent resolution agreed to, automatically, at not later than 12 o'clock tonight, according to my interpretation of the concurrent resolution, each of the two bodies will stand adjourned. Either body is at liberty to adjourn at any time it chooses to do so before 12 o'clock.

That is when the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] spoke. He said:

Mr. President, first I should like to say that I advised a number of Senators that the Vice President would reconvene the Senate at 8:30 o'clock. There was a misunderstanding on my part. The Vice President had to take part in a conference and could not return to the Senate before this moment.

With reference to the deficiency bill, the fact is that the bill as it was passed by the Senate was sent to the House. All those of us who are interested in the passage of that bill desire that the House have an opportunity to vote upon the bill. If the House conferees should agree to meet with the Senate conferees, under the rules of the House the legislative proposals added by the Senate would have to be submitted to the House for a vote.

I am just advised by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations that the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations has said that no conferees have been appointed on the part of the House, and that they do not desire to have conferees appointed.

Under the legislative situation now existing, as I understand, all that I can do is to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby House Concurrent Resolution 38, the adjournment resolution, was agreed to and then move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the concurrent resolution to the Senate.

Before formally making that motion, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of the deficiency bill.

We have spent the entire summer in session. We have passed a social-security bill, and the deficiency bill carries an appropriation for the Board set up under that bill. Every expenditure of that Board is provided for in the deficiency bill. If the deficiency bill shall not be passed, the Board will not be able to function.

In addition to that, an appropriation is contained in the bill for the Labor Board which is absolutely essential if it is to function.

Provision is made for an appropriation of $13,000,000 for the Soil Conservation Service, which is essential to the functioning of that Department of the Government.

An appropriation is made, under the provision for the Department of Commerce, for a census of the persons who would be entitled, under the old-age-pension law, to participate in the benefits of that act.

The legislatures of many States will meet in January. If this deficiency bill shall not be passed and if we shall not provide the funds, it is questionable, in my mind, whether it will not seriously delay the operations of old-age pensions and other provisions of the social-security bill.

Mr. President, all of those of us who are interested in the deficiency bill ask is that the House of Representatives vote upon the measure. Therefore I think the Senate has a right to ask the House, and I think it should ask the House, to return to the Senate Concurrent Resolution 38, because it is my belief that whenever that request is made, the Members of the House of Representatives will see to it that conferees are appointed to meet the conferees who have been appointed on the part of the Senate.

In my recollection of 14 years' service in the House of Representatives and my service in the Senate, never before have any two men undertaken to say that the House of Representatives will not appoint conferees on an appropriation bill to meet conferees appointed on the part of the Senate.

I wish to say that I am now reading from the remarks of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. He served in the other body for 14 years. He came here a little before I came here; he was elected at the same time I was, but I delayed coming here for a little over a year after I was elected in order that I might serve out my term as Governor of Louisiana. I promised my people when I had been elected Governor that I would not leave the office of Governor until another Governor had been elected. I served my term until Governor Allen had been nominated by the Democratic Party, and I left a few nights later and came to Washington, D. C., to take my seat in this honorable body.

I said the junior Senator from South Carolina served for 14 years in the other body, and he has served for about 5 years in this body. His colleague the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has served here longer than that. The senior Senator from South Carolina is a partner in the deanship on the Democratic side of this body. He and the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] have served here, I believe, for about 27 years each. Perhaps I overstate it a little. I understand that the only one who has served here any longer than they have served is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The Senator from South Carolina is a man who can be believed in in all respects and is believed by everybody in this body.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. I notice that it is 10 minutes to 12 o'clock, and I desire to ask the Chair if, when the hand of the clock reaches the hour of 12, that will mean that the Senate will have adjourned, and if it further means that the old people of this country who were to have their pensions paid them out of this bill will have to wait to get them until Congress shall meet on January the 3d, in regular session, or if there is any way in this bill, of which the Vice President knows, by which these old people can get their pensions? I desire to ask that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In reply to the parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will state that when the hour of 12 o'clock arrives, the Senate will adjourn and the whole bill will fail.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to make a further parliamentary inquiry. Does it also mean as to the $600,000 which is provided in this bill to inaugurate operations under the so-called "Guffey coal law", in which the coal miners are so much interested, they will be deprived of having that law go into effect by reason of the filibuster of the Senator from Louisiana which has defeated the appropriation measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whatever provisions are in the bill will fail at the hour of 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLACK. That provision is in the bill; and, as I understand the Chair in answer to my parliamentary inquiry, it means that the successful filibuster of the Senator from Louisiana will prevent the going into effect of the so-called "Guffey law" and will also prevent the old people from getting their pensions until the Congress shall meet in January and may make another appropriation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair repeats that the appropriation referred to by the Senator from Alabama will fail along with the others in case the bill shall not be finally disposed of before 12 o'clock.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to remind Members of the Senate that this bill would have died last Saturday night if it had not been for me. The RECORD is here to show that.

Mr. BLACK. Why did the Senator save its life only to kill it and take away the hope of so many citizens at this late hour?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no. I ask my friend from Alabama to listen to me. I am satisfied he has not heard a great deal I have said tonight. Though he has been here, some of us fail to comprehend meanings. My language is rather plain; it is not in parliamentary style that would give me an advantage that my friends here have; but I am learning, I am coming along, and I promise to do better next time. Nor have I had any trips to foreign lands. I may get one of them; I have a chance for improvement. I will say, however, that my voice kept this bill alive last Saturday night, but I did not know that I was going to be asked tonight to cut the throat of the wheat farmer without giving him a chance; I did not know I would be asked to do that. I am unwilling to do it.

I was going to say, Mr. President, that I would not presume that any other body would cut the throat of the wheat farmer. I would say for my colleagues and for the President of the United States, not as they say about me, that they do not have to prove their love for humanity, and I do not have to prove mine. I have made a fortune in my lifetime and it has gone to humanity. I not only made a fortune but I sacrificed another fortune in order that I might fight for humanity. Long years ago when I was in the oil business they froze us out and took what little I had and what I was expecting to make. Years later they came to me and said, "We are going to have an amicable arbitration and adjust the damages that you suffered a few years ago when the oil combinations froze out the oil properties in which you were heavily interested."

I knew what it meant, and I said we will have no amicable adjustment. I lost mine as did 113 other companies, and I will continue to lose it; they will not at this late day pay me damages that 113 others cannot get. So I kept my right to fight for the people alive. I have nearly made another fortune since that time and spent it for humanity, and will make one this year and I will spend that for humanity, spend it for the people of this country, for the God-living blood and marrow of humanity. I do not need the little $10,000 a year of a United States Senator. If anybody down my way that they know of needs the money, let them give it to him; I do not need it. The people of my section of the country know that I am here fighting for humanity, and you cannot bring me a bill in here and say to me cut the wheat farmers out of it and the cotton farmers out of it before it can go out of here.

Why? Not because the Senate wants it done, but because somebody else wants it done. If another body would vote that they did not want the wheat farmer or the cotton farmer in it, I would not undertake to challenge their prerogatives, but I will not say that I am going to be a party to cutting the throat of the wheat farmer before I will allow the other body to have an opportunity to say whether they want to do it or not. That is all.

This stand for principle will mean something in this country pretty soon. It may preserve legislative government. Remember what I am telling you: It may preserve legislative government, which is nearly gone. Remember what I am saying.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will say that it may also destroy the right of free speech in the Senate. The people of the country may become so disgusted that they will cut off the right of free speech here.

Mr. LONG. No they will not. This is one time the country will approve me. I challenge Senators to find out anything I have ever stood for in this body that has not been popular among the people.

Mr. BLACK. I know the Senator has always thought it was popular, but he is going to be mistaken this time.

Mr. LONG. Am I? Then go down and help beat me. I come before the electorate in Louisiana in 4 months, and I challenge the whole dad-gummed kit and barrel of the Democratic Party to come down and beat me. I want them to beat me if they can on this issue.

Mr. BLACK. Will you let everybody vote?

Mr. LONG. Everybody votes in Louisiana. Louisiana is better than Alabama in that respect.

Mr. BLACK. Will you count their votes?

Mr. LONG. Yes; and we will count them and will let you appoint watchers as you wish, and you will see and know what the votes amount to, take it any way you like.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator in that respect.

Mr. LONG. Not only that, but Louisiana is setting an example. Formerly a man, in order to be eligible to vote, had to pay a poll tax of a dollar a year, but when the Allen administration in Louisiana came into power——

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield? It is now half a minute to 12 o'clock, and I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact——

Mr. LONG. I do not yield.

Mr. BLACK. To the fact that he has been filibustering this bill to death.

Mr. LONG. No. The Allen administration in Louisiana did an unusual thing for an administration in power. It enfranchised every voter without his having to pay a dollar a year to vote, and Louisiana this year, with less population, either white or colored, than Alabama has—I think it is less—will vote twice the number of votes that Alabama polls in a similar election. Why? Because Louisiana lets every man vote, whether he has a dollar or a nickel or not.

Mr. BONE. Of course that is something to be proud of, but——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I do not yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. That is what we are proud of.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is now almost 12 o'clock. I submit as a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair whether or not, because of his selfish desire to get publicity for himself, the Senator from Louisiana has not defeated the hopes and aspirations and the desires of the people of this country?

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution No. 40, the Senate stands adjourned sine die.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The following enrolled bills and joint resolution, heretofore duly signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses, were presented to the President of the United States by the Committee on Enrolled Bills:

On August 27, 1935:

S. 1994. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, informed the Secretary of the Senate that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the Senate, as follows:

On August 27, 1935:

S. 491. An act for the relief of Fred Herrick;

S. 1448. An act for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October 1918;

S. 1832. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide by agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a subdivision of the State of New Mexico, for maintenance and operation on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., reclaimed under previous acts of Congress, and authorizing an annual appropriation to pay the cost thereof for a period of not to exceed 5 years;

Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

On September 3, 1935:

S. 3210. An act to refer the claim of the Menominee Tribe of Indians to the Court of Claims with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

On September 4, 1935:

S. 3184. An act to provide for the immediate settlement of the obligation of the Joe Graham Post of the American Legion arising out of the purchase of the Ship Island Military Reservation.

DISAPPROVALS OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate the following list of bills and joint resolutions disapproved, together with his reasons therefor:

On September 3, 1935:

S. J. Res. 168. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 16 to May 23, 1936, inclusive.

"In all recent legislation of this character the Treasury Department has been successful in securing the incorporation of provisions for the reimbursement, to the appropriations from which paid, of the expenses necessarily incurred by the Customs Service in connection with the entry and custody of articles for which a special exemption from duty is authorized. On August 6, 1935, the Department wrote to the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations recommending the incorporation of a similar provision in Senate Joint Resolution 168, but none appears in the bill presented for my approval.

"The Treasury Department believes that the provision for reimbursement of expenses is an essential feature of legislation of the character of Senate Joint Resolution 168, and that its omission is inconsistent with the provision of section 3 of the bill providing that the Government of the United States is not by the resolution obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of the exposition in favor of which the bill is drawn."

On September 5, 1935:

S. 1763. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service", approved May 29, 1928, as amended by the act of December 12, 1930.

"The bill involves estimated annual expenditures of $400,000 to $425,000.

"It appears this bill seeks only to put customs inspectors and station inspectors on a plane of equality with immigration inspectors with respect to the single feature of automatic pay increases in the two lower grades. The bill does not attempt complete uniformity of pay as to comparable employments within the two services. More significantly, it ignores other groups of customs employees who will no doubt seek legislation in their own behalf at an early date. Thus the area of unscientific classification will be further extended."

S. 2621. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Devils Lake, N. Dak., in the construction, extension, and betterment of the high-school building at Devils Lake, N. Dak., to be available to Indian children.

"There are no nontaxable Indian lands within this school district; and out of a total number of 1,403 pupils attending the public schools of this district only 53 are Indian pupils, for whom tuition is paid to the district by the Federal Government. It is apparent, therefore, that the responsibility for providing adequate school facilities for this district is an obligation of the district and not of the Federal Government."

S. 3092. An act to provide funds for cooperation with White Bird school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extention of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children.

"With a total school population in this district of 53 children, of whom 13 are Indians, there were enrolled in the school during the last school year 24 white children and no Indian children. I am advised, moreover, by the Indian Service that the interests of the small number of Indian children in this district will be best served by their continuance as pupils of a Government Indian school. Under these circumstances I feel obliged to withhold approval of this bill."

S. J. Res. 65. Joint resolution to extend the period of suspension of the limitation governing the filing of suit under section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended.

"Apparently the main purpose of this resolution is to afford further opportunity for persons to sue on their war-risk insurance where such action was not taken because of the passage of Public No. 2, or, because of failure to file claim at an earlier date, very little time remained for filing suit after final denial by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Any meritorious claim can be filed and allowed by the Veterans' Administration without recourse to the courts.

"The Government's policy in permitting suits upon war-risk insurance has been one of great liberality. It appears to me, in the absence of clear and satisfactory evidence explaining or justifying the long delay before bringing suit, that the very delay would be an indication of the weakness of the claim. These situations only arise because of the failure of the claimant to file his claim more promptly, and is in no sense the fault of the Government."

On September 6, 1935:

S. 2632. An act to provide for the construction of 10 vessels for the Coast Guard designed for ice-breaking and assistance work.

"While it is true that the additional shallow-draft ice breakers could be used advantageously by the Coast Guard, it is my conclusion, and that of the Treasury Department, that the present needs are not such as to justify the expenditure required to provide them at this time."

On September 7, 1935:

S. 1878. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.

"Appended hereto letter of the Acting Attorney General."

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1935.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

SIR: Reference is made to S. 1878, introduced by Senator JOHNSON, of California, an act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. The attached file includes a letter of August 29, 1935, from General MacArthur. The Acting Secretary of War objects to the approval of the bill on the basis of two approved opinions of the Judge Advocate General rendered in reports on similar bills in the Seventieth and Seventy-second Congresses, respectively.

The beneficiary of this legislation did file a claim in the Court of Claims for the taking, use, and damages to this property and was awarded $229,500, with interest on $150,000 thereof from June 1, 1922, to date of payment.

This award was entered on June 6, 1927, and thereafter, I am advised by the letter of the War Department and by the Claims Division of the Department of Justice, which handled the suit in the Court of Claims, a stipulation was entered into that no petition for certiorari would be filed to review the award. Upon the execution of this stipulation the award was paid.

It is true that the Court of Claims refused to consider the claim for waste upon the ground that as the Government was not a lessee no covenant for waste could be implied.

The bill as drawn confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear "the claim of the Mack Copper Co. against the United States for just compensation for the taking and use, and the damages and waste inflicted by the taking and use, of certain real property owned by the Mack Copper Co. * * *." The right to litigate is limited by the phrase "not heretofore paid by the United States to the Mack Copper Co." It would appear from this language that all claims of the type authorized in the act may be relitigated subject to a credit for the amount heretofore paid.

If this bill is approved, it will authorize the relitigation of issues already settled and, in addition to that, inject the question of waste into the proceedings.

It would furthermore appear from the file that the Mack Copper Co. has been adequately compensated for the use and damage to the property, since it acquired the property by a contract of purchase originating in 1912 and concluding in 1917 for $338,684.82.

The letter of Congressman BURNHAM to you of August 29, 1935, states that—

"All other landowners whose lands were taken for this camp, Camp Kearny, have already been compensated by acts of Congress for use and similar damages to their lands."

I have not been able to determine whether the phrase "similar damages" applies to waste alone or to damages for which this beneficiary was compensated. Whatever may be the facts as to that, other claimants apparently received certain sums appropriated by Congress while this claimant has been granted the special advantage of a private act.

Under all the circumstances, I recommend the veto of the act.

Respectfully,

STANLEY REED,
Acting Attorney General.

S. 2324. An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

"The reasons set forth in letter of Acting Secretary of War appended hereto."

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 29, 1935.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am returning herewith S. 2324, "An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart", transmitted to me by your direction for a statement as to whether or not there is any objection on the part of the War Department to its approval.

In reply, I desire to state that the War Department objects to the approval of this act for the following reasons:

The Purple Heart was created by Gen. George Washington in daily orders to the troops, on August 7, 1782. The orders directed:

"The general, ever desirous to cherish a virtuous ambition in his soldiers, as well as to foster and encourage every species of military merit, directs that whenever any singularly meritorious action is performed, the author of it shall be permitted to wear on his facings, over the left breast, the figure of a heart in purple cloth, or silk, edged with narrow lace or binding."

The orders further provided that acts of extraordinary fidelity and essential service, as well as acts of unusual gallantry, should be rewarded.

The award of the Purple Heart lapsed, but by order of the President it was revived in General Orders of the War Department, No. 3, dated February 22, 1932. The Army Regulations now contain in detail the provisions for the award of the medal, and the design of the medal has been carefully defined.

While the War Department can have no objection to the formation of associations among the recipients of this medal, it believes that caution must be observed in placing in the hands of a minority of the holders of the medal the authority of Federal laws to make rules and regulations which might jeopardize the honor intended to be bestowed upon each of the thousands of persons to whom the Government has awarded the medal, or which might interfere with the rights of the War Department in the bestowal of the medal and the design of the insignia symbolic of the award.

Section 1 of the bill designates certain persons by name and such other persons as may be chosen, who are holders of the Purple Heart, duly chosen, to constitute the body corporate to be known as the "Military Order of the Purple Heart." Into whose hands the control of this body may at some time fall cannot now be known. Whether or not the charter always will be conscientiously adhered to in the interests of all holders of the medal cannot be known. All holders of the medal may not be admitted to membership; or they may in effect be denied membership because of dues, assessments, or for other reasons. Clearly there is an opportunity for a selected few to draw to themselves honor and benefits which should be bestowed equally upon all holders of the medal.

Section 4 defines the powers of the corporation. It may adopt a constitution, bylaws, and regulations to carry out its purpose. Many holders of the medal may not be members of, or may not even be aware of the existence of, the corporation. Yet the corporation, with the sanction of an act of Congress, might take actions which, before the public, would affect adversely the nonmember holders of the medal.

The corporation may adopt for the purposes of the corporation emblems and badges. In the case of the Purple Heart, as with the Distinguished Service Cross and other medals, the War Department has adopted a definite design for the medal, in order that it may become generally known and recognized by all persons. Such a medal has a definite significance. The above provision would permit the supplying to members of the corporation additional emblems and badges to supplement the medal, thus multiplying the number of badges or medals for a single act or service, and thereby tend to destroy the significance of the War Department award. The provision, as a part of an approved act of Congress, might even be construed as taking out of the hands of the War Department the right to prescribe the Purple Heart Medal.

Section 6 provides that the corporation, and its local chapters, shall have the sole and exclusive right to have and to use, for its purposes, the name of the Military Order of the Purple Heart. This emphasizes the fact that an order is being created within an order, which would discriminate against the holders of the medal who are not members of the corporation.

The incorporation of this body would also be a precedent for the incorporation of groups holding other military decorations, which might seriously alter the whole scheme of military decorations.

To sum up, the award of the Purple Heart is an act, complete in itself, to indicate the recognition by the Government of a meritorious act or service for one's country. No obligation should attach to the holder of the award to join any organization to secure for himself the full honor of the award, and no organization should be set up under the authority of the Government which in any way may interfere with or reduce the prestige of any holder of the award, or give any group of holders special rights and privileges not held by all holders of the award. Ample laws are already in existence enabling the War Department to administer the award of military decorations, and it is strongly felt that no corporation should be authorized by law to have a voice in or influence in the administering and award of any of the various authorized medals, badges, and decorations.

It is accordingly recommended that the act referred to be not approved.

Respectfully yours,

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR,
Acting Secretary of War.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, AUGUST 26, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, Thou who art supremely loving, forgiving, and merciful, incline our hearts to do Thy will. We praise Thee that our God of the eternities is also our God for the moment, strong to deliver and good to redeem. We most earnestly beseech Thee that the riotous personalities of the world may take themselves most seriously to task and by an increase of wisdom, humility, and unselfishness may cooperate with the Old World brotherhood; let folly and greed be subdued, lest they blaze once more before the eyes of men. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. We pray that all patriotism may become so pure, so humane, so just that the place of Thy holy feet shall be made heavenly. O God, give us well-poised minds, pure motives, clear consciences, and high ideals. To this end quicken our sensibilities that our acts may be made worthy, our lips clean, and our language pure. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLFENDEN and Mr. RICH made the point that no quorum was present.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3783. An act for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co.;

H. R. 7974. An act to withdraw and restore to their previous status under the control of the Territory of Hawaii certain Hawaiian homes lands now in use as an airplane landing field;

H. R. 8511. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8512. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8513. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton school district, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; and

H. R. 8516. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6137. An act for the relief of the Otto Misch Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2524. An act to amend section 112 of the United States Code, Annotated (title 28; subtitle "Civil suits; where to be brought");

S. 3413. An act to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes; and

S. 3453. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel.

CORRECTION

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it makes much difference, but on page 14622 of the RECORD of Saturday I made a mistake and said that the words "Federal Power Commission" were stricken out in the wrong place. The bill leaves it in the right place, but I want the RECORD to show that I made the mistake.

JIM FARLEY RESCUES A POST OFFICE AND GAINS A CROWN

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a brief letter from the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, on a nonpolitical subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow promoted the village blacksmith to the dignity of an established institution by writing a poem about him. Postmaster General Jim Farley, less gifted with poetic genius than Longfellow but stronger and more adept as a political craftsman, has performed the same service for the village postmaster by an administrative edict.

There is an old saying among meteorologists that weather originates at Medicine Hat, and, by the same token, the science of government originates among the cracker-barrel philosophers who gather around the potbellied stoves at the village post offices. Every typical village post office has a potbellied stove. It may be so covered with tobacco incrustations that it is hardly distinguishable, but it is always there. A village post office without a potbellied stove would be like an ocean liner without an engine.

When a villager, his brow seared with thought, aims an expectorant shot at the sawdust box and hits the stove it is not, after all, a false move in the economy of the universe. It is at such moments that great ideas are born. It is the thought wave that counts, and aim is purely incidental.

Nobody knows better than Jim Farley that the abolishment of the village post office, where grass-root politicians assemble, ostensibly to get the letter that seldom comes but really for the more serious business of discussing the state of the Union and passing critical judgment on the quality of statesmanship at Washington, would be a blow at the very fundamentals of American Government. As a boy, Jim tapped the sugar barrel and played checkers with the whiskered experts at the village post office at Grassy Point, N. Y., and it was there, no doubt, he imbibed the first draughts of the political wisdom that enabled him in mature life to drive the Democratic donkey under the wire to a galloping finish.

As a Hoosier I feel a thrill of pride over Mr. Farley's vindication of the village post office because it was a little post office out in Indiana that caused him to issue his beneficent edict which not only stayed the proceedings in this particular instance but also established the village post office on a permanent pedestal as one of our valued and honored institutions.

Inspectors had decreed that the post office at Lincoln, Jackson township, Cass County, Ind., which had flourished uninterruptedly for generations, now and for some time past located in Nora Kitchell's general store, would be abolished and that thenceforth the inhabitants of Lincoln and vicinity would receive their mail by rural delivery. The announcement came as a bombshell to the entire community. From time immemorial the post office had been the village magnet, drawing to its charmed circle all of the cracker-box philosophers of that section. It was the only public forum in the community, the place where issues were made and public opinion was shaped. The good people of Lincoln were suddenly oppressed by a sickening realization of the tragedy that would befall them if their post office was abolished. They ran around in circles denouncing Washington and all of its evil works.

The post office at Lincoln was established in 1856. For 79 years it had been the clearing house of community opinions. For 79 years statesmen had been alternately praised and panned there—mostly panned. The heart-aching tragedies growing out of three great wars—the Civil War, the War with Spain, and the World War—had been discussed there. Pathos and sorrow had sometimes crept into the discussions, for what transpired there was a reflection of the community emotions, the joy and grief of human existence.

While the community seethed and boiled over the prospect that it would lose its post office someone said:

Let's appeal to Everett Watkins. Maybe he can help us to save our post office.

Happy thought! Everett C. Watkins, Washington correspondent of the Indianapolis Star, is not only a leader in the corps of Washington correspondents but he is Lincoln's most distinguished son. He was born at Lincoln, and the community is very proud of him. In the national capital he is known as a sort of Congressman at Large for the State of Indiana on account of the innumerable appeals that come to him from Hoosiers to perform various services and his unfailing kindness in responding to these requests. Everett knew all about the importance of the Lincoln post office as a village institution. On hazy, drowsy summer days he had sat by the potbellied stove and had been unmercifully licked in checker games by the local talent. In that forum he had often heard the Democratic Party raucously assailed and seldom defended by the village paladins of liberty, the community being heavily Republican.

He was just the man to save the situation and in agreeing to do his best he informed his friends out at Lincoln that in this great America of ours it is not sufficient that we shall have freedom of speech guaranteed by the Constitution, but we must have some place to exercise that speech—hence the necessity of having a village post office.

The upshot was that Watkins appealed to Farley in such a graphic and convincing way that the Postmaster General, remembering Grassy Point and the potbellied stove of his boyhood, generously capitulated and rescinded the order abolishing the post office at Lincoln.

Then what did Lincoln do? As a Hoosier, I bubble over with pride when I record the sequel—how Lincoln exceeded the best Hoosier traditions in showing Jim Farley how much it loves him. We Hoosiers are an emotional people, and when we love a person we love him 100 percent and we are not slow about demonstrating our affections.

A "Jim Farley Day" was arranged for at Lincoln and on that eventful day the lid blew off. Although the village has only 75 inhabitants, all told, more than 700 citizens attended the blow-out. Bands and drum corps came from all the surrounding country, and, while it is a curious fact that no one in the community ever saw big-hearted Jim, the large assemblage of Farley rooters, inspired by a life-sized photograph showing his smiling face, serenaded him with a tremendous roar of noise that passed as music. Just to demonstrate that politics was adjourned for that happy occasion the Republican precinct committeeman for the Lincoln precinct joined with the Democrats in cutting down a tree in a neighboring forest and erecting a flagpole 50 feet high to the everlasting honor and memory of Jim Farley. As many as possible jammed into Nora Kitchell's store and there, around the potbellied stove (which, by the way, was clean as a pin, as Nora does not tolerate tobacco incrustations), they adopted stirring resolutions praising Jim Farley and all his works. Then, to top off the celebration and make it full and complete, they painted in letters 4 feet high on the side of the post-office building this legend: "Lincoln Post Office—Thanks to Jim Farley."

The incident I have sought feebly to describe is so unusual and so impressive in respect to the high official recognition that has been given to the village post office as an institution of Government that I present herewith for the delectation of readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the very interesting correspondence bearing upon this subject.

Mr. Watkins' letter to the Postmaster General follows:

THE INDIANAPOLIS STAR,
1397 National Press Club Building, Washington, D. C.

Postmaster General JAMES A. FARLEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FARLEY: This is a serious matter. The village of my birth—Lincoln, Jackson township, Cass County, Ind.—is threatened with humiliation—the loss of its post office in Nora Kitchell's general store.

Indignation meetings are being held at Lincoln; appealing letters are popping in on me every hour of the day. Things will happen to me, as well as to you, if we don't save our post office. Our best village orators, including my Aunt Emma Watkins, are voicing mighty sentiments. Aunt Emma has no match as a debater. That's the reason your ears have been burning. We are all heated up on the subject. You have the opportunity of a lifetime to become the hero of my birthplace if only you spare our post office. But if you fail us—well, Jim, you would be pretty sure to lose the last of the few remaining hairs on your head.

The Lincoln post office, be it remembered, was established in 1856. Going to the post office to get the letter that seldom comes has given us great pleasure during all these years. Indeed, there would be utterly no chance for us to longer enjoy the "abundant life" if you should deny us our long-established habit of the daily trip to the post office a few minutes after the mail train, which never stops, tosses off the mail bag. Our village of Lincoln would lose its identity if you, Jim Farley, put us on a rural mail route out of a rival neighboring town. We've fought on these years to keep Lincoln on the map, and we are still full of fight.

We don't ask for a towering Federal building. We don't ask for Federal funds with which to construct an imposing edifice. We are a modest people content with what we have—a humble post office consisting of a couple of dozen lockboxes having a prominent place on the front counter of our grocery and calico general store—but we would feel humbled and humiliated if we lose our "P. O."

We appeal to you to save our pride; to spare us the hurt we would suffer if our village is swept off the post-office map with a stroke of your pen. Think how you would feel, Jim, if your birthplace—Grassy Point, N. Y.—should sometime have its pride trampled upon by some heartless "P. M. G."

In Lincoln we have no Elks Lodge, no Rotary Club, no courthouse, no town hall, no movies, no billiard parlors, no bowling alleys, no airport, no public square. All of which, we maintain, emphasizes all the more the importance of our post office. Take away our post office and we would have no place to go. Take away our post office and we would have no forum where the mighty questions of the day could be discussed. Freedom of speech is defeated if we have no place where we can voice freedom of speech. Our barber shop unfortunately is open only 1 day a week. It is an unsatisfactory forum for we like to debate every day of the week. (Winfield Elkins barbers only on Saturdays; he is the village painter, plumber, and paper hanger on other days.) So you will readily understand that our post office supplies us with our only place for cracker-barrel debate. And right now, Jim Farley—you are Jim to everybody out there—is the chief topic of raging debates.

Aunt Emma is chief debater. She knows all the words. She is a leading citizen, possessed with pride in Lincoln. She loves going to the post office even to look into an empty lockbox. It would be taking away her personal liberty to deny her the privilege of going to the post office. So, in the name of my Aunt Emma I appeal to you to be big hearted and spare our post office.

We may not be able to erect a Jim Farley statue, but we are an appreciative citizenship and if you save our post office from rural route oblivion we are sure to hang your best photograph, autographed, in the Lincoln post office and hold a rousing Praise-to-Jim mass meeting. What do you say, Jim?

Anxiously,

EVERETT C. WATKINS,
Indianapolis Star,
National Press Building, Washington, D. C.

To the communication of Mr. Watkins the Postmaster General replied as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. EVERETT C. WATKINS,
Press Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR EVERETT: I have received your very interesting letter relative to the post office at Lincoln, Jackson Township, Cass County, Ind. I remember your handing me the letter as I was leaving the White House Executive Offices on Friday. Immediately upon my return to the Post Office Department I looked into the situation and took the necessary steps to cancel an order previously issued relative to the closing of the Lincoln post office.

After having read your very interesting letter I definitely came to the conclusion there was only one course for me to pursue. The question of the United States joining the World Court, the attitude of the public on the bonus question, and the reaction to the Supreme Court decision on the N. R. A. legislation, in my judgment, fade into insignificance when compared to the trouble that would develop had I failed to give serious consideration to your letter. I, too, was born, as you indicated in your letter, in a small town named "Grassy Point, N. Y.", and naturally if any move was ever made to close that post office I can well appreciate the reaction of its citizens. I have every reason to believe, after reading your letter, that no greater volume of mail arrives at Grassy Point than reaches Lincoln in the course of a given period. I was touched when I received your letter, because Grassy Point is in exactly the same position as Lincoln. They, too, have no Rotary club, no Elks lodge; no courthouse, no city hall, no pool room, no bowling alleys, no ping-pong parlor, no airport. They did have a barber shop in the old days, although my belief is that there isn't any barber shop located in that community at the present time. In Grassy Point we have our local politics, of course, but I doubt very much whether we have anyone who could match your Aunt Emma whom you referred to in such a friendly way. The post office in Grassy Point is in a grocery store, the same as our thousands of post offices of a like character in the United States. You know, Everett, I have a friendly regard for small post offices and shall always have that feeling for them. I remember full well as a kid going to the post office every morning, exclusively for the purpose of getting the letters which rarely arrived, but really for the purpose of looking at the old New York Herald which, of course, carried the baseball scores and stories of the baseball games the preceding day. As a matter of fact, I used to meet the mail carrier as he passed my home and walk to the post office with him to make sure that I would be there upon the arrival of the only copy of the Herald that, in those days, reached the community of Grassy Point. It was delivered to the postmaster, a fine old fellow who ran the grocery store, and happened to be a strong Republican, although he was a great personal friend of mine. So when I received your communication, I want you to know that it fell upon friendly ears. Consequently I was happy to take immediate steps to comply with your request. I am sure that by this time the citizens of Lincoln will be contented with the knowledge that everything is well.

In your letter you indicate that if I fail to comply with your request I will lose the last of the few remaining hairs on my head. Naturally having complied with your wishes, I feel secure in the fact that I will not lose any more hair. In return for having done what you requested, possibly you might be willing to suggest some way for me to secure a few more hairs on the top of my bald head, bearing in mind the fact that I will never wear a toupee.

I assume that a mass meeting has already been, or will be held, at which time your Aunt Emma will take the necessary steps to Whereas and Resolve the Post Office Department and the administration, on the action taken in accordance with your request.

Your reference to my photograph is noted. I am going to send one to the postmaster with the suitable autograph thereon.

Seriously, Everett, I got a great kick out of your letter. It was good to receive it because frankly, as you can imagine, most of the letters that we receive are serious in character, and the people that write are usually complaining or begging and because your letter was so different, it pleased me immensely. I am always anxious to be of service if I can, and I hope you will never hesitate to call upon me if you think I can help.

With assurance of high personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

LOANS ON COTTON AND WHEAT—SENATE AMENDMENTS 55 AND 56 TO SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 9215)

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding 30 minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the same permission be granted to those who entertain different views from the gentleman from Texas with reference to amendments 55 and 56, known as the "cotton and wheat amendments"?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is a matter that would depend upon the whole House and not upon myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, I request the Speaker to refer the third deficiency bill—H. R. 9215—now on the Speaker's table, to the Appropriations Committee of the House. This bill passed the House on Thursday, August 22, and, as usual, was promptly sent to the Senate, and was held there until 8 o'clock on the evening of Saturday, August 24, when it was messaged to the House, together with the resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of Congress at 12 o'clock on the same day, thus requiring action by the House on this bill within 4 hours, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate had placed amendments on the bill involving a possible outlay by the Government of from $800,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 by way of loans which were not in the bill as passed by the House and which had never received any consideration by the Appropriations Committee of the House or Senate and about which no Member of either branch of Congress was fully informed. Manifestly, if we are going to apply business methods to the conduct of the Government involving such vast outlays of public funds, hearings should be held by some committee of Congress in which all the facts should be developed in order to permit of an intelligent determination of the soundness of the policy involved, the approximate obligations incurred, and whether or not the Government could raise the money without financial embarrassment or in any way affecting its credit.

The amendments under discussion are as follows:

SEC. 7. The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed, during the crop year ending July 31, 1936, to make loans to farmers at the rate of 12 cents per pound on cotton, where such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during the crop year ending July 31, 1935, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

SEC. 8. The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby directed to make loans to farmers at the rate of 1½ cents per pound on wheat, where such loans are secured by warehouse receipts or by wheat stored on the farm, such loans to be made upon such terms and conditions as the said Corporation may prescribe, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose.

It is plain to see that the above amendments require the Commodity Credit Corporation to loan 12 cents per pound on cotton and 90 cents per bushel on wheat, and in order to do so it is directed that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advance this money to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The material questions involved upon which hearings must be conducted and all the facts assembled to enable the Congress to form an intelligent decision in the interest of the Nation are as follows:

First. Whether or not it is beneficial or injurious to the Nation and to the cotton and wheat producers to make a loan on those products, as well as the other agricultural products included in the A. A. A. Act, in an amount above the world market price and destroy our export markets for such products.

Second. Whether or not requiring the Government by law to borrow from $800,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 in addition to what it is compelled to borrow under existing law will weaken or destroy the credit of the Government.

Third. Whether or not the passage of the amendments would not fool and delude the farmers into thinking they can and will receive a 12 cents per pound loan on cotton and 90 cents per bushel loan on wheat when, in truth and fact, under existing law, it is impossible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to raise this amount of money for this or any other purpose.

I shall discuss each of the above questions concisely by giving the facts in order that you may draw your own conclusions. The estimated production of cotton for this year is 11,890,000 bales; wheat, 620,000,000 bushels; and corn, 2,250,000 bushels. As a result of our policy of loaning 12 cents per pound on cotton in the past, the Government owns and controls over 5,000,000 bales of cotton now stored in our warehouses throughout the Nation. By Government decree this is now being withheld from the market, but if placed on the market by the administration would lower the price of this year's crop of cotton below the cost of production. If this 12-cent loan is continued for this year with the world price at 11 cents per pound, it is self-evident that the farmers would not sell in the world market, but borrow the 12 cents per pound without recourse on them, and by the end of the year the Government would own and control from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 bales of surplus cotton; and if the policy were continued for 2 more years the Government would own and control from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 bales of surplus cotton. A wayfaring man, though he be a fool, can plainly see that this policy would destroy future cotton production throughout the South, throwing millions out of employment and bringing untold hardships upon one-third of the population of our country. I have been unable to find a single Member of Congress who endorses this course as a permanent policy.

Again, by loaning an amount per pound above the world market on cotton, we are destroying our export market for cotton (which is absolutely necessary for the consumption of at least one-half of our cotton crop), and encouraging foreign cotton-producing countries to increase their production and take our foreign customers for cotton away from us. Brazil has increased its cotton acreage 47 percent since we inaugurated this policy. It is estimated that the production of cotton by all foreign countries has been increased by reason of this policy this year to a potential production of 14,750,000 bales, the greatest in the history of the world, and the United States export of cotton has decreased at least 50 percent. It is wrong and suicidal for the United States to pursue a policy that will ultimately destroy cotton production in the South in an effort to raise the world price of cotton for the benefit of foreign producing countries.

If we follow the constructive program offered by the administration for the protection of the cotton producer, of loaning 10 cents a pound on cotton, which is 1 cent below the world price, and paying to the producer a 2-cent subsidy out of the Treasury, if necessary, to guarantee to such cotton producers 12 cents per pound, it will open up to us the world markets for our surplus cotton and it—the surplus—will gradually disappear in world trade in response to the law of supply and demand and quality. Thus the present and future of cotton production is taken care of in a constructive and businesslike manner. In addition, under this plan the banks of the country will, at the Government's suggestion, carry a vast amount of this 10 cents per pound loan on cotton, because the amount loaned thereon is 1 cent per pound less than the world market value of the cotton, thus affording an opportunity to place in circulation an enormous amount of money now held in their vaults, and at the same time relieve the Government of incurring additional bond issues and increasing the national debt. This is on the assumption that the capital stock of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be increased to such an amount by a new law to make it possible for the Government to raise the money to make the loans provided for in the Byrnes amendment.

I will not sacrifice the heritage of the sons and daughters of the South on the shrine of political expediency.

Second. The credit of the Government may be compared to a dam across a large river. This dam can only stand the pressure of so much water above it. When the water held back increases beyond that limit the dam breaks, the flood waters rush through, overflow the valleys, and leave destruction, woe, and misery in their wake. Just so we are reaching the limit of the credit of our Government through the increase of our national debt. We should resist the increase of that national debt for fear that it will accumulate beyond the limits of the Government to sustain. If this limit is materially exceeded, the national credit will give way, followed by the credit of industries, and bankruptcy will overtake the Nation. The mind of man cannot depict the financial chaos that will follow.

Third. A personal investigation by me has developed the fact that notwithstanding that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had been directed to furnish the necessary money to the Commodity Credit Corporation to make these loans, under existing law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot raise even one-half the amount that would be required. The A. A. A. has estimated that it would take a minimum of $800,000,000 to finance in the future, as it has in the past, corn and cotton loans, with the addition provided for in the amendment of wheat. The Commodity Credit Corporation has estimated that it would take over a billion dollars. If the Administration is required by law to loan above the market price to the cotton producer and the wheat producer, then, under every principle of justice and right, the Government is equally obligated to loan a proportionate amount upon cattle, hogs, dairy products, rice, barley, and other agricultural products recognized in the A. A. A. Act. This is under the doctrine that the burdens of government should rest equally upon the shoulders of all, and its blessings, like the gentle dew of heaven, should descend equally upon the heads of all.

It would be a rank discrimination to loan above the market price only on cotton and wheat and refuse such loans to the producers of other products. If the Government undertook to do this on all the products recognized as primary agricultural products in the A. A. A. Act, it would be compelled to raise from a billion and one-half to two billion dollars, and advance this amount to the Commodity Credit Corporation to be loaned out to the farmers on various commodities, and the result of the whole loaning program on all these products would be that we would find ourselves accumulating in our country alone the surplus agricultural products of the world, while other countries will increase production and dispose of their products in the world markets from which the United States would be excluded by its vain effort to repeal the law of supply and demand among the nations of the earth.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations for deficiencies, known as the "third deficiency appropriation bill", is now on the Speaker's table. It is, of course, within the discretion of the Chair, under the rules of the House, to send it to the Committee on Appropriations. The ordinary course of procedure is to send it to conference, under a unanimous-consent request. The chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the bill having made no such request, the Chair feels in view of the request of the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the importance of the questions involved, both of legislation and appropriation, as set forth briefly by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], that this bill should be referred to the committee having charge of the bill, in order that that committee may conduct such hearings and take such measures looking to recommendations as it may choose. The Chair accordingly refers the bill to the Committee on Appropriations under the established practice of the House which requires the Chair to take that course. [Applause.] In taking this action the Chair is following a similar action taken by a former Speaker of the House on January 23, 1931 (RECORD, p. 2975), when Mr. Speaker Longworth referred the Interior Department appropriation bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Why is it not in order that the House consider this appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. That will be in order if the Committee on Appropriations reports it, as is required under the established practice of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But before the Speaker announced his decision, it would have been in order for the House by substitute motion to have referred this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It would not, because that motion would not have been privileged, as the Chair ruled on Saturday. When a House bill with Senate amendments involving new matter of appropriations comes from the Senate it may be sent to conference by unanimous consent; otherwise, the duty of the Chair under the established practice of the House is to refer it to the standing committee having jurisdiction of it. The Chair has taken that course in this instance, and no motion of the kind referred to by the gentleman from Georgia is in order as a matter of privilege.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the House of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto, and under the rule, referred as follows:

H. R. 9215. An act making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 40

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Monday, the 26th day of August 1935, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that the previous question be ordered.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Colorado on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINSON of Georgia) there were—ayes 47, noes 178.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the resolution I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-two gentlemen have risen; not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and Mr. MCFARLANE demanded a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MAPES (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no order in the House, and there is misconception of what we are voting on. Are we voting on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. We are voting on the resolution of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], which, if adopted by the Senate, would provide for adjournment sine die today.

On this vote the yeas are 172 and nays 47.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have already been refused.

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Will the bells be rung and the House notified before we are called into session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that if the motion prevails, before the House is again called into session, three bells will be rung at least 15 minutes before the House is asked to assemble.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand the Senate has taken a recess until 5 o'clock this afternoon. Is it the intention of the Speaker to call the House into session before the Senate reconvenes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to tell the gentleman.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 5:45 o'clock p. m.

CELEBRATION OF ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to Public Resolution No. 59, the Chair appoints the following committee to arrange the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Constitution of the United States: Messrs. BLOOM, DORSEY, MCLAUGHLIN, DARROW, and TABER.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, together with Senate engrossed amendments thereto.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935–36

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9215) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, together with Senate engrossed amendments thereto.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request of the Senate be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the request of the Senate be granted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that we have had numerous conferences on the vexatious parliamentary question confronting the House for the last 24 hours. The only course to pursue is to grant the request of the Senate, by which we can have an appropriation bill to carry out the activities created and authorized to be undertaken by this Congress. Therefore, I ask you to adopt the motion. We will not have the loan features in that bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] that the House agree to the request of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a summary of the provisions of the Social Security Act prepared by the Committee on Economic Security, containing valuable information that I am sure will be of interest to all Members on this important measure passed during this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following summary of the provisions of the Social Security Act, prepared by the Committee on Economic Security:

The Social Security Act, as approved on August 14, 1935, represents a major advance in the attainment of economic security for the individual and for his family. The President outlined the entire program in his messages of June 8, 1934, and January 4, 1935. In both he stated that, "Among our objectives, I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first." He further said that security for the individual and for the family concerns itself with three factors: (1) Decent homes to live in, (2) development of the natural resources of the country so as to afford people the fullest opportunity to engage in productive work, and (3) safeguards against the major misfortunes of life. The Social Security Act is concerned with the third of those aspects of security—"safeguards against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours."

The act has been devised to provide such safeguards through cooperative action by the Federal and State governments, thus making possible fullest consideration of individual State needs while maintaining unity of purpose.

The provisions of the act deal with a number of distinct although related measures for social security, which may be grouped under the following headings: Unemployment compensation, old-age security, security for children, aid to the blind, extension of public-health services, vocational rehabilitation.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

In order to encourage the passage of State unemployment-compensation laws, title IX of the Social Security Act provides for a Federal pay-roll tax on all employers throughout the country who employ eight or more employees within 20 weeks of any year. Various employments have been necessarily excluded, such as agricultural labor, domestic service, governmental or public service, or service in the employment of institutions operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, and which are operated for nonprofit.

This tax will come into operation on January 1, 1936, and will be 1 percent in 1936, 2 percent in 1937, and 3 percent in 1938 and thereafter. Against this tax a credit is allowed for contributions made by employers for unemployment-compensation purposes under State laws setting up unemployment-compensation systems. The maximum credit to be allowed is 90 percent of the Federal tax, the other 10 percent to be payable to the Federal Government. This 10 percent is expected to be used for payment of the expenses of administration by the Federal and State Governments. After 1937 additional credit is also allowable to any employer who, because of favorable employment experience or adequate reserve funds, is permitted by the State to reduce his payments.

The act further provides that all funds collected by the States for unemployment-compensation purposes must be deposited in the United States Treasury, to be invested and liquidated by the Secretary of the Treasury. In addition, the act prescribes certain minimum standards which must be met by the State laws, in order to entitle employers in those States to an offset against the Federal tax. Included among these is a provision requiring that money withdrawn from the unemployment trust fund of the United States Treasury must be used exclusively for unemployment compensation, which, in turn, is to be paid through public employment offices of the State or through such other agencies as the Social Security Board may approve.

In all respects not dealt with in these standards the States are given complete freedom to establish any kind of unemployment compensation system they wish. They may or may not permit separate industry and plant accounts, and may or may not require employee's contributions in addition to the contributions paid by the employers. They may fix their own benefit rates or waiting periods and are charged with direct responsibility for administration.

The Social Security Board is charged with the administration of the Federal part of the unemployment-compensation system—other than the investment of the funds, which is a function of the Treasury Department. This Board is to assist the States with their problems of administration and is required to certify annually to the Secretary of the Treasury what State laws comply with Federal standards.

The entire plan of unemployment compensation is a cooperative Federal-State system. It insures uniformity with respect to the cost to employers, which is essential to make it possible for the States to legislate in this field. It assures the safety of all reserve funds and seeks to secure efficient administration of unemployment compensation throughout the country. At the same time it allows freedom for variations to meet the differing conditions in different States and will make it possible to get the practical experience needed to test the various theories which have been current as to the best type of unemployment-compensation act.

OLD-AGE SECURITY

In the field of old-age security the Social Security Act makes two separate provisions:

1. Grants-in-aid designed to assist in meeting the cost of pensions allowed under State laws to old people in need.

2. A Federal old-age-benefit system for employed persons.

Under title I of this act, the grants-in-aid, which help to meet the cost of pensions paid to old people under the State laws, are to be on a 50-50 basis, but the Federal part of this cost is not to exceed $15 per month for any individual, plus an additional 5 percent for administrative purposes. Thirty-seven million three hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars has been appropriated for the remainder of the fiscal year 1936 for old-age assistance in this field.

To entitle a State to aid its old-age-pension law must conform to standards prescribed in the act. These standards require payment of old-age pensions to old people in need who are citizens of the United States and who are 65 years of age or over, with the proviso that until 1940 any State may maintain a 70-year age limit. A State plan for such aid, if administered by political subdivisions of the State, must be mandatory upon them and must be submitted for the approval of the Federal administrative agency. The State residence requirement may not exceed 5 years in the last 9 years, although 1 year of residence immediately preceding application may be required. States may grant pensions on a more liberal basis, but will not receive any Federal aid unless they meet at least these standards.

Under titles II and VIII of the act a compulsory contributory system of old-age benefits is set up directly under the administration of the Social Security Board. Old-age benefits in the form of monthly payments are to be paid to qualified individuals in direct proportion to the total wages earned by such individuals in the course of their employment subsequent to 1936. The minimum monthly payment is to be $10; the maximum, $85. These payments will begin in the year 1942.

It has been necessary, because of the nature of their employment, to exclude the following groups from participation in the plan: Agricultural labor, domestic servants, casual labor, officers or members of crews documented under the laws of the United States or any foreign country, employees of the United States Government, employees of a State or subdivision, employees of institutions operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes and which are operated for nonprofit. This system of old-age benefits requires equal contributions both by employer and employee. This tax, collected by the Department of Internal Revenue, will be graduated, ranging from 1 percent in 1937 to the maximum 3 percent in 1949, and thereafter computed on wages paid, not in excess of $3,000.

The amount of the monthly benefits payable is determined as follows (not counting wages in excess of $3,000 annually):

Total wages paid as monthly benefit

Total wages received after Dec. 31, 1936, and prior to age 65, in covered employments:	Percent
First $3,000	½
Next $42,000	1½
All over $45,000	2½

Illustrative benefits are as follows:

Average monthly salary	Years of employment
	10	20	30	40
$50	$17.50	$22.50	$27.50	$32.50
$100	22.50	32.50	42.50	51.25
$150	27.50	42.50	53.75	61.25
$200	32.50	51.25	61.25	71.25
$250	37.50	56.25	68.75	81.25

Nonqualified individuals upon reaching age of 65 are to be paid a lump sum equal to 3½ percent of the total wages paid after December 31, 1936, and before the attainment of age 65.

Upon death of an individual before age of 65, his estate will receive payment equal to 3½ percent of his total wages received after December 31, 1936; if he dies after age of 65, his estate will receive the same amount less any benefits paid to him during his lifetime.

Payment of benefit will be withheld for each month in which a qualified individual who has attained age 65 received wages for regular employment.

The respective parts of this program for old-age security are complementary. Federal grants-in-aid for pensions paid by the States are designed to stimulate all States to enact liberal, old-age pension laws, for the support of people now old who are in need. The compulsory contributory old-age-benefit system is designed to enable younger workers, with the help of their employers, to make their own provisions for old age.

SECURITY FOR CHILDREN

The act makes provision for the protection of children who are in need of special assistance.

(1) Grants-in-aid to States to assist in meeting the costs of aid to dependent children (mothers' pensions).

(2) Grants to States to assist in meeting the costs of maternal and child-health services.

(3) Grants to States to assist in meeting the costs of services for crippled children.

(4) Grants to States to assist in meeting the costs of child-welfare services.

The sum of $18,562,500 has been appropriated for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board. State plans for aid to dependent children. The Federal Government will appropriate one-third of the total cost of those services to the State but payment in excess of $18 per month for the first child and $12 for additional children is not counted in determining Federal aid. A "dependent child" may be defined broadly as a child under the age of 16 who has been deprived of parental support through death, absence, or incapacity of his parents and who is living in a private home with relatives.

An appropriation of $2,850,000 has been made to the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor for maternal and child-health services, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from severe economic distress. This entire appropriation will be used exclusively for carrying out State plans for furthering and strengthening State and local health services to mothers and children and extending maternity and nursing services in rural counties.

An annual appropriation of $2,137,500 per year has been made to the Children's Bureau for medical care and other services for crippled children. The amount is to be allocated to the States on the basis of need, taking into consideration the number of crippled children in need of such services. The Federal Government will pay to each State which has an approved plan for services to crippled children an amount which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total sum expended for carrying out such plan.

An annual appropriation of $1,125,000 has been made to the Children's Bureau for grants in aid to States toward welfare services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children and children in danger of becoming delinquent. This amount is to be allotted by the Secretary of Labor to the States primarily on the basis of rural population. The amount so allotted is to be expended to defray part of the cost of child-welfare services in areas predominantly rural and other areas of special need.

AID TO THE BLIND

An appropriation of $2,250,000 has been made for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to needy individuals who are blind. This sum is made available for making payments to States which have submitted and had approved by the Social Security Board State plans for aid to the blind. The Federal Government will appropriate an amount equal to one-half the total sum expended under the State plan with respect to each individual who is blind and is not an inmate of a public institution. This Federal aid is limited to $15 per month plus an additional 5 percent to the State for administrative purposes.

The State plan must comply with certain standards prescribed by the Federal Government, such as provision for financial participation by the State, designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, and provision that no aid shall be furnished a blind individual while in receipt of old-age assistance.

EXTENSION OF PUBLIC-HEALTH SERVICES

An appropriation of $6,000,000 has been made for aid to State and local health services. Allotments to the States are to be made by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury on the basis of the population, the special health problems, and the financial needs of the respective States. This money is to be used by the States for extending State health services and for assistance to counties and other governmental units in maintaining adequate public-health programs.

An additional $1,000,000 has been allotted to the Public Health Service for the investigation of diseases and related problems which are national or interstate in character.

This appropriation is in line with well-established Federal policies but represents a very great extension of Federal participation in preventive public-health services. The amount suggested to be appropriated is almost double the present total of all Federal expenditures for public health, and this entire amount is intended to be used for the prevention of preventable sickness.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

In order to provide for the extending and strengthening of programs of vocational rehabilitation of the physically disabled, the Social Security Act also makes an appropriation of $630,750 for the fiscal year 1936, to be distributed as grants-in-aid to the States for vocational rehabilitation purposes in addition to the appropriation available under provisions of the existing law. Increased appropriations have also been authorized for subsequent years. The existing Federal Vocational Rehabilitation Act is administered by the Office of Education in the Department of the Interior.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Title VII of the act establishes a Social Security Board composed of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of office of these members will be 6 years. Not more than two of the members of the Board shall be of the same political party and the chairman is to be designated by the President.

The Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers or employees as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under the act. Appointments of attorneys and experts may be made without regard to the civil-service laws.

Those provisions of the act dealing with unemployment compensation, old-age benefits, old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children are to be administered and be under the supervision of the Board. In addition the Board shall have the duty of studying and making recommendations as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social insurance, and as to legislation and matters of administrative policy concerning old-age pensions, unemployment compensation, accident compensation, and related subjects.

OUR BALANCE SHEET WITH THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. DELGADO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a portion of an article by an eminent American writer, Mr. Charles Edward Russell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. DELGADO. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I offer for insertion therein an article appearing in the Asia magazine for July 1935, written by Mr. Charles Edward Russell, a well-known writer and lecturer, who has devoted many years to the study and investigation of American-Philippine relations, and visited the islands several times for that purpose.

The article follows:

OUR BALANCE SHEET WITH THE PHILIPPINES

By Charles Edward Russell

When the Philippine Legislature on May 1 of last year voted to approve the Tydings-McDuffie bill "to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands", it definitely signaled the end of the most ambitious adventure in imperialism ever undertaken by the United States. The sovereign nationality of the islands is not yet achieved and will not be until certain preliminary conditions shall have been fulfilled and a so-called "preparative" period of 10 years shall have elapsed. But the bill provides for the surrender at a comparatively early date of the control of the islands into the hands of their people, and thus, in effect, 36 years after the capture of Manila, closed this chapter of the American history.

The experiment of governing under our republican system a subject dependency at the other end of the world was for the United States a startling novelty. Now that it is about to end, we may well look narrowly at the actual results.

As to these, the all but universal belief among the Americans is, in one respect, largely and rather strangely at variance with the records. It is commonly accepted as established fact that vast sums have been spent upon the islands ("millions upon millions" is the current newspaper phrase) to redeem their people from a state of semisavagery, to teach them the arts of civilization, to give them health, wealth, and knowledge, to train them to self-government. Now that it is over, all this altruism, we Americans are rather perplexed by what seems a certain lack of gratitude among the objects of our bounty, since they are so eager to have us be gone. But in truth, instead of millions upon millions of American money having been spent through these thirty-odd years in benevolent labors for these somewhat unappreciative brown people, the expenditures of the United States show a total almost negligible.

Aside from the indeterminable proportion of our military budget that should be, or might be, viewed as occasioned by American insular possessions, and aside from the highly comical payment of $20,000,000 to Spain for something that Spain did not have, the books show that the United States has spent on account of the Philippine Islands as follows:

Three million dollars as remuneration for the damage wrought by American troops between 1899 and 1901, while suppressing the attempt of the Filipino people to realize their aspirations for independent nationality, included in the sum being a measure of help for Philippine agriculture devastated by a plague of locusts.

A certain sum of Spanish money ($267,663, to be exact) was found in a government building when Manila was captured. This money the American Government turned over to the Philippine treasury.

Therefore, aside from the original purchase price and the cost of the military establishments, the net cost of the Philippine Islands to the United States has been to date $3,267,663—no more, no less.

As to the military expenditures, it is to be observed, first, that to charge against a people the cost of the soldiery that holds them in subjection is manifestly preposterous. Justice requires us to note, too, that the maintenance of military and naval posts in these islands has not been wholly for the purpose of overawing their inhabitants. These posts have been military and naval bases for all our operations in the Far East. Whenever it has been necessary to send reinforcements to China, for example, they have been sent from the Philippine contingents.

But the most important question in seeking to draw the balance sheet of these thirty-odd years is whether the United States has been in reality the benefactor of the people under its rule. As to that, here is a summary of our most important achievements:

1. Navigation: The United States has built and maintained in the Philippines a system of lighthouses and channel lights conceded to be one of the best in the world. In the days of the Spanish occupation there were defective landing arrangements or none, so that all vessels of considerable size were obliged at Manila to anchor out and to land passengers and freight by lighterage. The harbor has been deepened and four great and substantial piers constructed, so that the largest vessels can now easily come alongside.

2. Sanitation: In the old days under the Spanish regime Manila was marked as one of the plague spots of the Orient. Today Manila is the cleanest city in the Orient, and it is also one of the healthiest. An insular bureau of health works for sanitary conditions throughout the archipelago.

3. Education: The Spanish government of the Philippines was extremely negligent in this regard. There were virtually no free public schools conducted by the administration. The church did somewhat better. The parochial schools seem to have been more numerous and more efficient and had the additional merit of being free. Parochial schools existed in every city and in many towns, but that they were not adequate to provide a general education is shown by the figures of illiteracy prevailing at the beginning of the American occupation. Since that time a complete system of free public schools has been instituted covering virtually all the islands. It includes primary, intermediate, and high-school training, with at the top the University of the Philippines, a great and notable institution of the government.

The recorded figures speak for themselves. Where toward the end of the Spanish regime in the islands there were fewer than 2,000 schools, private and public, and only 1,914 teachers, in 1934 there were 7,821 free public schools and 28,519 teachers.

4. Public improvements: The Spanish possessors of the islands paid little heed to road making, so that when the Americans took charge there were scarcely 50 miles of tolerable road in all the islands. A comprehensive system of excellent roads has been installed comparing favorably with those in any other country, so that now one may with ease in an automobile travel swiftly and smoothly, for instance, from the northern extremity of the island of Luzon to Batangas at the southern point, a distance of approximately 900 miles.

5. Government: Under Spain the Philippines were governed by what was virtually an absolutism. There was a Governor General appointed by the Spanish crown, who was lord paramount as a kind of viceroy. He appointed the provincial governors, who in turn chose the municipal administrators, so that the people of the islands had no relation to their government except that of submission.

The American occupation, after the brave but futile attempt of the Filipinos to win their freedom, began to introduce the principles of popular government. The first step was to ordain the election of administrative officers in the municipalities, then in the Provinces, and finally in the country at large. A legislature was erected consisting of a house of representatives and a senate chosen by the people on the basis of a franchise in effect valid to all male persons that should have attained 21 years of age and paid a cedula tax of $1 a year.

On the whole, the main results of this western innovation in the Orient have been good. The native administrators in the municipalities, the Provinces, and the nation have displayed executive abilities of a high order and a fair average of efficient and honest government.

6. Business and industry: Before the end of the Spanish regime American trade with the islands had begun to show a marked increase, indicating a natural foundation for an enlarged commercial intercourse. When American domination was fully established and free trade instituted between the two countries this commerce underwent rapid growth. It was quickly seen that the people of the islands wanted many things produced in the United States, and certain Philippine products—hemp, tobacco, some kinds of timber, vegetable oils, and, above all, sugar—were commodities for which there was an available American market.

* * * * * * *

The growth of Philippine commerce from the inception of American rule can be readily discerned from the fact that while in 1899 the value of the whole foreign trade of the islands was $34,093,568, the volume of this trade rose to $311,607,117 in 1929, the first year of the general business depression, shrinking to $174,733,175 in 1932.

7. Social conditions: The implanting of American influence wrought great changes in the social life of the islanders. To a certain extent the old-time demarcations between class and class were weakened or removed; American dress, American music, American books, American journalism, American slang, American jazz, American moving pictures, the rather free and easy characteristics of American etiquette (so to call it) kept more than even pace with the introduction of the American language.

In the economic structure of the islands as ordered by Spain there had been, broadly, only the rich and the poor; the exploiters and the exploited. One great result of the expanded, improved, and articulated business ways brought by the Americans was the creation of a large middle class new to the islands, but now, in effect, dominating them, with attendant disadvantages.

This survey sums the credit side of the balance sheet. No estimate of the results of our administration would be complete without a just enumeration of the items on the other side of the account.

1. Public improvements, sanitation, education: The American contribution to the progress attained along these lines was initiative and supervision. The Filipinos paid for all.

Even for the rather absurd summer capital built at Baguio, chiefly for the convenience of American officialdom, the Filipinos paid; they have paid for all the free schools, paid the salaries of all the teachers and of all the American executive officers that had taken part in the government; paid for all the roads; paid for the deepening of the harbor; paid for the piers and water-front improvements; paid for everything else that has been done. The American altruism has, in fact, been one of the least expensive of all recorded excursions in interracial philanthropy. Order, security, and tranquillity have been maintained by the native machinery, not by the American troops.

2. Trade and commerce: For all the material improvements itemized on the credit side of the balance sheet America draws liberal dividends, first, in the form of high salaries paid to such Americans as were in the service of the insular government from 1901 to 1916. American engineers, accountants, teachers, stenographers, clerks, even teamsters, were given employment and handsomely compensated. American concerns dealing in office furniture and supplies, American textbook publishing houses and dealers in school fixtures and equipment, American manufacturers of building materials, construction machinery, building supplies all have had their lion's share of profits in the process of Americanizing an alien people.

In other respects, too, America has fared exceedingly well in this enforced partnership. Much stress has been given to the millions of dollars in customs duties that were saved Philippine exporters of native products to the United States by reason of the free trade. It is not generally known to Americans that a true reciprocity never existed between the two nations. When the so-called "free trade" was forced upon the Filipinos in 1909 Philippine sugars in excess of 300,000 tons, cigars in excess of 150,000,000, tobacco wrapper in excess of 1,000,000 pounds annually, and rice in any quantity were required to pay full duty; also products or manufacturers of the Philippines containing foreign material in excess of 20 percent of their value.

American goods, however, were admitted duty free in any quantity into the Philippines. In 1913 these limitations were lifted, but the tariff on Philippine products or manufactures containing foreign material in excess of 20 percent of their value was preserved. And again, under the act of Congress of March 24, 1934, Philippine refined sugar in excess of 50,000 long tons, unrefined sugars in excess of 800,000 long tons, coconut oil in excess of 200,000 long tons, and hemp cordage in excess of 3,000,000 pounds annually have been required to pay full duty. But all American products going into the Philippines remain exempt from tariff taxation.

As a result of this tariff monopoly in favor of American products, the sales of this country to the Philippines have augmented 91 times—from $1,350,000 in 1899 to $92,600,000 in 1929—while American purchases of Philippine products increased only 32 times—from $3,935,000 in 1899 to $124,465,000 in 1929.

* * * * * * *

3. Manners and customs: In some ways the great change in the ostensible aspects of life in the Philippines has had deplorable results. The typical Filipino of the Spanish regime was of an austere rigidity in regard to his moral code and scrupulous in regard to his manners. It is unlikely that in any region, and certainly nowhere else in the Orient, existed a higher standard of personal morality. What is denounced as a marked and general decline from this commendable state is a matter of frequent lamentation in the islands. Many assert it to be a result of the coeducational school; many others ascribe it to the moving pictures and current literature. But all agree on the one point that it is an unadmirable byproduct of the American influence. And, indeed, one must admit that the Filipino youth of today shows little of the disciplined deportment of his father. Instead of the grave, courteous, and reserved dignity of bearing once typical of the islander, he tends now to the boisterous manner, pliant codes, and rude joviality of the American football field. These manifestations he sees in the example of what he is assured is the superior race dominating his country. Imitation is inevitable.

There has spread also among the Filipino youth, and plainly spread, the cynicism, vital scepticism, and open contempt for convention that have been so marked a feature of the Jugend Bewegung in other occidental countries besides the United States. Imposed upon the Malay temperament, the addition is as congruous, natural, and desirable as a Comanche headdress on a Park Avenue beau.

* * * * * * *

We may be sure, therefore, that, if the armed forces of the United States had not trampled down the Filipino movement for freedom and nationality between 1899 and 1902 the Philippine nation would not have stood still. Indeed, there is reason to believe that its unaided progress might have equaled the improved conditions that we view so proudly as our own handiwork.

* * * * * * *

One thing clear in any impartial survey of this chapter of history is that it leaves but little ground for the exultation of the patriotic American. If we Americans have generally believed that we kept the Philippine Islands through all these years for any benevolent purpose to teach them the self-government they already knew or to lead them into the path of righteousness and civilization, we may as well abandon any such pleasing hallucination. We have retained the Philippine Islands (in violation of our agreement to set them free) not for their sake but for our own. We have opened our trade doors to them so long as their commerce did not interfere with our own commerce at home, but we lost no time in checking the flow of a trade that we ourselves had encouraged as soon as we felt that such a trade would affect our profits in our own markets. It is enough to cite the tariff acts of 1909 and 1913 and the trade provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

We have kept the islands for exactly the same reason that England has kept Indian—for the reason that all imperialism everywhere still has its way—that is, we made money from the arrangement. As has been shown in the foregoing paragraphs, the Filipinos were not so lucky. They had small profit from the lopsided partnership, but chiefly a notable injury to their trade and the doubtful pleasure of saluting the American flag. But as in the case of India, so here, the grim actualities of our balance sheet must be covered with a specious pretense of benefits conferred. In both instances the concept of a benevolent imperialism is like the concept of hot ice and boiling snow, except only that one is a racial hypocrisy and the other a poetic phantasy.

Yet it is to be urged in conclusion that while the net results of our sojourn in the Philippine Islands show so little of real credit to the United States and less of benefit to the people we have governed, there still remains in the native character something innately fine and good, and in the Filipino mind unsounded potentialities of power and achievement. We may feel confident that when the American grasp is at last loosened from these people and they have a chance to show what they really are and can do, the resulting asset to civilization and world progress may be something more than merely considerable. It was not by accident that so many great and compelling minds sprang from among them, nor can one easily believe that even the evil genius of American politics has obliterated from among them their possibilities of notable good.

LOAN ON COTTON

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point on the cotton proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Senate works out a suitable provision on this cotton- and wheat-loan proposition.

The cotton farmers have been led to believe that they would either be advanced a loan of 12 cents a pound on this year's cotton or that they would be insured a price of 12 cents.

Even 12 cents a pound is wholly inadequate to return to the farmer the cost of production, including his taxes and living expenses—to say nothing of his indebtedness and the interest on what he owes.

Now to reduce that loan to 9 cents will be a bitter disappointment to the small cotton growers of the South, even with the regulation under which it is proposed to pay him the difference, if any, between 12 cents a pound and the average price of ⅞-inch Middling cotton on the 10 spot markets during the period from September 1 to January 1. That would probably be disastrous to the small cotton farmer who is forced to sell his cotton as he gathers it.

The psychological effect of this legislation will probably be to drive the cotton market down to 9 cents a pound during the rush of the season, from September 1 until around October 20. Suppose the small farmer with a few bales of cotton sells his cotton at 9 cents a pound. The large farmer, who has good credit, or who is able to finance himself, may be able to hold his cotton off the market until the latter part of the season.

Suppose that cotton should go to 12 cents a pound the middle of October and should remain at 12 cents a pound until the 1st of January. Then the little farmer who sold at 9 cents a pound would not get an extra penny on his cotton. Or suppose that cotton should go to 11½ cents by the 1st of November, and that should be the average price till the 1st of January. The little fellow who had to sell at 9 cents a pound, instead of getting the difference between 9 cents and 12 cents, as he has been led to believe would be the case, would get the difference between that average price of 11½ cents and 12 cents a pound, which would make his cotton bring 9½ cents a pound.

It will be no trouble for the big manipulators of the cotton market to drive the price down in the early part of the season and then boost it in the latter part of the season.

Of course, the big planter who has large tracts of land planted in cotton, cultivated by Negro tenants, may be able to hold his cotton, but the small farmer with a wife and children to support, and cotton his only money crop, will be driven to the necessity of disposing of his cotton at the minimum price, while his more fortunate competitor will reap the maximum benefits.

The same thing will probably apply to the wheat farmers of the West and Middle West.

In 1926 and 1927, I saw one or two big cotton factors so manipulate the cotton market as to advance the price for the months of November and December all out of line with the prices for the rest of the year. The very next year, they switched to the other side of the market and drove cotton from 22 cents a pound to about 14 cents, by a purely artificial manipulation on the New York exchange. They can do the same thing again now, and probably will do it, if it is to their financial advantage, and thereby squeeze the economic life out of the small cotton farmers who work harder for less remuneration than any other class of laborers in America.

On the other hand, if the Senate amendment should be accepted, and it is known that the farmers will be advanced a loan of 12 cents a pound, then the cotton market will respond accordingly, and these benefits will go to the man who needs them the worst and deserves them most—the man who toils with his own hands to grow cotton to feed and clothe his wife and children, pay his taxes, and meet his other responsibilities.

Congress has just passed a bill to "stilt" the price of coal, and thereby pile millions of dollars of additional burden onto the backs of the people in the cotton-growing States.

Congress has also passed a law putting motor transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission, which means outlawing the farmer's cheap transportation, raising freight rates, and piling additional millions of burdens onto the farmers' backs.

Congress has fixed the wages of laborers on public projects, all out of line with, far and beyond, the remuneration of the average farmer of this country, and especially of the average cotton farmer who toils and struggles through the summer months to make a few bales of cotton.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that cotton should be selling for 20 cents a pound, wheat for $2 a bushel—the prices those commodities were bringing when these farmers incurred their debts, floated their bonds, or had their tax levies established. At that time we were on an expanded currency; our currency had been expanded by the issuance of Federal Reserve notes, through the Federal Reserve banks. The circulating medium was increased from about $34.90 per capita in 1914 to $53 in 1920. The cotton market, the wheat market, the corn market, and every other market of raw materials responded, with the result that cotton went to 20 cents or 25 cents a pound and wheat to $2 or $2.50 a bushel.

That currency has been contracted, and the farmer is now being called upon to pay his debts and meet his obligations contracted on those high-price levels with 12-cent cotton and 90-cent wheat; and now when his crop is made and ready for the market he has the bitter experience of seeing that 12-cent loan revoked and being compelled to sell at approximately 9 cents a pound.

Yet we have sufficient gold in the Treasury to issue $15,000,000,000 worth of United States notes with the legal requirement of gold reserve behind every dollar of it without in any way endangering our currency or imperiling our gold reserve.

I told you on this floor in 1929 that we were in a money panic, and that we would never have a return of normal prosperity until we had a liberal controlled expansion of the currency. I repeat that statement now. You can juggle with coal, with freight rates, with wages, with cotton, with wheat, with corn, and experiment with all the N. R. A.'s the statute books will hold, but we are not going to have a return of normal prosperity until that currency is expanded and commodity prices restored to their normal levels.

If the administration would issue two or three billions of dollars in currency against the gold reserve we now have, and put that currency in circulation tomorrow, cotton would go to 18 cents or 20 cents a pound, wheat would climb to $1.75 or $2 a bushel, corn, hogs, land, lumber, and other commodities would advance in price, and this country would enjoy an era of unprecedented prosperity.

The only alternative to that is to squeeze the lifeblood from the producers of raw materials and force the farmers into a state of misery and poverty and let the rest of the country collapse with them in another crash, probably exceeding in disaster and direful consequences the panic of 1929.

In the words of William Jennings Bryan, our farmers are now being "crucified upon a cross of gold."

To deny them this 12-cent loan on cotton and 90 cents on wheat, on which they had depended, and to substitute the regulation to which I have referred would be to break faith with the cotton growers of the South as well as the wheat growers of the West. Even if such a course of action could be justified on the technical construction of the representations that have been made, even then it would be paramount to merely keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope of the distressed farmers of this country.

THE FLOOD-CONTROL PROBLEM

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article on flood control by Dr. Thone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for publication in the RECORD of an article published in Service News Letter for August 24, 1935, by Dr. Frank Thone. The article is entitled "Taming Ol' Man Ribber." It cogently presents the view that unless we shall have adopted a policy of cooperative attack on the flood-control problem and lay plans to keep water as a servant and not as an enemy we shall lose the most valuable of our mineral resources.

In the characteristic forceful and dramatic style of the author the article carries a real punch, and there is no mistaking the safety lesson which it teaches.

Gold is not the most precious of America's mineral resources. Oil is not. Neither is copper or coal or iron.

The most valuable mineral we have is water.

Common water, the stuff we drink and wash ourselves and our clothes in, that we use to irrigate our fields, float our boats, put out our houses when they catch fire. Water, which we long for as a lost friend in a drought and dread as a destructive demon in time of flood. Water, which we waste lavishly, pollute shamelessly with factory wastes and city filth. Water, the fluid of life, the fluid of death.

"Free as water" has been for ages, and still is, a proverb phrase taken for granted by everybody. It is to be had for the taking, without even the formality of asking. Only in the world's most arid and forbidden places can it be sold as a commodity. Elsewhere, to ask men to balance it against silver or gold is looked upon and resented as effrontery. So fixed is this idea in our psychology that there is a wide-spread practice on the part of city waterworks to charge their patrons for services rendered in delivering the water, but to insist that the water itself is not an object of sale. The water is free.

But as we approach maturity as a nation it begins to be borne in upon our sobering minds that while water is free to use it cannot safely be left free to abuse. If we waste it in the spring, we may have the distress of seeing our town well run dry in a droughty summer. If a town or factory pollutes a stream, communities farther down, that must drink from the same stream, will have a sympathetic audience if they curse us out as reprobates, and maybe have the law on us. If we overcut our forests and overplow our fields, we are ruined by erosion, and folks downstream are equally ruined by the floods we loose, with their aftermath of drifted sand and silt. For this sort of thing water is not free.

In this day, when the irresponsible adolescence of our Nation is ending, and reflective men among us are giving thought to what we as a people in the earlier stages of social maturity should be doing with ourselves and the land of our inheritance, water has come in for its full share of discussion and planning. Our lakes and rivers, even our brooks and springs, our swamps and seepage places, are beginning to be seen as diversified parts of an organic unity; even as a people we are diversified, and yet one.

There have been thoughtful examinations of water problems even of old time. Indeed, the world's earliest civilizations were in a sense the product of water problems, for canals, flood control, irrigation, city water supply, were what first brought the little city-states of ancient Egypt and Chaldea into being, and then operated to knit them together into kingdoms and empires.

Even in our own land, in the days of its earliest and loosest freedom, there had to be community action to obtain clean water, to dispose of wastes, to regulate port and river traffic. And as we have grown, there have been extensions of this city-state stage, where each municipality was a law unto itself, into wider regional kingdoms, where several adjacent cities or States have found it mutually advantageous to ally themselves, as New York and the cities of the New Jersey shore in the Port of New York Authority, or the Ohio Valley States in their cooperative attack on the flood problem.

It has not been easy for us to do things of this kind, for as a people we are extreme individualists, and as communities we are exceedingly parochial, each town keenly jealous of its own rights and advantages, and prone to eye the claims of the next town with hostile suspicion.

But it may be that we are developing a wider, a more national outlook, a greater willingness to let the other fellow have a fair share and not try to grab everything in sight for ourselves. And even if we have not evolved far along this pathway to a larger civic morality, at least a somewhat more far-sighted self-interest may move us to yield a little now in order to obtain greater advantages (or escape greater ills) somewhat later on.

Out in front of the rest of us, there are pioneers of larger cooperation, who by putting a dozen good heads together have evolved the beginnings of a full-sized national scheme for making the most of our national resources in water, and for mitigating the evils which this two-sided silvery servant of ours can inflict on us when we are not watching.

A notable accomplishment among the many hopeful plans that have been put forth lately for national betterment is the report of the Mississippi Valley committee of the Public Works Administration. It has operated under the chairmanship of Morris L. Cooke, an experienced engineer who can "dream dreams and see visions"—and then proceed to make them real. With him have been associated a number of other leaders in the field of engineering and economics—men in private practice, university men, Army men.

For a sample river to use in drawing up their first model plan they chose boldly—no less than the Mississippi system itself, probably the most important river drainage basin in the whole civilized world today. Though bold, their choice was wise; for in the vast stretch between the dry, thinly populated Great Plains that rise to the Rockies on the West, to the humid, rich, closely farmed lands of the inner East, encroached on by the jammed industrialism of the Pittsburgh region, there are all imaginable varieties and difficulties of water-use problems.

They have taken a wide view of their mandate: "Planning for the use and control of water is planning for most of the basic functions of the life of the Nation. We cannot plan for water unless we also consider the relevant problems of the land. We cannot plan for water and land unless we plan for the whole people. It is of little use to control rivers unless we also master the conditions which make for the security and freedom of human life. * * * Under the proven system of democracy no plan can be imposed upon the people. Government may inform, educate, and guide. It may mobilize resources for the common task. It cannot dictate * * *. We are but tenants and transients upon the earth. Let us hand down our heritage not only unimpaired but enriched to those who come after us."

Principles laid down by the committee shine with common sense. Improvements should be supported as nearly as can be determined in relation to their benefits; Federal participation should be freely entered into when national benefits are anticipated or national ills are to be averted; for the rest, render unto the State the things that are the State's unto the town what is the town's. Encourage first such projects as are most likely to pay their own way in the long run; deepen the river if there is going to be enough traffic to justify it otherwise go slow about spending the money. The same for irrigation projects. The same, within somewhat wider limits, for power projects; for it is recognized that though modern steam plants can often underbid water power in cost per installed kilowatt, nevertheless coal and oil are exhaustible, while rivers go on forever.

The terrible evil of water erosion, which scourges East as well as West, and impoverishes in terrifyingly short time any region where it is permitted to go on unchecked, the committee sees largely as a problem of roots. To be sure, check dams and grading can do something against advanced gullying. But the most wide-spread damage is not so conspicuous as this; it is the insidious sheet erosion that takes away the irreplaceable top soil before gullying begins. Here the cure must be a living cure: Reforestation, brush land that at the same time shelters game, restoration of range grass where plow land lays the soil bare to the raids of water and wind. Terracing slopes, where farming is too profitable to be abandoned, plus strips of long-lived deep-rooted crops following the contour lines and interdicting the gully-cutting downhill drainage.

Pollution, it goes without saying, is an intolerable evil. No community can be allowed to assume the privilege of befouling its down-stream neighbor's drinking water with sewage, or poisoning it with factory wastes. Disposal plants are practicable for most of these sources of pollution, and for the still unconquered types of factory waste means of treatment may be found by more intensive research.

Recreation is recognized by the committee as a public interest of increasing importance, which can often be promoted as a co-project with such things as power or water-supply storage dams, navigation improvement, and game refuges in reforested lands on slopes salvaged from erosion and the breeding of floods. Recreation again is promoted by the reflooding of lake and swamp lands, unwisely taken away from the ducks and fish during our national madness in land speculation of a generation or two ago.

Flood control comes sharply to the fore, especially now that the great drought of the early thirties has broken in spectacularly destructive deluges of rain in what had begun to be called the "dust bowl." Floods are recognized as problems practically throughout the entire great central basin, but the problems are particularly acute in the Ohio system, where northward-draining rivers from the Tennessee Valley bring heavy freshets in late winter and early spring, and in the Delta country of the lower Mississippi from Memphis to the Gulf, which is the bottle neck through which all the drainage of the great inland empire must flow.

Most of us commonly think of flood protection in terms of levees, high earthworks that resist the frontal attack of the river with a stubborn frontal defense. Levees have their very important uses, but a dependence on them altogether is apt to be a snare and a betrayal, for if the flood becomes mighty enough to top them, the last state of that land becomes even worse than the first.

The committee also recommends a unification of the entire levee system of the lower river, with established standards of construction and height, and a better coordinated system of administration. In the past each community has tended to regard its own flood protection as its private problem; so much so that we have frequently had to witness the scandalous spectacle of American citizens dynamiting the levees that protected the property of other American citizens to relieve the river's pressure on their own front.

Such a too-rugged individualism, more suggestive of the doings of Ur and Kish and Lagash on the Tigris and Euphrates thousands of years ago than of what we would like to believe of our America of today will become forgotten legend if the persuasions of the Mississippi Valley Committee are listened to:

"Life in the Mississippi Valley of the future need not be poverty-stricken or precarious. The forces making for health and well-being, once they are controlled, are greater than those which make for disaster. The quality of life in the valley can be enormously improved. It need not go the way of the valley of the Nile, the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates, where sands have drifted into old irrigation ditches and the sites of opulent gardens, or the stripped valleys of China. We have knowledge that the older civilizations lacked. If we synthesize that knowledge to make our plans, if we put a common purpose above local jealousies and conflicts of interest, the future is in our own hands."

So supplementary means must be devised. Important are flood-water reservoirs, which will hold back part of the water until the rest has been drained off, and then release their impoundings as rapidly as possible. There have been proposals to build such flood checks right in the Ohio itself, as well as in some of the other larger tributaries of the Mississippi from the West. These the committee doubts, but it gives its approval to a considerable number of flood-water dams on other tributaries, and even suggests that these may be the key to flood defense.

But in spite of all this, floods will still develop. Here a third strategy comes into play. If you cannot hold your adversary back, yield and let him rush through a path of your own choosing. This is the principle of the so-called "floodways" of the lower Mississippi. These are auxiliary flowage paths for the river, with guide levees along their sides. In normal years they remain empty, and may even be farmed. But when a great flood comes, once in a generation or oftener, the weaker "fuse plug" levees that close their upper ends are permitted to give way, and the surplus waters pour through on their way to the sea.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT HAS KEPT FAITH WITH THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a résumé of the work of the Post Office Committee of the House for this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the charge that President Roosevelt violated his campaign promises and repudiated the Democratic platform is unfair, and one which attempts to ignore the record and the events immediately following the election of 1932.

When President Roosevelt was a candidate for the Presidency, the need for enormous appropriations on the part of the Federal Government was not comparable with the urgency for such appropriations following the severe financial collapse which took place in January and February of 1933. In the summer and autumn of 1932 there was evidence of a moderate pick-up in business; public confidence had attained a degree of safety that was a source of considerable encouragement; the world powers, apparently feeling the need of international cooperation, were to all intents and purposes making a real effort to eliminate the barriers confronting world recovery. At Detroit on October 22, 1932, President Hoover said: "It can be demonstrated that the tide has turned and the gigantic forces of depression are in retreat."

During this period, and under these conditions, President Roosevelt promised the American people an administration of reform and progress which would correct the economic evils of the day and give to the masses of our people a more adequate share of the fruits of their labors. He recognized the inherent evils resulting from the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few; he realized the necessity for reform measures to curb the enormous power of big business and high finance.

Of course, everybody realized that a platform which suggested reform, and a candidate who promised to carry out the principles contained in such a platform, would not require the vast appropriations which later events made necessary.

However, the economic and financial situation turned rapidly from bad to worse in the closing days of 1932, and recovery which showed some signs of life throughout the autumn of that year collapsed entirely when the Lausanne Conference failed and the European powers served notice upon us that they would not meet their debt obligations. Under such circumstances, international cooperation was impossible. A disarmament agreement, anxiously expected, was now an impossibility. Instead of removing the barriers to trade, additional obstacles were established. International confidence sank to its lowest ebb.

In the United States fear supplanted confidence; our financial markets became decidedly deflationary; the people began to withdraw their deposits from our banks; currency was exchanged for gold, and hoarding was everywhere in evidence. The Federal credit was demoralized, and every financial institution in the country was shaken to its very foundations. A few days before the inauguration of President Roosevelt, the crisis was so severe that many experts were led to believe that nothing could be done to save our country from complete economic collapse and financial bankruptcy.

When President Roosevelt took the oath of office on March 4, 1933, there was hardly an industry in all America that had not felt the paralyzing influence of the financial collapse that was then embracing the Nation. The calm of the fall of 1932 was now the raging economic storm of the spring of 1933. The reform measures promised in the Democratic Party platform and advocated by its successful candidate could not save the day because of the proportions of the emergency which beset us. Drastic measures, adopted with speed and administered with courage were now the order of the day. True, reform was necessary in our economic life, but above and beyond that, relief not only for the masses but for the banks and industry became urgently necessary.

Vast appropriations were necessary, powerful public corporations were needed, the public credit was pumped into the banks, the insurance companies, the railroads, the industries of America. Billions were necessary to save the day, with the result that there came into being a strengthened Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an expanded Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a more liberal Farm Credit Administration, a gigantic Public Works Administration, and a great Federal relief agency.

There was no critic in any party, nor was there complaint from any source against the action taken by the President of the United States in his successful effort to save the industries, the farms, and the homes of our people—yes; and the institutions of our country as well.

But that day is over. Again we are enjoying happier times. The national income is increasing. Farm prices, car loadings, dividend payments, the output of our factories, all give rich evidence of a returning and more permanent prosperity. Large emergency-relief appropriations I hope will no longer be necessary. Part of the huge sum appropriated to win the war against the depression will be returned to the Treasury of the United States. And while the vast majority of the American people will always appreciate the splendid leadership and the great courage of President Roosevelt, the politician who forgets the record and loves to find fault with a detail here and there will rise up from his cyclone cellar to complain because the President did not carry out the program of his party convention adopted in Chicago 6 months before the collapse, which to a degree was brought about and intensified by a party that displayed neither courage nor leadership when it was in power. President Roosevelt has kept faith with the American people and they will keep faith with him.

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING-COMPANY BILL

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain correspondence between Thomas G. Corcoran and myself, a letter written by me to him and his reply to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent obtained, I offer for the RECORD a letter dated August 24, addressed by me to Hon. Thomas G. Corcoran, together with his reply.

The letters are as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 24, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS G. CORCORAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you know, recently my colleague, Congressman PETTENGILL, of Indiana, spoke in the House referring to Congressman EICHER's speech. In his remarks Congressman PETTENGILL said:

"Finally, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the 'ambassador from Passamaquoddy', Mr. Corcoran, has admitted before our committee that he had plunged deep in the New York stock market in times gone by, that he had made and lost a small fortune there, I would suggest that he be asked at this time as to whether he is in the stock market today, especially with reference to utility stocks."

In my judgment this matter should be cleared up, and I hope you will write me answering the suggestions made by Congressman PETTENGILL in order that I may place your answer in the RECORD with this letter.

Sincerely yours,

WESLEY E. DISNEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 26, 1935.

DEAR MR. DISNEY: This will acknowledge and thank you for your letter of this morning concerning the insinuations made against me by Mr. PETTENGILL to the effect that I have been speculating in public-utility securities during the pendency of the public-utilities holding-company bill.

The facts are these:

1. I have never in my life bought or sold or owned any public-utility securities.

2. Ever since the spring of 1933 when, in connection with the Securities Act of 1933, I first became associated in the preliminary drafting of proposed legislation, I have not bought or sold, either directly or through others, any stock, securities, or commodities of any kind whatsoever, or any interest therein.

I should, of course, be grateful if, as you have suggested, you would have this letter and your letter of this morning published together in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS G. CORCORAN.

MAJORITY LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader of the House, our beloved colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], has written a letter extending his greetings to the House. I send it to the Speaker's desk and ask unanimous consent to have it read.

Mr. Speaker, I know every Member of this body will not only be delighted to hear from him but will be genuinely glad to learn that he speaks hopefully of his being with us when the House convenes next January, and we all sincerely hope and pray that he will be. [Applause.]

It has been a very great honor and privilege for me to have been selected to perform his duties as best I could during this long and most arduous session. No one could adequately take BILLY BANKHEAD's place. I think he is the most ideally qualified by temperament, education, experience, ability, knowledge of the rules, and in every other way of any Member in this House to perform this service; and I think I, more than any other Member, most earnestly hope he will be preserved and be able to carry on the work of this most responsible position during the next session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Jasper, Ala., August 21, 1935.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Acting Majority Leader, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I observe from the press that it is quite probable that Congress will adjourn by the end of this week. I sincerely trust that this may be done, although it may involve the carrying over until the next session some items of essential legislation. This has been in many respects a very unusual session of Congress, not only in length but also in the wide range and highly controversial nature of many of the measures presented for consideration. That there has been sharp difference of opinion upon such measures even within the ranks of the majority reflects no discredit upon the Democratic organization of the House or its personnel. On the contrary, honestly entertained views, honestly expressed, are always the mark of a consecrated public servant in a representative body.

It is therefore my desire to ask the privilege of expressing my earnest appreciation and commendation of the record as a whole of this session of the House. It has had able and efficient leadership under the guidance of our beloved Speaker, Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS. You, as acting leader, and the chairman and members of all committees have cooperated in invaluable fashion in completing for this session a record of legislation that as a Democrat I have no fear of presenting for the approval of the country in the elections of 1936.

I trust that I may be pardoned for again expressing the very great distress I have felt because of the disability which has prevented my sharing your labors of this session. I will be with you in January, God willing. Please present my warm personal regards to all Members, even to our friends, the enemy across the aisle, especially to the distinguished minority leader. I trust he may long continue in that capacity.

Yours most sincerely,

W. B. BANKHEAD.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House may stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I propound the same inquiry I made this morning? Will the bells be rung 15 minutes before the House is called to order?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair will have that done.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11.50 p. m.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 40. Concurrent resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3049. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1994. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 3783. An act for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co.;

H. R. 6776. An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7858. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 7974. An act to withdraw and restore to their previous status under the control of the Territory of Hawaii certain Hawaiian homes lands now in use as an airplane landing field;

H. R. 8511. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8512. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8513. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton school district, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; and

H. R. 8516. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1878. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.;

S. 1994. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended;

S. 2324. An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart;

S. 2364. An act relative to the retirement of certain officers and employees;

S. 3085. An act authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose;

S. 3204. An act to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes;

S. 3433. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases; and

S. J. Res. 175. Joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1575. An act for the relief of John S. Cannell, deceased;

H. R. 1912. An act for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army;

H. R. 3109. An act for the relief of Herman W. Bensel;

H. R. 3149. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi division, to determine the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry;

H. R. 3783. An act for the relief of George W. Rhine, doing business under the name of Rhine & Co.;

H. R. 4567. An act for the relief of Robert E. Callen;

H. R. 4770. An act for the relief of Elinora Fareira and Mearon Perkins;

H. R. 5097. An act for the relief of Mary E. Lord;

H. R. 5521. An act for the relief of Frank Williams;

H. R. 5750. An act for the relief of Mary Brown Raley;

H. R. 6250. An act to amend the National Defense Act;

H. R. 6776. An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7140. An act for the relief of the Bell Oil & Gas Co.;

H. R. 7858. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 7974. An act to withdraw and restore to their previous status under the control of the Territory of Hawaii certain Hawaiian homes lands now in use as an airplane landing field;

H. R. 8133. An act to authorize certain homestead entrymen who are disabled World War veterans to make final proof of their entries, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8444. An act to authorize the transfer of a certain military reservation to the Department of the Interior;

H. R. 8511. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8512. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8513. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton school district, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8516. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine school district, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

H. R. 8870. An act to further protect the revenue derived from distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and enforce the postal laws with respect thereto, to enforce the twenty-first amendment, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8974. An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9070. An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 407. Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message from the President of the United States announced that on the following dates he approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On August 22, 1935:

H. R. 2476. An act to grant a patent to Albert M. Johnson and Walter Scott;

H. R. 7955. An act to establish a new division of the northern district of Georgia with terms of court to be held at Newnan, Ga.;

H. R. 8580. An act to amend the law with respect to the time for jury service in the police court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 8581. An act to amend the law providing for exemptions from jury service in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 8668. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Fort Pierce, Fla.; and

H. R. 8710. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4, and 3,000 canvas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Amarillo, Tex., in September 1935.

On August 23, 1935:

H. R. 1880. An act for the relief of Ivan H. McCormack;

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following letter, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 24, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: If the opportunity presents itself, will you be good enough to extend my greetings to the Members of the House of Representatives and to express to them my deep and sincere congratulations upon the work which they have accomplished? When a calm and fair review of the work of this Congress is made it will be called a historic session. It has dealt, in a spirit of statesmanship, with matters of vital interest to the lives of our people. Much has been accomplished for the permanent well-being of the Nation as a whole.

I am grateful for, and happy in, the cooperation between us, and I extend to each and every one of you my good wishes for a well-earned rest.

Faithfully yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. I have informed the President of the United States that the House of Representatives was about to adjourn sine die and he has asked me to express to the Members of this body his appreciation for their cooperation and to wish for each of you a pleasant vacation.

The first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress is now about to close after 8 months of arduous service. I wish to congratulate the Members of the House upon their patriotism and loyalty in serving their country according to their respective conception of their duties.

I have never served in a session of Congress where there has been demonstrated a greater willingness or desire to serve the people. Your work has been arduous—much more arduous, I may say, than we anticipated in the early days of the session—and you are entitled to a rest. The House has discharged its duties and responsibilities with ability and fidelity. May I take this occasion to thank each one of you for the kindness, courtesy, and patience shown me as your presiding officer.

I am indebted to each and every one of you. I have tried to be fair and impartial in the discharge of my duties. I hope that you may return to your homes and find there, as you deserve, a constituency well satisfied with your efforts to serve them. May you have a restful and pleasant vacation, and may we meet here in January prepared to take up our task of legislation in behalf of the great country which we are trying to serve.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

THE ISSUE WHICH AMERICAN YOUTH MUST DECIDE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me yesterday over the radio:

America is the land of opportunity for the individual. Millions came from the Old World inspired by the assurance that here they would escape the oppressive hand of governmental regulation, be permitted to work out their own destinies, and enjoy the fruits of their own industry and thrift.

Here they were assured of infinitely better working conditions in every field of activity and infinitely better living standards in the home than could be obtained in any other country in the world.

Here their daily lives have not been, until the advent of the new deal, regimented or their business policed by some minor Government official—an age-old condition of the autocratic Old World they sought to escape by coming to America.

Here, until recently, their substance has not been consumed by a hundred petty forms of taxes to support an army of Government bureaucrats.

Here they have enjoyed not only religious freedom but mental freedom, nurtured by the finest system of free public education civilization has ever known. With the exception of a few States, illiteracy in the United States is practically negligible. It may be said, in passing, that in those exceptional areas we find the most enthusiastic support of the new deal.

There is greater diffusion of wealth in this Nation than in any other country of the globe. The common people are infinitely better off in a material way—better clothed, better housed, better fed, have more money in savings institutions, carry more insurance of various kinds, have more and better recreation—than can be found any other place on the face of the civilized globe.

This is true because of the economic system under which this country has been developing, and because of which it has prospered—a system which permitted free play of economic forces. Under this system it has become an adage that it is only three generations from shirt sleeves to shirt sleeves.

The only aristocracy which has survived under this system has been the aristocracy of talent and character. Those who inherited wealth had to hold it by proving their worth in the field of free competition. Rising generations faced no barrier of caste. They were not restrained by the oppressive hand of government dictation and regimentation, a system which, wherever it exists, operates to perpetuate in power an officialdom which is indolent, wasteful, arrogant, incompetent, and generally corrupt.

Our institutions of learning, our churches, hospitals, and benevolent institutions, our great charities—all are financed, both in their construction and maintenance, out of surpluses of wealth made possible under our present economic system. There is no other way to finance these institutions and organizations except by the State—a method advocated and being put into practice by the new deal. That means State-controlled education, Tammanyized charity, and State-controlled religion. There is no middle ground. European governments are now furnishing examples of the religious intolerance and educational salvery to which such methods inevitably lead.

Our economic system is now challenged as outworn. We are told it has become an obstacle in the path of national progress, a menace to the welfare of our rising generations. We are asked to cast it aside and substitute something new, a "planned economy", devised and offered by the new deal.

The challenge cannot be lightly dismissed. It should not be. It has been the spirit of America always to build for the future and not to hold fast to customs which have outlived their usefulness. This challenge must be considered not on the basis of partisanship but on the basis of Americanism. It is not a question of what is best for the Republican Party, but what is best for America. It is not a question of whether the new deal and this administration have shamelessly repudiated the definite pledges of the last Democratic national convention, and, in the house of its leader, betrayed the principles and traditions of the Democratic Party. That is a question solely for determination by the next Democratic National Convention. The real question is whether or not the new economic system which the new deal and the present administration is offering as a substitute for the old one will better serve the real interests of the American people than the one they are asked to discard.

The youth of America—the young men and the young women upon whose shoulders will rest the burden of carrying on our civilization tomorrow—are the ones who must decide the validity of this challenge. It means comparatively little to the elders of this country, who have lived their lives and are passing off the stage, whether or not the economic, social, and political systems—to the preservation of which they have contributed and under which they have gone forward—are to be scrapped. But to those who are about to take up the responsibilities of citizenship and leadership in the world of affairs it means everything. It is tne future of their country and their personal welfare which are at stake.

President Roosevelt, in a radio address delivered last night to the convention of Young Democrats, in Milwaukee, Wis., stated there was need for a new economic system because there are no new frontiers and that therefore the welfare of generations to come must be based "on the resourcefulness of men and women, applied to the old frontiers."

The whole philosophy and practice of the new deal repudiates this statement. The well-defined purpose of all the important new-deal legislation since the inauguration of the President has been to eliminate the element of private resourcefulness, and to have the Government assume the functions heretofore carried on by private enterprise and exercised by the individual.

Legislation, collectively known as "planned economy", attempts to place a whole people in lock-step and deny to the individual the right to exercise his own judgment and resourcefulness in the management of his own business, farm, or factory. It would reduce every citizen to the status of an automaton—taking orders from a Government bureaucrat, neither elected by nor accountable to the people.

In the same speech, President Roosevelt stated a new economic system was necessary in order that the next generations may be guaranteed security for themselves and their families.

A little further on he called upon the radicals of the country—all those who are against what he termed the "old order"—to unite in order to fight for their broad objectives.

At least it must be said in behalf of the President that he practices what he preaches. The tax law which has just been enacted as a part of the "must" legislation demanded by the President is a political measure designed to afford a common meeting place of all the radical groups who are out to soak the rich and share the wealth. It is a measure designed not to produce revenue but to confiscate property for the use of a vast Federal bureaucracy.

What security does such a program hold out for the next generation? Let me illustrate. Among the first victims of this law will be the heirs of the late beloved Will Rogers. His estate will be required to raise between a half million and eight hundred thousand dollars in cash. Obviously, it does not have that much ready cash on hand. What then? It will be compelled to put on the market some of the property which he owned. Whether that be real estate or securities does not matter. Property of any kind sold at a forced sale is sold at a great loss. Moreover, it depreciates the value of like property.

What is going to happen in the settlement of the estate of Will Rogers will happen in the settlement of every estate which is bludgeoned by this confiscatory tax law, pushed on a reluctant Congress and forced on a helpless people by the President of the United States, in order that he might make his peace with the radical elements of the country, anticipatory of the next Presidential campaign.

In addition, the rising generation will face the necessity of paying off the almost incredible debts which are being incurred by this administration. This, alone, will impair the security not only of the next generation but of generations to come. It will cripple industry and commerce. It will make it increasingly difficult for generations yet unborn to get ahead. Nothing so deadens ambition and renders industry and thrift so futile as the certain knowledge that one will not be permitted to enjoy the fruits of his efforts and the profits of his resourcefulness, but will be compelled to turn them over to pay the bills of a profligate government.

In his Milwaukee address, the President stated that according to the philosophy of the new deal, our present system must be modified "to save our economic structure from confusion, destruction, and paralysis." Without any attempt to elaborate, I submit there never has been a period within the memory of any living being when there was greater confusion, doubt, and fear in the minds of all classes of people, in all walks of life, or a greater threat of destruction of all that is worth while of our economic and political system than exists today, as a direct result of 2½ years of the Roosevelt administration.

In conclusion, it is admitted on all hands that in order to establish this new economic system our Federal Constitution must be wholly rewritten. Already the administration is launching a campaign to that end. This is the most serious of all problems which the young men and young women of today must consider and decide. The Constitution was written not for the rich, or the strong, or for those who occupy places of authority, or have accumulated great wealth. It was written for the humble citizen. The moment the guaranties that great charter of human liberty gives the individual citizen are abolished, it then becomes a struggle for the survival of the strongest and the most powerful. Every man is then free to invade the field of every other man's rights. Such a contest would have but one conclusion—those who possess the power, the wealth, and the cunning would control the Government and compel all others to do their bidding. Surely the youth of America are not prepared to endorse any administration which is seeking to bring about such a condition.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT CHALLENGED

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I am again talking as a nonpartisan, as one who knows that there is no difference between a reactionary Republican and a standpat Democrat. These are still not only cats of the same breed, but the same cat. They believe in standing still, in letting bad enough alone, thankful that it is not worse. They look backward to the dying shadows of a past civilization. On the other hand, I know that there is no difference between the progressive Republicans and progressive Democrats. These are striving with all their might to get this Nation out of the mire. They look forward, and in the distance see the dawn of a new and better day.

But, in the light of recent congressional events, it has become necessary for intelligent and patriotic people to condemn unhesitatingly and unreservedly the action of the majority leaders. Drunk with power—deaf and blind to human suffering—with a cruel, brutal, and inhuman indifference to the cries for justice from several million men, women, and children who are about to be separated from their livelihood, who are about to be evicted from their homes—these leaders have moved heaven and earth to prevent our getting the required number of signatures on petition no. 7. This petition has for its object and purpose the bringing up on the floor of the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill for discussion and disposition on its merits.

It is conceded by all that if this bill were permitted to come up on the floor it would pass both House and Senate, and we are confident that it would be signed by the President. No President would dare to veto a bill that would save the homes of 5,000,000 men, women, and little children. No President could be so cruel and so indifferent, so unmindful of the welfare of this Nation. This bill would save at least 2,000,000 mortgaged farm homes from foreclosure, and at the same time would pay the creditors up in full. It would loosen the frozen assets, and this Nation would again have sufficient credit and currency with which to do the Nation's business. It would give us an intelligent expansion of the currency and no one would be injured. The Government would actually make a profit and all the people of this Nation would again prosper. It would revive hope and aspiration.

This bill has met with almost universal approval. It has the militant support of the National Farmers Union and of the National Union for Social Justice. It has the endorsement of many State and local farm bureau and Grange organizations. It has the support of labor leaders and officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It has the approval of over 85 percent of the farmers, as well as of every intelligent banker, business and professional man and woman in this Nation. No bill ever had the popular support that this bill has. Yet some invisible force has been able to prevent us, for 4 years, from bringing it up on the floor for discussion and disposition on its merits.

Thirty-two State legislatures, the Territory of Hawaii, and in addition the lower houses of New York, Pennsylvania, and Delaware have given their mandate to Congress to pass this bill. Two hundred and twenty-four different Members of the House at one time or another signed the petition in order to bring this bill up for a vote. This is a majority of nine of the present Membership. Eighty-five percent of the people of this Nation demand, in no uncertain terms, that this bill be disposed of on its merits. After extended hearings both the House and Senate agricultural committees approved this measure and recommended its passage. It has now been on the calendar of both the House and the Senate for about 3 months, but under the dictatorship of the leaders we have been prevented from bringing it to a vote. What, then, is the power behind the throne, behind the majority leaders, that impels them to refuse to permit Congress to vote upon it? It is the international bankers, the money changers, those that we had supposed had been driven out, but who are still in full control of the temple.

At the very opening of this session, the majority leaders, with the complete approval and to the satisfaction of the Wall Street coupon clippers, put over a gag-and-shackle rule, so that even though a bill be reported out of a committee, it cannot come up for a vote unless these leaders O. K. it, or a special order of business is created by getting a majority of the Members, now 216, to sign a petition at the Speaker's desk. That rule, prior to vacancies, increased the number of signatures required to discharge a committee from 145 to 218. This is, on an average, 28 more than a majority on a roll call, as shown by the average vote cast on 11 of the most important bills during this session. While 216 is a present majority, yet it has been intimated that these leaders, in order to defeat the people's will, would attempt to count the dead, and insist that we will have to have 218 signers. Not only must the petition be signed at the Speaker's desk but Congress must be in session, so that the prospective signer may come under the observation of the Speaker and the leaders. Members who have gone to the Speaker's desk to sign petition no. 7, to bring this bill up for a vote, have been warned that the President does not favor this bill, and that he would veto it, although the President has denied that he has authorized any such statements.

To date 224 different Members of the lower House of Congress actually signed petition no. 7, but in spite of the fact that it may mean political suicide, 21 have been induced to withdraw their names. Some of these have re-signed; others we hope will. Queer as it may seem, at least one Member signed his name twice, and withdrew twice. This goes to show the extent of the pressure that is being brought upon Members not to sign and to withdraw their names. The power and corrosion of political patronage and the fear that public relief and work projects may be withdrawn from their States all play a part in the suppression and strangulation of real legislation. We submit that it is improper for the majority leaders to defeat the will of the Members and of the people of the United States by having these names taken off.

This is no longer a question of economics. It is a challenge to representative government. It is a question whether this Nation still has a government of, by, and for the people. Members of Congress are supposed to represent the people of their districts. They are supposed to vote for measures that their constituents want. Obviously, when legislation can be kept from the floor by a few leaders, the will of the people is defeated. Our revolutionary forefathers believed that there should be "no taxation without representation." We believe there can be no representation without the privilege of voting.

There can be no real representation when a few reactionary leaders, because of the corroded and ancient rules under which the House proceeds, can block the will of the majority and manipulate and control the bills upon which Congress is allowed to vote. President Cleveland once said that "the administration should act behind glass doors." The majority leaders believe that they should act behind closed doors. They know that most Members of Congress would not and could not afford to vote against this bill. They know that their constituents and public opinion would not tolerate it—they know that public opinion expresses itself on election day. They know that it is easier to keep a Member from signing the petition, or withdrawing his name, than publicly voting against it on roll call. Therefore they adopted this gag-and-shackle rule.

In the meantime, through mortgage foreclosures, hundreds of thousands are being dispossessed and evicted from their homes—homes of which they and their ancestors once were the proud owners, homes with generations of sentiment attached. In most States of this Union the weekly papers are full of foreclosure and sheriff's sales. This is not only true of farm homes but of city homes as well. In Chicago there have been over a billion dollars of foreclosures on residential property since 1929.

In that city, within the last 6 months, 5,900 homes have been foreclosed on. What is true of Chicago is true of other cities. Homes are the foundation of our civilization—the stability of government depends upon homes. We wonder if the whips, the tools which the leaders use to persuade their fellow Members not to sign and to withdraw their names, really know what they are doing? We wonder if they can see the tear-stained face of the mother, the stoic and anguished expression of the father, and hear the weeping of the children as the sheriff offers for sale their home, and their all?

For the highest intellectual, physical, and spiritual development, there must be a reasonable assurance of future security for our families and for our homes—there must be hope and aspiration. Today, all is uncertainty, confusion, and despair. Everything is in chaos—our civilization is in transition. The people are watching and judging the President, Members of Congress, and even the judges of the Supreme Court. They now realize that these all are but their servants. They respect them only as they serve this Nation's revered traditions and best interests. They know that all these officials are but human, that they possess all of the virtues and all of the faults that they themselves possess. They know that the Constitution was made for the people, and not the people for the Constitution.

This Nation is on fire, it is thoroughly aroused. The people have awakened from their lethargy, from sleeping at the switch, and are demanding that the Government once more respond to their will. Therefore, I shall discuss with you the trials and tribulations of the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill. Upon the passage of this bill depend the home and security of over 10,000,000 men, women, and children. We all know that the stability of government depends upon homes. No government is safe when more than half of its people are made homeless. This bill must not be confused with the Frazier-Lemke moratorium. That law is not intended as a substitute for this bill. It is merely a stopgap to save the farm homes until this measure is passed.

The Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill provides: That the United States Government shall refinance existing farm indebtedness at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal, on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds, but by issuing Federal Reserve notes secured by the best securities on earth, first mortgages on farm lands; better security than gold or silver, because you cannot eat gold or silver, but you can eat the products that grow on the farms. Therefore, your life depends upon the farms. They are the best security on the face of the earth.

Under the provisions of this bill, there would be issued and put into circulation between two and three billion dollars of new money—Federal Reserve notes. This, used as a revolving fund, will be sufficient to refinance all of the farm indebtedness and save 2,000,000 farm families from ruination. If we had passed this bill in the special session, this two or three billion dollars used as a revolving fund would have given us an intelligent expansion of the currency and would have made it unnecessary for the Government of the United States to issue billions of tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds. It would then not have been necessary to put 22,000,000 on Federal relief and millions more on State, county, and municipal charity. The $4,800,000,000 dole would have been avoided, human misery and unemployment would have ceased. That is the difference between the Frazier-Lemke bill and the present policy of the Government, borrowing money and guaranteeing bonds.

The international bankers would now lead us to believe that there has already been an expansion of the currency. This is absolutely false; but there has been an enormous expansion—and inflation—of tax-exempt bonds. Not only has there not been an expansion of the currency but there has been a contraction, a deflation, equal to $8.86 per capita. The Treasury reports show that on February 28, 1933, there was $52.23 per capita circulation, while on July 31, 1935, there was $43.37. Thus in spite of all the wildly exaggerated claims of expansion, there has been a deflation of $8.86 per capita.

In order to cover up this contraction of money we have borrowed billions of dollars and issued tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds to bolster up our tottering financial structure. But there is danger ahead, because we cannot borrow ourselves out of debt. We cannot save ourselves from a final accounting—from judgment day—by a further contraction of the currency and accumulation of the wealth of this Nation in the hands of a few.

Our Government now prints Federal Reserve notes and gives them to the Federal Reserve banks at seven-tenths of 1 cent per bill—the cost of printing. It makes no difference whether that bill is a $1 bill or a thousand-dollar bill, or whether they keep it for 1 year or for 20 years—all they ever pay your Uncle Sam for it is seven-tenths of 1 cent per bill. The amount of all the paper money given by the Government, mostly to the large banks, amounted on June 1 last to over $4,600,500,000, of which amount over $3,414,000,000 were Federal Reserve notes. What is back of this paper money? Is there gold back of it? There is not. Is there even a farm back of it? There is not. There is simply the indebtedness of the United States—a Government bond—back of it.

If the Government can issue this money for a few international bankers without anything back of it but debts, why can it not do it for thirty million who are dependent upon farms? Why not do it for all of our people? Under the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill the farmers would have to pay just $6,149,500,000, less interest, in 47 years, the time required for amortization of the farm indebtedness; and, at the same time, the Government would make a net profit of six billion three hundred and forty-five millions, and to that extent lessen our Federal tax burden.

This bill was introduced in Congress over 4 years ago. Numerous and extensive hearings were held on the Senate side, but in the House we were never able to get a hearing until this session. After these hearings the bill was favorably reported out by the House Agricultural Committee by a vote of 18 to 5. About the same time it was reported out favorably by the Senate Agricultural Committee without a dissenting vote. It has now been on the calendar of both the House and Senate for about 3 months. But under the ancient and corroded rules of procedure—rules well adapted for boss and Wall Street control—this bill cannot yet be brought upon the floor for a vote on its merits, not because it would not pass but, on the contrary, because it would pass.

We are not defeated, although our patience has been abused. We are going to win. We will be ready to take up the battle on the very first day of the next session, which is only a few months off. Let me say to those that would thwart the Nation's will that they cannot permanently succeed; that the great fundamental power of public opinion will in time eliminate them from the scene of action.

Strange things are happening here at the Nation's Capital. The storm clouds are gathering. The fight for constitutional and representative government—for the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill—is now transferred during adjournment from Congress to the people. I am sure that the voters will visit with their Congressman and inform him that they desire his name on petition no. 7 at the Speaker's desk. They will tell him that if he fails them on the opening day of the next session, that then they will fail him on the next election day. They will tell him that he is their representative, and that he must respond to their will or they will support someone else. They will tell him that this Government does not belong to Congress, nor to the President, nor even to the Supreme Court, but to the American people.

I am an optimist, though I know that truth is still on the scaffold, and wrong is still on the throne. But I know that behind that scaffold and behind that throne an enlightened public opinion is still shaping the destinies of this Nation. I know that in the end decency and righteousness will prevail. This Nation is in a transition. America will yet be economically free. In this eternal struggle for social justice, only the coward and slave surrenders; only the dullard accepts the yoke. I am sure that the American people know that a democratic form of government, although defective, is the best form of government that can possibly be devised for their own best interests. I am confident that they know that without representation there is no democracy; and that without democracy the Nation is dead.

THE RAILROAD PENSION BILL

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, one of the most commendable pieces of legislation enacted in the Seventy-fourth Congress—and an act in which I took a natural personal interest as a former railroad man—was the railroad pension law.

Strictly speaking, there are two laws covering the subject, closely related and in a sense supplementary to each other. The retirement act describes the railroad retirement system, tells who shall get the pension annuities, and provides that annuities shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The twin bill—the taxing act—places a tax on rail employees' wages and salaries up to $300 a month and an excise tax on the pay rolls of the roads. The tax on both employees' incomes and carriers' pay rolls was placed at 3½ percent—a compromise, since rail labor organizations had favored a 2-percent tax on employees' incomes and 4 percent on carriers' pay rolls.

On March 1, 1936, the retirement act will become effective. Annuity payments begin 90 days later.

These retirement benefits go to employees of railroads, express companies, and sleeping-car companies which are subject to the interstate-commerce law. Employees of electric railways which are "part of general steam-railroad systems" get the same benefits. Retirement with annuities is possible for employees if they were "in the employment relation" to the carriers on or after the date when President Roosevelt signed the bill.

The current issue of Labor, official organ of the railroad brotherhoods, states:

Such employees can retire with annuities:
1. When they reach or have reached the age of 65 on or after the date the bill is signed by the President, regardless of their years of service with the carriers.
2. When they are 51 or more years old, on or after that date, and have 30 years of service with the carriers.
3. When at any age they have completed 30 years of service and, on or after the date the bill was signed, are retired by a carrier for mental or physical disability.
All service with any carrier counts for retirement and annuities, whether or not the service was continuous or was broken by periods when the employee was not actually in the railroad industry. One day of work in any month counts as a full month's service, and 6 months or more are counted as a full year.

Labor estimates that about 75,000 employees over 65 can retire under the act and receive annuities. So can other thousands who, though not 65 years old, have had 30 or more year's service with the carriers. Retirement, it is explained, is required at the age of 65 unless the employer and employee sign a written agreement extending the employee's service, year by year, up to 70, but no more.

The new legislation will be administered by a Railroad Retirement Board, one of whose members is to be recommended by the rail employees, one by the carriers, and the third man is to have had no connection with either. The Board is to be appointed by the President.

For the benefit of those wishing to go into the provisions of the bills in detail and thoroughly familiarize themselves with the various points, I advise a careful study of the article on page 3 of the August 27 issue of Labor headed "Who Benefits Under Pension Law and How?" It is an informing and instructive article of value to all railroad men as well as many others and takes up the legislation more fully than I can do at the present time. It is not only worth reading but worth saving for future use.

THE COTTON CALAMITY

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, we are brought face to face today with the inevitable result of the fallacy of one of the highlights of the philosophy of the new deal. It is the theory that the less you have of anything the more prosperous you will be. Upon this theory the cotton program of the past 2 years was based, and to this theory we can ascribe the surrender of America in the battle for cotton supremacy of the world.

The advocates of the theory that "famine makes plenty" have had their day with the cotton crop of the South. The southern planters have plowed under acreage and have complied with all the regulatory enactments of Washington bureaucracy, only to find themselves in a worse dilemma than they were previous to the injection of the serum of salvation. In a desperate effort to save themselves, the preachers of famine panaceas now seek to load on the shoulders of the American taxpayers a further burden to hold King Cotton on his tottering throne.

No one will deny the assertion that cotton is absolutely vital to the prosperity of the South. To a very large degree the trade of the South depends upon the planting, cultivating, harvesting, marketing, financing, and processing of the crop of the cotton fields. For many years the cotton crop of the United States commanded world supremacy.

England ventured the risks of running the blockade during the Civil War to obtain southern cotton for her textile mills, and during the World War Europe begged for southern cotton for manufacturing munitions. Both for domestic and foreign use the southern planters have for generations commanded a key position.

The collapse of world trade affected the cotton industry as it did all others. Growers were unable to sell their cotton for a price sufficiently high to make a living. Overproduction in the cotton fields brought about the same result with this commodity as with all others. It is possible that an effort to diversify crops might have proved helpful. Instead of an endeavor along this line the famine panacea was advocated as the only means of relief. The formula included payment to growers for plowing under 1 acre out of every 4; further reduction of acreage was insisted upon; growers were guaranteed a price by the Government for their cotton by loans of 12 cents a pound on cotton. Growers were assured under this lending policy that they could not lose, for if the price of cotton should be less than 12 cents at the time the loan matures the Government gets the cotton and the taxpayers of the country bear the loss, while an increase in the price of cotton over 12 cents at the time of the maturity of the loan would result in the profit going to the grower. It was but natural that the gambling instinct on a sure winner of this kind would assert itself and the southern planters accepted the Government's proposal.

Probably the owners of stocks of utility holding companies would be tempted today to accept a similar sure-bet proposition. The result of the Government's generous proposal has been to load up the Government with billions of pounds of cotton at a tremendous loss to the taxpayer. However, as bad as this condition might be, it is not as bad as the other resultant calamity. The South has lost a large part of its world cotton business. While we were compelling our southern neighbors to reduce their cotton production 43 percent, India was increasing hers 8 percent, Egypt 22 percent, and Brazil 68 percent. Last year the South furnished only a little more than 50 percent of the world's production, as against 80 percent some years ago. Present indications are that the figures for this year will show that a further decline has taken place and that we will supply less than 45 percent for the year. Authentic figures seem to prove that the reduction in exports of cotton is about equal to the reduction in crop resulting from the folly of "famine makes plenty" and that all that has been accomplished has been to surrender our world position to foreign competitors.

Of the $237,000,000 loaned last year to the cotton growers only a little more than $3,000,000 has been repaid to the Government, leaving the Government holding the bag, with approximately 4,000,000 bales of cotton on its hands as collateral. Meanwhile the American taxpayer has had foisted upon him in the purchase of cotton goods an increase of more than 50 percent in price and the American cotton mills have encountered the difficulty of meeting the competition of Japanese rayon products. It therefore follows that the consequences of the cotton program are not confined to the South. Thousands of people in the textile industry and in activities identified with it are feeling the results. Spinning, weaving, dyeing, transportation, and selling are all closely related to the success or failure in the commodity field. Textile mills have closed in many sections of the country and thousands of operatives have been forced to join the ranks of the unemployed. Capital losses have been startling. It is the tragedy of experimental philosophers forcing their theories on an unsuspecting people and, under the promise of benefits, persuading a people to destroy their wealth and livelihood.

Instead of the promised prosperity for the cotton farmer, calamitous consequences have resulted from the program of artificially manufacturing a price for the commodity. Instead of a land flowing with milk and honey, the southern cotton farmer is wandering about in a desert of despair and disappointment, and with him are the thousands of workers of allied industries, who likewise cry for relief from the attendant hardships.

The conditions faced by the cotton farmer are also faced by the wheat and corn farmer. America has heretofore been a grain-exporting country. We have taken a justifiable pride in our position as one of the chief granaries of the world. No longer can we claim this distinction. Compulsory reduction in acreage, artificial price fixing, and other fanciful ideas have contributed to a condition of scarcity here, so that imports rather than exports of grain are now the lot of America.

Increased prices of foodstuffs and clothing have aroused the wage earner against the whole policy. Complaints are heard on all sides. Demands are made for sound policies based on experience rather than fallacious programs based on experiments. Even the strongest proponents of the cotton and grain subsidies confess the failure of their efforts.

It is encouraging to note some change of heart on the part of those in charge of the Agricultural Department. Apparently the truth has come home to some of the "new dealers" that recovery will not result from making things scarce. "Famine makes plenty" appears to be open to some question. The press reports the Secretary of Agriculture as having admitted that "true prosperity cannot come until there has been a very material increase in the output of industrial goods." These are welcome words to those of us who come from industrial States. It may be the first step in recognizing the danger of continually penalizing industry. It may mean a discontinuance of imposing strangulation on the industrialists as the only method of national recovery. In fact, it may mean that the voice of experience can again be heard above the clamor of the experimental laboratory. At all events, to say the least, it is encouraging.

In the meantime, however, the advocates of the cotton-destruction policy are desperate. This accounts for the effort to tack on a half billion dollars to the deficiency appropriation bill. An effort is made to provide a subsidy as well as a loan benefit. The wheat farmers are to be similarly aided by public benefactions. It is probable that before long other groups will come seeking similar benefits and the next session of Congress will provide an opportunity for the "butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker" to ask for loans, grants, and subsidies from the American taxpayer.

The folly of the whole policy is apparent. If it were not for its dire consequences the program might be humorous. "Willful waste makes woeful want" still applies as a tried and true axiom. Compulsory curtailment of production, enforced destruction of commodities, artificial price fixing, these and all the other vagaries of the apostles of "famine makes plenty" are calculated to bring us all to the same condition which confronts the cotton farmer today, a condition of despair and disappointment.

The efforts of certain interests to bring further aid to the cotton and wheat farmer are the inevitable result of the policy of the present administration in legislating without a definite, consistent, and sound program.

WHAT CHEAP ELECTRICITY MEANS TO THE FARM HOME

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as an illustration of what cheap electricity will do for the farmers of this country, I call attention to a statement which I saw in one of my home papers this morning with reference to the use of electric energy in the home of a Mr. and Mrs. Floyd, of Booneville, Miss., who claim to be the first purchasers of an electric dishwasher in that immediate territory.

Some of our highbrow friends who seem to think that electricity should be monopolized by the Power Trust for the purpose of issuing watered stocks, and so forth, will probably have no sympathy with the idea of putting an electric dishwasher in every home.

I wish to God that every Member of this House and of the Senate who voted with the Power Trust on the holding-company bill and against the T. V. A., and who is invariably complaining about "this Washington heat", had to roll up his sleeves these hot days and go into a hot kitchen and wash dishes with his own hands until he came to appreciate the drudgery which the women of this country have to bear. It would do him good to experience that heat—in many ways. It would bring him to a realization of what this drudgery means to the housewife, and what a burden he is helping to impose by his vote, and bring him to understand what heat really means.

He is going to need that lesson, for the people are going to "turn on the heat", and keep turning it on, as they come to understand how they have been robbed and plundered by the Power Trust, and are being robbed and plundered now through the sale of watered stocks, as well as through the exorbitant overcharges for electric light and power, and how certain Congressmen and Senators have aided and abetted these power racketeers by their votes on the T. V. A. and the holding-company bills.

They are going to intensify that "heat" as they realize that the policies pursued by these friends of the Power Trust are denying millions and millions of the American people the use of any electric energy at all—thereby depriving them of one of the greatest conveniences of modern times—and heaping additional burdens in overcharges upon the already overburdened consumers of electric energy.

But this article tells us that Mr. and Mrs. Floyd not only have an electric dishwasher but an electric refrigerator, which manufactures all the ice the family needs and keeps it on hand for ready use at all times of the day or night.

They also have an electric range to cook the family meals. What an improvement that is over the old coal and wood stove, over which the mothers of this country have scorched and worried their lives away.

They also have an automatic water heater that gives them hot water at all times, the temperature of which can be regulated without the slightest danger of an explosion such as sometime wrecks the family kitchen under the old system.

But oh! Some of the friends of the Power Trust would faint if they saw this: "Mrs. Floyd has an electric washing-machine to wash all the family clothes and household linens." No bowing down over the washtub in the hot sun, or blistering one's hands and face stirring the fire around the old-fashioned wash-pot in this family. That punishment, however, is still being endured by millions of women as a result of the utilities' monopolizing and controlling the electricity supply of this country, and denying to our people its liberal use and the liberal use of those appliances that go to relieve the drudgery of the home and to add to its attractions, comforts, and conveniences.

This article tells us that Mrs. Floyd owns an electric iron, which she can use freely without a conscious fear of wrecking the family budget, because they are getting electricity at reasonable rates, paying no dividends on watered stocks, maintaining no holding companies and paying for none of this putrid and corrupt propaganda that has disgraced this Capitol for the last few months.

This Floyd family also operate electric fans and they have an electric churn. Churning in the Floyd home is merely a matter of pressing a button. That procedure will hardly be understood by the farmers' friends in Wall Street, who are always telling the farmers how they should run their farms, conduct their homes, rear their children, and so forth.

Here is another part of the story that will possibly be a shock to the silk-hat brigade of Power Trust manipulators and watered-stock brokers: The Floyds have an electric toaster and an electric percolator. Now I know the wise ones will say that is going too far. The idea of a farmer having a toaster or a percolator of any kind will indicate to them that the people are demanding too much, and are indulging in extravagance—wasting electricity that should be conserved in order to boost the price or promote the sale of watered power stocks.

And last but not least—and I can hear these utility profiteers now saying, "I told you so." Last but not least, the Floyd's have a radio. Every time one of these friends of the vested interests begins to talk about the farmer's extravagance, they bear down on their contention that if the farmer were given credit, or supplied with electricity at reasonable rates, one of the first things he would buy would be a radio—as if the farmer did not have as much right to a radio as anyone else.

Nothing adds more to a home, dispels more loneliness, brings it more information, or gives it more wholesome, elevating, and enlightening entertainment than a radio. I am glad to note that the farmers throughout my section of the country, where cheap electric energy is being distributed, are installing radios in their homes.

Now, let us see what all these luxuries cost the Floyds. In June they used 280 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, which cost them $5.31, plus a membership fee of $1. This extra dollar goes to amortize their distribution lines. In a few years that will be paid off and they will be relieved of the payment of this extra dollar. Three years ago, before the T. V. A. began to force down the rates, this would have cost the Floyds $22.20 a month, if they had been able to get any electricity at all.

In July, however, the Floyds used 380 kilowatt-hours of electric energy which cost them $6.30, plus the $1 membership fee. That was the month in which Mrs. Floyd did her canning of fruits, vegetables, and so forth. Three years ago this would have cost the Floyd's $29.20—or just exactly four times what it is costing now.

When asked which one of these electrical appliances she was most partial to, Mrs. Floyd readily answered the electric range. That would probably be the answer of a vast majority of the women of this country who have had to endure the drudgery of an overheated kitchen.

I note, however, that Mr. Floyd states that he considers the electric washing machine the greatest thing for the home owner. Now that gives me an idea, and I am going to pass it on to the women of this country for what it is worth. Mr. Floyd has probably had some experience in helping with the family washing, hence, the washing machine, and Mr. Floyd's admiration for it.

Now, if every woman in this country who is unable to hire servants—and most of them are unable to hire servants, strange as it may seem to these utility magnates—if every woman in the United States who had to do her own work would put her husband to doing the family washing—and that applies especially to recalcitrant Congressmen and Senators who consistently voted with the Power Trust during this session of Congress—if their wives would put them to doing the family washing, it would sell more washing machines than all the advertisements and high-powered salesmen the manufacturers of those articles could support, and it would also help us in our battle to bring down light and power rates to the cost of production and distribution and to put cheap electric energy in every farm home in America.

MY REPORT TO THE PEOPLE OF THE EIGHTEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the practice I have followed in previous sessions, I desire, at this time, to briefly review the work of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress and my activities during this session.

PROGRESS DURING PAST YEAR

During the past year further substantial progress has been made in restoring prosperity to business, agriculture, and industry, and noteworthy improvement has been made in economic conditions throughout the country. Our people are again facing the future with faith and confidence. What a contrast to the distress, despair, and hopelessness of 1932–33. With the continued support of the people we will achieve still further progress and improvement in the months to come.

MY VOTING RECORD

As the Representative of the people of the Eighteenth Congressional District of the State of New York, to whom I have the honor of submitting this report, I would state that I voted for the following outstanding measures:

First. The $4,880,000,000 work-relief bill.

Second. The bill for the immediate cash payment of the veterans' adjusted-service certificates, and the motion to pass it over the veto of the President.

Third. The $1,750,000,000 home-mortgage relief bill.

Fourth. The social-security bill, providing for old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, maternity and child welfare, public-health service, and aid for the crippled and blind.

Fifth. The Farm Credit Act of 1935, extending until January 1, 1940, the time during which the Land Bank Commissioner may make direct loans to farmers on first or second mortgages at reduced interest rates.

Sixth. The Wagner-Connery Labor Relations Board Act, as amended.

Seventh. The National Youth Administration, a $50,000,000 program to aid unemployed youth between the ages of 16 and 25 by giving them a chance to learn a trade, to work in private industry, to gain high-school, college, and post-graduate education, and to formulate their own work-relief projects.

Eighth. The Wheeler-Rayburn public-utility bill, to protect the consuming public and honest investors.

Ninth. The bill extending the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years and authorizing loans to industries for labor pay rolls.

Tenth. The bill extending the guaranty of bank deposits.

Eleventh. The tax bill, to increase the rate of income, inheritance, gift, corporate, and excess-profits taxes, as recommended in the President's message.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

During this session I have continued my efforts on behalf of our veterans. It has been my honor and pleasure to serve as a member of the steering committee appointed by Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, to conduct the fight for the passage of the bill providing immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

I voted for the passage of bill H. R. 6995 to restore the pensions of the veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer Rebellion, and the Philippine Insurrection, to their widows and dependents.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION

I have actively favored in this session, as I did in the last Congress, the legislation sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, and by the Railroad Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, providing for a 6-hour day, full crews, train limits, hours-of-service law, employers' liability law, section 7 (b) Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, and reenactment of a retirement pension system for railroad employees. I have supported all measures in the interests of higher wages, shorter hours, and better working conditions. I have continued to go on record in favor of legislation sought by the postal employees, rural and substitute carriers, and all Government employees, who are faithful and efficient public servants and deserving of just treatment at the hands of the Federal Government.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

I have actively favored providing, in the P. W. A. appropriation bill, adequate funds to pay the salaries of school teachers and to maintain our public schools. I consider the cause of public education paramount and favor the following program:

First. Adequate free public education to the children of the United States.

Second. Adequate pay for public-school teachers, as a matter of justice and as a means of attracting and retaining the most competent, devoted, and best-equipped teachers.

Third. An adequate number of safe, commodious, and well-equipped school buildings.

Fourth. Free textbooks for all public-school pupils.

Fifth. A Nation-wide system of libraries, equipped with sufficient reference and reading material.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MY CONSTITUENTS

During the present session of Congress my mail has averaged full 100 letters each day, all rating a reply, and many requiring personal visits to the governmental agencies. While to Members of Congress this voluminous correspondence is exacting, we bear in mind that these are trying times, and we cheerfully render this service to our constituents. I pride myself on the fact that every communication which I have received from my district has had prompt attention.

The people of my district have always elected to public office men who pledged themselves to support humane and progressive legislation. It has been my privilege, as your Representative in Congress, to maintain that tradition. I have cooperated whole-heartedly with President Roosevelt on his legislative program and I have assured the President of my continued support as well as the support of the people of my district.

I wish at this time to express my appreciation to the Democratic leaders of the district and, particularly, to the leader of the Eighteenth District, Alderman Timothy J. Sullivan, acting mayor of New York City. These leaders have ably aided and assisted me in my work as your Representative in Congress.

MY BILL, H. R. 3974, WILL SAVE THE HOME OWNER BY REDUCING THE MONTHLY PAYMENTS ON H. O. L. C. MORTGAGES FROM NEARLY $8 A THOUSAND TO $5

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, on January 16, 1935, I introduced H. R. 3974. This bill provides for the reduction of the rate of interest on H. O. L. C. mortgages from 5 to 3½ percent, and extends the period of payment of the mortgage from 15 years to 25 years.

AMERICAN HOME STILL IN DANGER

Thousands upon thousands of good, thrifty, hard-working Americans have already lost their homes and the savings which they invested in them. Sheriffs' sales and writs of eviction have ruthlessly torn them from their most-prized possession, the home, which they have bought with their savings after honest and hard toil for many years.

CONGRESS AND THE H. O. L. C.

The danger that sheriffs' sales would deprive the majority of the home owners of their homes was so grave that in 1933 Congress established the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which set up a fund consisting of bonds of $2,000,000,000 to save distressed home owners from foreclosure. In passing that act Congress acknowledged its responsibility to help every worthy person to save and retain his home.

I HAVE GIVEN THE PLIGHT OF THE HOME OWNER ESPECIAL ATTENTION

For more than 2 years, few days have passed in which I did not actively participate in maintaining and improving the H. O. L. C. for the benefit of the home owner, in directly advising and aiding individual home owners from every section of western Pennsylvania, or in lifting my voice in protest against many administrative acts of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation which I sincerely believed to be contrary to the spirit and the purpose of this beneficial legislation.

I personally intervened and aided several thousand of distressed home owners in Allegheny County to obtain the home loans to which they were entitled.

I INTRODUCED MANY BILLS FOR RELIEF OF HOME OWNERS

In the past two sessions of Congress I have introduced a number of bills affecting the H. O. L. C., all of them for one purpose—to make it easier for deserving home owners to obtain relief, or to lessen the financial burden of those who had already received home loans.

On the date this Congress convened on January 3, 1935, I introduced a resolution providing for the resumption of H. O. L. C. activities—suspended by action of the H. O. L. C. Board—and a bill appropriating $2,500,000,000 of additional H. O. L. C. bonds.

I believed that the distressed home owner of 1935 was just as bad off, and just as much entitled to Government aid as a distressed home owner in 1934 or 1933.

HOMES WITH A STOREROOM ARE MADE ELIGIBLE

Following this bill, I introduced a bill to make dwellings containing a little storeroom, a shop, or any other small business enterprise eligible for a H. O. L. C. loan. The H. O. L. C. had held that such properties were commercial and therefore not eligible for a home loan. To me this was an unjust attitude. I feel that, on the contrary, such properties make the best kind of loan, because the income derived from the store helps the home owner to meet his monthly payments on his home loan.

Congress recognized the merits of my proposal, and when the bill appropriating one and three-fourths billion dollars of new H. O. L. C. bonds was passed at this session the act was amended so as to make such commercial properties eligible for home loans.

Mr. Speaker, it has so far been a successful fight. I have had the privilege of helping to obtain sufficient funds to replace distressed mortgages with the H. O. L. C. mortgages. This has enabled the H. O. L. C. to save the homes of 895,159 home owners, about 900,000 home owners, up to July 25, 1935.

Undoubtedly thousands upon thousands of additional homes will be saved in the closing months, but the fight is not over. To replace distressed and private mortgages with a home-loan mortgage will temporarily save the home owner from foreclosure, but it will not save him permanently. Unless we can reduce his monthly payments he will be in as bad financial condition as before.

HOME-LOAN PAYMENTS MUST BE REDUCED

Mr. Speaker, the threat of foreclosure has been temporarily lifted from the shoulders of the home owner, but his home is by no means saved. In most cases he cannot meet the large payments for interest and for the reduction of the principal mortgage debt, which are required of him by the H. O. L. C. He will lose his home unless we come to his rescue and reduce these payments to a size which the home owner can meet.

PRESENT INTEREST RATES ON HOME LOANS ARE EXCESSIVE

Under the present law home-loan mortgages bear interest at the rate of 5 percent a year, and in some cases, where a cash loan was made as distinguished from a loan in bonds, at the rate of 6 percent. This rate of interest is altogether too high.

When the original Home Loan Act was passed in June 1933 Congress may have been justified in fixing the rate of interest at 5 percent, because at that time the bonds which were issued in exchange for distressed mortgages were guaranteed only as to interest and not as to principal, and were carrying a rate of interest of 4 percent. It was argued that a difference of 1 percent was necessary to absorb the losses which may occur and to pay for the administrative expenses. Therefore the rate of interest to the home owner was fixed at 5 percent.

On April 27, 1934, the Home Loan Act was amended by Congress so as to provide that the bonds should be guaranteed by the Government both as to interest and principal. This permitted the sale of these bonds at a much lower rate of interest than 4 percent. As a matter of fact only $323,381,000 of home-loan bonds were issued with an interest coupon of 4 percent. One billion one hundred and fifteen million nine hundred and fifty thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars of home-loan bonds were issued with an interest coupon of 3 percent. All bonds issued since that time carry an interest rate of 2¾ percent or less. These figures are of the utmost importance to the home owner.

AN INTEREST CHARGE OF 5 PERCENT TO THE HOME OWNER IS NO LONGER JUSTIFIED

A charge of 5 percent for interest to the home owner is no longer justified. If a spread of 1 percent is sufficient to pay off administrative expenses and losses, the interest rate which the home owner must pay should be only 3½ percent or a fraction higher.

MY BILL, H. R. 3974, PROVIDES FOR 3½ PERCENT

Under these conditions, why should we continue to charge home owners 5 percent and even 6 percent in some cases? Why continue to charge the rate of interest which the home owner cannot pay, which is dragging him further and further, deeper and deeper, into debt, and which must in the end either be written off or result in foreclosure?

Mr. Speaker, there is no sense in helping the home owner out of one hole and then pushing him into another by making it impossible for him to meet his new payments on a home-loan mortgage. This is just what is happening, and will continue to happen, unless we reduce the rate of interest.

The average home owner—excepting the one who had a building-and-loan mortgage—had a straight mortgage. This is to say, he paid on his private mortgage 6-percent interest and nothing on the principal. If he had such a mortgage, for every $1,000 of his mortgage debt his interest payments amounted to $5 a month, or, on a $3,000 mortgage, to $15 a month. Thousands upon thousands of such home owners were unable to meet these interest payments, were faced with foreclosure, and were only saved by exchanging these private mortgages for Government home-loan mortgages. Now that they have done so they are coming to the startling realization that their monthly payments on the home-loan mortgage—including payments to reduce the mortgage—amount to $7.91 per $1,000, or $27.91 for a $3,000 mortgage.

Let me repeat this. At the present time the home owner pays off his Government mortgage at the rate of $7.91 per thousand dollars per month, if he has a 15-year mortgage. On a $3,000 loan that means a monthly payment of nearly $24. Of course, I am not overlooking the fact that on a private loan nothing was paid off on the principal, whereas in the Government loan the home owner gradually, by small monthly payments, pays off his mortgage, so that at the end of 15 years he owns his home free and clear of any debt.

MOST HOME OWNERS ARE UNABLE TO MAKE THESE PAYMENTS

This is indeed a fine feature of the Government loan, provided the home owner is able to make these monthly payments. But the plain fact is to the contrary: He is not able to make these payments. In most cases, the actual monthly payments demanded of the home owner are higher than before he obtained his home-loan mortgage. The fact that these monthly payments gradually pay off the mortgage does not make them any easier to bear.

If a home owner on a $3,000 mortgage could not pay interest of $15 a month, how can he be asked now to pay nearly $24 a month to the H. O. L. C.? In tens of thousands of cases he will be unable to do so. He will have to default on his payments to the H. O. L. C. and he will again be faced with the threat of losing his home. On the other hand, no payments will be forthcoming to the H. O. L. C. Such a situation is dangerous both to the home owner and to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and must be avoided.

If my bill is adopted, it will reduce the rate of interest to 3½ percent, and will extend the date of maturity on these home loans from 15 years to 25 years. The monthly payments to the home owner will then be strikingly reduced. Under the present plan, the home owner must pay $7.91, or nearly $8 per thousand, on his mortgage. Under my bill, he will be required to pay only $5.01 per thousand.

A home owner who previously paid on a $5,000 straight mortgage $25 per month—without paying off anything on the principal and reducing his mortgage—would, under the terms of my bill, pay $25.05, instead of $39.55, as under the present bill. After 25 years his loan would be fully paid off, and he would own his home free and clear of all debts. In a similar case on a $3,000 mortgage he would now be paying $24, whereas under my plan he will pay only $15 a month.

MY BILL SHOULD BE ADOPTED

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no reason why the H. O. L. C. interest rate should not be reduced from 5 percent to 3½ percent. There is no reason why my bill should not be adopted. The H. O. L. C. can now put its bonds on the market for as little as 2¾ percent, or even less. Then, why penalize the home owner by charging him 5 percent? Why not pass the benefit of this low rate of interest to the home owner and spread his payments over a longer period of time.

INTEREST ON FARM-LOAN MORTGAGES REDUCED TO 3½ PERCENT

I am certainly not envious of any aid extended to the farmers. I voted for it. I fought for it. I am very happy that the rate of interest on farm-loan mortgages—they are similar to home-loan mortgages—has been reduced to 3½ percent. Farmers were entitled to this reduction. They obtained it. The home owners are just as much entitled to it. Let us fight so that they also may obtain it.

INTEREST RATES MUST BE REDUCED TO SAVE THE HOMES

Unless these interest rates to the home owner are reduced, unless monthly payments on H. O. L. C. mortgages are reduced, there are going to be wholesale defaults on H. O. L. C. mortgages. People simply will not make these payments. Not because they do not want to make them—I hold no brief for the shirkers—but because they simply are not able to do it.

Is it not more sensible to reduce these interest rates and the monthly payments of the home owner, so that the home owners can pay them and at the same time save the Government from unpleasant and costly foreclosure proceedings? After all, people are honest. They do appreciate what the Government has done for them, and they want to repay. Why not give them a chance to do so, when everyone will be the gainer in the long run?

WE ARE NOT SAVING THE HOME OWNER UNLESS WE REDUCE THESE PAYMENTS

Mr. Speaker, we have helped 900,000 home owners keep their homes by exchanging their distressed private mortgages for home-loan mortgages, but we have not given them permanent relief. We have not safeguarded their homes against foreclosure. We have not safeguarded them in the possession of their homes, their most precious possession. We have not saved them from losing their last investment until we make it possible for them to make their payments on their H. O. L. C. mortgage. It would be a tragedy, it would be a colossal mistake, to continue to exact these high monthly payments from the home owner. Let us be sincere about this proposition. Let us say without equivocation whether we want to save the home owner. If we do, let us reduce his monthly payments so that we can really help him; otherwise let us admit that we are not going the whole distance, that we are not willing to save him.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this problem to be one of the most important of the day. There is nothing more important to a man and to his family than the home which they own. There is nothing more sacred to them than the home which is dear to them, the home in which they have spent good days and bad days, the home which they love.

It may be that the wife likes the kitchen or nursery, or the rose bush in the garden. It may be that the husband likes his workshop in the basement. It may be only a little thing, something about that home which they feel is close to them, but whatever it may be, they are attached to that place. It is their home. They love it. They want to keep it, and, Mr. Speaker, I intend to do all in my power to see that they shall keep it.

HOME OWNERSHIP MUST BE PRESERVED

Not only is this important to the individual home owner but it is important to society as a whole. It is important to the Government. A man who owns his home, a family which lives on the soil which is theirs have something concrete, something definite which attaches them to their country and which gives them a direct interest in the welfare of the Government.

Home owners and farm owners are the backbone of the Nation. We cannot, we must not permit them to be dispossessed, for fear that such action in the end upset the very principles upon which this Government rests.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that in the next session of Congress, the session beginning on January 3, 1936, Congress will pass my bill, H. R. 3974. I hope that the Congress will do so in the interest of every home owner throughout the length and breadth of the United States. I hope that the Congress will do so in the interest of the peace and safety of the Nation itself.

SGT. STANLEY R. MORGAN

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, our entire Nation is mourning the loss of its two great air heroes, Will Rogers and Wiley Post. These two intrepid explorers had won the love of America, the one with his boundless good will and kindly humor, the other with daring exploits that fired the imagination and inspired the highest type of courage among his millions of admirers. Each one of us feels personally the great loss that we have sustained as a result of their last great flight to the unknown.

It was fitting and appropriate that Providence should select for the performance of the last service to these heroes, another hero who, during a long career in the United States Army, has on every occasion exemplified the resourcefulness, the patience, the courage, and the unselfishness that mark the true American. Our country owes a debt of gratitude to Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan, who recovered the bodies of Rogers and Post and first flashed to the world the unwelcome news of their death. Utah is proud to claim Sergeant Morgan as her native son, and the people of Utah are proud to lead the world in paying tribute to his quiet, unassuming, but matchless heroism.

Following are two newspaper articles regarding Sergeant Morgan which will be of interest to every American:

[From the Salt Lake Tribune, Aug. 21, 1935]

SERGEANT MORGAN—UTAHAN WHO FOUND POST AND ROGERS WINS PROMOTION—MORGAN MOVED TO HIGHEST NONCOMMISSIONED GRADE IN ARMY

WASHINGTON, August 20.—The War Department today promoted Technical Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan, native Utahan, who recovered the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post from their wrecked airplane in Alaska, to the rank of master sergeant, highest noncommissioned grade in the United States Army.

The House today blocked consideration of a resolution to promote Technical Sergeant Morgan, but this action does not affect the War Department promotion of the noncommissioned officer.

Morgan's promotion came as a reward for his efficient work in recovering the bodies of the two men from the lonely spot near Point Barrow, Alaska, where the plane was wrecked.

LEADS RESCUE PARTY

The sergeant, who is the one-man staff of the Army Signal Corps station at the wilderness outpost, led the rescue expedition. He was accompanied by a United Press correspondent. Morgan later stayed at his radio post for hours.

The promotion was made on recommendation of Maj. Gen. J. B. Allison, Chief Signal Corps Officer of the Army.

Secretary of War George H. Dern announced the promotion "in recognition of his initiative, resourcefulness, and fine judgment in organizing and directing the party of natives that recovered the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post, who were recently killed in the tragic airplane crash near Point Barrow.

"The Signal Corps sergeant in charge of the Army's most isolated station not only recovered the bodies and took them to the lonely Eskimo village at Point Barrow but also transmitted by radio a clear and detailed account of the events leading up to and following the Arctic tragedy."

BRILLIANT RECORD

Morgan has a brilliant military record extending back 15 years. He was chosen to go to Point Barrow 7 years ago because his service had demonstrated his good ability and judgment.

His military duties at the northern station require him to handle radio communication and conduct meteorological observations for the United States Weather Bureau. He serves as United States commissioner at the post.

About 6 months ago Morgan rendered courageous service during a disastrous influenza epidemic that brought death to scores of natives. Both Morgan and his wife were stricken, but the sergeant, despite a raging fever, remained at his post and transmitted radio appeals for assistance. At his request doctors and nurses came from Nome by dog team, bringing medical supplies to the stricken village.

Morgan, a native of Payson, Utah, has earned a year's leave of absence after 7 years in the frozen north. He is expected to return to Seattle next month. He has urgently requested that he be returned to Point Barrow at the expiration of his leave.

[From the Army and Navy Register, Aug. 24, 1935]

SERGEANT MORGAN PROMOTED

On the recommendation of Maj. Gen. J. B. Allison, chief signal officer of the Army, the Secretary of War on August 20 announced the promotion of Technical Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan, Signal Corps, stationed at Point Barrow, Alaska, to master sergeant, the highest noncommissioned grade in the Army.

In announcing this promotion the Secretary of War stated that the advancement was given to Sergeant Morgan in recognition of his initiative, resourcefulness, and fine judgment in organizing and directing the party of natives that recovered the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post, who were recently killed in the tragic airplane crash near Point Barrow. The Signal Corps sergeant in charge of the Army's most isolated station not only recovered the bodies and took them to the lonely Eskimo village at Point Barrow but also transmitted by radio to the outside world a clear and detailed account of the events leading up to and following the Arctic tragedy.

Sergeant Morgan's actions in connection with the airplane crash were consistent with his fine record of military service for the past 15 years. He was chosen 7 years ago to go to Point Barrow because his service had demonstrated his ability, good judgment, and reliability, so necessary in this isolated post at the top of the continent. His military duties require him to handle radio communication and to conduct meteorological observations daily for the United States Weather Bureau. In addition he is the official representative of our Government at the most northerly point of our Territory. He acts as the friend and adviser of the natives and renders assistance to the occasional vessels that put in at this point during the very short summer season.

About 6 months ago Sergeant Morgan rendered outstanding and courageous service during a disastrous influenza epidemic that brought death to scores of natives on the bleak coast of the Arctic Ocean. Both Sergeant Morgan and Mrs. Morgan were stricken with influenza, but the sergeant, despite a raging fever, risked his life by remaining at his post, transmitting radio appeals for assistance for the natives. At his request doctors and nurses came from Nome by a long journey by dog team and brought medical supplies to the stricken village. As a result the lives of large numbers of natives were saved.

Sergeant Morgan has devoted much of his time to scientific and anthropological research. He has made a collection of primitive tools and weapons found in the lonely North and has studied intensively the language and customs of the Eskimos. He is recognized as an authority on the life and primitive culture of the natives.

Master Sergeant Morgan was born in Payson, Utah, on February 26, 1901, the present home of his mother, Mrs. Joseph A. Morgan. His early life was spent as a farmer boy. He completed his high-school course at Payson, and at the age of 19 enlisted in the Army at San Francisco. He has served continuously since that time, winning his way up from private by careful application to study, hard work, and faithful service. He is married and has two children. After 7 years in the frozen North, Sergeant Morgan has earned a year's leave, and will probably return to Seattle from Alaska next month. He has urgently requested that he be returned to Point Barrow at the expiration of his leave.

SERGEANT MORGAN'S GRAPHIC STORY

SEATTLE, WASH., August 16, 1935.—Following from Point Barrow: "10 p. m.—Last night, attracted by a group of excited natives on beach, I walked down and discovered one native all out of breath, gasping out in pidgin English a strange tale 'airplane she blew up.' After repeated questioning, I learned this native witnessed a crash of an airplane at his sealing camp some 15 miles south of Barrow and had run the entire distance to summon aid. The native claimed a plane flying very low suddenly appeared from the south.

Apparently then sighting the tents, the plane then circled several times, finally settled down on a small river near the camp. Two men climbed out, one wearing "rag on sore eye" and other "big man with boots." The big man then called a native to the water's edge and asked the direction and distance to Point Barrow. The direction given, the men then climbed back into the plane and taxied off to the far side of the river for take-off into wind. After a short run the plane slowly lifted from water to a height of about 50 feet, banking slightly to the right, when evidently the motor stalled, the plane slipped off on its right wing, and nosed down into the water, turning completely over, and the native claimed a dull explosion occurred, and most of the right wing dropped off and a film of gasoline and oil soon covered the water. The native, frightened by the explosion, turned and ran, but soon controlled his fright and returned, calling loudly to the men in the plane. Receiving no answer, the native then made the decision to come to Barrow for help. With completion of story we knew the plane to be that of Post and Rogers, and quickly assembled a crew of 14 Eskimos and departed in open whaleboat powered with a small gas motor. Hampered by recent ice floes and a strong adverse current, it took nearly 3 hours to reach destination. A dense fog with semidarkness gave the upturned plane a most ghostly appearance, and our hearts chilled at thought of what we might find there. As we approached nearer the plane we soon realized no human could possibly survive the terrific crash. The plane was but a huge mass of twisted, broken wood and metal. The natives by this time had managed to cut into the cabin and extricate the body of Rogers, who had apparently been well back in the cabin when the plane struck and was more or less protected by the baggage carried therein. We soon learned we would have a difficult job freeing Post from the wreckage, as the plane had struck with such terrific speed and had forced the engine well back into the cabin, pinning the body of Post securely. With some little difficulty we managed to tear the plane apart, and eventually released the body of Post. Both bodies were then carefully laid out and wrapped with eiderdown sleeping bags found in the wreckage, then carefully placed in the boat. It is believed that natives felt the loss of these two great men as keenly as we, and as we started our slow trip back to Barrow one of the Eskimo boys began to sing a hymn in Eskimo, and soon all voices joined in this singing and continued until our arrival at Barrow, when we silently bore the bodies from the beach to the hospital, where they were turned over to Dr. Greist, who with the kindly help of Mr. Brower prepared and dressed the bodies. It is doubtful if a person in this little village slept that night; all sat around the hospital with bowed heads and with little or no talking.

COTTON IN CONGRESS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, not having had an opportunity to discuss the resolution to fix the time for adjournment today because a motion was made to order the previous question on the resolution to adjourn, and such motion on the previous question is not debatable.

On that motion, however, I voted against it along with a number of Representatives from cotton-producing States and demanded a division and finally stood along with others demanding a roll call on the question. However, an insufficient number stood in order to obtain a roll call. When the previous question was ordered then in the vote on the resolution to adjourn today, I voted against it orally, and then by a standing vote on division and then stood up demanding a roll call, but an insufficient number stood so that we were unable to obtain a roll call.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I took this attitude was that I think the Congress ought to stay in session and work out this problem of lending 12 cents a pound on cotton. The Speaker referred the third deficiency bill to the Appropriations Committee where full hearings upon all of its provisions could be had and the case of the southern cotton farmers made out. Upon report by the Appropriations Committee, whatever it might be, the House would have a chance to discuss the question and to have a vote directly upon it.

Mr. Speaker, it is desirable that we should adjourn and go to our homes and to our private affairs, but it is more desirable that we should protect the interests of our long-suffering farmers. According to the proceedings of the Senate, it appears that Senator SMITH, Senator GEORGE, and Senator BANKHEAD were assured that if they would cooperate in extending the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, commonly known as "A. A. A.", then 12 cents would be lent upon cotton this fall. Of course, it cannot be a continuous policy, but notice ought to be given several months in advance of changing such a policy so that farmers, bankers, manufacturers, and merchants may adjust themselves to the conditions before the fell blow strikes. This change in the policy of the Department of Agriculture with reference to cotton is going to be a severe body blow, and almost a deathblow to the revival of business in the Southern States. Banks have been extending credit upon the expectation that cotton would sell at 12 cents a pound. Land has been sold and bought upon that basis. Cotton mills have stocked up with cotton and filled their warehouses with manufactured goods upon that basis. Wholesale merchants and retail merchants bought goods upon that basis. To change now suddenly is sure to be the most demoralizing and destructive thing that could happen.

There ought to have been consultation with representative and responsible leaders of both Houses of Congress, and the 12-cent loan policy should have continued for this season, and notice should have been given that at the end of this season a change in policy would be made. What has happened seems inexcusable. A cry of protest is sure to go up from the millions whose daily bread depends upon the production and the manufacture of cotton. It will be the heart cry of responsible fathers, it will be the anguished cry of helpless mothers, and it will be the mute, dumb wail of millions of children who will not understand the sad and sorrowing faces of mother and father, will not understand why winter clothes and shoes are lacking, will not understand why Santa Claus fails to come Christmas, but in their ignorance they will sense the fact that horrible injustice and irreparable wrong have been done them.

EULOGY TO WILL ROGERS

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at Claremore, Okla., on August 22, 1935:

From the Land of the Midnight Sun last Friday there came the saddest news that has flashed across the United States since the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. News of the tragic death of Wiley Post and Will Rogers so stunned the world that people solemnly stood in sad and silent suspense. Business stopped. Business men, if they talked at all, would talk about nothing but the untimely death of these two distinguished men.

Many a cup of breakfast coffee was left untouched—listlessly and absent-mindedly people turned to their duties. Automatically people performed those tasks that were necessary, but no others.

Perfumed handkerchiefs dabbed many moist eyes. So also were many tears brushed away by the back of rough and brawny hands.

In the theater world many a make-up was streaked by the mascara the actors use on their eyelashes.

Then we caught at the hope, "perhaps it is not true"—but the next flash from the Land of the Midnight Sun destroyed our feeble hope. It was true. Will and Wiley had gone out together. Both as they had wished; both at the zenith of their fame.

Oklahoma's two most distinguished sons and aviation's two most ardent champions "took off" together on their last flight.

The announcement of their tragedy swept the news from the front page of every newspaper in the entire English-speaking world.

Now we have met here in the home community of Will Rogers to honor him, but we can only honor ourselves in honoring him.

Will Rogers was my hero. He was the big brother of the world. He always boosted the fellow who needed a lift. He was a self-made man. He blazed his own trail over the mountain of fame. He never waited for opportunities; he made them. While others slept, he was poring over the daily news, digging the fun out of it.

He was a part of Oklahoma. The dash and romance of the new State appealed to his pioneering spirit. It was this admiration of the pioneer that drew him to the intrepid daring Wiley Post.

The red man's trail of tears ended here, and the red man named our State "Oklahoma", which means "beautiful land of the red man."

Before I left the National Capitol I walked into the Hall of Fame and stood before Oklahoma's son who graces that Hall of Fame, Sequoyah, a Cherokee. There he stands benignly looking over the rotunda of the National Capitol. I said, "Chief Sequoyah, one of your sons will soon be with you here." Will Rogers had blood of that proud and haughty race coursing through his veins. He was a part of Oklahoma, both its red man and its white man. He was a cowboy in the day when the ranchers were a lean and fearless race of men. His generosity was typical of the big-hearted cattleman. The old school of devil-may-care cowboys and big-hearted cowmen is passing. Will Rogers was one of the last.

He was typically American. He represented the American spirit of smiling at disaster. He was fiercely patriotic—always kindly and always fair, but it was always America first for him. The last time I heard him speak was in Chelsea last fall. You remember, he talked to us for a while without discrediting other nations. He told us how much better off we were than people elsewhere.

He always took pleasure in telling the people who traced their ancestry back to the Mayflower that his people met the boat—showing his pride in everything American.

His humor never bit like a wolf, but always like a lamb. He never used sarcasm or cynicism. He never destroyed an ideal, crushed an ambition, withered a hope, or disillusioned a dreamer. But instead he encouraged, he cheered, he inspired.

His sharpest arrows of wit left no bleeding wounds. His keenest thrusts of humor left no ugly scars of hate. His humor was clean and wholesome. His jokes left no unsavory taste. He left no unpublished manuscripts of coarse comedy. His repertoire contained no ribald jokes. Humorists with less refined conscience have yielded to the temptation of substituting coarseness for humor in order to get the guffaws of the groundlings, as Shakespeare would say. But Will never did. He didn't need to, nor was it ever necessary for him to use profanity in order to be effective in speech, as is sometimes done by men of more limited ability.

As Congressman Upshaw said, "He was the cleanest, keenest, best loved comedian-statesman the world ever saw."

His humor was the safety valve for American life. The high tension of our fast-moving life found relief of pressure in his wit and wisdom.

His philosophy had saneness. He walked with kings, but never lost the common touch. Affection, sham, and pretense were defenseless before his thrusts. The plaudits of two nations failed to shake his faith in the plain and simple things of life. To him one ounce of common horse sense was worth all of the fine-spun theories in the world.

His humor was only the superficial tinsel tapestry that concealed the great white soul underneath.

Few men become idealists while they still live. But as the flag is more than a piece of colored bunting so also was Will Rogers more than a mere man. He was an ideal. He encouraged the discouraged; he cheered the cheerless; he inspired the despairing; he shamed the greedy and praised the generous.

His charity was unlimited.

He accumulated a fortune but gave away more than he kept. He tithed by keeping one-tenth, giving away nine. He beat the Red Cross to the scene of every disaster.

When the searing winds of the drought curled up the last stalk of corn in southern Oklahoma and Arkansas there came on the next wind the glad news that Will Rogers was coming. He followed the devastated paths of the droughts and left groceries on a shelf and cheer in the heart.

The roar of the hurricane that swept Puerto Rico was still in the ears of the survivors when the cheering news was flashed over the radio that Will Rogers is coming. Through his benefit program he collected enough to relieve the destitute.

Above the confusion of the Nicaraguan earthquake was heard the drone of an airplane motor. Latin lips shouted with new courage, "It is Will Rogers."

Where shall we place his body to rest? Golden, sun-kissed California wants to bury him there. All the heroes who slept in the beautiful, sacred Arlington are inviting him to rest there.

But Oklahoma, his most beloved Oklahoma, is calling for her most distinguished and most loved son. Lay him to rest here in Oklahoma soil from which he sprung. Bring him back to the beautiful Osage hills and let him sleep beside the sparkling Spavinaw. The travelers of the world shall make sacred pilgrimages to his burial ground, and it shall become a sacred shrine where people will dedicate themselves to the noble things of life.

Though his body rests here, his soul has taken off in the Great White Ship for the beyond.

Happy landing, Will.

LEGISLATIVE EFFORTS OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE REAL ESTATE BONDHOLDERS' REORGANIZATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the statement which I have made on the floor of the House relative to the activities of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations, as authorized under House Resolutions 412 of the Seventy-third Congress and supplemented by 39 and 79 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, I desire to state that after months of thorough investigation in Chicago, New York, Detroit, Washington, and other cities, covering thousands of defaulted bond issues held by approximately 4,000,000 people and aggregating upward of $12,000,000,000, the committee prepared a bill, H. R. 7894, on which hearings were held before the Banking and Currency Committee, April 10, 11, and 17, and at which time I addressed and pleaded with the committee to realize the necessity for this legislation.

Unfortunately, unexpected opposition developed. In desperation I took the matter up with President Roosevelt, who suggested that I call a conference with the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morganthau, which I did. After several conferences with these gentlemen and their legal advisers, I proceeded to prepare a new bill to meet objections that were raised by them, and introduced H. R. 9027, which simplified the former bill and clarified its provisions. A summary of the provisions of this bill are as follows:

This bill will protect the rights and interests of some 4,000,000 individuals, involving upward of $12,000,000,000 of investments and will prevent in the future a continuance of the present deplorable practices.

It authorizes the President to designate a conservator for real-estate reorganizations from any of the existing Federal agencies.

Such real-estate reorganizations are to be reviewed by the conservator, whose jurisdiction will be acquired through Federal court reorganizations, and where Federal funds are used directly or indirectly, to finance such reorganizations.

Section 2: The conservator is authorized to appear in Federal courts in connection with real-estate reorganizations, for and on behalf of the bondholders.

Section 3: The R. F. C. is authorized to make loans for real-estate reorganizations However, such reorganizations are to be approved by the conservator as to the equitableness of the plan and the reasonableness of the fees.

Section 4: Loans by the R. F. C. to mortgage companies and other financial institutions are conditioned upon agreements that none of the funds of such mortgage company or financial institutions will be used for real-estate-reorganization financing unless such reorganizations are approved by the conservator.

Sections 5 and 6: Reorganization plans—under 74 and 77B—shall be submitted to the conservator for review and comment before being confirmed by the court. The amount of claims against individual real-estate debtors—74—may be reduced and the liens of secured creditors impaired, if such action is approved by the conservator and two-thirds of the creditors in number and amount of claims. The provision for the reduction of claims and impairment of liens of secured creditors is most essential in a reorganization for an individual real-estate debtor for which the existing laws do not now provide.

Section 7: Reorganizations pending in State courts may not be filed under 77B and 74 unless conservator approves.

Section 8: Provides that the conservator may for a period of 6 months, after the date of appointment, petition the court to reopen such reorganizations, or compositions, or extension proceedings under 74 and 77B if the proposal or plan was confirmed subsequent to July 1, 1934, and if in the opinion of the conservator material evidence was not brought to the attention of the judge.

Section 9: Provides for designation by the conservator of a standing group of experienced and capable men from whom any may be chosen or designated by the court to act as trustee in all Federal reorganizations, and to serve in lieu of the present highly paid fee receivers, trustees, attorneys, and others at a fixed rate of compensation not exceeding $7,500 annually.

Section 10: Provides for the registration of all protective committees, or similar or other groups with the conservator, thereby being compelled to comply with the conservator's rules and regulations.

Section 11: Defines "real-estate corporations" and a "real-estate individual debtor" and "real estate." Also suggests minimum of $100,000 of real-estate obligations on any property, as coming within the jurisdiction of the Conservator.

Section 12: Provides an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the operations of the conservator. Also provides reasonable fees to approximate the actual expenses, not to exceed 1 percent of the amount involved in any such reorganizations. All of such fees to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, though I have appealed to the Chairman and members of the Banking and Currency Committee, I regret that I have been unable because of some pretense or another, to obtain action on the bill. I recognize that this committee has been extremely busy with important Nation-wide legislation, but I doubt if some of the measures were in any degree as important as this bill. So that the work of our select committee would not be futile, I introduced after conference, House Resolution 323, but which due to the parliamentary procedure prevalent during the last days of the session I was obliged to change, and have now, due only to the favorable action of my own, the Rules Committee, secured immediate consideration and the passage of H. R. 354.

This resolution gives the committee additional power and jurisdiction not only as to real-estate matters but municipal, irrigation, industrial, and, in fact, any other defaulted bond issues. This became necessary, due to the urgent appeals on the part of many Members of the House alleging unfair and deplorable tactics on the part of some of those bondholders' committees, certain of whose members or associates have been buying up many of these bonds at 10, 12, and 15 cents on the dollar and who are now endeavoring to force municipalities and other helpless debtor communities into ruination and bankruptcy.

Notwithstanding that our bill has not passed at this session, the committee will be able in view of the additional power and appropriation granted, to continue to protect the rights of bondholders and combat those conniving so-called "bondholders' protective committees, receivers, trustees, attorneys and their associates", as, under this resolution the committee also has the power to appear in court by its counsel and contest unfair reorganizations and excessive fees and charges, on behalf of and to the advantage of the bondholders.

For the information of the House, I include in my remarks House Resolution 354, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders Reorganizations authorized by House Resolution 412 of the Seventy-third Congress and supplemented by House Resolution 39 and House Resolution 79 of the Seventy-fourth Congress is further authorized and empowered to investigate any defaulted securities and/or reorganizations, protective committees, receivers, trustees, and attorneys, including their fees and expenses and the method of their appointment.

Also representations made by any and all persons, corporations, or others applying for or having received Government funds, directly or indirectly, for use in connection with any defaulted securities, reorganizations, or other similar purposes and the disposition of such funds.

SEC. 2. Whenever in the opinion of the committee material evidence in any proceedings under section 74 or 77B of the National Bankruptcy Act have not been disclosed or presented, or misleading reports or information have been filed, or excessive fees and charges have been claimed or allowed, the committee is hereby authorized and empowered to appear in any court through its duly authorized representative and furnish the court with such evidence in its possession.

I greatly deplore after having devoted a year's time to this work and hoping that my committee and I would be relieved of further activities, which would have been possible if the legislation had passed, that powerful and hidden influences have apparently been able to thwart the passage of this legislation at this session. Consequently, I owe it to the House and to the country to continue to prevent these fraudulent activities on the part of organized groups of mortgage bankers, sharks, high financiers, and a gang of most astute lawyers to put a stop to these dishonest and unjust reorganizations that tend to defraud the bondholders of their investments.

It is only because of the confidence reposed in our committee—and I feel in myself by the House—to ferret out these vicious practices that I will continue if my health permits in this hard task in behalf of the millions of unfortunate bondholders, many of whom are over 80 years of age; widows and orphans, whose entire assets have been invested upon the advice of bankers and approval of courts in these securities, some having as much as $100,000 invested, feeling that in their declining years their income from these securities would enable them to live in modest comfort, but many thousands of whom now find themselves on the relief rolls.

In conclusion I wish to state that as soon as Congress convenes I shall demand and insist that this bill be passed and by that time I will be able to give to the House the names of those responsible for the delay in the passage of this remedial legislation. I serve notice now on the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and those influential gentlemen who have prevented the passage of this bill that no legislation of that committee will be taken up by the House at the next session of Congress until this, my bill, is reported and passed.

APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am submitting a table showing the appropriations made by the different Congresses, beginning with the appropriations made by the third session of the Seventy-first Congress and continuing down through showing separately the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, and in combination the second session of the Seventy-second Congress and the first session of the Seventy-third Congress—the latter because the period in which the money appropriated is used is a comparable period with the periods covered by the other single sessions—showing the second session of the Seventy-third Congress and the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. I have included all appropriations of every kind. The only duplications in connection with the set-ups are that some funds, which were appropriated for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the third session of the Seventy-first Congress and the first session of the Seventy-second Congress, were subsequently reappropriated for relief. These figures have been shown but it is fair that they should be shown in this way because in the earlier Congresses which are shown, where the money was not used, the total including these sums, which were later reappropriated, was much smaller than the last 3 years. The total figures are as follows:

Third session of Seventy-first Congress	$4,983,250,949.98
First session of Seventy-second Congress	4,627,440,936.33
Second session of Seventy-second Congress First session of Seventy-third Congress	8,791,396,777.10
Second session of Seventy-third Congress	11,534,376,618.23
First session of Seventy-fourth Congress	10,256,000,000.00

It will be seen that the present session of Congress, which is now closing, has gone far beyond any previous Congress in peace time. Table I, showing this, follows:

It will be seen from the above table that there was considerable economy in expenditures down to the time President Roosevelt came in with the first session of the Seventy-third Congress. With his advent into power a program of riotous extravagance followed, which is a menace to the solvency of the Government unless the people are aroused to their responsibilities.

The following table shows the expenditures of the Government each year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, together with the receipts of the Government over that period, together with the net public debt at the end of each fiscal year, the guaranties on which the Government is liable, and the amount of the bonus outstanding. The guaranties are mostly home-loan and farm-loan bonds and unquestionably the Government will have to meet a considerable portion of these bonds.

[1] This represents an allotment out of another appropriation available to the department during the fiscal year described. It is not added to the total of the appropriations for the particular fiscal year unless it comes out of an appropriation which was for that year.

The increase in the public debt has not proceeded as rapidly as would be expected from an addition of the different deficits because in figuring the net debt cash balances in the Treasury are taken into account because of the alleged profit on gold estimated to be $3,660,000,000.

1934	680,181
1935	729,769

NOTE.—To this must be added about 21,500 for the first-, second-, and third-class postmasters, making a total now in the Government service of 751,269.

This table indicates since the beginning of the Roosevelt administration on March 4, 1933, an increase of 152,500. The departments and bureaus which have been created in this present session of Congress will show increases by January 1, 1936, of 15,000 additional employees at least, and by a year from now will show 25,000 to 30,000 additional employees.

The record of this Congress makes it the largest from the standpoint of peace-time appropriations for expenditure purposes. The last session of the Seventy-third Congress was larger when you included the stabilization-fund appropriation and the appropriations for the R. F. C., but for expenditure purposes the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress is the largest in history. The expenditures are being made in the most wasteful, ignorant, and ridiculous manner and unless the people are aroused to a sense of their responsibility and turn the Roosevelt administration out, there is nothing in sight except complete bankruptcy. If the deficit for 1936 runs $6,000,000,000, and, frankly, today it looks as if it would, the national debt will be $40,000,000,000.

THE THOMASON BILL—RESERVE OFFICERS AND R. O. T. C. IN THE SCHEME OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, when Congress passed the Thomason bill it took a great step forward toward a rational and economical and efficient system of national defense. This bill was thoroughly considered by the Congress. It passed each House twice. How could that be? Because when the bill to create additional cadetships at the Military Academy was before the House Committee on Military Affairs it was amended to provide that 1,200 Reserve officers might be annually called to duty for training with the Regular Army each year, and that 75 such officers might be annually commissioned in the Regular Army as second lieutenants. These amendments, having been approved by the House, went to the Senate and were approved by the Senate. However, when the bill went to the President, according to my information, he objected to linking the cadetship bill with the Reserve officers' bill, and his views were indicated to the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, who immediately took steps to rescind the action of the Senate, and messaged the bill over to the House asking the House to return the bill to the Senate. Accordingly the House rescinded its action, and the bill, then stripped of the provisions for the Reserve officers, and containing only the cadetship provisions, went to the President and was approved by him.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the meantime the House of Representatives passed the Thomason bill on June 5, 1935, providing that 2,000 Reserve officers be annually called to active duty for training with the Regular Army, and that 200 of them so trained might be commissioned in the Regular Army as second lieutenants. This bill went to the Senate and, after considerable hearing and discussion and consideration, the Senate amended the same by cutting down the number of Reserve officers for training to 1,000 and the number of officers to be commissioned in the Regular Army to 50.

When these amendments were reported to the House the Committee on Military Affairs, believing that it was too late in the session to take the matter to conference and that "a half loaf is better than no bread", asked the House to agree to the Senate amendment, and this was accordingly done, after long and tedious waiting for 2 days by me for an opportunity to call the bill up.

The amended bill, therefore, has passed both Houses twice, because "the greater includes the lesser." The provisions of the bill as now amended are less than the provisions in any other bill that has passed either House. When the matter was before the House I stated that it is a great piece of constructive legislation approved by all those forward-looking thinkers upon the subject of national defense, because it is instrumental in providing adequate officer material at the minimum of expense to the Federal Government. Now, why do I say this? My reasoning is based upon the following considerations:

First. In the event of a major mobilization for war, 87 percent of the officers must be Reserve officers, and probably 95 percent of the officers actually leading troops in combat will be Reserve officers.

Second. At present there are 120,000 Reserve officers, of whom about 90,000 are active in their training, and it is manifest that since 95 percent of the troop leaders will be the Reserve officers, it is indispensable that these Reserve officers be of the best quality, have the highest possible efficiency, and that their morale be constantly maintained.

Third. Almost the exclusive source for recruiting the Reserve officers is students in our universities and colleges taking the R. O. T. C. course. There are about 125,000 such R. O. T. C. students in the country at this time.

Fourth. Each year there are graduated from the various R. O. T. C. units all over the country a total of about 7,000 young men who are commissioned as second lieutenants in the Reserve Corps.

Fifth. We all know that ambition and the prospects for reasonable recognition for effort and service are the greatest stimulus to proper public service.

As the law now stands and has stood for many years, there is practically no chance for anyone except graduates of the Military Academy to be commissioned in the Regular Army. I contended that this is wrong. The Military Academy is a great institution, but I know enough about it, and about how the young men who are appointed there are selected, to know that they simply cannot as a whole constitute such a superior class in natural ability and character as to entitle them to first call upon all the vacancies in the Regular Army. Now, why do I say this? I think it is a simple problem based upon the mathematical theory of probabilities. Here we have in more than 200 universities and colleges R. O. T. C. units in which there are about 125,000 young men taking training. From this total of 125,000 there annually emerge graduating classes, after 4-year courses, and the total of these graduating classes is around 7,000. Therefore, the 7,000 constitute the cream of the total of 125,000 young men.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my proposal is for the War Department to invite these 7,000 young men to apply for 1 year's active training with the Regular Army at the pay and allowances of their grade of second lieutenant. If we assume that less than one-third apply, to wit, if we assume 2,000 apply, then the War Department will pick the cream of the 2,000, according to their college records and according to the physical and moral data before them, and give this select 1,000 training of 1 year. Of course, I think that under present conditions nearly all of the 7,000 would apply for 1 year of training. I have been somewhat in contact with the young men of many of the R. O. T. C. units for the last several years, and especially since the depression do I find that nearly 100 percent of them would be very happy to have 1 year with the Regular Army immediately after getting their diplomas and commissions. Even if only one-half should apply, then the War Department would select the cream, the most valuable in physical make-up, in scholarship, in military training, and in morals, to take the 1 year's training.

Then during this 1 year all these 1,000 young men are constantly under the eyes of officers of the Regular Army, and they will be scrutinized carefully and rated in the most rigid manner. So at the end of 1 year the War Department will have a list of, we will say, 100 of the 1,000 that they regard as desirable to receive commissions in the Regular Army. They will then notify these 100 so that those who wish commissions in the Regular Army may apply. From those who apply, and I think it is safe to assume that 75 out of the 100 would apply for commissions, then the War Department will select the 50 whose records in all respects are the best. The result is that we will have "the cream of the cream" drawn from this vast reservoir of young manhood holding commissions in the Regular Army.

Mr. Speaker, we must also remember that when we take these young Reserve officers for training with the Regular Army they have cost the Federal Treasury almost nothing in comparison with the cost of educating a young man at the Military Academy at West Point. It is estimated conservatively that all overhead and incidental expenses counted in, the 4 years at West Point costs the Government around $20,000 for each graduate. Now, I have tried to estimate what it costs the Government to furnish military training to these 7,000 graduates of the R. O. T. C. We must remember that it is not fair to charge up against the 7,000 graduates all the money that is expended on the R. O. T. C. The reason I say this is that there are 125,000 students taking military training in all the R. O. T. C. units, and while not nearly all those who begin the training ever finish, we must not assume that those who do not finish have not an asset of great value to the cause of national defense. If a young man attends a R. O. T. C. unit for only 1 year, and if he has natural leadership, in the event of an emergency he will be immediately available for duty as a noncommissioned officer, and after a little more training might be commissioned as an officer.

Furthermore, those that have had 2 years' training but never graduate are just that much better suited for noncommissioned officers, and ultimately for commissioned officers. By the same reasoning, those who have had 3 years' instruction but never graduate are better prepared to take up the work of defending the Nation in event of a sudden emergency. So that estimating, as best I can, all these factors of value in the annual appropriation for R. O. T. C., I have estimated that the cost to the Federal Government of each one of the 7,000 annual graduates in R. O. T. C. is about $500 per man. If to this we add the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant for 1 year's training with the Regular Army, we have a total of about $2,000 invested in each of the 1,000 second lieutenants at the end of 1 year's training with the Regular Army, as against $20,000 for each of the 300 graduates each year at the Military Academy. It is my humble belief that the total contribution of the 1,000 at the cost of $2,000 each, making a total of $2,000,000, is as valuable to national defense as the total of the 300 West Point graduates at a cost of $20,000 each, aggregating $6,000,000. In other words, through the medium of the Thomason bill, at a cost of $2,000,000 we get as much national defense as we do through 300 West Point graduates at a cost of $6,000,000. That is why I told the House and honestly believe that the Thomason bill provides an economical and efficient system of national defense.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when the 1,000 second lieutenants who have had 1 year's training with the Regular Army, the Regular Army itself shall select 50 of the very best from those who apply, then I hold that the 50 who will have cost the Federal Government $100,000 will surely compare very favorably with, if not equal to, 50 of the average graduates at West Point who have cost the Government a total of $1,000,000. In other words, officer for officer, the West Point graduate will cost the Federal Government 10 times as much per man as the Reserve officer selected in the manner provided by the Thomason bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have lived too long, have observed too many colleges and universities, and have come in contact with too many successful men in various lines of endeavor to believe that graduation at any particular institution, whether military, medical, legal, engineering, or otherwise, is any guaranty that every graduate of that particular institution is outstanding and conspicuously capable in his respective field. I see doctors coming from relatively obscure medical colleges climb to the top through natural ability, initiative, and constant study. I see engineers with little college training pass those who have had the very best that the land can afford. I see lawyers who never went to a college and never went to a law school, but read law in a private office, through their constant efforts, through their natural ability, and through the force of private character forge to the very front in the legal profession and are envied by many of the graduates of the law schools of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Virginia, and other such outstanding law schools. I believe in education and I believe in training, but I believe in giving to every man, irrespective of the handicaps of early life, a chance to make of himself and for himself all that his talents, all that his character, all that his ambition, and all that his natural leadership justify him in seeking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I contend also that the scheme of preparing officer material contemplated by the Thomason bill will have a far-reaching influence upon all the 125,000 students in the R. O. T. C. units in the Nation. Why? Because heretofore the door of opportunity was closed. Now the door of opportunity is open. It is true the door is not widely open, and is merely "cracked", but still there is a chance, whereas heretofore there was no chance for a young man who could not induce his Congressman to give him an appointment to the Military Academy, to finally get a commission in the Regular Army. Therefore, I can visualize, and I have letters from more than 100 college presidents who express the same thought and have caught the same vision that every one of the 125,000 students in the R. O. T. C., after they learn of the provisions of the Thomason bill, and they are sure to learn of those provisions, will be stimulated, enthused, and aroused to take greater interest in his military training. He will become more amenable to discipline. He will begin to study military history. He will read the biographies of great soldiers. He will begin to think about what it may mean to achieve glory in war. So that in the place of a dull and listless body of R. O. T. C. students without hope, there will be morale, enthusiasm, zeal, ambition, and intense interest throughout the entire 125,000 R. O. T. C. students. The result will be that the 7,000 who rise as cream out of this list of 125,000 will have a higher order of training, will be better officer material, and as a result of the competition among the whole student body to seek to be selected as members of the 1,000 annually to be selected by the War Department, efficiency will be raised, and thus the cause of national defense enormously benefited.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that careful consideration of these views will convince any impartial mind that I was right when I told the House that the Thomason bill represents a fundamental, constructive, and far-reaching principle in bringing about an economical system of national defense. In fact, the Thomason bill, in a large measure, is predicated upon the principles enunciated by Washington in his report to the Congress entitled "Sentiments Upon a Peace Establishment." Anyone interested in this subject will find a splendid summary of the history and views of Washington on an adequate peace-time program for national defense set out in the address of Gen. John McAuley Palmer printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks on August 22, 1935, and beginning at page 14125.

THE FARMER AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, in response to the requests of a number of Members, I wish to make a statement with reference to the administration's farm program.

For more than half a century, political platforms have promised to restore the rights of the farmer.

When the present administration came into office it found agriculture in bewilderment and chaos as the result of 12 long years of mistaken policies and lack of action.

THE BUSINESS OF FARMING

The importance of the farm and ranch in our national life can be realized more clearly if we glance a moment at some of the things they represent.

The business of farming is the biggest individual business in America. The farms and ranches of America include 986,000,000 acres. The total estimated value of these lands and improvements is almost $32,000,000,000, not including the value of farm personal property and equipment or livestock. In round numbers, there are 65,000,000 cattle, 26,000,000 milch cows, 51,000,000 sheep and lambs, and 61,000,000 hogs. We produce annually great quantities of corn, wheat, cotton, barley, rice, flax, and many other commodities.

There is no other business in this land comparable to farming either in value, volume, or number of people affected. Engaged directly on the farm and ranch in the United States are about 30,000,000 people.

THE LAST INDIVIDUALISTS

The farmers are the last great American individualists. Living thousands of miles apart, producing an infinite variety of crops in widely separated areas, they have been hedged about by organized groups on every side. Had there been no legislation in behalf of these groups, had there been no regulations of commerce, had there been no trade barriers and no monopolies, the farmer would have needed no legislation. Standing on a dead level with every other citizen, the farmer could have fought his own battles, protected his own interests, and carved his own niche in the affairs of our common country.

However, for more than half a century this country has been breaking up into groups. These groups have descended upon our State and National Capitals, insisting upon legislation to protect their interests. They have insisted upon trade barriers; they have insisted upon commercial regulations; they have insisted upon corporate organizations. They have obtained all these privileges. They have organized vast companies and engaged in monopolistic practices.

Regardless of the merits or demerits of any of these matters, they have produced a situation and have created certain advantages in which the farmer could have no part. It became necessary to restore the purchasing power of the farmer if our Nation was to live and prosper.

FARM CONDITIONS

What were the farm conditions when the new administration began?

Mortgages were being foreclosed by the hundreds of thousands. The total farm indebtedness amounted to $12,000,000,000. Interest and taxes were delinquent, and ruinous surpluses overhung the markets.

And how did the new administration meet these conditions?

It adopted the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Farm Credit Act, the Crop Production Loan Act, the Cattle Purchase Act, the drought-relief measures, and others.

In the preparation of these measures the farmers were consulted. Practically every major farm organization in America, as well as many individual farmers, were present when the principles of the legislation were agreed upon. The present program is administered largely by local county and community committees. It is truly a farmers' program.

CHANGE IN FARM PRICES

Let us contrast farm prices in December 1932, before the adjustment program began, with farm prices today. The following table shows the change that has taken place:

TABLE 1.—Farm prices of basic agricultural commodities

Commodity	Farm price December, 1932	Quantity	Farm price July 15, 1935
Wheat	$0.316	Bushel	$0.764
Rye	.211	do	.36
Flaxseed	.828	do	1.34
Barley	.193	do	.412
Cotton	.054	Pound	.119

THE A. A. A. AMENDMENTS

The present Congress has just adopted some amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act which will enable the program to go forward. Briefly, these are some of the changes the amendments make:

They change the word "reduction" in the act to "adjustment", so as not to limit crop adjustment to reduction alone.

They authorize the issuance of marketing orders to establish a program for fresh fruits and vegetables and two or three other named commodities which do not come under the other provisions. This includes a program for the dairy industry.

They provide for the recovery of processing taxes by the processor in the event such taxes are declared invalid by the Supreme Court, but this recovery can be had only if the processor can prove that he did not pass the taxes along to the consumer or back to the farmer. In most cases he has simply been the agent for the collection of these taxes, which have in turn been written into the general price structure of the country.

Provision has been made for a ceiling to the processing taxes. When the prices of agricultural commodities reach this ceiling, the processing taxes are no longer effective. It seems, in fairness to the consumer, that the same thing should be done with the tariff. In other words, instead of fighting, we should sit around the table and map a program that is fair to all, including the farmer, the manufacturer, and the consumer. This is the very essence of equality.

The amendments contain a provision to the effect that a sum equal to 30 percent of the annual customs receipts may be used for the promotion of foreign trade. This 30 percent is thought to be a proper division because this represents the number engaged in farming. A portion of this fund may be used for the payment of premiums for exporting farm commodities and the products thereof or for indemnifying against losses in such exportation. The use of these funds can in some instances be made to serve the double purpose of removing surpluses and of increasing the price of that portion of the production which flows into the domestic market.

This provision will probably do more than anything else to rebuild our world trade. It will supplement and strengthen the farm program. The restoration of trade will mean much to the entire Nation.

The amendments provide for a continuation of the Cotton Control Act, the Tobacco Control Act, and they authorize a fund to eliminate diseased beef and dairy cattle.

They provide for the setting up of quotas to govern importation of commodities which compete with commodities affected by the adjustment program.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Another phase of the administration's efforts in behalf of the farm is represented by the work of the Farm Credit Administration. This organization has provided for the first time in history a complete credit system for agriculture wholly independent of the commercial banking system.

The Farm Credit Administration is composed of the four following branches: The Federal land banks, which handle long-term land paper; the cooperative banks, which handle credit for farmers' cooperative organizations; the production-credit corporations, which handle the farmers' current essential production credit; the intermediate-credit banks, which are the discount institutions, and which, through the sale of debentures, provide funds for the operations of the cooperative and production credit divisions.

REFINANCING OF MORTGAGES

The biggest single job of the Farm Credit Administration has been the refinancing of farm-mortgage indebtedness. During the 6 years preceding its establishment there had been an average of some 140,000 foreclosures per year. These conditions have been very materially improved and thousands of farm homes have been saved which otherwise would have been sacrificed.

More than 500,000 farm mortgages in the United States have been refinanced by the Farm Credit Administration since its establishment in 1933. To do this $1,800,000,000 has been loaned. This has caused many private loan companies to refinance other farms and reduce their rates of interest.

Farmers refinanced by the Farm Credit Administration with long-term farm-mortgage loans are saving about one-fourth the interest which they formerly paid. In a great many instances this saving alone is sufficient to pay off the mortgage in the period for which the new loan runs.

The Farm Credit Administration has also supervised the formation of advisory committees to aid farmers in adjusting and scaling down their debts. It is estimated that as a direct and indirect result of the work of these committees at least 150,000 farm homes have been saved, thus keeping more than half a million worthy persons on farms and off relief rolls. These committees have also brought about the restoration of credit stability in many troubled areas.

LOWER INTEREST RATES

Easier credit terms and lower interest rates have resulted from farm-credit activities of the present administration. Farm-mortgage long-term loans are now being made at the lowest rates in history. Borrowers are required to pay only 3½ percent interest until July 1, 1936, and new loans are being made at from 4 percent to 4½ percent.

The cooperative banks charge from 2 percent to 4 percent interest to the cooperative associations. The production-credit associations are now all making loans at 5 percent, regardless of location. This is the lowest interest rate at which production credit has ever been granted on a national scale in America.

These rates represent a great reduction from the rates the farmers were previously paying. In many instances the rate actually paid in former years has been above 10 percent, and one instance was found where 20-percent interest was charged farmers for cash loans.

It is also interesting to note that the rates of the Farm Credit Administration for long-time credit are lower than those being charged in any other important country. In Canada the interest rate is 5 percent; in Denmark it is from 4 to 6½ percent; in Germany, from 4½ to 8 percent; in Great Britain, 5.2 percent; in Hungary, 7 percent; in Austria, 7 percent; in Bulgaria, 9 percent; in Czechoslovakia, 6 percent; in Latvia, 8 percent; and in Yugoslavia, 6 percent.

Emergency loans have been made through the emergency crop and feed offices of the Farm Credit Administration. Nearly a million and a half loans have been made since the beginning of the organization; and during the past year loans were made to about 300,000 farmers and stockmen to help them carry their livestock in drought areas.

EQUALITY FOR AGRICULTURE

All of these activities show a sincere effort on the part of the present administration to restore farm conditions. There can be no sound objection to equality for agriculture. The entire country is interested in a balanced whole. In restoring the purchasing power of the farmer, business conditions are being restored and a new market is being furnished for manufactured products. This has resulted in employment for hundreds of thousands of people who might otherwise be in the ranks of the unemployed.

What has been done for agriculture? Let the facts speak for themselves.

THE REVENUE ACT OF 1935

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the reform legislation enacted thus far by the Roosevelt administration has been aimed toward establishing a more equitable economic and financial system. The N. R. A., the P. W. A., and the A. A. A. have all included the fundamental purpose of buoying up purchasing power, increasing public consumption, and effecting national reemployment.

It is evident to statesmen and economists today that while our capitalistic system must be preserved, provision must also be made for the welfare, happiness, and social security of the rank and file of the American people.

The necessity for social and economic security, with adequate protection from the ravages of a weakly regulated monopolistic industrial system, which precipitated our great national depression, has been faced squarely by this administration.

The task of reestablishing national confidence, of guaranteeing personal security, and of safeguarding our citizenship against future major economic catastrophes has been met by the Federal Government in the past 2 years by a dual method. Recognizing the fallacy of endeavoring to restore economic order through the obstructionists' theory of "recovery without reform", President Roosevelt and the Congress have shouldered the burden of instituting a parallel recovery and reform program of national scope.

A Nation-wide program of public works, designed to speed recovery through the construction of worth-while public projects, to increase reemployment opportunities, and to buoy up purchasing power among those most in need; an agricultural adjustment program to rehabilitate America's basic industry; Federal agencies to assist in refinancing home- and farm-mortgage indebtedness; old-age pensions and unemployment-insurance funds; and a series of regulatory measures aimed to perfect and safeguard our financial, transportation, communication, and utility systems—all are indicative of the Government's relentless attack on the evils which developed in a Nation that prospered too rapidly; that was victimized by a highly industrialized civilization; and that suffered from governmental neglect during the years when proper administrative steps might effectively have been taken to foreward the impending and inevitable crisis.

Much has been said recently about redistribution of wealth. Catch phrases, designed to attract the public fancy, but without sound economic foundation, have become popular. Developing from this enthusiasm for a wealth-sharing scheme, however, has been a steady crystallization of national sentiment for a sound, equitable plan, to be sponsored by the Federal Government, which would alleviate the underlying cause of that depression; that is, the lack of purchasing power on the part of the working classes, and to avoid in the future an overconcentration of the national wealth in the hands of a few.

A modified plan, then, which will preclude future concentration and stagnation of national wealth and at the same time yield additional revenue to the public coffers, falls in line with the "reform-recovery" program.

The solution to this grave economic problem now under consideration in Congress is a redistribution of income through a revamping of our income-tax laws and through a new graduated inheritance tax.

If we take the period from 1919 to 1929 as average years of prosperity in this country, it is clearly demonstrated that the rapid concentration of wealth in the hands of a few over that decade did not result in an increase in labor wages commensurate with the rise in industrial dividends. While industrial profits soared to unprecedented heights in 1929, with 589 reporting annual incomes of $1,000,000 and over, with 14,701 reporting annual incomes over $100,000, the average income for all wage earners was slightly over $1,200, with unskilled workers averaging less than $1,000 and farmers less than $600 per year. The Government has estimated that $1,800 to $2,100 is a decent living wage for a family. It is this discrepancy, reflecting want in the midst of plenty, which constitutes America's social problem of today.

A diversion of the wealth from a relative few to the pockets of the workers is the only sure method of restoring national prosperity. It is interesting to note that in 1929 the classes earning $1,000 and less spent 94 percent for the necessities of life; those earning up to $2,000 spent 93 percent for necessities; those who earned $1,000,000, however, spent only 6 percent for necessities. The $1,000 man invested 6 percent in taxes and savings, while the $1,000,000 man saved 77 percent of his income and only 17 percent went into taxes.

This inequality, which encourages the concentration of wealth, is readily seen when we observe that those who earned under $2,000, which included the vast majority in 1929, saved 3 to 5 percent, paid 3 percent in taxes, and spent 94 percent in goods and services, while thousands in the higher brackets saved over 50 percent, paid 17 percent in taxes, and spent less than 15 percent for goods and services.

The stagnation of wealth, therefore, naturally is found among those in the high-income groups. By spending only a small fraction of their income for goods and services they make little contribution to the purchasing power of the average American.

President Roosevelt in June of this year recommended to Congress the adoption of a new income-, corporate-, and inheritance-tax law which would operate toward an eventual dissemination of the national wealth. The President poignantly remarked:

> The movement toward progressive taxation of wealth and of income has accomplished the growing diversification and interrelation of effort which marks our industrial society. Wealth in the modern society does not come merely from individual effort; it results from a combination of individual effort and of the manifold uses to which the community puts that effort. The individual does not create the product of his industry with his own hands; he utilizes the many processes and forces of mass production to meet the demands of a national and international market.
> Therefore, in spite of the great importance in our national life of the efforts and ingenuity of unusual individuals, the people in the mass have inevitably helped to make large fortunes possible. Without mass cooperation great accumulations of wealth would be impossible save by unhealthy speculation. * * * Whether it be wealth achieved through the cooperation of the entire community or riches gained by speculation, in either case the ownership of such wealth or riches represents a great public interest and a great ability to pay.

The tax measure, a modest proposal when compared with many radical and semisocialistic panaceas advanced by share-the-wealth advocates, will yield an annual revenue for the first year of approximately $270,000,000. The taxes include:

First. Increased surtaxes.
Second. Graduated corporation tax.
Third. Excess-profits tax.
Fourth. Inheritance tax.
Fifth. Gift tax.

But more important to the Nation's weal than any potential revenue is the effect of such legislation upon our social system. It indicates a restrained beginning of a movement which must ultimately guarantee to the American citizen his precious right to gainful occupation, family security, and continued happiness.

The tables following are of interest and indicate the extent and scope of the revenue bill of 1935.

It is believed that in a full year of operation, under present improving business conditions, the annual additional revenue which will be secured from the enactment of the bill will be as follows:

Source of revenue and estimated additional revenue

Increased surtaxes	$45,000,000
Graduated corporation tax	15,000,000
Excess-profits tax	100,000,000
Inheritance tax	86,000,000
Gift tax	24,000,000
Total	270,000,000

If business improves further, the provisions in this bill may ultimately bring in as much as three hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty millions of dollars in additional revenue annually.

INCREASED SURTAXES

The following table shows the proposed rates in comparison with the existing rates, as well as the total proposed surtaxes and existing surtaxes computed on the upper limit of each bracket:

Revised surtax schedule beginning at $50,000

Surtax net income bracket	Proposed rate percent	Present rate percent	Proposed total surtax [1]	Present total surtax [1]
$50,000 to $56,000	31	30	$9,560	$9,500
$56,000 to $62,000	35	33	11,660	11,480
$62,000 to $68,000	39	36	14,000	13,640
$68,000 to $74,000	43	39	16,580	15,980
$74,000 to $80,000	47	42	19,400	18,500
$80,000 to $90,000	51	45	24,500	23,000
$90,000 to $100,000	55	50	30,000	28,000
$100,000 to $150,000	58	52	59,000	54,000
$150,000 to $200,000	60	53	89,000	80,500
$200,000 to $250,000	62	54	120,000	107,500
$250,000 to $300,000	64	54	152,000	134,500
$300,000 to $400,000	66	55	218,000	180,500
$400,000 to $500,000	68	56	286,000	245,500
$500,000 to $750,000	70	57	461,000	388,000
$750,000 to $1,000,000	72	58	641,000	533,000
$1,000,000 to $2,000,000	73	59	1,371,000	1,123,000
$2,000,000 to $5,000,000	74	59	3,591,000	2,893,000
Over $5,000,000	75	59

[1] Computed on upper limit of bracket; for example, proposed surtax on $62,000 is $11,660, and present surtax on this amount is $11,480.

It is to be kept in mind, of course, that in addition to the surtax there is a normal tax of 4 percent on the net income of an individual, in excess of certain credits.

The number of individuals affected by the proposed surtax increases is not large, as may be seen from the following table:

Number of individual returns (net incomes of over $50,000)

Net income class	Calendar year
	1924	1929	1930	1932	1933
$50,000 to $100,000	15,816	24,073	13,645	5,902	5,927
$100,000 to $150,000	3,065	6,376	3,111	995	1,085
$150,000 to $300,000	1,876	5,310	2,071	595	693
$300,000 to $500,000	457	1,641	552	140	139
$500,000 to $1,000,000	242	976	318	76	84
$1,000,000 to $2,000,000	50	357	110	15	35
$2,000,000 to $5,000,000	22	118	32	5	10
Over $5,000,000	3	38	8	0	1
Total number of returns (with over 50,000 of net income each)	21,531	38,889	19,847	7,738	7,974

Under present conditions less than 4,000,000 returns are filed annually by individuals, of which less than 2,000,000 are taxable returns. It can be seen from the table last submitted that we now have only about 8,000 returns annually showing net income in excess of $50,000. Thus the proposed surtax increases will affect only two-tenths of 1 percent of the number of returns filed, and four-tenths of 1 percent of the number of taxable returns filed.

GRADUATED INCOME TAX ON CORPORATIONS

Under existing law corporations pay a flat tax of 13¾ percent on the entire amount of their net income. No relief is given to a corporation, no matter how small its net income may be.

Your committee is recommending the substitution of the following graduated tax on corporations in lieu of the present uniform rate of tax: 13¼ percent on the first $15,000 of the net income and 14¼ percent on the remainder.

In spite of the small amount of graduation and in spite of the slight increase of the tax burden on the corporations with large net incomes, considerable revenue is derived from this graduated tax.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

The excess-profits tax is based on the ratio of the net income of the corporation to the adjusted declared value of its capital stock as provided for under section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1934. The graduated rates now proposed are as follows:

	Percent
Net incomes not in excess of 6 percent of the adjusted declared value	No tax
Portion of net income in excess of 8 percent and not in excess of 12 percent of the adjusted declared value	5
Portion of net income in excess of 12 percent and not in excess of 16 percent of the adjusted declared value	10
Portion of net income in excess of 16 percent and not in excess of 25 percent of the adjusted declared value	15
Portion of net income in excess of 25 percent of the adjusted declared value	20

The excess-profits tax is a sound tax and it is believed that in future years it will be productive of very considerable revenue. The excess-profits and war-profits taxes imposed during the war period were similar in character and produced the following revenues in addition to the normal income tax on corporations:

1917	$1,638,748,000
1918	2,505,566,000
1919	1,431,806,000
1920	988,726,000
1921	335,132,000

Your committee believes that the proposed excess-profits tax at the moderate rates suggested will in each full year of operation under improving business conditions bring in about $100,000,000 of additional revenue.

INHERITANCE TAX

Title II of the bill provides for an inheritance tax in addition to existing Federal estate taxes. The inheritance tax is imposed upon the net value of the beneficial interests transferred by reason of the death of a decedent dying after the bill is enacted into law to each beneficiary at the rates shown in the following table:

Inheritance tax rates and amounts

Total net value of inheritance[1]	Rate of tax	Amount of tax[2]
	Percent
$0 to $10,000	4	$400
$10,000 to $20,000	8	1,200
$20,000 to $30,000	12	2,400
$30,000 to $50,000	16	5,600
$50,000 to $100,000	20	15,600
$100,000 to $150,000	24	27,600
$150,000 to $250,000	28	55,600
$250,000 to $400,000	32	103,600
$400,000 to $700,000	36	211,600
$700,000 to $1,000,000	40	331,600
$1,000,000 to $1,500,000	44	551,600
$1,500,000 to $2,000,000	48	791,600
$2,000,000 to $3,000,000	52	1,311,600
$3,000,000 to $4,000,000	56	1,871,600
$4,000,000 to $5,000,000	60	2,471,600
$5,000,000 to $6,000,000	64	3,111,600
$6,000,000 to $8,000,000	68	4,471,600
$8,000,000 to $10,000,000	72	5,911,600
Over $10,000,000	75

[1] After deduction of specific exemption.
[2] Computed on upper limit of bracket; for example, inheritance tax on $10,000 is $400.

Specific exemption to spouse and near relatives, $50,000. Specific exemption to all others, $10,000.

The property subject to the inheritance tax is, in general, the same as that which is subject to the existing estate taxes. However, dower and curtesy interests, estates in lieu thereof, or an equivalent amount of property elected by the surviving spouse after death in lieu of such interests are not subject to the inheritance tax.

GIFT TAX ON DONEES

Title III of the bill imposes a gift tax upon the right to receive property by gift. This is a companion tax to the inheritance tax and is designed to prevent avoidance of that tax by taxing gifts made during lifetime.

The following is a table showing gift-tax rates and amounts of tax:

Gift tax, rates, and amounts

Total net gifts from 1 donor to 1 donee[1]	Rate of tax	Amount of tax[2]
	Percent
$0 to $10,000	3	$300
$10,000 to $20,000	6	900
$20,000 to $30,000	9	1,800
$30,000 to $50,000	12	4,200
$50,000 to $100,000	15	11,700
$100,000 to $150,000	18	20,700
$150,000 to $250,000	21	41,700
$250,000 to $400,000	24	77,700
$400,000 to $700,000	27	158,700
$700,000 to $1,000,000	30	248,700
$1,000,000 to $1,500,000	33	413,700
$1,500,000 to $2,000,000	36	593,700
$2,000,000 to $3,000,000	39	983,700
$3,000,000 to $4,000,000	42	1,403,700
$4,000,000 to $5,000,000	45	1,853,700
$5,000,000 to $6,000,000	48	2,333,700
$6,000,000 to $8,000,000	51	3,353,700
$8,000,000 to $10,000,000	54	4,433,700
Over $10,000,000	57

[1] After deduction of specific exemption.
[2] Computed on upper limit of bracket; for example, gift tax on $10,000 is $300.

Specific exemption to spouse and near relatives, $50,000. Specific exemption to all other, $10,000.

The principle of consanguinity, which is recognized in the inheritance tax, is also reflected in the donee's gift tax. An exemption is allowed on net gifts of $50,000 in the case of a spouse, child (including a child legally adopted before it attains the age of 21), father, mother, brother, or sister (including a brother or sister of the half-blood, grandchild, grandfather, or grandmother. In the case of all other donees a specific exemption of $10,000 is allowed.

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS IN CARRYING OUT THE PLEDGES OF THE NEW DEAL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, when you shall strike the gavel at midnight, the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress will have adjourned sine die, after 236 days of arduous labor, during which there were 204 roll calls. Under your great leadership as Speaker, this session has been as momentous as any in the history of our Nation, save possibly only those held during the World War.

When Congress convened on January 3 of this year, the country was gradually emerging from an unparalleled depression, which broke in 1929 and, increasing in its disaster, confronted this administration on taking office on March 4, 1933. The world already knows of the remarkable accomplishments during the Seventy-third Congress under the leadership of our President. Millions of unemployed were saved from hunger and hardships. Our social and economic structure was preserved. The homes and the savings of our people were protected. Those accomplishments are a matter of record.

In January of this year, however, the huge task was not yet completed. It is true that we had placed millions to work at shorter hours and higher wages; that we had abolished child labor; that we had assured the farmer a decent living for the first time in years, with his mortgage indebtedness decreased several billions of dollars; that we had saved the banks of our country and the billions of dollars of savings of our people. Hundreds of thousands of farms and homes had been held safe from the disaster of foreclosures. But there were still several millions of our citizens able and willing to work who could not find employment in private industry.

Agriculture needed further help.

Our banking laws needed further revision.

More funds were necessary to save the homes and farms of our people.

The working conditions of those employed needed improvement, especially as to the right to collective bargaining.

There was no provision for the vicissitudes of old age or unemployment.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding the National Industrial Recovery Act unconstitutional necessitated the revision of many of our laws. That decision went to the hearts of our people. Under it child labor had been abolished. A living wage and decent hours had been established. Unfair practices in business and the chiseler were eliminated.

Following that decision, Congress had new and unexpected burdens thrust upon it.

Likewise, the decision of the Supreme Court holding the Railroad Retirement Act and the Oil Act illegal added to the problems of the Congress and the administration.

Let us, therefore, briefly review some of the more important accomplishments of the Congress during the session just closed.

WORK RELIEF

Within a few days after the session met the House of Representatitves passed the Work Relief Act appropriating $4,880,000,000, the greatest sum ever appropriated at any one time other than during war; $880,000,000 of this sum was to continue the furnishing of relief to the needy of the country. The balance, $4,000,000,000, was to provide employment so that three and one-half million people could be taken off the relief rolls and placed on works financed in whole or in part by the Government. This act was speedily passed in the House of Representatives and was finally approved by President Roosevelt on April 8, 1935. It provided $800,000,000 for highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination; $500,000,000 for rural rehabilitation, irrigation, and reclamation; $100,000,000 for rural electrification; $450,000,000 for housing; $300,000,000 for educational, professional, and clerical occupations; $600,000,000 for the continuance of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which has been one of the outstanding successes of the program of relief; $900,000,000 for loans or grants to the States and Territories for self-liquidating projects; $350,000,000 for sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, flood control, reforestation, rivers and harbors, and similar projects. The act provided for the payment of the prevailing rate of wages on Federal building projects with authority in the President to fix the wages on other projects in amount not less than existing prevailing wages. The fundamental purpose of this great undertaking was to eliminate the dole and to see to it that not later than July 1, 1936, the three and one-half million people on the relief rolls had been furnished with employment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

While the Works Relief Act provided for the immediate emergency, the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, established for the first time in this country, and to an extent never before attempted by any nation, a permanent system to provide for security in old age and against the hazards of unemployment. The act provides for contribution by the Federal Government to the States to provide for old-age benefits, aid to dependent and crippled children, public health, child welfare, maternal care, and unemployment compensation. To any State which has or will establish an old-age-pension law providing for the care of needy persons 65 years of age or over, the Federal Government will contribute one-half of the amount paid by the State, not in excess of $15 a month to be paid by the Federal Government. The act also provides for a contributory old-age-pension system to be financed by a tax on employees and a pay-roll tax so that workers may retire at the age of 65 and receive monthly pensions running as high as $85 a month. The act authorizes an appropriation of $3,800,000 a year to assist States in looking after the health of mothers and children, an appropriation of $2,850,000 a year to assist States in providing care for crippled children, and $1,500,000 to aid homeless and neglected children. In addition, further sums are appropriated to aid States in taking care of the vocational rehabilitation of children and in aid of the blind. This long-range program of humanitarian relief to the aged, the unemployed, mothers, children, and the unfortunate might well be considered as the outstanding achievement of the administration during this session of Congress.

AGRICULTURE

Among the benefits granted to the farmer at this session, in addition to the many enacted during the Seventy-third Congress, were the following:

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION ACT

Following the decision of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case, it became necessary to revise the Agricultural Adjustment Act and to provide additional aid to agriculture. This was done by an act, approved August 24, 1935, which continues and augments the benefits of the original act to the farmer and at the same time providing protection for consumers. It authorizes the "granary plan", provides for the control of imported products, allows the use of 30 percent of import duty receipts to increase the returns of producers, strengthens the marketing-agreement method of producers of milk, fruit, vegetables, etc.; adds potatoes as a commodity, appropriates $10,000,000 to eliminate diseased cattle, provides for the purchasing of submarginal land, eliminates price fixing of all commodities with the exception of milk, and extends for one year the Bankhead Cotton Control Act and the Smith-Kerr Tobacco Control Act.

FARM CREDIT ACT

This act, which was approved June 3, 1935, amended not only the Farm Credit Act of 1933 but also the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, the Agricultural Marketing Act, and the Federal Farm Loan Act. It permits the land-bank commissioners to make loans on real properties with maturities up to 43 years and extends the time of making loans until February 1, 1940, without any limitations on the amount of the bonds to be issued by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. It reduces the interest to borrowers on farm loans and provides for further loans to joint-stock land banks, together with other provisions to ease the burden of the farmer.

RICE

By this act, approved March 18, 1935, a processing tax was levied on rice, and the act contained other provisions to aid the many farmers engaged in raising this important commodity.

FARM RESEARCH

This act was approved June 29, 1935 and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to make a thorough research into the commodities of agriculture and the methods of production, distribution, etc.

TOBACCO

The Standard Grading Tobacco Act directs the Secretary of Agriculture to grade tobacco so that the farmer may be fully advised as to the quality and value of his product.

THE FARM MORATORIUM ACT

This act as passed in the last Congress was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. To meet this situation, a new act was approved on August 28, 1935, permitting the farmer to go into bankruptcy with an opportunity to remain in possession of his farm for a period up to three years upon the payment of reasonable rental, etc., to be fixed by the court. The act extends to the farmer the privilege of readjusting his financial indebtedness that has been afforded to the business man, the corporation, and the railroads.

CONSERVATION—SOIL EROSION ACT

This act, approved April 27, 1935, provides for the investigation and control of soil erosion under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture and should be of great benefit to the farmer. The latest improved methods of preventing the washing away of his land will be taught.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Upon the holding by the Supreme Court of the United States that the N. R. A. was unconstitutional, the administration desired to meet the situation so as to preserve as far as possible many provisions of the act which had been so beneficial. Immediately thereafter the Congress, by an act approved June 14, 1935, provided for the extension of the N. R. A. for the purpose of preserving and gathering further statistics, to be available when a permanent revision along the lines of the original National Industrial Recovery Act could be worked out. This extension act also provides for the continuance of voluntary codes. A further study is being given a new National Industrial Recovery Act to meet the objections of the Supreme Court and it is hoped that in the next session legislation to preserve the fundamental benefits of the N. R. A. will be worked out.

THE CENTRAL STATISTICAL ACT

This act, approved July 25, 1935, was another measure to provide for the gathering of statistics by a central bureau which have proved so valuable in the operation of the code system under the N. R. A.

LABOR

Under the N. R. A. labor had been protected in its wages and hours of work, and its right to bargain collectively. With the legal failure of the N. R. A. it became necessary to provide by legislation some method of preserving some of these benefits to labor.

THE LABOR DISPUTES ACT

This act, approved July 5, 1935, created a permanent National Labor Relations Board to adjust labor disputes and to promote the equality of bargaining power between employees and employers. It affirms the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively and prevents interference by the employer in the formation of unions or discrimination among employees in their right to belong to unions of their own choosing. This provision should go a long way to adjust labor disputes, prevent strikes, and to improve the condition of labor.

THE COAL STABILIZATION ACT

This act was intended to stabilize the bituminous-coal industry, which has been in such dire straits for many years and to protect the rights and improve the condition of the 500,000 miners engaged in the industry. It establishes a Commission to work out a code for the industry with marketing conditions and the stabilization of wages, working conditions, hours of labor, reenacting the provision of section 7a of the N. R. A. as to this particular industry.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

The Supreme Court held the act of 1934 providing for a pension system for the 1,000,000 railroad employees invalid. This necessitated new legislation which was approved by the President on August 29, 1935, and which provides a pension system for the railroad employees who have reached the age of 65 years or who have performed 30 years' service and have arrived at the age of at least 50 years. This act becomes effective March 1, 1936, and is supplemented by an act which provides for a tax on railroad employees and railroad pay rolls to meet the $50,000,000 or more a year to provide the annuities.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Following the restoration of all the pay cuts under the Economy Act, a number of bills were passed to shorten the working hours and to readjust the compensation of employees of the Government. For instance, the Post Office employees were put on a 40-hour-a-week basis. The House of Representatives restored the annual leave and the sick leave for Government employees.

UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

A considerable part of the session was taken up in working out a bill to provide for Federal regulation of utility holding companies. A score or more of these companies throughout the country had taken over the operating companies furnishing gas, electricity, water power, and so forth. In many instances the increased expense was placed upon the consumer. Their capital structure through the use of the holding-company devices had grown in 1929 to about $29,000,000,000. In the stock-market crash of that year, the investing public suffered a loss of about $25,000,000,000. The bills finally presented to the House and the Senate were designed to permit the continuance of no holding-company device where it was not in accord with the public interest. During the lengthy consideration of this bill by both Houses of Congress, there was a tremendous opposition from the holding companies and their associates and an enormous amount of propaganda and pressure was used upon the Members of Congress by means of letters, telegrams, and other propaganda, in many instances not representing the real sentiment of the public or the investors. Each House of Congress authorized an investigation of these lobbying activities on the part of the utility interests. The Senate through a special committee and the House of Representatives through its Rules Committee started such investigations and will continue to pursue them. Disclosures so far by these two committees warrant the conclusion that millions of dollars were spent by the holding-company interests in attempting to prevent the passage of any bill and especially section 11 of the Senate bill, which they purposely and improperly characterized as the "death sentence." A bill was finally worked out regulating such companies and providing for the elimination of those holding companies which are against the best interests of the public, but only after due notice and a hearing has been accorded them.

TELEPHONE INQUIRY

Under this act, approved March 19, 1935, the Federal Communications Commission was directed to investigate the alleged monopoly of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiaries, affiliates, and associated holding companies. This investigation has for many years been of wide-spread interest and advocated by the States and in the Congress.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The amendments to the act creating the Tennessee Valley Authority were likewise fought by the utility interests, especially those companies operating in the vicinity of the Tennessee Valley. The act liberalizes some of the provisions which were indefinite in the basic act and reaffirms the right of the Authority to sell surplus power and acquire distribution facilities.

PETROLEUM

Following the decision of the Supreme Court holding the act of the last Congress illegal, the so-called "Hot Oil Act" was approved February 22, 1935, which, in substance, prohibits the interstate transportation of any oil produced illegally under the laws of the State where it originated.

OIL COMPACT ACT

In the closing hours of the session the act to ratify the compact of the oil-producing States was passed and approved by the President. Likewise, an act was approved amending the Oil Leasing Act of 1920, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits for prospecting on lands owned by the Government.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

By an act approved May 28, 1935, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was authorized to loan an additional $1,750,000,000 to finance mortgages of home owners whose applications were already on file or would be filed within 30 days thereafter. This was to take care of those needy cases in addition to the 800,000 homes already saved by reason of the provisions of the original act. The act also liberalized the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act increasing the maturity of loans on mortgages and also authorizing the Federal Housing Administration to guarantee mortgages up to $50,000 for alterations, repairs, and improvement on apartment houses, hotels, hospitals, schools, and so forth.

TAXATION

Continuance of temporary tax act

This act, approved June 28, 1935, continues for 2 years the existing temporary taxes, such as on gasoline, etc., including the 3-cent postage rate on nonlocal first-class mail.

The Revenue Act of 1935

Following a special message from the President, Congress enacted a bill, which was approved by the President, increasing estate taxes (with an exemption of estates of $40,000 or less), gift taxes, surtaxes on individual incomes in excess of $50,000, slightly increasing the income tax on corporations with a graduated tax of from 12½ percent to 15 percent, increasing the capital-stock tax, and levying an excess-profits tax on corporations and on intercorporate dividends, with the result, however, that the taxes on the smaller corporations were actually reduced. It is estimated that these new taxes, which do not affect the wage earner or persons receiving moderate incomes, will yield an additional $250,000,000 a year to the Treasury.

THE GOLD CLAUSE ACT

To meet certain expressions of the Supreme Court in its decision upholding the Government in "going off the gold standard", Congress passed the so-called "Gold Clause Act." This act prevents suits being brought against the Government by any person for failure to receive payment in gold or the equivalent in the present dollar, on any Government security, unless suit therefor is brought before January 1, 1936, and damage be shown to have been incurred. The purpose of this act is to prevent persons, here or abroad, being given an unfair advantage by reason of their holding of Government securities containing the clause providing for payment in gold.

VETERANS

Bonus

The House and the Senate passed the so-called "Bonus Act", providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates at their face value; but upon its veto, although the House overwhelmingly overrode the veto, the Senate sustained the same. In the opinion of many, however, the matter will be adjusted satisfactorily in the coming session.

Spanish-American War veterans

By an act unanimously passed in the House, and with only one vote against it in the Senate, and approved by the President, all the reductions in pensions and compensation to Spanish-American War veterans under the Economy Act, amounting to about $45,000,000, were restored to those veterans and their dependents.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Army Appropriation Act

This act appropriated over $400,000,000 for various military purposes and increased the enlisted strength of the Army from 118,750 to 165,000 men, with increases to the Army Air Corps and an additional $500,000 to increase the strength of the National Guard by 5,000, and $2,000,000 for the training of thousands of men in the citizens' military training camps.

Air Base Act

This act authorizes the Secretary of War to determine the places in the United States and Alaska where additional air stations should be located.

Army Promotion Act

This act provides for the automatic promotion of Army officers to adjust a stagnation situation in the Army and to correct a long-standing and inequitable situation.

Additional cadets at West Point

By an act approved June 7, 1935, it was provided that each Senator and Representative might appoint an additional cadet to West Point with additional appointments to be made by the President.

The National Guard

An act was also passed providing for the active duty of the National Guard in any great emergency.

Naval Appropriation Act

This act carries an appropriation of over $366,000,000 for the support of the Navy, including $126,000,000 for new warships, aircraft carriers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. It also provided for an increase of 11,000 enlisted men, bringing the enlisted strength to 93,500, and an additional cadet to Annapolis to be appointed by each Member of Congress.

Other acts to strengthen the Navy, such as the Navy Line Officer Act, the Naval Corps Act, the Naval Cadet Act, the Naval Public Works Act, and the Emergency Duty Act were passed and approved by the President.

BANKING

The Banking Act of 1935, approved August 23, 1935, provides for a reorganization of the Federal Reserve Board and a strengthening of the Federal Reserve System. It also makes permanent the Federal insurance of bank deposits which has been tried out as a temporary measure and found so successful. This last provision, followed the temporary Deposit Insurance Act, approved June 28, 1935, which insured deposits up to $5,000.

FEDERAL ALCOHOL CONTROL ACT

This act provides for the establishing of an administration in the Treasury to carry out to some extent the provisions which were possible under the codes, relating to the control of the liquor traffic. It requires permits and prohibits the monopoly of the business by distillers being interested in the wholesale or retail sale of liquor. Under its provisions brewers are permitted to enter into a voluntary acceptance of the act and to be governed thereby.

NEUTRALITY

Because of the possibility of the outbreak of war in Europe and Africa, there arose a great deal of sentiment that this country should not be involved in any conflict between other nations. Under the Neutrality Act, it is provided that upon the proclamation by the President that war exists, it shall be unlawful for any person in this country to export arms or ammunition for the use of any belligerent. It also requires all manufacturers of ammunitions to be registered, and further provides that no citizen shall travel on any vessel of any of the nations at war except at his own risk.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

By an act approved January 31, 1935, the provisions of this Corporation were extended to February 1, 1937, and the act permits the formation of mortgage corporations, together with the extension of the power of the R. F. C. to make loans.

RAILROADS

By an act approved June 14, 1935, the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, under the Coordinator of Transportation, was extended until June 1936. Under the Railroad Reorganization Act, it is provided that railroads may take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act to readjust their financial structure.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

In addition to the many acts of the usual nature passed annually for the benefit of the District of Columbia, an unemployment-insurance bill and a bill providing for the care of the blind were passed.

APPROPRIATIONS

While it has been repeatedly charged, and undoubtedly will continue to be charged, that this Congress appropriated more money than ever before in peace time, to a total of over $10,000,000,000, a fair analysis of the appropriations dissipates any charge of gross extravagance.

The total of regular annual appropriations was $2,888,-054,864.14, well within the Budget and revenue receipts. To this there is added the $4,000,000,000 for work relief and $485,124,552.51 for deficiency appropriations and miscellaneous acts carrying appropriations, making a total actually appropriated during the session of $7,373,179,416.65.

The way the critics of the appropriations arrive at the figure of $10,000,000,000 is by adding permanent appropriations ", such as interest on the funded debt, which do not require annual action by Congress and which amount to $2,200,191,127, but which, in fairness, it should be said, includes $570,000,000 in advances to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which sum is, however, offset by the processing taxes. As to the " national debt ", much has been said as to the large sum of thirty billions, but it is interesting to note that the expense of our indebtedness is only 3 percent of our national income, as compared to 7 percent in England. Furthermore, to reach the total of " appropriations " which is heralded by the critics of the administration, there must be added the $500,000,000 of R. F. C. funds made available for relief. It is only by this method of inclusion that the much-discussed figure is arrived at.

It should also be remembered that a considerable portion of these appropriations was made available for more than 1 year, such as for works relief, and so forth.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

This act authorizes the construction of river and harbor projects throughout the country running into several hundreds of millions of dollars and should furnish a great deal of employment in the localities of the projects.

The foregoing summary may not include even all the major legislation passed during the session. At least, in addition thereto there were many other measures of wide public interest, such as the—

AIR MAIL ACT

This act authorizes the Postmaster General to make contracts for the carrying of the mails for 3 years instead of 1 year and the fixing of the routes.

OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

This act extends to next spring the time within which the President may cancel or modify the existing contracts.

THE LIVESTOCK BANKRUPTCY ACT

This act permits livestock raisers to take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act.

CRIME

Several acts, such as the Federal Marshal Act, the Prison Escape Act, and the Poultry Racket Act, were passed to cope with the " racketeer " and the kidnaper.

It is estimated that all together about 450 bills of a public nature will have been approved finally by the President and substantially the same number of bills of a private nature, such as private claim bills.

Such is the record of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The Democrats in Congress were responsible for the working out of this program under the leadership of President Roosevelt, and they are justly proud of the accomplishments heretofore set forth. As usual, they had practically no cooperation from the Republican minority, which took every advantage to play politics for its own benefit, looking to the election of 1936. Nearly every measure, even though it provided for relief in the nature of employment, or even relief from hunger and starvation, was opposed by the Republican minority generally as a body. The minority, however, at no time offered any constructive suggestions as to what could be done to meet any of the situations which confronted the country and the administration. In the House of Representatives, with a Membership of about one-fourth, the entire roster, the minority was a typical party of opposition, critical of every measure proposed and rarely cooperative.

The Democratic membership of the House is confidently willing to rest upon the record, knowing full well that every fair statistical report and every honest critic will admit that steadily during the present administration there has been remarkable progress in business, wages have been increased, the hours of labor have been shortened, the depositors in our banks no longer fear a debacle such as in the previous administration, when thousands of banks closed, and there is a universal return of confidence throughout the country. The constant cry of " socialism " uttered by the Republican Party and other critics of the administration has, we are confident, made no impression upon the great mass of our people, who in the direst straits into which their country has ever fallen, trusted their fate in the hands of a Democratic administration and found, in their returning prosperity and in the beneficent legislation which will result in their happiness and contentment, that their trust was not misplaced.

T. V. A. SAVES AMERICAN PEOPLE $150,000,000 TO $250,000,000 A YEAR—EVERY STATE BENEFITED

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, so much misinformation has been spread through the press and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD about what the T. V. A. is costing the American people, so many charges have been made on the floor of this House and elsewhere to the effect that the T. V. A. is being maintained at the expense of the taxpayers of the whole country and selling power at a loss to a few people in the Tennessee Valley area, that I am taking this opportunity to answer those charges and to show that the T. V. A. is benefiting the people in every State and that it has more than paid for itself in the last 2 years.

In fact, the T. V. A. has paid for itself in the last 12 months by reducing electric light and power rates in every State in this Union. By the example it has set and by publishing its yardstick, showing what electric light and power should cost the ultimate consumer, when based upon the cost of production and distribution, with a reasonable return for the amortization of the investment, it has already brought about a reduction in rates to the ultimate consumers of electric energy from Maine to California and from Miami to Seattle, amounting to not less than $150,000,000 a year.

This, together with the administration's power program as a whole, has brought reductions of not less than $250,-000,000 a year. They have brought reductions in every section of the country and these reductions have just begun. Every consumer that turns an electric switch is getting the benefit of those reductions every month that rolls round. He is reaping benefits that he probably would never have enjoyed had it not been for the T. V. A.

Now, let us take these reductions by States and show how the people in every State are being benefited by the T. V. A. If these rates were reduced to the T. V. A. level all over the country, it would result in an additional reduction of about $1,000,000,000 a year. In other words, the American people are still being overcharged a billion dollars a year for electric lights and power, even though we have forced a reduction of not less than $250,000,000 a year since this administration came into power.

I will take this proposition up by States and show what reductions have been made since the establishment and publication of the T. V. A. yardstick rates, and then I will show that the T. V. A. rates are economically sound and that the T. V. A. is not selling power below the cost of production, but is in reality selling it at an adequate profit.

I have before me a copy of the rate book of the National Electric Light Association showing what the people in the various States were paying for electric light and power prior to the time when the T. V. A. Act was passed. I also have before me copies of the Electric Rate Surveys of the various States now being published by the Federal Power Commission, which show domestic light and power rates throughout the country. An investigation shows that the merchants and other commercial consumers of electric energy have received about the same proportion of reductions in rates as have the domestic consumers, and the same thing applies to the industrial rates. In order to conserve time and space, I am going to take domestic consumers as a basis and show what these reductions amount to annually in each State.

Comparing the rates published in this N. E. L. A., the rate book of the National Electric Light Association, before the T. V. A. yardstick was established, with the rates now prevailing, as shown by the Electric Rate Survey, we find that there has been a reduction in every State in the Union—ranging anywhere from 15 to 35 percent—since the creation of the T. V. A. and the publication of its yardstick. But we will just say the average is 20 percent.

Here are the figures showing what those reductions amount to in the various States:

Maine	$1,300,000
Vermont and Rhode Island	4,200,000
Connecticut	7,500,000
New Jersey	19,121,000
Ohio	24,550,000
Illinois	30,626,000
Wisconsin	9,256,000
Iowa	6,314,000
North Dakota	1,088,000
Nebraska	3,449,000
Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, and West Virginia	13,164,000
North Carolina	5,849,000
Georgia	5,048,000
Kentucky	4,325,000
Alabama	3,247,000
Arkansas	2,166,000
Oklahoma	4,576,000
Montana and Utah	3,407,000
Wyoming	686,000
Arizona and New Mexico	2,232,000
Washington (State)	6,153,000
California	26,901,000
New Hampshire	832,000
Massachusetts	18,800,000
New York	63,863,000
Pennsylvania	38,140,000
Indiana	9,965,000
Michigan	17,488,000
Minnesota	7,473,000
Missouri	10,630,000
South Dakota	1,250,000
Kansas	4,708,000
Virginia	5,012,000
South Carolina	3,101,000
Florida	4,561,000
Tennessee	5,191,000
Mississippi	2,096,000
Louisiana	3,860,000
Texas	12,850,000
Idaho	1,437,000
Colorado	3,334,000
Nevada	538,000
Oregon	3,457,000

Yet, with all these reductions which the T. V. A. and the power policies of this administration have produced, the consumers of electric light and power are still being overcharged approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

To be a little more specific, under the T. V. A. rates, they would save $793,000,000 a year; under the Tacoma rates, they would save $798,000,000; under the Winnipeg rates, they would save $885,000,000; and, under the Ontario rates, $979,000,000, over and above what they are now saving as a result of the reductions above indicated.

These yearly overcharges in the various States, according to the T. V. A. rates, even after the foregoing reductions have been made, are as follows:

Maine	$5,087,000
Vermont and Rhode Island	8,222,000
Connecticut	14,451,000
New Jersey	39,123,000
Ohio	46,843,000
Illinois	58,474,000
Wisconsin	17,893,000
Iowa	12,480,000
North Dakota	2,184,000
Nebraska	7,156,000
Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, and West Virginia	24,870,000
North Carolina	10,642,000
Georgia	9,666,000
Kentucky	8,227,000
Alabama	6,163,000
Arkansas	4,157,000
Oklahoma	8,639,000
Montana and Utah	6,546,000
Wyoming	1,318,000
Arizona and New Mexico	4,287,000
Washington	12,188,000
California	53,503,000
New Hampshire	3,443,000
Massachusetts	37,184,000
New York	125,699,000
Pennsylvania	71,169,000
Indiana	19,184,000
Michigan	34,025,000
Minnesota	14,460,000
Missouri	21,068,000
South Dakota	2,480,000
Kansas	9,174,000
Virginia	9,600,000
South Carolina	5,567,000
Florida	9,141,000
Tennessee	9,852,000
Mississippi	3,981,000
Louisiana	7,401,000
Texas	24,912,000
Idaho	2,761,000
Colorado	6,405,000
Nevada	1,034,000
Oregon	6,929,000

But the opposition contends that the T. V. A. rates are too low—that the T. V. A. is subsidized by the Government, and that the rates are not based upon the cost of production and distribution. The truth is that every element of cost is included in the T. V. A. rates, including an item in lieu of taxes. With only a 60-percent load, these rates will amortize the T. V. A. in 43 years, and with an 80-percent load it will do so in 25 years.

The Canadians are so far ahead of us in the enjoyment of electric energy and the use of electrical appliances that it is really embarrassing to attempt to make a comparison. So I will turn to the public plants in the United States and show that the T. V. A. rates are not only adequate but that we are justified in expecting a reduction in those rates as time goes on. I make the prediction that in less than 10 years from today, and probably in 5 years, the present T. V. A. rates will be the maximum rates throughout this country.

When people learn what it costs to produce and distribute electric energy and how they are being unmercifully overcharged and compelled to pay tribute every month amounting to more than the value of the electricity they consume, there will sweep such a wave of resentment over this country and there will be such a determined and concerted action on the part of the consumers of electric light and power that they will sweep from public office the men who are opposing us in this drive, and compel a reduction of these rates to the proper level in every community in the United States.

TACOMA, WASH.

First, let us take the Tacoma, Wash., rates. The Tacoma plant is not subsidized, nor is it exempt from taxation. The population of Tacoma is only 106,817. Therefore it will be seen that the Tacoma plant serves a very small population in comparison with the investment.

The Tacoma plant and distribution system has an investment of $23,000,000. Last year it had a gross revenue of $1,940,994, and paid $145,575 in taxes; gave the city of Tacoma $200,545 worth of free service; set aside for depreciation $400,053; paid interest on its indebtedness amounting to $435,322, and still made a net profit of $508,190, and at the same time gave to the people of Tacoma the lowest light and power rates in the United States. In a few years the people of Tacoma will have their plant paid out entirely and can reduce their rates to about one-half of what they are now paying. Yet, according to the Tacoma rates, the American people are overcharged for electric light and power every year $798,000,000—even after the reductions to which I have referred.

These yearly overcharges in the various States, according to the Tacoma rates, are as follows:

Maine	$5,229,000
Vermont and Rhode Island	8,367,000
Connecticut	14,397,000
New Jersey	39,563,000
Ohio	47,529,000
Illinois	59,261,000
Wisconsin	17,787,000
Iowa	11,808,000
North Dakota	1,860,000
Nebraska	6,770,000

Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, and West Virginia	24,762,000
North Carolina	11,653,000
Georgia	9,900,000
Kentucky	8,398,000
Alabama	6,344,000
Arkansas	4,211,000
Oklahoma	8,946,000
Montana and Utah	6,589,000
Wyoming	1,323,000
Arizona and New Mexico	4,344,000
Washington	11,661,000
California	50,947,000
New Hampshire	3,459,000
Massachusetts	37,557,000
New York	127,618,000
Pennsylvania	74,907,000
Indiana	19,189,000
Michigan	33,768,000
Minnesota	13,911,000
Missouri	20,249,000
South Dakota	2,345,000
Kansas	8,954,000
Virginia	9,698,000
South Carolina	6,292,000
Florida	8,465,000
Tennessee	10,201,000
Mississippi	4,117,000
Louisiana	7,477,000
Texas	24,922,000
Idaho	2,789,000
Colorado	6,461,000
Nevada	1,046,000
Oregon	6,510,000

Here are the domestic rates in Tacoma. Compare them with the rates in your own State or in your own community. Get your last month's bill and compare the rates you pay with the Tacoma rates.

In Tacoma 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $1.13; 40 kilowatt-hours a month cost $1.52; 100 kilowatt-hours, $2.12; and 150 kilowatt-hours, $3.62.

As a result of these low rates, domestic consumers in Tacoma use 130 kilowatt-hours a month, while the average monthly consumption throughout the country is only 50 kilowatt-hours.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Now let us take some of the other public plants and see if their operation justifies the Tacoma rates or the T. V. A. rates. First we will take Jacksonville, Fla.

Jacksonville has a population of 129,549. She owns a steam plant and must transport all her fuel from other States. Her plant, including distributon system, is valued at $9,176,036, against which there is an indebtedness of $1,387,500. In 1932 she distributed electricity to the amount of $2,770,229. Her entire operating expense amounted to $879,231, leaving a gross annual profit of $1,890,998. She set aside for interest and depreciation $79,625, leaving a net annual profit of $1,811,373, which went into the city treasury for the benefit of the taxpayers of Jacksonville, instead of going into the coffers of the Power Trust.

Jacksonville has about the lowest light and power rates in Florida. Her rates are considerably below the Miami rates. Miami is served by a private utility which is a subsidiary of a holding company.

Jacksonville's residential rates are as follows:

Seven cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 35 kilowatt-hours, 5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the next 40 kilowatt-hours, and 2 cents for the balance.

Any intelligent person can see from these figures that if the consumers had been given these profits in rate reductions, Jacksonville could easily have supplied electric energy to her people at the T. V. A. rates or the Tacoma rates and still made a profit.

But the power interests will tell you that while this might be done in a city the size of Jacksonville, it could not be done in smaller places. Let us see about that.

PENN YAN, N. Y.

Let us take the case of the town of Penn Yan, N. Y., which has a population of 5,300. Penn Yan also has a steam plant—no subsidy in Penn Yan. Besides, Penn Yan has competition. Small as the municipality is, this plant does not have a monopoly, but is compelled to compete with the powerful New York Central Electric Corporation. Penn Yan owns a plant and distribution system valued at $160,192, against which there is no indebtedness. The plant has long since been paid for out of the power revenues.

In 1932 this plant sold $70,142 worth of electric energy. Its operating expenses amounted to $42,354, leaving a gross annual profit of $27,788. From this amount was deducted $13,099 to cover the cost of depreciation, leaving a net profit of $14,689. Yet this Penn Yan plant has about the lowest light and power rates in the State of New York. Let us compare them with the rates in New York City, and also in New Rochelle, N. Y., which is one of the medium-sized towns in that State.

In Penn Yan 15 kilowatt-hours a month cost 56 cents; in New York City it costs $1.30; and in New Rochelle, $1.56. In Penn Yan 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 86 cents; in New York City, $1.80; and in New Rochelle, $2.36. In Penn Yan 40 kilowatt-hours a month cost $1.31; in New York City, $2.55; and in New Rochelle, $3.41. In Penn Yan 100 kilowatt-hours a month cost $3.11; in New York City, $5.55; and in New Rochelle, $7.31. In Penn Yan 150 kilowatt-hours cost $4.61; in New York City, $8.05; and in New Rochelle, $10.56.

Yet with these low rates Penn Yan made a net profit of $14,689, after allowing $13,099 for depreciation. But you see, Penn Yan does not have to pay any dividends on watered power stocks. She does not have to pay any of these enormous rake-offs to holding companies. She does not have to pay for any of this propaganda with which Congress has been flooded. She does not have to pay any of these enormous salaries the utilities magnates have been charging. She does not have to pay for any of this false and misleading propaganda that has been spread through the newspapers and magazines and over the radio. She does not have to pay any of this lobby fund that has been used around Washington to try to defeat the T. V. A. bill and the holding-company bill. Therefore Penn Yan is able to supply her people with lights and power at reasonable rates.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Now, let us go to the far West and take one of the largest cities in America, Los Angeles, Calif.

Los Angeles has a public plant and system valued at $76,337,733, against which there is an indebtedness of $33,724,928. Last year she sold electricity to the amount of $14,300,019, paid operating expenses to the amount of $7,020,919, paid taxes to the amount of $1,296,570, gave free service amounting to $1,079,463, set aside $2,086,890 for depreciation, paid interest on indebtedness to the amount of $1,528,385, and still had a net income of $3,670,090. Yet Los Angeles has among the lowest light and power rates in America; and if these savings had been turned back to the consumer, she could have reduced her rates to a level with, if not below, the T. V. A. rates or the Tacoma rates, and still made a reasonable profit.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Now let us take the city of Springfield, Ill., the home town of Abraham Lincoln, the Great Emancipator. If Lincoln were here now, the chances are that he would be enthusiastically supporting us in our efforts to emancipate the American people from the bondage of the Power Trust.

Springfield has a population of 73,132. She owns her power plant and distribution system. It is a steam plant and has been in operation for about 17 years. The plant and system are valued at $3,061,145, against which there is an indebtedness of $265,000. In 1933 she sold electricity to the amount of $654,469, paid operating expenses to the amount of $300,877, and paid interest and depreciation to the amount of $127,064, and still made a net profit of $226,528. Yet she has about the lowest light and power rates in the State of Illinois. Her rates are 5 cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 30 kilowatt-hours, 4 cents per kilowatt-hour for the next 30 kilowatt-hours, 3 cents for the next 40 kilowatt-hours, and 2 cents for the balance. If she were to turn this profit back to the consumers and give it to them in rate reductions, she could reduce her rates down to the level of the T. V. A., the Tacoma, or the Canadian rates.

ANDERSON, IND.

Anderson, Ind., a city of 38,000 population, owns her own plant and distribution system. The plant is operated by steam, and the plant and system together are valued at $2,500,000. There is no indebtedness against it. That has been paid off entirely out of the revenues.

The record shows that she sold $702,241 worth of electric energy in 1 year and paid operating expenses amounting to $366,344, together with interest and depreciation of $102,277, and still made a net profit of $233,630. She has among the lowest rates in Indiana; and if these profits were turned back to the consumers, her rates could be reduced to the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, or the Canadian rates. This would double their consumption of electric energy and treble the use of electrical appliances.

AUSTIN, TEX.

Now, let us take a city in the southwest section of the country—Austin, Tex., a city of 60,000 inhabitants.

Texas should have the lowest electric light and power rates in America. There is enough gas going to waste in the panhandle alone to generate more than three times the amount of electricity now consumed in the entire State of Texas.

The city of Austin owns a plant and system valued at $4,250,000. Her power is generated by steam. There is no indebtedness against the plant and system; that has long since been paid off out of the revenues. The last year of which we have a complete record of the operations of this Austin plant is 1932. In that year the plant gave to the city of Austin for street lighting 1,486,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy; charged up to plant service and losses 2,942,000 kilowatt-hours, and gave to the city about $100,000 worth of service in pumping water. The plant sold electricity to the amount of $869,237; paid operating expenses amounting to $512,500, set aside for interest and depreciation $170,000, and still made a net profit of $186,737.

Yet Austin supplies electric energy at a rate far below the average in the State of Texas. If the consumers were given the benefit of these profits, Austin could reduce her rates to the level of the T. V. A., the Tacoma, or the Ontario rates.

OWENSBORO, KY.

Now, let us take a moderate-sized city in one of the border States—Owensboro, Ky., which has a population of 22,765.

Owensboro owns her own plant and distribution system and generates her electricity by steam. The plant and system are valued at $1,500,000. There is no indebtedness against it. This entire light and power system has long since been paid for out of the revenues derived from the sale of electricity. In 1933 this Owensboro plant sold electricity to the amount of $218,174, gave all the street lighting to the city free, and furnished free power for the waterworks. It paid its operating expenses amounting to $136,000, set aside for interest and depreciation $60,000, and still had a net profit of $22,174.

Yet Owensboro has the lowest electric light and power rates in the State of Kentucky. A domestic consumer pays 5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 30 kilowatt-hours of electric energy and 2 cents a kilowatt-hour for the balance.

In addition to these low rates, they get their streets lighted and their water pumped free of charge, set aside 4 percent on the investment for interest and depreciation, and still make a net profit of $22,174.

If the consumers were given the benefit of these profits their rates could be reduced to a level with, if not below, the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma, Wash., rates, or the Canadian rates.

If all the electric consumers in Kentucky were supplied with electricity at the Owensboro rates, the people of that State would save anywhere from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000 a year.

I defy the Power Trust to refute these figures or to show that these low rates are not justified.

LINCOLN, NEBR.

Now let us take a city in one of the Middle Western States—Lincoln, Nebr., the former home of the great commoner, William Jennings Bryan. Nebraska is also the home State of Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, who has led this fight for lower power rates for more than 20 years. It may be that these two great leaders are responsible for the benefits which the people of Lincoln are now deriving from their municipal light and power plant.

Lincoln has a population of 75,933. Its municipal light and power plant is operated by steam, and it, together with the distribution system, is valued at $1,000,000, against which there is an indebtedness of $200,000. I have before me a report which shows that in 1931 their total revenues from the sale of electric energy was $261,312, and the total operating expenses $129,170. There was set aside for interest and depreciation the sum of $50,000—leaving a net profit of $82,142. The plant gave to the city for pumping water 5,259,070 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, and plant service and other losses amounted to 1,282,700 kilowatt-hours, out of a total production of 12,827,000 kilowatt-hours. In other words, the plant gave to the city for waterworks almost one-half the electric energy produced, and still made a profit of $82,142 out of $261,312, and at the same time gave the people of Lincoln the lowest light and power rates to be found in the State of Nebraska. The rates are as follows: 4.75 cents for the first 10 kilowatt-hours, 3.8 cents for the next 30 kilowatt-hours, 3.32 cents for the next 460 kilowatt-hours, and 2.85 cents for the balance.

If the consumers of electricity in Lincoln were given the benefit of these profits, the rates could have been reduced even below the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, or the Canadian rates.

If all the electric consumers of Nebraska were furnished light and power at the Lincoln rates, the present consumers in that State would save from $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 a year.

CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

Now let us turn to the State of Pennsylvania, in which State the people are overcharged about $75,000,000 a year for electric light and power.

Let us take the city of Chambersburg, which has a population of 14,600. Chambersburg owns a municipal electric plant and distribution system valued at $500,000, against which there is no indebtedness. This plant and system have long since been paid for out of the light and power revenues. We find that in the year 1932, this plant sold $200,318 worth of electricity after giving the city 500,300 kilowatt-hours free for street lighting.

After paying the operating expenses amounting to $34,861 and allowing for interest and depreciation to the amount of $44,611, the plant still made a net profit of $120,846.

The average rate charged for electric energy was 4.16 cents for domestic purposes—lighting, refrigeration, cooking, and so forth. This was also the commercial rate.

If the consumers had been given the benefit of these profits, it would have reduced the rates in Chambersburg even below the T. V. A. rates; and if all the electric light and power rates in Pennsylvania were reduced to that level, it would save the people of that State anywhere from fifty million to seventy-five million dollars a year. The reduction in rates would cause an increase in revenues by stimulating the consumption of electricity, as well as an increased use of electrical appliances.

DANVILLE, VA.

The city of Danville, Va., which has a population of 22,247, has a municipal plant and distribution system. It generates its power by steam. This Danville plant and distribution system is valued at $1,613,985, against which there is no indebtedness. This plant has long since paid for itself out of the light and power revenues.

The last annual report shows that this Danville plant sold $407,853 worth of electric energy, paid operating expenses to the amount of $178,542, set aside for depreciation $64,559, and still made a net profit of $164,752.

At the same time, Danville has about the lowest light and power rates to be found in the entire State of Virginia. If the consumers of electric energy were given the benefit of these profits in rate reductions, it would bring those rates down to approximately the T. V. A. levels. It would also increase their revenues by stimulating the consumption of electric energy, and greatly benefit the consumers by increasing the use of electrical appliances.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Now let us take Cleveland, Ohio, one of the great industrial cities along the Great Lakes.

Cleveland has her own generating plant and distribution system and generates her electricity by steam. Her plant and system are valued at $16,453,114, against which there is an indebtedness of $5,741,000. This municipal plant does not have a monopoly, however. It has a competitor in the city of Cleveland in the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co., a private utility which is owned or controlled by a holding company.

This municipal system in 1932 sold electric energy to the amount of $3,343,526, paid operating expenses of $2,385,955, and set aside for interest and depreciation $622,205, and still made a net profit of $335,366. And at the same time it gave the people in the city of Cleveland about the lowest electric light and power rates east of the Mississippi River outside the Tennessee Valley area.

Now let us compare the rates in Cleveland with the rates in Toledo, Ohio. Both of these cities are on the Great Lakes and have the same advantages as to fuel, transportation, and so forth, but the people of Toledo are served by the Toledo Edison Co., a private utility that is owned or controlled by a holding company.

In Cleveland 15 kilowatt-hours of electric energy a month cost a residential consumer 60 cents; in Toledo, $1.25. In Cleveland 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 88 cents; in Toledo, $1.75. In Cleveland 40 kilowatt-hours a month cost $1.31; in Toledo, $2.50. In Cleveland 100 kilowatt-hours a month cost $3.05; in Toledo, $4.90. In Cleveland 150 kilowatt-hours cost $4.50; in Toledo, $6.40.

Domestic consumers in Cleveland pay a maximum of 4 cents a kilowatt-hour for 15 kilowatt-hours a month, while in Toledo a consumer pays a maximum of 8⅓ cents per kilowatt-hour for 15 kilowatt-hours a month. The average consumer of electric energy in the State of Ohio is overcharged 100 percent for electricity, according to the Cleveland rates. In other words, if all the electric consumers in Ohio were supplied with electric energy at the Cleveland rates, they would save anywhere from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year—almost as much as they would save under the T. V. A. rates, the Tacoma rates, or the Canadian rates.

Does not that answer the argument of the Power Trust to the effect that the T. V. A. rates are too low?

CONCLUSION

These are just a few illustrations to show the real cost of production and distribution of electric energy and to demonstrate beyond question the justice of the T. V. A. rates, as well as the Tacoma rates and the Canadian rates.

No wonder the Power Trust was willing to spend a hundred million dollars to destroy the T. V. A. and to defeat the utilities holding-company bill, through which we are attempting to bring justice to the consumers of electric lights and power, protect innocent investors in utility stocks, and to bring rates down to the cost of production and distribution, with a reasonable return on the actual and necessary investment.

If this administration never did anything else for the American people, it would deserve their undying gratitude for the great battle it has waged in behalf of the consumers of electric energy and the users of electrical appliances. It has already reduced electric light and power costs to the consumer $250,000,000 a year, and if its policies are carried out, it will further reduce them an additional $1,000,000,000 annually within the next few years.

It will make it possible for the present consumers to enjoy a more liberal use of electric energy, as well as the use of those electrical appliances that go to lighten the burdens of drudgery and make home life more pleasant and more attractive. But greatest of all, this policy, if carried out, will light millions of farm homes, supply them with cheap electric energy, and enable the farmers of this country to enjoy pleasures, comforts, and conveniences which they have heretofore been denied. It will mean to them the dawning of a new day, the ushering in of a new civilization the like of which they had scarcely dreamed.

It will go down in history as one of the greatest accomplishments of all times.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE WORK OF THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE, TOGETHER WITH SOME COMMENTS ON THE NEW DEAL

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, for the past 8 months the Congress has been in continuous session rubber-stamping the so-called "must" legislation sent down from the White House. The Ways and Means Committee has had the responsibility of considering a great many of these measures, including the social-security bill, the measure providing for the continuance of the N. R. A. in skeleton form, the share-the-wealth tax bill, the bill continuing the nuisance taxes for another 2 years, the Guffey coal bill, the Federal alcohol-control bill, and the bill to permit the sale of "baby" bonds by the Treasury.

Other major bills considered by the committee which were not on the President's "must" list included the measure repealing the so-called "pink slip" law—relating to publicity of income-tax returns—and the bill levying taxes on railroads and their employees for retirement pensions. The foregoing bills were all enacted into law. Nearly all of this legislation was ill-advised, hastily considered, and improperly prepared. It was also contrary to the personal views of the majority of the Members; but having been sanctioned by the administration, it was passed under pressure of the party whip. On the whole, I have never known legislation to be fraught with more serious consequences and less good to the country.

A major bill to which the committee gave considerable time and study was the bill revising the administrative provisions of the liquor-taxing laws. It passed the House on the eve of adjournment but was not acted upon in the Senate. In addition to the major bills here referred to, the committee acted upon a large number of less important measures, some of which were enacted into law.

During the last 18 of my 22 years of service in Congress I have been a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and in all that time I have never known it to have as many important bills to consider as it has this session. We have been in almost daily session, and in many instances have held night meetings, in order to expedite the consideration of important legislation.

ADMINISTRATION HAS SOUGHT CENTRALIZED CONTROL

The legislation enacted by Congress at the present session has for the most part had as its object the further centralization of power and authority in the President. Bills have been passed, irrespective of their merit, simply because the President wanted them. The bureaucratic, autocratic control which was instituted when the present administration came into office has been considerably expanded. It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States called a temporary halt in its decision invalidating the N. R. A., but the administration has since continued to seek further extensions of its program by circumventing constitutional limitations and the decisions of the Court.

When the N. R. A. was declared invalid the people cried, "Thank God for the Supreme Court." The administration, however, took a different attitude, and was somewhat irritated by the interruption to its program. The President gave vent to his own feelings at a press conference on May 31 when he ridiculed the Court's decision as taking the country back to the "horse and buggy" days. Such a remark was of course wholly unwarranted.

Following the Supreme Court's decision, one of the most prominent and highly respected Democratic Members of Congress remarked in all seriousness:

The President will now realize what bad advisers he has had.

Unfortunately, events have shown the Member's error, as the same group of inexperienced "new dealers" are still busy.

IT IS FOR THE PEOPLE TO SAY WHETHER THEY WANT CENTRALIZED POWER

If the people want centralization of authority in Washington and a break-down of State home rule, it is for them to say so. The courts, however, cannot change the Constitution. As the Supreme Court said in its N. R. A. decision:

> It is not the province of the Court to consider the economic advantages or disadvantages of such a centralized system. It is sufficient to say that the Federal Constitution does not provide for it.

In this connection it is well to remember the warning of the Father of our Country, George Washington, who in his Farewell Address said:

> If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates.
> But let there be no change by usurpation, for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

The method of amending the Constitution is clearly provided and is thoroughly practical. No snap judgment should be tolerated. The Constitution must not be made to conform with legislation desired by any one man or group, but legislation should conform with the Constitution, and legislators should invariably comply with their oath of office.

ADMINISTRATION'S PROGRAM HAS FAILED TO BRING ABOUT RECOVERY

Even if the legislation which has been enacted in response to the President's demands were constitutional, it still would be unworthy of acceptance by the people, because it has failed to bring about any substantial progress toward recovery. The farm program has destroyed the farmer's foreign markets and has caused the prices of foodstuffs in the domestic market to rise to the point where the people cannot afford to pay them. The monetary and fiscal policies of the administration have raised such fears and doubts in the minds of business men and industrialists that they are unwilling to take risks. Ten or twelve million men still walk the streets looking for work that is not to be had, and some 20,000,000 people are dependent upon the relief rolls for subsistence.

The new deal has truly turned out to be a raw deal. The people are getting restless, and the administration is on the defensive. The results in the recent election in the First Congressional District of Rhode Island testify to the fact that the President is losing his prestige and popularity and that his program is held in disrepute.

The extravagant promises which the President made have not been fulfilled. The people are waking up to the fact that the wild and reckless spending program is getting them nowhere, and they are beginning to wonder how the bill is going to be met. Payment for this profligate expenditure will be a yoke around the neck of unborn generations. I would favor the organization of educational classes among the new voters to impress upon their minds the load which they and their children will have to carry.

BROKEN PROMISES

Mr. Speaker, I have frequently called attention to the President's campaign promises and his failure to keep what he himself termed his "covenant with the people."

He promised to reduce governmental expenditures, but he has spent more during his administration than was spent to run the country in the 124-year period from the administration of George Washington to that of Woodrow Wilson.

He promised to eliminate bureaucracy, but he has added 60 or more new Federal agencies and put over 166,000 new employees on the Federal pay roll, practically all of whom are appointed through political influence.

He promised to stop Government deficits, but he has spent $2 for every $1 raised by taxation and has accumulated a deficit of $12,000,000,000 in 3 years.

He promised to keep the Government out of business, but he has gradually increased Government competition with private industry.

He promised to put the unemployed back to work, but he has only handed them a dole.

He promised to maintain a sound currency, but he has devalued the dollar, suspended the gold standard, sought legislation to prevent recovery on gold-clause obligations of the Government, and, instead of printing paper money, has forced the banks of the country to absorb the billions upon billions of bonds which have been issued.

He promised to protect State rights, but he has ruthlessly usurped State functions in complete disregard of the Constitution.

Many other broken promises might be cited, but they are sufficiently well known not to require further repetition.

GREATEST SPENDING CONGRESS IN HISTORY

It is the country's good fortune that Congress has finally adjourned, because the longer it stayed in session the more undesirable legislation it passed and the more it piled up the national debt. In 8 months it appropriated approximately ten and a quarter billions of dollars, to take rank as the greatest spending Congress in peace time in all history. Even as it adjourned there was pending as a Senate amendment to the third deficiency appropriation bill a proposal to make 12-cent loans on cotton and 90-cent loans on wheat, which would have cost the Government about $800,000,000 more.

The effect of this wild spending program upon the Nation's credit is becoming more and more alarming. The greater part of the accumulated deficit has been financed by forced loans from commercial banks, and this has given the Government's credit a false and artificial showing. The banks of the country have absorbed about all of the Government's securities they can reasonably take, and the Treasury will either have to secure loans direct from the people, as it is now trying to do through the sale of "baby" bonds, or it will have to start the printing presses. Only a few days ago the Treasury, for the first time in the history of the country, failed to sell the entire amount of a bond issue. Usually such issues are oversubscribed several times.

ADMINISTRATION HAS FAILED TO BRING FORWARD A COMPREHENSIVE TAX PROGRAM

What has the administration done toward meeting these expenditures and toward maintaining the Nation's credit? It has neither brought forward a comprehensive tax program nor made any effort to curtail expenditures. A year ago the President talked of having a balanced Budget in 1936; now we hear of 1939 as being the probable date; and next year it will probably be 1942. If the present rate of spending keeps up, there will not be any Budget to balance in either 1939 or 1942. The printing presses will have been started, and we will be going around with a wheelbarrow full of paper money to buy a few groceries, just like the people of Russia and Germany once had to do.

The President sent to Congress last January a Budget calling for the appropriation of eight and one-half billions of dollars in the face of estimated receipts of approximately four billions. With respect to the question of taxes, he said:

> While I do not consider it advisable at this time to propose any new or additional taxes for the fiscal year 1936, I do recommend that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes which under existing law will expire next June or July, and also to maintain the current rates of these taxes, which will be reduced next June. I consider that such taxes are necessary to the financing of the Budget for 1936.

EXTENSION OF NUISANCE TAXES FOR 2 YEARS

These so-called "nuisance taxes", to which the President referred, include the taxes on gasoline, lubricating oil, furs, soaps, radios, admissions, and so forth, and the 3-cent postage rate. They bring in around $500,000,000 of revenue, and already have been extended once by the present administration in violation of the promise made to the taxpayers of the country when they were originally imposed.

While the President made no mention of the length of time he wished the nuisance taxes extended, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee provided for a 2-year extension, so as to avoid the necessity of another extension resolution next year just prior to the elections. This was another illustration of the dread which Democrats all have of facing the wrath of their constituents when their actions are under close scrutiny during the election campaign.

Instead of allowing the bill to be brought up in the regular way, the Democratic leadership had it considered under suspension of the rules, which automatically limited debate to 20 minutes on a side and precluded the offering of any amendments. This procedure was adopted so that it would be impossible for the Republican minority to offer motions to strike out the taxes on gasoline, soap, furs, and so forth, to restore the 2-cent rate on postage, or to impose new excise taxes on imports from Japan and other countries which are now flooding the domestic market and depriving our own farmers and factory workers of a livelihood.

In the course of my remarks on the bill I said:

In voting against this bill I do not wish it to be understood that I am voting against balancing the Budget. There are two ways to balance the Budget—one is by increasing taxation and the other is by drastically reducing expenditures. I think more attention should be paid to the second method. However, as long as high taxes are necessary, they should be imposed on a fair and equitable basis. The present nuisance taxes do not meet that test.

THE SHARE-THE-WEALTH TAX BILL

In spite of the statement made in his Budget message of last January that he did not consider it advisable at this time to propose any new or additional taxes, the President on June 19, when Congress was on the verge of adjournment, sent up a message calling for certain alterations in the present tax structure. These recommendations included an increase in the maximum surtax brackets; the taxation of corporations according to size, rather than at the present flat rate; the imposition of a tax on inheritances, in addition to the present tax on estates before distribution; and the taxation of intercorporate dividends.

The message clearly indicated that these proposed changes were not desired by the President as a means of raising additional revenue for Budget-balancing purposes but were intended to placate those who have been clamoring for a redistribution of wealth.

The President's proposals were immediately interpreted by the press throughout the country as being nothing more than a political gesture, and were ridiculed for the small amount of revenue which they would raise. When his sincerity in submitting the proposals was challenged, the Democratic leadership felt impelled to take steps to save the President's face by drafting some sort of a bill to carry out his recommendations. It was significant, however, that neither the House Ways and Means Committee report nor the Senate Finance Committee report attempted to justify the changes suggested or present a single argument in their favor. One of his recommendations—that for the imposition of an inheritance tax—was rejected entirely.

NEW TAX LAW A FARCE AS A REVENUE MEASURE

In the light of the $250,000,000 of additional taxes which it raises, the new tax law is a farce viewed either as a revenue measure or as a redistribution-of-wealth measure. At the current rate of expenditures, the additional funds which it is estimated to raise will pay the cost of running the Government for about 11 days. As a Budget-balancing measure it falls $3,325,000,000 short of meeting the deficit for the last fiscal year, and it will fall equally short of meeting the deficit for the current year. The small receipts make rather ridiculous the suggestion of the President, reiterated by Secretary Morgenthau, that they be applied to the reduction of the national debt, which now aggregates over $29,000,000,000. Even if the money were distributed equally among our 125,000,000 people, each would receive but $2. However, these weaknesses made no difference to the majority members. They had their orders to pass a tax bill, so something had to be done.

ENACTMENT OF PRESIDENT'S PROPOSALS DEMONSTRATES THAT ULTIMATE BURDEN WILL FALL ON SMALL TAXPAYERS

Although the Federal income tax will now impose a maximum normal and surtax rate of 79 percent, and although the estate tax has been increased to a maximum of 70 percent, the Budget is far from being balanced. While the new tax measure is unimportant from the revenue standpoint, it is very important for what it portends in the way of future burdens on the great masses of the people.

Its passage should clearly demonstrate to the people of ordinary means that it is to them, and not to the rich, that the administration will now have to turn to pay the cost of its wild orgy of expenditures. In spite of confiscatory taxes on wealth, the current Budget is some $4,000,000,000 out of balance, and the only way such expenditures can be met is by reducing the exemptions and increasing the rates on taxpayers of small means. In addition, many burdensome excise taxes would have to be imposed. The administration is not willing to increase the tax burden on people of small means just before the election, but the evil day cannot be postponed much longer without dire consequences.

When the tax bill was before the Senate the Finance Committee tentatively adopted the La Follette amendment, which would have reduced the exemption of single persons to $800 and that of married persons to $2,000. While this amendment was subsequently reconsidered and rejected, it is important to note that it would have produced but $175,000,000 more than the changes already made in the income tax. Thus, even if the amendment had been adopted, nearly $4,000,000,000 of additional revenue would still have to be raised before the current Budget could be balanced.

How such a crushing burden of taxation can be met is problematical, but it is certainly staring the country in the face. Perhaps the English income-tax system would have to be resorted to, under which the exemption is $500 for single persons and $750 for married persons, and the normal rates 11¼ to 22½ percent, with surtaxes running up as high as 41¼ percent in addition. Something of this nature or worse is unavoidable unless expenditures are immediately and drastically lessened.

NEW TAXES COULD BE AVOIDED BY REDUCING UNNECESSARY EXPENDITURES

Along with my Republican colleagues, I opposed the President's tax proposals for two principal reasons: First, because they were merely intended for political effect and did not constitute a sincere effort to raise revenue; and, second, because I felt that the administration had no right to increase taxes until it had first adopted a sane spending program.

In this connection attention is called to the fact that the United States Chamber of Commerce has pointed out how the administration could reduce expenditures by nearly $1,700,000,000 without in any way impairing the recovery program. At least the amount to be raised by the new tax bill could just as well have been realized by reducing expenditures in the amount of $250,000,000. This would have hurt nobody, but would have avoided additional burdens on business and made unnecessary the confiscation of private capital to pay the running expenses of the Government.

WEALTHY PERSONS AVOID HIGH SURTAXES BY INVESTMENT IN TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

In a statement to the press while his tax proposals were pending in Congress the President called attention to the fact that in 1932, 58 wealthy persons paid no income tax at all on 70 percent of their income. Of course, this was due to the fact that their investments were largely in tax-exempt Federal and State securities.

One reason the wealthy invest in tax-exempt securities is to avoid unreasonably high surtaxes, and the President, by insisting on increasing the rates still further, has encouraged them to invest their entire holdings in such securities and thus pay no tax on any of their income. Thus the net effect will be to shift the burden of taxation from the rich to those who are less fortunate.

ADMINISTRATION SHOULD STOP ISSUANCE OF TAX-EXEMPT BONDS

Until tax-exempt securities have been eliminated it is impossible to collect 75-percent surtaxes. This was demonstrated during and after the World War, when two Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury, Messrs. GLASS and Houston, said that they could not collect even 65-percent surtaxes.

I have had a resolution pending for some time proposing a constitutional amendment to abolish future issues of tax-exempt securities, but I have been unable to have it considered, due to the opposition of the administration. While the President in his tax message suggested such an amendment, he has done nothing to have his recommendation carried out, and, of course, everyone knows it would only take a word from him for Congress to submit such an amendment to the States for ratification. Instead of closing up this loophole of evasion, the administration has continually furnished billions upon billions of additional tax-exempt securities for the wealthy to invest in.

When the tax bill was under consideration in the House, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, took the floor to explain why his committee had taken no action with respect to the proposed constitutional amendment. He said that the Government was now the biggest borrower in the world, and that it had to have the money, and have it at once, at as cheap a rate of interest as possible. That, of course, is the whole story. While the administration favors the elimination of tax-exempt securities as a matter of policy, to be carried out sometime in the future, it does not wish to run the risk of being unable to raise the money with which to carry on its vast spending program. In other words, it does not favor closing the door of tax exemption until all the wealthy have had a chance to escape.

GRADUATED TAX ON CORPORATIONS NEITHER SOUND NOR EQUITABLE

One of the most objectionable features of the new tax law, from the standpoint of soundness and fairness, is that which substitutes a graduated tax on corporations, ranging from 12½ to 15 percent, for the present flat rate of 13¾ percent. The objection to such a tax was well stated by President Wilson's war-time Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO, who said:

Any graduated tax upon corporations is indefensible in theory, for corporations are only aggregations of individuals, and by such a tax the numerous small stockholders of a great corporation may be taxed at a higher rate than the very wealthy stockholders of a relatively small corporation.

It is probably safe to say that there is not a handful of Members in either branch of Congress who would conscientiously attempt to defend this tax. The only reason it was included in the bill was because the President wanted it, and not because it had any merit.

EXTENSION OF THE N. R. A.

The original N. R. A. legislation, by its own terms, would have expired last June 16. Prior to that time the administration prepared and sent to Congress a bill which would have continued the N. R. A. with greatly augmented powers. However, while this extension legislation was being considered, the Supreme Court, on May 27, handed down its decision in the now famous Schechter case, holding the act unconstitutional on two grounds: First, because of the delegation of legislative powers to the President, and, second, because of the attempt to regulate purely intrastate transactions.

Even before the Supreme Court's decision was handed down it was apparent that Congress would not enact the extension legislation in the form desired by the administration. The opposition to the regulation of small, local businesses and to monopolistic price fixing was constantly growing throughout the country. This sentiment was given expression in the Senate on May 14, when it passed the Clark resolution continuing the N. R. A. for only 10 months and eliminating all price fixing and all regulation of purely intrastate business. At that time it was doubtful whether the Supreme Court would be able to pass on the constitutionality of the original law before recessing for the summer.

The very day the Ways and Means Committee met to consider reporting the Clark resolution to the House with certain amendments the Court handed down its decision. After the decision had been read to the committee there was nothing else for it to do but drop the proposed extension legislation until the effect of the decision could be studied.

The majority members of the committee subsequently met in secret session with administration leaders and formulated a plan to continue a skeleton N. R. A. organization for 10 months. The plea was made that it would be inhuman to turn the several thousand high-salaried employees of the N. R. A. out into the streets, even though they took the jobs on a temporary basis, and, of course, the majority members did not want to have to find new jobs for them. It also was said that the administration wanted to continue the organization for a limited time in order to preserve the data collected during the N. R. A.'s operation.

The Republican minority in the House, as a substitute for the continuance of the N. R. A., proposed that its powers be transferred to the Federal Trade Commission in order that the latter might approve voluntary trade agreements providing for the elimination of unfair methods of competition, the prevention of monopolies, the abolition of child labor, the prohibition of unreasonable hours of work, and inadequate rates of pay, and the guaranty to employees of the right to bargain collectively. This proposal was rejected in the House by a strict party vote.

THE GUFFEY COAL BILL

The Guffey coal bill was enacted by Congress after the President was moved by the United Mine Workers and by certain groups in the bituminous-coal industry to place it on his list of "must" legislation. It sets up a little N. R. A. for the soft-coal industry and permits monopolistic price fixing such as was permitted under the now defunct bituminous-coal code.

While the new code is supposedly voluntary, operators are coerced into subscribing to it by reason of the tax feature of the act, which levies a tax of 15 percent on all coal mined, but allows a rebate of 90 percent to all operators who comply with the code provisions.

The whole purpose of the act is to increase the price of coal through the establishment of minimum prices, and the consumers throughout the country will be called upon to pay the bill. Just how much the increase will be no one can say at this time, but it has been variously estimated all the way up to $1.50 per ton and more. An increase of even $1 per ton will cost the people of New England approximately $20,000,000 additional for soft coal.

The N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional partly because it attempted to regulate purely intrastate activities. The Supreme Court has many times stated that mining and manufacturing are intrastate activities not subject to the Federal power over interstate commerce. It has said specifically that the mining of coal is not interstate commerce. In its decision in the N. R. A. case, the Supreme Court said that interstate commerce in the poultry there in question had ended. In the case of the mining of coal, interstate commerce has not yet begun. Hence, any attempt to regulate it under the Guffey bill is clearly beyond the authority of Congress.

Any attempt to accomplish through the taxing power what Congress cannot do directly is likewise unconstitutional. This was clearly laid down in the so-called "Child Labor Tax case" (259 U. S. 20), in which the Court said:

Out of a proper respect for the acts of a coordinate branch of the Government, this Court has gone far to sustain taxing acts as such, even though there has been ground for suspecting from the weight of the tax it was intended to destroy its subject. But in the act before us the presumption of validity cannot prevail, because the proof of the contrary is found on the very face of its provisions. Grant the validity of this law, and all that Congress would need to do, hereafter, in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the States have never parted with, and which are reserved to them by the tenth amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called "tax" upon departures from it. To give such magic to the word "tax" would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the States.

This decision indicates what disposition the Court will make of the so-called "Guffey bill." However, if by any chance the act should be upheld, it would be but an entering wedge for the regulation of all industry under the Federal taxing power, as the Court forecast in the Child Labor case. That the administration already has such a plan under consideration is indicated by the following item from the Associated Press:

Two studies of future regulative methods, now that the Supreme Court has overruled the use of the commerce clause, are under way at Recovery Administration headquarters.

The bulletin outlining the program included these points for special legal study—

Then follows a long list of points, as set forth in the official N. R. A. bulletin, and the first on the list is the following:

Federal control (regulation) through employment of the power of taxation.

When it became apparent to the President that the Ways and Means Committee might not report the Guffey bill to the House because of its obviously unconstitutional features, he sent a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, in which he said:

I hope your committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.

It is doubtful whether any one act of President Roosevelt has been as severely criticized by the press and the people as this request to Members of Congress urging them to disregard their oath of office. One would hardly think the President would dare make such a suggestion, in view of the oath which he himself took upon assuming office, which was as follows:

I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

In spite of the fact that a majority of the Ways and Means Committee were unalterably opposed to the bill, the White House was able to prevail upon sufficient Democratic members to withhold their negative votes and permit a minority of the membership to work their will over a majority. Favorable action on the bill in the House was made possible only by extreme administration pressure and by logrolling methods.

THE SOCIAL-SECURITY ACT

On January 17, 1935, the President sent to Congress a message calling for the enactment of a broad program of social security, including old-age pensions, aid to dependent and crippled children, unemployment insurance, and compulsory contributory pensions for superannuated employees.

Instead of allowing each proposition to be considered on its own merits, the President included them all in a single bill which he sent to Congress along with his message. Thus it was impossible to vote for old-age pensions or child welfare without voting for everything else in the bill; and, conversely, it was impossible to vote against any objectionable feature without at the same time voting against certain desirable features.

The President had a purpose in forcing the consideration of this legislation as a single unit, because otherwise it would have been impossible for him to have secured the enactment of certain portions.

The proposal to assist the States in meeting one-half the cost of old-age pension payments met almost universal support. As a matter of fact, this was the only major proposition for which there was any real necessity or urgency at the present time. Of course, the relatively small grants to the States for child welfare and for public-health services are very worthy, and no one would oppose them.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

There is a grave question whether it is wise at the present time to force the States to set up unemployment-insurance systems which would impose a billion-dollar pay-roll tax on business without providing any immediate benefits to the millions now unemployed. While the tax is imposed in the first instance by the Federal Government, employers would be entitled to deduct all payments made to State unemployment-insurance funds up to but not exceeding 90 percent of the Federal tax. No Federal unemployment benefits would be paid, however, the purpose of the tax being to coerce the States into setting up their own unemployment-insurance systems.

The Ways and Means Committee was advised that with a State tax of 3 percent unemployment benefits could not be paid for more than 16 weeks, following a 4-week waiting period, and even this small benefit would not be available until several years had elapsed in building up a reserve. Thus this legislation can be of no assistance to those now without jobs, and even if reserves were on hand, the 11,000,000 unemployed would exhaust the fund long before the 16-week benefit period had passed.

COMPULSORY CONTRIBUTORY RETIREMENT SYSTEM

The compulsory retirement system, which will eventually cost employers and employees nearly $2,000,000,000 annually in pay-roll taxes, likewise cannot be justified at this time, when business is trying so hard to revive. This project, moreover, is open to serious constitutional objections, since Congress has no power to force upon private industry and its employees a Federal insurance scheme.

Another objection to the retirement scheme is that it does not permit the continuance of private pension plans previously set up by many individual employers, which in many cases provide benefits much more liberal than those under the Federal system. The so-called "Clark amendment", offered by Senator CLARK, of Missouri, would have exempted private employers having such plans from the operation of the Federal scheme. I offered a motion in the House to agree to this amendment, which the Republican Members supported, but as the administration was opposed to the amendment, my motion was lost. The amendment subsequently was eliminated in conference.

PAY-ROLL TAXES HINDER RECOVERY

The 3-percent pay-roll tax for unemployment insurance and the 6-percent pay-roll tax for retirement annuities eventually will cost employers and employees nearly $3,000,000,000 annually, in addition to all other tax burdens. Even as early as 1937 the pay-roll taxes will aggregate $1,000,000,000 annually, and, of course, they must be paid whether a concern is operating at a profit or not. While it may be true that in normal times business could stand such an additional burden, it cannot be imposed at this time without serious consequences, not only to business but to employees. By putting a penalty on pay rolls, these taxes tend to discourage reemployment, to increase unemployment, and to lower the wage level.

For 5 years, amid all sorts of obstacles, including increased taxation and ill-advised legislation, business has been trying to stage a recovery, and it would seem that the least the Government could do would be to avoid placing any more obstacles in its way.

OPERATION OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The reciprocal trade agreements law was passed during the previous Congress, but I feel it requires comment at this time because it has worked out exactly as I prophesied it would, namely, to the great detriment of the American people.

It will be recalled that this law was passed by the subservient Democratic majority in Congress at the request of the President. It delegated to him, contrary to the Constitution, the power to make reciprocal tariff concessions to foreign countries.

Under this law the President has entered into trade agreements with Cuba, Belgium, Haiti, Brazil, and Sweden, and negotiations are now pending with Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, Spain, Switzerland, the Netherlands, Finland, Italy, Canada, and France. Other countries will subsequently be added to the list.

Under the Cuban agreement the President reduced the duties on a large number of commodities, including sugar, tobacco, potatoes, rum, fish, and certain other agricultural and industrial products. The reductions ranged up to 50 percent.

Under the Belgian agreement, the President reduced the duties on cement, plate glass, structural iron and steel, shotguns, waterproof cloth, cordage, linen fabrics, vegetable parchment paper, photographic paper, laces, and a long list of other products. These reductions also ran up as high as 50 percent.

Under the Haitian agreement the principal reductions were on rum and pineapples, while a number of articles, including coffee was bound on the free list.

The principal reduction under the Brazilian agreement was on manganese, on which the tariff was cut 50 percent, while coffee was bound on the free list.

Under the Swedish agreement the President reduced the duties on iron and steel, wrapping paper, processed paperboard, matches, pocket knives, vulcanized fiber, enameled ware, saws, pliers, calculating machines, files, stoves, clothespins, wool felt, granite, and many other commodities. These reductions also ran up to 50 percent.

Of the agreements negotiated, that with Cuba became effective September 3, 1934; that with Belgium, May 1, 1935; that with Haiti, June 3, 1935; and that with Sweden, August 5, 1935. The Brazilian Congress has thus far failed to ratify the treaty with that country.

CUBAN AGREEMENT HAS WORKED TO DISADVANTAGE OF THIS COUNTRY

The agreement with Cuba is the only one which has been in effect for any great period of time, and hence it is the only one which is of any value in determining the effect which these agreements are likely to have on our domestic producers. It was said that the agreement with Cuba would be mutually advantageous to the two countries. How has it worked out?

In the 10-month period immediately subsequent to the effective date of the agreement—that is, from September 1934 to June 1935, inclusive—our exports to Cuba increased $14,000,000 over the exports for the previous 10 months. This fact has been broadcast all over the land as pointing to the tremendous advantage which this country received as a result of the Cuban agreement. However, it is only half the story. Little or no mention has been made of the fact that in the same period our imports from Cuba have increased nearly $46,000,000, which shows that we have had to spend an additional $3.30 in Cuba for each additional dollar's worth of trade we got from that country under the agreement. To state the proposition another way, President Roosevelt took $46,000,000 from one group of domestic producers and workers in order to benefit another group by $14,000,000.

CONCESSIONS GENERALIZED WITHOUT OUR RECEIVING EQUIVALENT BENEFITS

The concessions granted under the Cuban trade agreement apply exclusively to Cuban imports, but those made under agreements with other countries are extended generally to all foreign imports. Thus, in return for a concession from one country, we reduce our tariff in favor of the whole world. Under this one-sided policy the Netherlands, for example, may take advantage of the reduced duty on cement, as provided under the Belgian agreement, without giving this country any equivalent concession in return.

The detrimental effect of the generalization of rates is well illustrated by the refusal of Brazil to ratify the agreement which the President entered into with that country. Under the Haitian treaty the President agreed to keep coffee on the free list, and this, of course, is the chief item in which Brazil is interested. She is able to take advantage of this concession without giving this country any benefit in return, and our domestic exporters who expected to get certain trade advantages under the Brazilian agreement are thus left out on a limb.

We are coming out on the short end of the Cuban agreement, even though the rate concessions thereunder are not generalized. What we may expect as a result of the agreements with other countries I dislike even to contemplate. One thing is clear, however, and that is that the administration is not using the reciprocal tariff law as an instrument for promoting our foreign trade but as a means of surrendering the domestic market to foreign producers in keeping with the free-trade theories of the Secretary of State.

TRADE AGREEMENTS NEGOTIATED BY STAR-CHAMBER METHODS

The star-chamber methods by which these trade agreements are negotiated is another feature of the reciprocal tariff law which is open to serious obection. Although domestic industries are notified through the press of the Government's intention to negotiate an agreement with a particular country, they never know what articles will be adversely affected until after the agreement has been entered into. They have a chance to present testimony to a committee set up to hear them, but the hearing is held before the agreement is negotiated, and the committee which hears the testimony is not the committee which actually negotiates the agreement with the representatives of the foreign country.

KILLING ONE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY OFF TO HELP ANOTHER IS BOTH UNFAIR AND UNSOUND

Naturally, I favor an expansion of our foreign trade, but it should not be expanded at the expense of our own farmers, factory owners, and workingmen. Two-thirds of our imports now come in duty free, and we might well use this great market in the United States for noncompetitive foreign products as a lever to secure favorable concessions for our export products in foreign countries. The present method of killing off one domestic industry in what may be a futile attempt to help another is both unfair and unsound.

I fought the enactment of this law as bitterly as I could, and I have since introduced a bill to repeal it. Not only is it detrimental to the best interests of our people but, like the N. R. A. legislation, it involves an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the President.

While these reciprocal negotiations are designated officially as trade agreements, they are nothing less than treaties with foreign countries, which, to be constitutional, must be ratified by the Senate. Furthermore, these treaties provide for changes in the tariff, and, as revenue measures, they should originate in the House of Representatives.

It is very significant that delegations from foreign countries have waited upon the President to thank him for his interest in making possible an increase of exports to this country at the expense of our own industries.

ADMINISTRATION FAILS TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH COTTON-TEXTILE SITUATION

One of the most important questions before the people of New England today is the future of the cotton-textile industry. As a result of the cotton processing tax, the manufacturers of cotton cloth are unable to compete with foreign producers either in the domestic market or abroad. The importations of cotton cloth from Japan have increased in alarming proportions, and our textile mills are being closed down and the workers thrown out of employment.

On the opening day of this session of Congress I introduced a bill to repeal the processing taxes, but, of course, it was not possible for me to get the measure considered in view of the administration's insistence on their retention. Up to May 31 of this year the State of Massachusetts alone had paid over $40,000,000 in processing taxes, and approximately $33,000,000 of this amount was on cotton manufactures.

Last April I introduced a bill to increase the tariff on bleached cotton cloth and on printed, dyed, or colored cotton cloth. On the same day my bill was introduced the Secretary of State, who is in charge of the administration's tariff program, wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in which he said:

> In my opinion, it is not only unwise as a general policy to yield to the demand for greater restrictions upon imports but would be particularly unfortunate at this time, since such action could but weaken the leadership of the administration in the effort that it is making to reduce the many restrictions hampering the flow of international trade.
> * * * * * * *
> I believe that we should resist any effort to stampede this Government into unnecessary and unwise action against Japanese competition, whether in textiles or any other commodity.

In other words, it matters little to the Secretary how much our textile industry suffers, so long as he is permitted to carry forward his idealistic program of leading the way to universal free trade.

Shortly thereafter, as the result of the demands of the New England Governors that the administration do something to relieve the cotton-textile industry, the President appointed a Cabinet committee to investigate conditions. This committee recently made its report. At the time it was appointed I called attention to its personnel, saying:

> From the standpoint of sympathy toward the textile industry, the President might just as well have appointed a committee of Japanese textile manufacturers to study the situation. The Secretary of State is the same man who is at present engaged in destroying the existing Republican tariff by reducing rates on every hand without reference to differences in foreign and domestic production costs. * * * The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, is the same man who, in a speech at Brunswick, Maine, last Wednesday, insulted the good people of New England by saying that they were whining, flabby, lacking in guts, selfish, and unpatriotic. He is the same dictatorial person who said it was time for New England to give up her textile mills and seek new lines of endeavor. * * *

I also referred to the Secretary of Commerce as having supported the doctrines of Secretaries Hull and Wallace, and stated that I did not know the views of Secretary Perkins, but would at least suppose that she was sympathetic with the textile workers who had lost their jobs. Thus, I said, the committee was stacked at least 3 to 1 against the textile industry.

It now appears that I was about right. The committee, in its report to the President, recommended against the discontinuance of the cotton-processing tax, and, so far as imports of cotton cloth were concerned, merely suggested a voluntary and friendly agreement with Japan on limitations of shipments of cotton products to the American market. The other recommendations of the committee likewise failed to present any solution of the problems of the industry. Our textile industry is doomed to suffer from this exhibition of the administration's raw deal, which will result in the continuation of the two greatest reasons for its near-insolvency, namely, the processing tax and the admission of cheap foreign importations. Who can imagine Japan accepting any limitation on their shipment of cotton goods to the United States under a voluntary and friendly agreement?

While the administration does not seem willing or able to give any relief, the Supreme Court may do so at its coming term, when it will undoubtedly hold the processing tax unconstitutional. Thus, the people of New England once more may be able to say, "Thank God for the Supreme Court."

LOANS TO NEW INDUSTRIES

Another administration policy which is detrimental to New England is that of making loans for the expansion of industries already having production capacities greatly in excess of consumptive demands. No better illustration can be cited than the $4,000,000 loan recently made by the R. F. C. to the Crossett Lumber Co., of Arkansas, for the establishment of a new paper mill to compete with the already existing mills of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Ohio, and other States. No reason is given for this loan, but it is an apparent fact that the paper mill is to be constructed in the State of the majority leader of the Senate, who will be a candidate for reelection next year.

CONCLUSION

As a suggested program for recovery I offer the following:

First. Carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform of 1932 with respect to (a) reducing the cost of government; (b) eliminating extravagance; (c) balancing the Budget; (d) suppressing monopoly; and (e) eliminating Government competition with business.

Second. Repeal the reciprocal tariff law.

Third. Repeal the processing taxes.

Fourth. Abolish tax-exempt securities.

Fifth. Leave reform measures for future consideration and concentrate all efforts on recovery.

Sixth. Leave business alone.

An elaboration of the details of this plan, which is not meant to be all-inclusive, can be readily and clearly worked out during the next campaign, when there is prospect of the return to power of the party which can be depended upon for sound and constructive legislation.

IT IS IMPERATIVE THAT THE FORCES SEEKING A PRODUCTION-FOR-USE ECONOMY BE UNITED IN A NEW POLITICAL PARTY

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, in a national radio broadcast addressed to the National Convention of Young Democrats held in Milwaukee, Wis., on August 24, 1935, President Roosevelt twice used the expression "the recent depression." The meaning of this phrase, as used by the President, is only too obvious. The implication is that, so far as this administration is concerned, its object has been achieved; the depression is over and the administration intends to rest on its oars. The President has indicated that he intends to follow the advice contained in an editorial by Raymond Moley in the magazine Today, for July 27, 1935.

> Sooner or later the new deal is going to reach the point where its leaders must make a definite determination to rest on their oars. * * * It seems to me that the time has come when a sufficient amount of readjustment has been made to warrant an attempt to let the system operate under these new conditions.

But is the depression over, as the President implies?

Is the depression over for the 12,000,000 unemployed workers in this country?

Is the depression over for the 20,000,000 people on relief?

Is the depression over for the 650,000 farm families who were on relief this spring, or for the millions more who are unable to secure cost of production for their farm products, and who as a consequence face foreclosure and eviction?

Is the depression over for the 11,000,000 to 16,000,000 young men and young women between the ages of 19 and 29, members of the "lost generation", who find themselves unable to secure any place within the economic system?

Is the depression over for the 600,000 boys in C. C. C. camps working for a net wage of $5 a month, 70 percent of whom seek to reenlist when their terms have expired, for the reason that there is no opportunity for employment in the economic world?

Is the depression over for the 2 out of every 5 school children whom a Government survey shows to be suffering from malnutrition?

The depression may be a chronic state of affairs for the 49,700,000 people in the United States who normally live on a subsistence and poverty level. But is the depression over for the additional 15,000,000 people who, through loss of income since 1929, have been forced down to this subsistence and poverty level of existence?

PRESIDENT HOOVER USED THE PHRASES "RUGGED INDIVIDUALISM" AND "PROSPERITY IS JUST AROUND THE CORNER." PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT USES THE PHRASE "THE RECENT DEPRESSION"—THEY ALL MEAN THE SAME THING

A year ago President Roosevelt electrified the country with this stirring message:

> No country, however rich, can afford the waste of its human resources. Demoralization caused by vast unemployment is our greatest extravagance. Morally, it is the greatest menace to our social order. * * * As for this country, I stand or fall by my refusal to accept as a necessary condition of our future a permanent army of unemployed.

Since Congress met last January the unemployed have been living on hope—a hope based on administration publicity to the effect that the $4,000,000,000 works program would provide work for the unemployed. It is now becoming apparent that this program is merely a continuation of the made-work projects of the F. E. R. A. Very few of the unemployed not on relief will be given jobs, and these few not at a living wage. The President now states that the depression is over. The implication is plain: If the depression is over, then the unemployed must shift for themselves rather than depend upon the Government for assistance. It is hard to see the difference between this position and the rugged individualism of Herbert Hoover.

When President Roosevelt speaks of the recent depression he may be speaking for the 600 corporations which control two-thirds of American industry, whose earnings have shown such a marked increase during the past 2 years. But so far as the millions of people who constitute the underlying population of the country are concerned, President Roosevelt has merely shut his eyes to their unsolved problems and taken a position quite similar to that of Herbert Hoover and the Republican Party.

The apparent intention of the administration to rest on its oars while these problems are unsolved and to regard the depression as a thing of the past indicates that the Roosevelt revolution as typified by the new deal is regarded as an accomplished fact; that the objective of the new deal has been achieved; and that upon this achievement the Roosevelt administration intends to rest its case before the Nation in 1936. For this reason it becomes particularly appropriate that we analyze the Roosevelt new deal in the light of what it is, what it was designed to accomplish, and what the net result of its achievements has been.

I. SCARCITY MONGERING OR THE NEW DEAL

President Roosevelt's statement a year ago that he was "willing to stand or fall" by his "refusal to accept as a necessary condition of our future a permanent army of unemployed" indicates that he understands that unemployment is the Nemesis of the profit system. Unfortunately, however, the legislation which he has advanced, while intended to better conditions, has actually tended to make conditions worse. This is because the essence of the new deal is to create an artificial scarcity, holding production down, to the end that prices may be kept up. Such a program may have helped the owners of the Nation's industrial machinery and the holders of debt charges against this property. But so far as the workers in the factories and on the farms are concerned, unemployment has been increased and conditions have become gradually worse.

This general statement regarding the new deal is readily borne out by an examination of the specific new-deal projects.

A. THE N. R. A.

This was the great central cornerstone of the new deal. With the exception of section 7 (a), however, it was nothing but the program which the Chamber of Commerce of the United States had sponsored for more than a year. It permitted suspension of antitrust legislation in that it permitted the fixing of prices and the reduction of output. The regulations provided by the codes were in large measure the self-rule that had long been sought by industry. Even before the act was held unconstitutional, the efforts of the Government to maintain wages had completely broken down. The N. R. A., however, was notably successful in its efforts to reduce production and maintain prices. The artificial limitation of production under N. R. A. has served greatly to increase unemployment.

B. THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

This is the most widely heralded of the new-deal measures. It recognizes, first, that workers cannot earn enough during their productive years to take care of themselves in their old age, and for that reason the Government imposes a tax on the pay rolls of all workers to provide a small income for the aged.

It also recognizes that there can be no certainty of employment under the profit system; that workers cannot be expected to earn enough while employed to take care of themselves during periods of unemployment, and for that reason pay rolls are further taxed to take care of the unemployed.

Security based on scarcity and the taxation of a lowering wage scale is the worst kind of security. It was adopted by Bismarck in Germany 50 years ago as a means of stabilizing and preserving the capitalist system, which had become extremely shaky.

There is no reason for the doles of a charity capitalism in the United States; adequate provision can be made for the aged and incapacitated only by use of the vast surpluses which would roll forth if our productive machinery were operated at full capacity. The only security that will be possible in the future is a security made possible by an abundance economy. The so-called "Social Security Act" of the new deal is only the security of artificial poverty.

C. THE A. A. A.

With the breakdown of world commerce it was, of course, necessary for the Federal Government to help the cotton, corn, wheat, and tobacco farmers to adapt themselves to the new-deal pattern of a scarcity system. As a result 3,000,000 farmers were paid $777,000,000 in 1934 to withdraw from production approximately 46,000,000 acres of land, while at the same time another governmental agency informs us that 2 out of every 5 school children are suffering from malnutrition. The reduction of acreage under the A. A. A. has lessened the demand for agricultural labor and to that extent has increased unemployment.

This is particularly true in the South, where cotton acreage has been reduced by 28 percent in 1935. The result of this has been that farms formerly worked by share-croppers have been thrown into large plantations worked by miserably paid day laborers for whose welfare the land owners accept no responsibility in off seasons. As a result statistics in the cotton area show a reduction in tenancy, although this actually means agricultural feudalism and an increase in agricultural unemployment.

The attempt to limit cotton production to domestic consumption means that the cotton markets of the world are being lost to other countries which are going into the production of cotton. The implication of this situation for the South is particularly serious. It means that in the future the income of the South will be whatever the rest of the country is willing that it should be. The South is going permanently on the dole.

D. THE R. F. C.

This organization was set up by President Hoover and a Democratic Congress in February 1932 and has been continued as an integral part of the new-deal program. Its purpose is to rescue insolvent bankers and business men from bankruptcy—if they are sufficiently large and important. It loaned $93,000,000 to the insolvent Dawes bank in Chicago, but at the same time it refused to save thousands of little banks that were in no worse condition.

Through this and other agencies the sum of $10,280,000,000 had been loaned as of June 1, 1935, to banks, railroads, business concerns, farmers, and home owners. Ninety-five percent of this money is for long-term financing. In other words, these loans were made by the Government rather than by private banks for the reason that the borrowers were not bankable risks. Practically all business improvement over 1933 is due to Government spending. The Nation as a whole is on the dole.

E. THE C. C. C. CAMPS

This agency has been expanded to take in 600,000 boys. It is a disguised form of poor relief. Twenty-five dollars of the boys' wages of $30 a month are sent to their parents, who are usually on poor relief. The boys receive $5 a month. Because of economic conditions, 70 percent of the boys seek to reenlist and continue to work for $5 a month. This is one of the more successful of the new-deal projects, and it has bears a striking resemblance to Hitler's work battalions. It is doubtful if even the Hitler forces have been so careless of the safety of the men, however, as the Federal officials have been in the recent Key West disaster.

F. THE F. E. R. A.

With about 20,000,000 people on relief, 42 percent of whom were employed on made-work projects—P. W. A.—the Government was spending about $163,000,000 a month. At the same time a careful study by industrial engineers employed by the F. E. R. A. demonstrates that if the unemployed were put to work in idle factories supplying their own needs, they could be maintained on the same standard of living for about $60,000,000 a month. The study further shows that with an expenditure of $78,000,000 a month the living standards of people on relief could be raised about 35 percent. This would mean a higher standard of living than that enjoyed by people employed in industry.

It would seem reasonable to suppose that the Government would immediately adopt a plan that would result in a saving of $85,000,000 a month, particularly if it would eliminate the demoralization of idleness and raise the living standards of the people on relief by 35 percent. The opposition of business to a scheme of this kind has, however, been so great that the administration has not dared to go ahead with it. As a matter of fact, not only has this plan not been pushed but many worth-while self-help projects have been abandoned. A year ago the F. E. R. A. administrator permitted the unemployed to use surplus cotton to make mattresses for their own use. This was reasonable, since they had no mattresses, and no money with which to buy mattresses. But even this part of the F. E. R. A. program has been abandoned under business pressure. It will be seen, therefore, that 60 percent of the money spent by the F. E. R. A. goes to help business rather than the people on relief.

G. THE F. H. A. (FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION)

The original set-up provided for loans for modernization, construction, and so forth, at a rate of 9.7 percent. This is, of course, preposterous. In England loans of this kind are made at 3.5 percent, with the result that a great deal of construction has taken place. But presumably, even though economic conditions may not justify an interest rate of more than 2 percent, loaning money at 3.5 percent would interfere with private business in the same field. Hence an interest rate of 9.7 percent. In one district the F. H. A. has spent $350,000 to promote its program and has so far taken in only $20,000.

H. THE GUFFEY ACT AND WAGNER LABOR DISPUTES ACT

These two measures are important to organized labor. As the depression continues there is less and less work for the skilled workers, who constitute the backbone of the craft unions of the American Federation of Labor. Their skills are being destroyed by technological advances. As a result, the American Federation of Labor is compelled to look for its organizational strength in those fields where the semiskilled and unskilled are engaged, the mass-production plants. And here the unions need the strong arm of the Government to assist them in their organizing efforts against the powerful and dominating corporations of the country.

Because of the hostility of these great corporations and the unwillingness of local, State, and Federal governments to assist labor in its organizing work—in fact, the various governmental units are used too often as strike-breaking agencies—only a relatively small percentage of all manual and nonmanual labor is organized. So far as the great body of labor is concerned, therefore, it is vital to consider what the effect of the new-deal policies has been on wages, cost of living, unemployment, and economic security.

I. THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The W. P. A. has succeeded the P. W. A. under the relief department. The principal difference is that prevailing wages are no longer paid for relief work. The wage rate set runs from $19 a month for common labor to $93 a month for skilled and professional labor. It is intended that the average shall be about $50 a month.

Since this work is largely in the construction field and involves the skilled building trades, it means that wages are frequently reduced by as much as 50 percent. The policy of Government spending to aid business, at the same time, has increased prices and profits. The cost of living since May 1934 has gone up by 6 percent. And while the things the common man buys have thus gone up because of the aid given business the Government is reducing wages and the income of the wage and salaried workers through the W. P. A.

The net result of the Government following an inflationary course in dealing with business and in following a deflationary course in dealing with labor is to saddle the whole cost of the depression on the backs of labor.

Labor has learned from bitter experience that one wage rate cannot be maintained by the Government and another wage rate by industry. Labor is fluid and will tend to seek a common level. The only alternative would be the establishment in this country of a caste system that would put the badge of untouchability upon people who accept relief work. Fortunately, with our traditional opposition to class and caste, such a system would be an impossibility in the United States.

J. THE T. V. A.

This is the one bright spot in the whole new-deal program. It is the one important project undertaken by the new deal which looks in the direction of an abundance economy rather than toward the maintenance of an outworn scarcity system by artificial means.

K. PLANNING WITHOUT A CENTRAL PLAN

There is a great deal of talk about planning under the new deal. It is perhaps this talk that is needlessly arousing much business antagonism against the new deal, because the business leaders of the country are realistic enough to know that genuine planning must necessarily call for the substitution of a planned economy for the present planless and broken-down profit system. As a matter of fact, however, these business leaders need have no fear of new-deal planning.

This so-called "planning" amounts to nothing more or less than cooperation on the part of the Federal Government with local politicians and business interests. What is done in one part of the country usually cancels what is done in some other part of the country, with the net result of zero, except that business has derived temporary benefits from the money spent. For instance, in many States the Government is buying up submarginal land to take it out of cultivation. This permits the payment of delinquent taxes and insures the receipt of pay checks by officeholders in the areas affected. On the other hand, the Government cooperates with other politicians to bring into cultivation thousands of acres of submarginal land in the name of rural resettlement and rehabilitation, as witness Penderlea, N. C., 6,000 acres; Piedmont, Ga., 15,000 acres; Richton, Miss., 8,000 acres; and Cumberland, Tenn., 15,000 acres.

The Federal Government will spend $400,000,000 for the construction of the Grand Coulee Dam. This will bring into cultivation 1,250,000 acres of good irrigable land. In the meantime, the Government is paying millions of dollars to farmers to withdraw millions of acres of equally good land from cultivation.

The Government's plan to persuade industry to decentralize and to move some of the manufacturing operations to subsistence homestead areas is subject to the same criticism. For instance, it is reported that the General Electric Co. will move a small assembling unit from Bridgeport, Conn., to the project at Reedsville, W. Va. While jobs may be created at Reedsville, unemployment to just that extent will result in Hartford. A great deal of money will be spent in the process, while the net result will be zero.

The Government is now spending millions of dollars to help ambitious young men and women through college, despite the fact that those who do get through can find no openings. The Government is spending other millions of dollars to teach young people special skills, even though machinery is displacing those people possessed of these skills.

The result of all this new-deal planning is merely to demonstrate that there can be no real planning as long as the whole purpose of the new deal is to maintain the scarcity system. Upon inspection, it is only too apparent that the so-called "Roosevelt revolution" is nothing more or less than charity capitalism. Nothing but bones and scraps for the American workers, whether on the farms or in industry.

II. THE STATE OF THE NATION IN 1935 AFTER "THE RECENT DEPRESSION"

The United States has a total population of approximately 127,000,000 people. It has a total present value of about $300,000,000,000. If we let $100 represent the total wealth and 100 people represent the total population, the wealth of the country would be divided as follows: 1 man would own $59; 1 man would own $9; 22 men would each own $1.22; 76 men would each own less than 7 cents; total men, 100; total money, $100.

This statement is based upon a survey conducted by the Federal Trade Commission in 1926, which in turn was based upon the distribution of wealth as disclosed by the probate records for 1921 and 1922. It is conceded that these figures do not correctly represent the distribution of wealth as of that time, for they do not take into consideration the people who gave away their property to their children before they died.

At the present time, however, farmers and workers have nothing to give to their children. According to newspaper accounts, it is the Rockefellers, Mellons, and Fords who are now turning their property over to their children in anticipation of death. It is generally conceded by students of the subject that the Federal Trade Commission figures presented in 1926 are a substantially correct picture as of the present time.

Robert Doane, in the Measurement of American Wealth, estimated that in 1929, 1 percent of the people owned 40 percent of the Nation's total wealth, while on the other hand 40 percent of the people owned only 4 percent of the Nation's wealth. Six years of depression, however, have greatly concentrated ownership in a few hands.

A. DISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL INCOME

Here is the way income was divided in 1929—supposedly a very prosperous year: 144,000 persons got $10,000,000,000; 47,000,000 persons got $10,000,000,000; average for each of the 144,000, $69,444 income; average for each of the 47,000,000, $213.

Each of the 144,000 of the rich received 326 times the income of the 47,000,000 of the poor. One-tenth of 1 percent of the families at the top received as much income as 42 percent of the families at the bottom.

In 1929, 513 wealthy people alone received as much income as the total income received by 8,000,000 poor people. After 6 years of depression, the rich and poor have been generally shoved down the income ladder. At the present time approximately 70 percent of the American people live on a subsistence or poverty level.

B. WAGES

A study of the National Bureau of Economic Research shows that from June 1933 to the end of 1934 there had been a general decline in real wages. During the past year some major industries have maintained wages, but in other industries, such as boot and shoe, men's clothing, department and retail stores, wages have dropped from 10 to 50 percent. The Monthly Labor Review, put out by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, estimated that an income of $90.77 per month was necessary in November 1934 for a family of five on relief to maintain a standard of living indispensable if they are to meet the primary needs of their families and themselves.

C. THE UNEMPLOYED

Estimates of unemployment vary from ten to fifteen million. If consideration is taken of the large number of young people who have never worked, but who would be working if times were normal, it is safe to say that there are more than 12,000,000 unemployed workers in the country.

During the summer of 1935 industrial production has gone up rapidly without any corresponding increase in the number employed. This is due to the fact that many of those working part time were more steadily employed. Production could perhaps be increased to the 1929 level, and eight or ten million workers would still remain unemployed.

D. RELIEF

There were 22,000,000 people on relief last winter. The average for the year will perhaps run in excess of 20,000,000. This number includes not only wage and salaried workers of every description but also tens of thousands of storekeepers, building contractors, musicians, manufacturers, artists, bankers, teachers, engineers, clergymen, lawyers, and doctors. While business leaders protest about the extravagance of relief, the fact of the matter is that people on relief are being so poorly fed that they cannot maintain their health.

A recent study by the United States Health Institute shows that the rate of sickness of those on relief is 60 percent higher than among those whose incomes have remained the same, 39 percent higher than those having full-time wage earners in the family, and 25 percent higher than those of the same group containing part-time workers.

Statements by prominent Republicans that relief is extravagant show these Republican leaders to be indecent and without a sense of shame. Dr. Walter R. Campbell, of the department of medicine of the University of Toronto, addressing the annual meeting of the American Medical Association, held at Atlantic City in June 1935, said:

> Twenty-five million of the unemployed in Canada and the United States are in danger of becoming unemployable by eating a relief diet too high in carbohydrates and too low in proteins, for reasons of economy. Much emphasis has been placed on the economy of starch calories as opposed to fat calories, which are relatively expensive. Unemployment diets are tending to run high in carbohydrates. * * * The apparent inevitable degradation from unemployed to unemployable should not be accelerated by a falsely economical provision of foodstuffs.

Throughout the country it has become necessary to lower school standards because the undernourished condition of relief children does not permit them to keep up with their classes. Recently Dr. Adela J. Smith, assistant director of health education in New York City, made the following report to the school board:

> Lack of sufficient food has wasted the bodies and warped the mental vigor of more than 100,000 school children here, until they can no longer keep up with their better-fed classmates in school work. In the elementary schools alone there are nearly 135,000 seriously undernourished youngsters.

This statement regarding New York City is particularly significant in view of the fact that relief standards are higher in New York City than in almost any other State in the Union.

E. YOUTH—THE LOST GENERATION

The saddest aspect of the whole depression is its effect upon the young people between the ages of 19 and 29, who have grown up only to enter a world that has no place for them. It is estimated that there are in the United States today between eleven and twelve million young men between the ages of 19 and 29. There are an equal number of young women between the same ages. Figures as to the number of these young people who are involuntarily unemployed are difficult to calculate. Facts, however, are available, such as the statistics for marriage applications, for enlistment in the C. C. C., and the published reports of unemployment among college graduates. These figures would indicate that from 45 to 70 percent of these people are unemployed; that is to say, between five and one-half and eight million young men and perhaps an equal number of young women; this means that we have between eleven and sixteen million young men and women between the ages of 19 and 29 who have reached manhood and womanhood only to find the world does not need them.

F. THE INDEPENDENT AMERICAN FARMER—A LOST CAUSE

Last winter there were 650,000 farmers on relief. The reason is not far to seek, if we merely look at the average income of the farmers since the depression started. The net average income per family, which includes the value of house rental, farm produce used by family, and so forth, was as follows:

Total farm income

1924	$966.50
1925	1,022.30
1926	920.00
1927	939.50
1928	931.33
1929	942.50
1930	641.33
1931	396.00
1932	244.00
1933	437.83

It is obvious, of course, that the farmers cannot continue to live and feed the people of the Nation on an income of this kind. The result is that the farmers without past savings have to depend on relief for help, while those who have savings accumulated in the past are rapidly losing out.

During the past 9 years as many as 1,185,600 farmers lost their farms through foreclosures. In the meantime the percentage of farm tenancies went up from 38 percent in 1920 to 39 percent in 1925, 42 percent in 1930, 46 percent in 1932, and 49 percent in 1934; nor does this tell the whole story.

Before the war the farmers' real-estate mortgage indebtedness was $3,320,000,000. At the present time it is $8,200,000,000, with mortgage acreage trebled. This is particularly serious in view of the fact that the total net farm income in 1919 was $9,000,000,000, while in 1933 it had shrunk to $2,627,000,000; and also, where the value of all farm property was $79,000,000,000 in 1919, this had fallen to $38,000,000,000 in 1933.

When we take into account the farmers' indebtedness, we find that his net capital has shrunk from $34,389,000,000 in 1924 to $19,079,000,000 in 1933, a loss of $15,310,000,000. All of this means that from 1924 to 1933 the average farm family has received an average annual income of $744, but, on the other hand, has suffered a loss in net capital of $255 a year, leaving an average net income of $489 during this period of 10 years.

G. AMERICAN BUSINESS

There has been substantial business improvement since 1933. This improvement has been due almost entirely to the ten or fifteen billion dollars that have been spent by the Government in order to stimulate business. The prosperity, however, has largely gone to the 600 corporations that own two-thirds of all American industry. As far as the small business man is concerned, there has been very little improvement. Business as such is on the dole.

H. ECONOMIC SYSTEM HALF OPEN MARKET, HALF CLOSED MARKET

The concentration of ownership in the hands of a few great corporations has served to break down the flexible prices established in an open market by the forces of supply and demand. In the place of these flexible prices there has been substituted inflexible administered prices; as a result we find that the depression has brought these striking contrasts:

1929 to 1933	Percent drop in prices	Percent drop in production
Agricultural implements	6	80
Motor vehicles	16	80
Cement	18	65
Iron and steel	20	83
Auto tires	33	70
Textile products	45	30
Food products	49	14
Leather	50	20
Petroleum	56	20
Agricultural commodities	63	6

The result has not only been the complete despoliation of the raw-material producers but also the creation of a situation that must result in the destruction of the present economic system.

III. PRESENT DIFFICULTIES DUE TO BREAK-DOWN OF CAPITALIST SYSTEM

In 1929 the American Historical Association appointed a commission of eminent historians, economists, and political scientists to make a study of the world economic situation. After 5 years of study they made their report, dated May 21, 1934. It opens with this significant paragraph:

> Cumulative evidence supports the conclusion that in the United States as in other countries the age of individualism and laissez faire in economy and government is closing and that a new age of collectivism is emerging.

In other words, in the opinion of these eminent scholars, this is not merely another depression or panic, such as we have known during the past 150 years, but it is rather the end of an epoch. It is a situation where an economic system is distintegrating and not to be compared with the periods of contraction and expansion that we have known heretofore. This becomes particularly clear if we compare conditions in this country with conditions that obtain in European countries where the depression is about a decade further advanced.

The period in which we live cannot be properly compared with any other period unless it might be the time in European history 150 years ago, when the feudal system was disintegrating and making way for the system that we have come to know as "capitalism."

A. ANALYSIS OF THE NATURE OF CAPITALISM

Capitalism is essentially an organism that grows and flourishes only so long as it has room and food for growth. The industrial machine flourishes only so long as it is able to operate at a profit. This profit in turn must find new fields in which it can be successfully reinvested for the purpose of producing for a profit. When these new fields are fully developed they in turn require further fields and further opportunities for profitable reinvestment of profits. It is a system that requires ever-widening horizons for expansions.

The effect of this expansion on reinvestment of capital is well illustrated by the so-called "period of prosperity" from 1922 to 1930. During this time we had a reinvestment of capital amounting to $8,000,000,000 a year. This expenditure for capital equipment served to keep the Nation's economic machinery operating. This $8,000,000,000 a year spent on plant and machinery equipment went in the main to labor, either directly or indirectly in the process of being spent. What happened in 1929 was the fact that the wealthy investing class could no longer see any chance for profitable reinvestment of capital and as a consequence the amount of money reinvested fell from about $8,000,000,000 a year to less than half a billion in 1932.

The following illustrations will serve to show the type of frontiers that were available in the past, but which are closed to us at the present time.

1. Land frontiers

Until 1897 the United States still had its physical frontiers. People who were thrown out of work during periods of depression could take up homesteads and employ themselves raising agricultural produce, which could always be sold in the open markets of Europe. As long as these frontiers were open and existed, there were opportunities for reinvestment of capital in the way of building railroads, towns, and the like. But at the present time there are no longer any physical frontiers available. We have sent a few hundred hardy farmers to fight with the mosquitoes in Alaska, but obviously Alaska will never serve to take the place of our lost frontier. We could, of course, arrange to build railroads from one end of Africa to the other or from one end of South America to the other, but the American people have learned that they could never expect to be repaid for doing so.

2. Trade frontiers

Upon the settlement of any new territory, the wants and needs of the people are unlimited. They are able to produce great quantities of raw materials because of the virgin fertility of the soil, and as a result they can sell these raw materials for a low price in return for manufactured goods. This serves to stimulate industry and manufacturing; but there finally comes a time when the soil fertility becomes exhausted and other cheaper raw-material-producing areas are brought into existence. At this point the natural thing is to look for expansion in the field of foreign trade. We have, however, gone as far as possible in this field. There is less and less opportunity for foreign trade as other nations proceed to erect tariff walls, within-the-empire agreements, trade restrictions, and actual prohibitions against the importation of American goods. When we consider the vast amounts of foreign indebtedness due and owing to us, which will never be paid, it is quite obvious that in this country expansion through foreign trade is a door that is permanently closed.

3. Domestic industrial, scientific frontiers

After we came to the end of our frontiers in 1897, there was still the room for expansion made possible by modern science; the need for vast factories, power development, the coming of the automobile and the good roads, and the building of our great cities to take care of the needs of a rapidly growing people and of a rapidly developing industrial system.

But there is very little chance for further development along this line. Our productive plant is now running only at about 50 percent of actual capacity. There is, therefore, very little use in building new factories while we cannot use those that we have already built. Business men talk about the coming of some new invention, such as the automobile, which will create new frontiers; but nobody knows what it is going to be and, even if it were to come, it would merely open the way for more labor-saving machinery. Since the depression began, output per man-hour in manufacturing has gone up more than 35 percent. This means that we could go back to the industrial output of 1929 and still leave 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 people permanently unemployed.

4. Foreign industrial frontiers

After the Spanish-American War we entered upon the field of imperialist expansion. This applied not only to the sale of consumption goods abroad but also in the development of foreign countries by building railroads, setting up industrial plants, and so forth. American investors now own idle plants and equipment in almost every country in the world. This is particularly true in the South American countries. There is no purpose in making further investments of this kind. Moreover, other nations are looking for outlets of the same kind, and if we were to push our plans too strenuously we should probably merely compete with the plans of other nations, with the inevitable result of war.

5. War

When all other means of expansion have been tried and exhausted, the one resource for capitalist countries is to resort to war. War results not only because of the clash of imperialistic interest in backward countries, but also because war furnishes an immediate outlet for the capitalist systems of the countries involved. The world capitalist system had begun to enter upon such a slowing-up process in 1913. The World War, however, offered unlimited opportunities for the destruction of men, material, and services. In the United States alone the World War furnished an artificial outlet for approximately $45,000,000,000 of goods and services.

Following the World War we were able to keep going on the momentum gained because of our ability to delude ourselves into believing that our foreign debts were collectible. The sale of billions of dollars of worthless foreign securities permitted foreign nations to pay their interest charges and also to buy additional American goods.

Under the new deal we are getting some of the benefits of war, through the creation of wealth on the one hand and the destruction of wealth on the other, such as paying $400,000,000 to build the Grand Coulee Dam, to bring 1,250,000 acres of land into cultivation, while Iowa farmers have just been paid $8,000,000 to take equally good land out of cultivation. This illustration of new-deal activity could be extended indefinitely. There is no question that it is far preferable to going to war, even though it may seem rather foolish from the standpoint of sound economic planning.

There is no question, however, that the world capitalist system is again seeking war as an outlet for want of other frontiers. There are important men in the governments of every country that are constantly trying to crowd matters so that another war will be precipitated. These men are closely tied up with the army and navy and with the munitions makers. They try to monopolize patriotic motives to themselves and to denounce everyone who opposes them as being unpatriotic.

There is no question that another war would furnish trade outlets for more goods and services to be destroyed. It would also result in bringing about a temporary period of prosperity. Such prosperity, however, would be short-lived, and the consequences of such a war would be too terrible to contemplate.

IV. NATIONAL SURVEY OF POTENTIAL PRODUCT CAPACITY SHOWS AN AVERAGE ANNUAL INCOME OF $4,370 PER FAMILY IS NOW POSSIBLE IN THE UNITED STATES

The United States, with a population of 126,425,000, contains 6.1 percent of the total world population. According to Robert Doane, in his book, The Measurement of American Wealth, the United States in 1928 enjoyed 44.8 percent of the world's wealth. This means that the per capita wealth of the average American is approximately 12 times as great as the average per capita wealth outside the United States.

The significance of this is that in the United States, for the first time in the history of mankind, the problem of production has been solved. This is strikingly illustrated by the following production figures for the United States and the rest of the world of some of the principal commodities necessary to a highly industrialized civilization:

Production of coal, oil, and metal
(In metric tons—2,204 pounds)

Year	Metal, etc.	United States	Rest of world
1929 [1]	Pig iron	43,298,000	55,322,000
1929 [1]	Steel ingots	57,339,000	63,221,000
1929 [1]	Copper	998,000	912,000
1929 [1]	Aluminum	137,000	135,000
1929 [1]	Cement	29,481,000	45,219,000
1929 [1]	Coal	552,309,000	780,191,000
1929 [2]	Crude petroleum (barrels)	1,007,300,000	482,100,000

A. THE NATIONAL SURVEY OF POTENTIAL PRODUCT CAPACITY

For some time the American people have been fully conscious of the fact that the country's productive facilities were not fully used. Various studies have been made revealing waste in industry, but on the whole these efforts have been piecemeal. In 1921 Secretary of Commerce Hoover included the following question in a census of manufacturers: "What is your estimate of the percentage of your output compared with your possible output, if you had such a demand as to require full running time?" The average of the returns in 1921 was 57.1 percent.

Little more was done with this problem until the technocratic movement in the fall of 1932 took the country by storm with the suggestion that full use of our scientific knowledge in production would provide goods and services to the value of $20,000 a year to each family, with four 5-hour workdays for persons between 20 and 45 years.

While many of the claims made by the technocrats were valid, other claims upon which they based their case were obviously exaggerated. As a result, interest in the movement quickly subsided. It was the feeling of many people, however, that despite the exaggerations of some of the early technocratic statements, the field was nevertheless one that ought to be carefully surveyed. For that reason the F. E. R. A., in February 1934, set up the National Survey of Potential Product Capacity to determine so far as possible what the country could produce if wasted productive capacity were fully employed. This survey was under the direction of Mr. Harold Loeb, with Dr. Walter Polakov, an internationally famous engineer, as technical director. They were assisted by about 50 engineers, statisticians, and economists. After a thorough study of our productive capacity, this group concluded that it was possible in the United States to furnish all the American people with an abundance of the common necessities of life and, in addition, with many things now regarded as luxuries.

The committee, in approaching the study, discovered that there would be no purpose in operating our entire plant, because much of the plant is greatly overbuilt. For instance, the radio factories could produce 10 times more radios than the people could possibly use. It was necessary, therefore, to begin the survey with a study of the wants of the people, and in this field, fortunately, there were other Government surveys to guide them.

For instance, the United States Department of Agriculture has worked out four types of diets, two of which are deficient in important food values, although they approximate the diets on which the great majority of the people live. Less than 30,000,000 people in the prosperity year of 1929 enjoyed diets considered adequate or liberal by the United States Department of Agriculture dietitians.

Nevertheless the National Survey of Potential Product Capacity found that within 5 years the foods necessary to provide a liberal diet to every American could be produced by American agriculture.

In calculating the clothing needs of the people the survey took the results of standards worked out for the professional groups in San Francisco. It was found that it would be possible to provide all the American people with clothing equal to the standards set by these professional people. It was found by the Survey that with full use of our building-construction facilities every American family could be housed in a modern 6-room house or its equivalent, fully equipped, within about 15 years. The United States today is the most poorly housed modern nation in the world.

According to the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, more than one-third of the American people live in dwellings and neighborhoods of such a character as to injure their health, endanger the safety and morals, and interfere with the normal life of the inhabitants. This statement applies to 5,000,000 farm houses and 6,000,000 houses in villages, towns, and cities. As there are only 6,500,000 farm families, it is thus seen that three-fourths of all farm families live in homes unfit for human habitation—a striking condition in a modern country. Ninety-two percent of farm homes had no bath tubs, 80 percent had no running water, and 89 percent had no electricity.

The survey found that the American people were receiving only 50 percent of necessary medical attention, and only 20 percent of necessary dental care. Allowance was made in the budget which it compiled, for full medical and dental care, and for other professional services. Budget provision was also made for an automobile for every family, adequate recreational and educational facilities, and so forth, for all the people.

Having determined what was desirable in goods and services to provide all the American people an American standard of living, the survey then proceeded to determine whether it would be possible to provide these goods and services.

It was found that within a period of 5 years it would be possible to provide an income, in goods and services, equal to what one hundred and thirty-five billions of 1929 dollars would buy. There were actually produced in 1929 goods and services to the value of $96,000,000,000. At the present time the country's productive plant is operated at approximately 50 percent of actual capacity.

With the then-existing plant operating at capacity, a national income of $135,000,000,000 could have been produced in 1929. This would have meant an average income per family of $4,370. This was the conclusion of the National Survey of Potential Product Capacity, after 8 months of painstaking study.

V. How to Get Full Production

The historian, Charles A. Beard, states that—

All history can be explained in terms of these three great natural laws of history:
First. They whom the gods would destroy they first make mad.
Second. The bee also fertilizes the flower that it robs.
Third. When it gets sufficiently dark, the stars can be seen.

As the depression has gone on and on, and the futility of the new deal to stabilize a scarcity system becomes increasingly obvious, there emerge out of the economic confusion the general outlines of the economic system which will supersede the present capitalist system.

First of all, there is the fact that 200 great corporations own more than 50 percent of all corporate wealth and more than 40 percent of all business wealth; that 600 corporations own two-thirds of all American industry, leaving the other one-third to be divided among 10,000,000 small business men. In the second place, there is the fact that the 200 great corporations, with assets of $81,074,000,000, during the past 20 years have grown just two and one-half times as fast as the other 300,000 corporations. It is therefore only a matter of time until the great corporations will own everything worth owning. And, finally, there is the fact that the small group who are the directors of these 200 corporations own less than 6 percent of the outstanding stock.

The economics textbooks all used to stress the fact that it was essential to combine ownership and operation in the same person to get the best results. "Give a man a garden to rent", they said, "and he will soon make a desert out of it; give him a desert to own, and he will soon make a garden out of it."

Unfortunately for this point of view, the divorce between ownership and control that the classical economists feared under socialism has already come to pass under capitalism.

This is the situation that confronts the American people at the present time. We have in the country a great many mossbacks, who belong in the nineteenth century, who argue that we should break up these great corporations into little corporations. This is not only sheer nonsense but it is also utterly impossible. It is also impossible to control these great corporations through regulation.

But why should we be so unduly worried about the growth of these great corporations? They have shown us how to produce goods in abundance, and they have also demonstrated that the corporate set-up is the proper machinery for the administration of a highly complex industrial system. Our problem is not to destroy the corporations but rather to carry forward to its logical conclusion this remarkably efficient instrument.

A. An American solution

In the United States the custom has always been to leave to private exploitation all functions until, finally, when they became too important from a social standpoint, they were taken over and operated by the people, as witness:

First. In the beginning national defense was left to the profit motive, as illustrated by the hiring of Hessians and Indians by the British, and the issuance of letters of marque and reprisal by the Colonists to privateers. When national defense became sufficiently important, the Army and Navy were nationalized.

Second. Roads at one time in this country were toll roads, privately owned and maintained. Our road system has now been nationalized.

Third. The Postal System was once privately owned. Service was expensive, slow, and uncertain. The Postal System has been nationalized.

Fourth. Education in this country was once purely a field for private venture. The free public-school system has taken its place. The same thing can be said of fire departments, municipal water systems, many utility systems, and, of course, the really difficult engineering feats, which always have had to be performed by the Government, such as the Panama Canal, Boulder Dam, and so forth.

For 6 years private industry has now shown that it is incapable of operating the Nation's productive plant at more than half capacity. The welfare of every citizen in the country depends on the operation of the Nation's productive plant at full capacity. The time has now come to apply the familiar American solution. The production of goods must be made a national function.

B. No Supreme Court veto in industry

It stands to reason that as long as the economic system was self-regulating and self-sufficient, it was possible to have a political government with an elaborate system of checks and balances designed to prevent action by either the executive or legislative arm of the Government. Imagine what would happen in a corporation with two boards of directors, each with the power to overrule the other, a president of the corporation with the power to veto the acts of the joint board of directors, and a supreme court with the power to set aside the decisions of the directors and the corporation president.

C. Ownership of productive machinery

Such a plan as has been indicated does not involve the confiscation of property without compensation. There is no reason why present stockholders should not be compensated for the reasonable market value of their property. If our productive plant were operated at full capacity, we could produce an annual income in terms of goods and services equal to $135,000,000,000. Since the depression began, we have failed to produce goods and services of more than $350,000,000,000, due to our failure to operate our plant at full capacity. The total value of the United States and everything in it is estimated to be less than $300,000,000,000 at the present time.

As a matter of fact, a plan of this kind would not involve the degree of confiscation that the new deal has resorted to in taking from small holders their gold and paying them 59 cents of its market value. Eventually the people would own all the productive machinery. In the beginning, the Government might give the present security holders other securities of equal value in a great central Government corporation, or it might permit them to retain their present evidences of indebtedness and merely take over the power of corporate control which now vests not in the stockholders but merely in the holders of 6 percent of the outstanding corporate stock.

The ultimate goal of the type of program that has been outlined would be the disallowance of absentee ownership. While this might be regarded as the taking away of the right to own property by the 2 percent of the people who own 70 percent of all the country's wealth, it would operate rather to restore the right to own property as far as the average man is concerned. It would again become possible for a farmer to own as many acres of land as he and his family could farm without the necessity of exploiting the labor of others. It would make it possible for every family to own and live in a modern, well-equipped, six-room house. It would make it possible for every family to enjoy an American standard of living. It would make it possible for every child to have full opportunity for education.

It would insure in every individual the right to work and at a wage which the full productive capacity of society would make possible. It would make it possible to give to every individual a guaranty of adequate income during periods of ill health or other misfortune. It would make it possible to give to every old person an adequate income to maintain him or her with a high standard of living. As far as 85 percent of the American people are concerned a program seeking the ultimate disallowance of absentee ownership would operate rather to restore the right to own private property than the taking away of this right.

D. METHOD OF TRANSITION

If a majority of the American people could be persuaded that this were a desirable solution, there is no question that the transition could be effected in a peaceful manner. With a majority in both Houses of Congress, as well as a President committed to the plan of production for use, the first step would be the amendment of the Constitution so as to give Congress full power to enact the necessary legislation. After this, either a great central corporation, "The United States, Inc.", or a great central planning board, with full control over industry, could be created. From that point the essential means of production would be operated according to a central plan, calling for the full utilization of the Nation's productive capacity.

E. TECHNICAL—NOT POLITICAL CONTROL

It is obvious from what has been indicated that the control of such a system would not be in the hands of political spoilsmen. Congress might still continue to meet as the general policy committee, representing the consumers of the Nation, and generally comparable to the stockholders' meeting of a corporation. The control, however, of the various productive units would be left in the hands of those technically trained to operate them.

VI. A NEW PARTY NEEDED

It is imperative that the forces seeking a production-for-use economy be united in a new political party.

If the transition from a scarcity economy to an abundance economy is to be made by peaceful and legal means, it can only be after political power has been won. Political power of this kind cannot be achieved through the process of boring from within one of the old parties. It can only come about as the result of a mass movement committed to the principle of production for use, instead of for private profit. Such a mass movement must be built on mass enthusiasm and mass conviction. We should recognize first of all that such a mass movement cannot be built around the plan calling for the capture of one of the two old parties.

Practically everyone is willing to admit today that the Republican Party is the party of Bourbonism in the North and of political postmasters in the South. The idea of trying to liberalize either group is fantastic. The Republican Party was in power during 3½ years of depression. During that time it demonstrated that it had no program save doles for big business, but not for the poor. At the present time it can be counted upon to stand for the barest subsistence dole for the unemployed. The Republican Party is planning for permanent poverty for this group. Since Hoover was ousted from office 2½ years ago the Republican Party has evolved no plan of any kind whatsoever. Its attitude is one of pure negation. Its program is purely an appeal to psychological lag—i. e., the inability of the mass mind to keep pace with reality.

As far as the Democratic Party is concerned, the situation is not materially different. Two-thirds of the Democratic Representatives in the United States Congress are just as conservative as are the Republicans. The Democratic Party, despite the fact that it may be controlled by liberals in a few States, is nevertheless controlled in a national sense by the reactionary plantation-owning element in the South and the corrupt political machines in the large northern cities.

Despite the reputed liberalism of the Democratic Party in certain States, there is actually less chance of liberalizing the party nationally than there has ever been. This is because the Democratic Party is today the greatest vested interest in the country. It happens to be in power at a time when political power is more important than it has been since 1860. The present Congress is the first $10,000,000,000 peace-time Congress in history. The party in political power has the control of the expenditure of this vast sum.

It stands to reason that principle becomes insignificant when compared to the importance of maintaining the present political control. For this reason we may expect that the Democratic leaders will support the Representatives now in the House and Senate without regard to the question whether they are liberal or conservative. They will support them because obviously these men have a greater chance of being reelected and carrying the party ticket than someone who has not demonstrated his ability to get elected.

As a result, we have the amusing spectacle of the chairman of the Democratic Party fraternizing with the originator of the Epic movement in California, despite the fact that during the past 6 months the national administration has abandoned practically every step looking toward the building of cooperatives or the putting of the Epic plan into operation. Because the Democratic Party will, in the final analysis, be controlled by the reactionary elements, it stands to reason that no important movement on a national scale can be built around the idea of liberalizing a party where the facts render such a plan impossible.

This, however, does not mean that the production-for-use idea cannot be made the basis of a mass movement that will sweep the country. Recent political experience in the United States shows that, with the coming of the radio and a growing interest in national affairs, ideas spread rapidly. What may be possible in one State today is possible in some relatively backward State a year from now.

Success can be achieved far more easily through an independent new party than through the effort of capturing one of the old parties. This has been demonstrated in Minnesota and Wisconsin, where the Farmer-Labor Party and the Progressive Party are in control. The elections in California and Washington in 1934 demonstrate that the people are ready for a planned economy based on production for use, as against the continuance of the present scarcity system.

People today are eager to listen to frank, factual discussions of our economic system. People realize that our economic system is disintegrating. They realize that something must take its place, and they are looking for something that offers an adequate solution for the difficulties that confront them.

The old order is breaking down and must be replaced by an economic system which will substitute planning for chaos, service for profit, and abundance for poverty.

VII. AMERICAN COMMONWEALTH POLITICAL FEDERATION FORMED

Several Members of Congress, realizing the need for action, called two preliminary conferences in Washington during the spring of 1935. These two conferences resulted in the calling of a larger conference in Chicago on July 5 and 6, 1935. In the call for the Chicago conference it was stated that certain fundamentals had been agreed upon at the earlier conferences as representing the position of intelligent, forward-looking citizens. They were as follows:

1. That the old order is breaking down and must be replaced by an economic system which will substitute planning for chaos, service for profit, and abundance for poverty.
2. That the present national leadership of the two old parties offers no hope to the people of the United States.
3. That united action of all the forces working for political and economic democracy is urgent in the present crisis.
4. That any action must be based upon a fundamental program striking at the roots of the profit system.

It is significant that these fundamentals were agreed upon by the 250 persons who attended the Chicago conference, because these persons were influential individuals with large personal followings and in many cases were representative of important farm and labor organizations. It is significant, also, that at least 90 percent of these people should be in fundamental agreement on the necessity for independent political action and for the adoption of a thorough-going program to supplant our out-moded profit system with a new order based on planned production for use.

I was elected chairman of the organization which was set up—the American Commonwealth Political Federation. As the chairman of the federation, I want to say here and now that it is our purpose to see that the people in 1936 have an opportunity to vote on the fundamental issues that are at stake. It is high time that we do away with the fakery involved in a meaningless contest between the Republicans and the Democrats.

The issue today is not whether we are going to have unreformed capitalism of the Republican variety or reformed capitalism of the new-deal type. The issue today is whether we are going to have reformed capitalism on the one hand or instead the abolition of capitalism and the substitution of a service-motivated production-for-use economy.

It is the intention of the American Commonwealth Federation to cooperate with all groups and individuals in every State to help them organize their forces in the most effective manner possible, to the end that the people may go on record in every voting precinct in the land on the fundamental question of scarcity against abundance.

LEGISLATION CONSIDERED BY THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE IN THE PAST SESSION

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, during the past session the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, has considered many important bills, including, among others, the Social Security Act, the President's so-called share-the-wealth tax measure, the Alcohol Control Act, the extension of the N. R. A., the $45,000,000,000 bond authorization act, the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, retirement legislation for railroad employees, the bill providing for automatic promotions in the Customs Service, antismuggling legislation, the 2-year extension of the so-called "nuisance" taxes, the act to license customhouse brokers, and the act repealing the so-called "pink slip" law relating to income-tax publicity.

Numerous other bills were considered by the committee, some being enacted into law and others remaining on House or Senate calendars for future action. Two such bills were H. R. 191, providing for a reduction in the internal-revenue taxes on wines, and H. R. 9185, which revises the various laws relating to administration of liquor taxes. The committee also reported out a bill for the cash payment of the veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, but this measure was vetoed by the President.

In my entire 18 years of service as a member of the Ways and Means Committee I have never experienced a more trying session, nor had to consider so many major bills, as a member of that committee. We have sat both mornings and afternoons and frequently held night sessions in order to keep up with our work. This committee work, of course, is in addition to that required in giving attention to the large amount of correspondence from constituents and in attending the sessions of the House, and the many other matters which occupy a Congressman's time.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Perhaps the most important measure considered by the Ways and Means Committee this session, or even in any previous session, was the Social Security Act. This legislation in one way or another affects practically every person in the country.

The most benevolent feature of the law is that providing for Federal cooperation with the States in the payment of pensions to the needy aged. The problem of caring for this worthy class has been partially but inadequately met in many States, including New Jersey, through State old-age pensions. Under the Social Security Act the Federal Government will reimburse the States in the amount of one-half the cost of their payments for old-age pensions, provided the State laws meet certain requirements. The Federal contribution, however, is limited to $15 per month per person.

This will enable the State of New Jersey, for example, either to increase its present maximum pension of $1 per day to $1.50 without added cost to the State, or to save one-half the present cost if it does not increase the benefits now provided. I would have been glad to have seen the Federal contribution increased somewhat, because I realize that a pension of $30 per month will be quite insufficient in many cases. When the bill was before the House I voted in favor of a motion to increase the Federal limit from $15 to $20, but, unfortunately, the proposal was not adopted.

The needy blind are provided for under the act in the same manner as the needy aged. The Federal contribution in their case is also limited to $15 per month per person.

Another worthy feature of the Social Security Act is that providing for Federal assistance to the States in meeting the cost of aid to dependent children, which is sometimes referred to as mothers' pensions. The Federal contribution in this case is on the basis of one-third the amount paid out by the State, but not more than $6 per month for the first child in the family and $4 for each additional child. Other provisions of the act relating to children include Federal contributions for aid to crippled children, for maternal and child-health services, and for the extension of child-welfare services.

The act also provides for Federal contributions to the States for the extension of their public-health services, and increases the appropriations for the United States Public Health Service. Likewise, increased appropriations are provided for vocational rehabilitation of the physically disabled, and the present temporary law is made permanent.

The act in two different ways encourages the States to set up unemployment-insurance systems. The first method is by an outright grant to the States to meet the cost of administering unemployment-insurance laws, provided such laws meet certain standards set up in the act. The second method is more in the nature of coercion, since it consists in the imposition of a 3-percent pay-roll tax on employers of eight or more persons, against which such employers may deduct any contributions made to State unemployment funds up to but not exceeding 90 percent of the Federal tax. Thus employers will have to pay a tax for unemployment insurance whether their State has a law of that character or not; but, as no Federal unemployment benefits are payable, it will naturally be to the advantage of their State to enact such a law.

I do not look with favor upon this method of coercion, nor do I see any particular advantage in setting up an unemployment-insurance system at this time, since it would simply impose a heavy burden on business without providing any immediate benefits for the unemployed. It was estimated that if the States set up an unemployment system with a 3-percent tax, they could only pay benefits for 16 weeks after a 4-week waiting period, and, of course, that would be of little aid in the present emergency, even if the system could be put into operation at once, which would be out of the question. It would take several years to build up reserves before even the limited benefits contemplated could be paid, and with 11,000,000 unemployed the reserve would be exhausted in a short time.

Another feature of the bill of even more doubtful expediency at this time is that providing for a Federal system of compulsory-retirement insurance to be paid for jointly by employers and employees through the medium of a pay-roll tax eventually amounting to 3 percent on each. In the first place, the Federal Government has no power to impose such a system on private industry, and it is doubtful whether the constitutional inhibitions can be avoided by use of the taxing power. In the second place, this system will impose a tremendous additional burden upon all employers down to the small merchants with only one employee, whether they are making a cent of profit or not, and will also require employees to contribute up to 3 percent of their wages when they are having a difficult time making both ends meet on their present salaries.

Just to illustrate the extent of the additional tax burden under the unemployment-insurance and compulsory-retirement provisions, I call attention to the fact that it reaches $1,000,000,000 in 1937 and gradually increases to $2,800,000,000 in 15 years. Both these pay-roll taxes, since they put a penalty on employment, will encourage the discharge of workers rather than the hiring of additional help.

RETIREMENT PENSIONS FOR RAILROAD EMPLOYEES

Following the decision of the Supreme Court invalidating the original Railroad Retirement Act, it became necessary to give consideration to new legislation along that line. Railroad employees would have been covered by the Social Security Act, but under that law they would get no credit for past service and the benefits payable would not exceed $85 per month.

In order to avoid certain constitutional objections that might be made, the new railroad pension legislation is set up under two separate laws, the first of which provides for the payment of the benefits directly from the Treasury of the United States, and the second of which imposes the necessary taxes on railroads and railroad employees to pay the cost of these benefits.

The maximum pension payable under the new legislation is $120 per month, but it is thought that this may have to be reduced in view of the fact that the tax of 7 percent may not provide sufficient funds to pay such an amount. An investigation commission has been authorized to make a study of the situation and report back at the next session of Congress, when some changes in the law may have to be made.

NUISANCE-TAX EXTENSION

At the request of the President, Congress again extended the so-called "nuisance taxes", this time for a period of 2 more years. Before the bill was reported to the House the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee endeavored to remove the taxes on furs, toilet soaps, and gasoline and to restore the 2-cent postage rate, but were outvoted. The Democrats, in order to forestall the offering of similar motions on the House floor, brought the bill up under suspension of the rules. When these taxes were originally imposed, the taxpayers were given an implied promise that they would be allowed to expire in 2 years, but the Democratic administration has now extended them twice, once for a single year and now for 2 more years.

THE PRESIDENT'S SHARE-THE-WEALTH TAX BILL

Under the President's so-called "share-the-wealth" tax bill the surtax rates have been increased to a maximum of 75 percent, the estate tax to a maximum of 70 percent, and the gift tax to a maximum of 52½ percent; a graduated corporation tax running up to 15 percent has been substituted for the present flat rate of 13¾ percent; the capital-stock and excess-profits taxes have been increased; and 10 percent of the dividends received by one corporation from another have been made subject to the corporate income tax. The increase in the estate tax was the only change not made in accordance with the President's wishes. He had requested that a new inheritance tax be superimposed on the present estate tax, which would have resulted in virtual confiscation of estates and inheritances in many instances.

When the President sent his tax message to Congress on June 19, after having said in his Budget message that he would not propose any new taxes at this time, it was evident from its very terms that his purpose was not to increase the Federal revenues but to inaugurate certain social reforms under the guise of the Federal taxing power. The proposals were characterized throughout the country as being nothing more than a political gesture to the share-the-wealth advocates, and the fact that the changes recommended would result in increasing the revenue by only $250,000,000, when the Treasury was faced with a $4,000,000,000 deficit, made them ridiculous from the Budget-balancing standpoint.

My views on this bill were expressed in detail in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 3, pages 12447 and 12448, and there is nothing I can add to what I then said. In voting against the bill, I declared that it was "partisan in origin, socialistic in purpose, unsound in principle, and detrimental in effect."

PAYMENT OF VETERANS' ADJUSTED-COMPENSATION CERTIFICATES

While Congress passed a bill at the present session providing for the immediate cash payment of the veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, it was vetoed by the President, and the Senate sustained the veto after the House had voted to override it. Thus the legislation was killed for the present session, but it is quite likely that it will be an issue again next year.

I voted in favor of the bill when it was before the House, and also voted to override the President's veto.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING CLAIMS FOR ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Just before the close of the session an act was passed which extends until January 2, 1940, the time within which veterans who have not already done so may apply for their World War adjusted compensation. Under previously existing law, January 2, 1935, was the last date on which such claims could have been filed.

FEDERAL ALCOHOL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The decision of the Supreme Court holding the N. R. A. legislation unconstitutional not only invalidated all existing codes but at the same time left the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which had been set up under the authority of that act, without any legal basis for its existence. The new Federal Alcohol Administration Act in effect enacts into law the provisions of the various liquor codes set up under the original N. R. A. Thus the Federal Government will exercise certain social and economic control over the manufacture, sale, and distribution of alcoholic liquor, in addition to the control it exercises in connection with the protection of the revenue.

As reported to the House, the bill carried a provision upsetting the present Treasury Department regulations requiring the distribution of wine and distilled spirits in bottles. This provision, if it had been enacted into law, would have permitted bulk sales of wines and spirits in barrels. While the House accepted the provision, it was rejected by the Senate on the basis of representations made by the Treasury and by State liquor administrators that it would increase the opportunities for bootlegging and would cause a large loss of revenue, and in addition it would seriously affect the glass industry in south New Jersey and other States.

As finally enacted the Federal Alcohol Administration Act not only allows the present Treasury regulations to be continued but provides specific authority in the law for their promulgation.

GUFFEY-SNYDER COAL STABILIZATION ACT

The Guffey-Snyder Coal Stabilization Act, which was one of the President's "must" measures, sets up a little N. R. A. for the soft-coal industry. This is the bill which the President asked Congress to pass, regardless of any doubts, however reasonable, as to its constitutionality.

The principle objection to the bill, from the standpoint of New Jersey, is that it will necessarily result in an increased price for soft coal. In fact, this is its prime purpose. Such a result is made possible by the powers given to coal operators to fix minimum prices.

ANTISMUGGLING LEGISLATION

The passage of the Anti-Smuggling Act will enable the United States Coast Guard to go out beyond the 12-mile limit in breaking up rumrunning and other smuggling operations off the coast. The principal contraband at the present time is alcohol, on which the duty is $5 per proof-gallon. As most of the alcohol is around 190 proof, the Government loses $9.50 on every gallon smuggled into this country, or from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000 per year.

AUTOMATIC PROMOTIONS IN THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

As the author of the so-called "Bacharach Act of May 29, 1928", regulating salaries in the Customs Service, I was especially interested in the bill providing for automatic promotions in accordance with the minimum and maximum salaries laid down therein. Immigration inspectors already have the benefit of automatic promotion, and it was only fair that customs inspectors be put on the same basis. I regret it did not receive the President's approval.

COTTON-TEXTILE INDUSTRY

The present deplorable conditions in the cotton-textile industry are traceable, in part at least, to two factors which are within the power of the present administration to correct, namely, the cotton-processing tax and Japanese importations.

The unwillingness of the administration to abandon the processing tax is well known, and, so far as foreign competition with domestic industries is concerned, it is doing everything it can under the reciprocal tariff treaties to tear down even our present inadequate tariff.

Last April I introduced a bill which would have imposed an excise tax of 50 percent on imported cotton manufactures, but I had no opportunity to have it considered, as the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee agreed not to allow any bills of that character to be taken up. Even without legislation, the administration could, if it wished, increase the present duty on cotton goods under the flexible-tariff provisions of the 1930 law, but the only adjustments it seems willing to make are downward ones.

The Cabinet committee appointed by the President to investigate conditions in the textile industry offers little hope of any solution of the problem, since it recommended against the repeal of the processing tax and did not favor any increase in the tariff.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF PROGRAM

Of all the laws enacted by the present administration none are likely to have more detrimental effect upon New Jersey than the Reciprocal Tariff Act enacted at the previous session of Congress. Already the President has entered into trade agreements with a number of countries, under which our tariff duties have been reduced on such products as lima beans, potatoes, tomatoes, cucumbers, eggplant, okra, peppers, squash, cement, white lead, plate glass, iron and steel, canned peas, cordage, linen fabrics, transparencies, asbestos shingles, laces, ball and roller bearings, anvils, saws, penknives, files, and matches, to mention only a few. Some 12 or 15 additional trade agreements are now under negotiation, under which the duties on hundreds of other competitive products will be reduced.

Our experience with the Cuban trade agreement points to what we may expect as a result of the continuation of the present policy. The Cuban treaty became effective September 3, and in the 10-month period immediately following our importations from that country increased $45,000,000 over the previous 10-month period, while our exports increased only $14,000,000.

Under all trade agreements except that with Cuba the concessions granted to a particular country are extended in favor of all foreign importations, without the exaction of any equivalent concessions from the countries not parties to the agreement. Thus it is apparent that the purpose of the administration is not so much to expand our export trade as it is to tear down our tariff and allow cheap foreign products from all over the world to flood our markets to the disadvantage of our own farmers, manufacturers, and workers.

While some few industries may benefit to a certain extent by these treaties, by and large they are detrimental to the interests of the country as a whole, as the operations under the Cuban agreement indicate. This is true even as applied to New Jersey. Of what benefit is it to our State to destroy some large industry in order to help some firm which does a relatively small export business with an impoverished foreign country? It seems to me that the tariff policy of the United States should be directed, so far as possible, to preserving the home market for our own people. There are plenty of things we have to buy abroad, such as rubber, coffee, tea, raw silk, and so on, without going abroad to buy the things that our own people can and do produce.

CONCLUSION

After two and a half years under the present Democratic administration, it is becoming more and more apparent that the experiments of the President and his "brain trust" have failed to bring about recovery. The extravagant spending program is only getting the country further into debt and causing fear and anxiety as to the future. The piling up of the national debt by several billions each year forecasts a crushing burden of taxation in the near future on people of small means. All the billions that have been spent have accomplished nothing in the way of recovery. Eleven million unemployed still look for jobs; 20,000,000 people must depend upon the dole for an existence; business and industry lack confidence to go forward; and agriculture is seeing its foreign markets disappear and its domestic market shrink as a consequence of the present farm policy.

Since much of the experimental socialistic legislation of the new deal has been a complete failure in bringing an end to depression, would it not be well for us to again experiment with a little common sense—the application of which to the economics of government would, in my opinion, soon bring back a new era of prosperity?

In these remarks I have confined my comments solely to legislation and matters coming before the Ways and Means Committee for consideration and attention. Of course, there was much other legislation from other committees of vital interest to the country which had my earnest consideration and upon which I voted in accordance with the dictates of my conscience and best judgment.

VALIANT ESKIMOS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, before the impress of the circumstances surrounding the tragic deaths of Wiley Post and Will Rogers on the shores of the Arctic Ocean near Point Barrow a few days ago is entirely erased from men's minds, it is only fair and only just that praise should be given where praise is due to a brave people, and particularly a brave man, who to date have been little more than mentioned. I refer to the Eskimos.

Little is known in the United States of this valiant yet kindly, smiling, and hospitable people. I know them well and admire them greatly.

Just recognition has been given to the outstanding work of Sgt. Stanley Morgan, in charge of the Army radio station at Barrow, who brought the dead bodies of Post and Rogers from the scene of the accident to Barrow, and who gave to the world a concise yet substantial account of the tragedy. Deserved tribute has likewise been paid—and I have joined in it to the best of my ability—to Joe Crosson, who, under unfavorable conditions, flew from Fairbanks to Barrow and brought the bodies of Post and Rogers from Barrow to Seattle. As I pointed out some time ago, this flight made by Crosson entitles him to some more definite and outstanding recognition than he has yet received.

But in all the thousands of columns that have been printed in praise of the famous men who are now dead and in praise, also, of men like Morgan and Crosson, I have yet to see any word of commendation for those who are equally entitled to praise—the Eskimos who were at the scene of the crash and the one Eskimo who brought news of the disaster to Barrow. They are anonymous. They are almost as unknown as the Unknown Soldier. With one exception no one has troubled to determine their individual names. The newspapers occasionally refer to them as "Eskimos" and let it go at that.

And yet we should remember, before this all becomes a vague recollection, that the Eskimos played their part as bravely, as dutifully, and as cheerfully as did any of the others. As soon as the plane hurtled into the shallow water of the river, the Eskimos went to the wreck and took out the body of Will Rogers. Unfortunately Rogers was then dead, but had he been alive the prompt action of the Eskimos would doubtless have saved his life. They were unable to remove the body of Post because it was pinned in the wreckage, which had to be torn apart in order to get Post's body out. And immediately, although it was now night, one of the Eskimos, whose name has recently been given to us as Clair Okabachar, left the scene of the wreck for Barrow in order to give word of the catastrophe and to secure aid. One can almost see this lone Eskimo, a child of the north, race across the tundra to Barrow and making the trip in record time. Had a white man done this, his name, too, would have been in the headlines and he would have had his share of praise. But he is only an Eskimo, and so the world passes on and gives him little regard, and until a day or two ago nobody took the trouble to even determine his name. And so, while we mourn for the mighty dead and while we commend the faithful and outstanding services of men like Stanley Morgan and Joe Crosson, let us not forget to at least give our mental thanks and our mental admiration to the Eskimos, who were true to the traditions of their race in being generous, humane, and brave. Honor to them, and to that one of them whose name is Clair Okabacher.

THE PRESIDENT'S WISE STATESMANSHIP

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I believe that President Roosevelt, in his admirable letter to Roy Howard, the publisher, has sounded the keynote of recovery. I believe he is on the right track and that his leadership in his charted course will bring our people, who have so long been sorely distressed, to a realization of confidence and better times. I believe the whole country when it ponders over the significance of the President's recent movements will applaud his efforts to bring about economy in Government, reduction in emergency bureaus and personnel, and a balanced Budget.

In his efforts to restore conditions which are so essential if business and industry are to forge ahead, and furnish real jobs to millions now on relief rolls, the President will have a powerful ally in the able chairman of our Appropriations Committee, Hon. JAMES P. BUCHANAN, of Texas.

Modest and unassuming but possessed of inflexible determination, Mr. BUCHANAN is exerting, and in the next session of Congress will continue to exert, a powerful influence for economy. He has dedicated himself to retrenchment in governmental expenditures, and those who are bent on taking money out of the United States Treasury will have to have a mighty good cause to get by him. Those who are familiar with his extraordinary resourcefulness and comprehensive knowledge of all Government activities can visualize him as one of the greatest watchdogs the Treasury ever had. Because of the tremendous power inherent in the position he holds, his strength of character and his determination to block raids on the Treasury, he is one of the most valuable men in America today.

It occurred to me that since congratulations to the President of the United States are the order of the day it would be proper for me to write to him and tell him how pleased I am with his letter to Mr. Howard and, beside extending felicitations, I have also suggested the propriety of summoning representative business men of the Nation to a conference in Washington to coordinate the efforts of business and Government in the recovery program. Under date of September 7, 1935, I sent the following letter to the President:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Now when you no doubt are swamped with congratulatory letters I assume one more will not be amiss. Anyhow, I feel that I must write to say that with all of my heart and with much enthusiasm I congratulate you on the wisdom and timeliness of your letter to my friend and former colleague of the fourth estate, Roy Howard.

By your announcement that your basic program has reached substantial completion and by the steps you already have taken to cut off temporary relief agencies, reduce the personnel on the Government pay roll, and balance the Budget you have, in my opinion, made a master stroke toward heartening business, restoring confidence, and leading the Nation nearer to complete and permanent recovery.

Important social reforms and benefits which your leadership has sponsored are now embedded in our governmental structure, and there they will remain. It is no disparagement to your first objective—the establishment of the more abundant life—that you should now turn to the material side and exercise your great resourcefulness in encouraging and rehabilitating honest business, which really is a continuation and elaboration of your humanitarian program, for unless there are those who have the means to employ persons there can be no employed and a healthy condition of business is essential to the general welfare.

Something must be done to get our employable millions off of the relief rolls and established in regular jobs, and I believe the thoughtful people of America will applaud your letter to Roy Howard as pointing the remainder of the way to true recovery. An end must come to the raking of leaves and other synthetic makeshifts devised to furnish employment, but in a civilized country people must not be allowed to starve and go naked, and the call of humanity requires that before we dispense with relief work we must provide regular jobs to which employables may be transferred. I have perfect confidence that your leadership charted along the course indicated in your letter to Mr. Howard will open the way to regular jobs.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, and as chairman of the subcommittee that has charge of appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, I pledge to you my sincere and earnest cooperation in your efforts to effect economy in Government, and to bring our national finances, as soon as possible, to the status of a balanced budget.

Before closing, I wish to offer a suggestion with a request that it may be evaluated for whatever it may be worth in carrying out your policy of reviving business.

The suggestion I have to offer is that a certain number of business men throughout the Nation, who have an accredited standing as men of business ability, public spirit, and high ideals, be summoned to Washington for a conference to get the machinery of business recovery started. The idea I now wish to express was first suggested by me in a bill which I introduced on March 14 last, proposing that the Government enter into a liberal policy of making loans to small and medium-sized industries in order that those industries might be provided with working capital to resume operations and to give employment to men and women now on relief rolls. I quote sections 3 and 4 of the bill I introduced on March 14, as follows:

"SEC. 3. Within 10 days after the approval of this act the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall summon to a conference to be held at Washington, District of Columbia, officials of recognized national and State business, manufacturing and other industrial organizations, and outstanding leaders in the business and industrial world. The purpose of said conference shall be to assist officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in devising a systematic plan for the lending of said fund in such a way as to aid in restoring normal employment throughout the country as soon as possible. Loans shall be made on the basis of the applicant's willingness and demonstrated capacity to furnish employment. Loans shall be granted whenever there is reasonable assurance that the applicant will be able to repay the amount borrowed. Loans shall be for a period of 5 years at 5 per centum interest, with the privilege of renewal for 2 years if the conditions of the loan are meanwhile satisfactorily complied with.

"SEC. 4. Coincident with the approval of this act all public works financed in whole or in part by the United States Government (except construction for exclusively Federal purposes) shall be suspended and said public works shall not be resumed except insofar as may be necessary to carry out existing commitments or to salvage works partially constructed."

I believe, Mr. President, that now is a highly appropriate time to hold such a conference, and that it would be most helpful in coordinating the efforts of Government and business in carrying out the policy outlined in your splendid letter to Mr. Howard.

To me it seems that it would be wise to stop the public works spending program as soon as possible except insofar as may be necessary to carry out existing commitments and make provision for a cushion to carry employment during a transitory period, and to use the balance of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation, or a substantial part of it, as an addition to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's balance for making loans to industry. There are multiplied thousands of concerns throughout the country that are starving for working capital and that the Government might now help with great resultant benefits to the country as a whole. The Loans to Industries Act, which authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industries and set aside $300,000,000 for that purpose, has so far been of but little benefit to industry for the reason that only $31,000,000 has actually been disbursed under its provisions. This is an average of less than $650,000 for each one of the 48 States and inconsequential as a recovery factor. Money loaned to business concerns and industries on adequate security is not lost but will come back to the Treasury, and in my judgment a program that will substitute such loans for the remainder of the spending program would fit in perfectly with your policy of encouraging business and would do more than anything else to bring us speedily to the goal of normal recovery and general prosperity.

With every good wish, very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

I have written several letters to the President presenting as best I could the problem of the business man in the recovery equation, the first one bearing date of November 19 last, and under the unanimous consent privilege granted by the House I wish to present that letter for the RECORD. It was as follows:

NOVEMBER 19, 1934.

HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I know you will not regard me as presumptuous if I address you on the state of the Union, for our long and friendly acquaintanceship, dating back to your service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has taught me that you are ever ready to welcome well-meant constructive suggestions and to weigh and analyze them fairly and impartially, whether in the final outcome you agree with the proponent, or otherwise.

Your administration is already secure in history. In my judgment you have made a name as a humanitarian second only to Jefferson and Lincoln. No President since Jefferson has done more for the laborer and the common man than you have done. You have written into the social structure certain great and salutary reforms and practices and there they will remain forever. The abolishment of child labor and sweatshops, the guarantee of bank deposits, the establishment of order and security in the banking system, the protection of innocent investors from the rapacity of blue-sky vendors, the spread of employment and resultant happiness through the shorter work week, these and other great triumphs of social regeneration make up an imperishable record of achievements. While these mighty changes were being wrought the hungry have been fed and the naked have been clothed.

With these things accomplished and the worst of the depression over, I believe the direct way to prosperity is by a cessation of extraordinary expenditures and by such encouragement as the national administration—and it alone—is capable of giving to honest business. We need to instill confidence in business in place of the abysmal dejection that now exists. We need to do something to supplant in place of the gloom and paralysis that now engulf business the old fighting spirit and a willingness among business men to cooperate more freely and actively in bringing the country out of the rut. I believe that you, Mr. President, with such safe and sound advisers as Donald Richberg, have the power to put the business of the country on its feet and make it an important, willing, and militant factor toward bringing about early recovery and reemployment along normal lines.

In my talks with business men I have found that in a vast majority of instances uncertainty is the cause of their halting attitude. They do not know what to expect next, and not knowing what to look for they are not willing to risk anything. This has caused a business stalemate on a national scale with lethal ramifications into every walk of life. Let me stress what I believe to be the importance of completing your program at the earliest possible moment and announcing it forthwith. Business can adjust itself to almost any program if only it knows what that program is. I hope the time will come real soon when you will be able to announce through the newspapers, over the radio, and from the housetops, figuratively speaking: "This is my program. It is my entire program and it is going to remain stabilized just as I have given it to you. There will be no further changes in the currency and no additional legislation will be proposed. I have shown you my entire hand."

There must be no lessening of restraints over evil practices in business, but honest business should have encouragement to get on its feet. There cannot be employment unless there is money to meet pay rolls. If honest business could have the benefit of loans—not gifts—from the Federal Government it would be a great incentive to a rational revival. The law we passed at the last session of Congress providing loans to industry needs liberalization. It has been weakened by administrative restrictions, and the loans that are being made under it are so few and inconsequential that they constitute a negligible factor in recovery. The policy of not making loans to any business concerns that have been in the red in recent years makes the law virtually a nullity. The concerns that have not been in the red are few and far between. It seems to me the character of the borrower would figure in these loans quite as much as the collateral offered, but character counts for nothing under existing administrative policy.

As a Member of Congress with a voting responsibility, and with a little added responsibility due to the fact that I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, I am anxious that the future expenditures of the Government shall be kept within limitations. We must continue to care for the hungry and naked and acutely distressed, never for a moment neglecting them, but in my opinion it would be a colossal mistake to embark upon another enormous program of uneconomic public works, thus adding to the debt burden and bringing us a step nearer to the danger of uncontrolled inflation, for when inflation gets under way the possibility of controlling it is about equal to that of stemming the waters of an impounded stream once the dam has broken. My anxiety on this score has been intensified by a startling proposal by a Cabinet official which appears in the newspapers under the glaring headline "Secretary Forecasts Spending of Billions." The article goes on to outline an enormous proposed program of national spending, one feature of which is to be a four-lane transcontinental highway avoiding all cities, with no grade crossings, over a 1,000-foot right-of-way landscaped to make it the most beautiful road in the world.

Can it be possible that at a time like this, when retrenchment is clearly indicated as the proper national policy, such a proposal is seriously advanced? I cannot imagine that with the country deeper in debt than ever before in its history, with interest and taxes mounting to unprecedented proportions, we will pour out untold millions for such an iridescent dream. More than any other country in the world, America already is spanned with hard-surfaced roads. There is no demand for this glorified Appian Way from the standpoint of economic necessity, and the project would not be justified as an employment measure because the employment created would not be commensurate with the vast outlay. In the last analysis, such projects must be paid for by taxes, and taxes are paid by the sweat and toil of the masses. We cannot pull money like rabbits out of a hat to pay these enormous construction costs. In my opinion the entire proposed public-works program should be scrapped, and the country should be spared the great burden of having these additional billions piled on top of our staggering national debt.

I sincerely believe that if business is given the benefit of a definite, stabilized program so that it will have a chart to go by, and if in addition it can have the assurance from the administration and Congress that temporary emergency measures that have served their purpose will be repealed and that every reasonable effort will be made to bring about retrenchment in governmental expenditures so that ultimately tongue and buckle will meet and the Budget will be balanced, an accelerated business momentum will be the turning point of the recovery program and the result will be a new era of abundant prosperity with jobs for all.

No one is more sincere in wishing you well than I am. That is my excuse for bothering you with this long letter. I believe that your superb leadership in the direction I have indicated would definitely end the depression and bring about a glorious future for America.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

BUREAU OF UNEMPLOYMENT ADVOCATED 16 YEARS AGO—DEPARTMENT OF LABOR PROPER AGENCY TO ADMINISTER SOCIAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, 10 years before the crash of 1929 I stated on the floor of the House of Representatives, as a Member of the Sixty-fifth Congress (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 28, 1919):

What this Congress should do is to provide * * * sums sufficient to furnish work for every unemployed man and woman in the United States.

At the present rate of increase by the first of May there may be nearly 4,000,000 out of work, and at $4 wages per day apiece that would require $16,000,000 per day, and 300 working days for the year would amount to $4,800,000,000. That is the sum which is needed today to be appropriated * * * if we are to deal in any adequate and effective way with this vast and ever-increasing army of the unemployed, already numbering nearly two and a half millions, and which is being increased every week by hundreds of thousands of compulsory recruits.

The appropriation I advocated for unemployment at that time, $4,800,000,000, is almost identical with the amount appropriated this year, 16 years later, for unemployment relief.

FALSE PROPHETS SCOFF AT WARNINGS OF 1917

In 1917 men who are still in public life scoffed at our warnings of disaster. We have with us today those who voted to plunge America into the World War. They denied that their vote would bring unemployment, distress, and poverty to millions of our people. Well, I am not guilty. There is no blood on my hands. I voted "no" on the war resolution in 1917, and when I did I placed my political and physical life in jeopardy. The RECORD shows that I warned Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress against the advice of the self-appointed and self-anointed agents of Wall Street, un-American and European-minded people who were trying to drag this Nation into a foreign war. On April 6, 1917, I said:

WE SAVED THE WORLD FOR DEMOCRACY—DID WE?

When the poor cry out for bread; when taxes rise beyond the power to pay; when riots for food may have to be repressed with the murder of our own people—then what will you say? What answer to the hungry? What will you say then, and what will your message be to the mother whose son dies in battle under foreign kings and emperors? What will your answer be?

"HE KEPT US OUT OF WAR"

"He kept us out of war" was the slogan that elected Wilson President in 1916. When he demanded war, and Congress was about to vote for war, I said on the floor of the House:

You promised peace, but war was in your hearts. I say to you, gentlemen of the majority, the ghosts of these slogans will yet rise up to haunt you. The blood of our people will be upon your hands, not mine.

As soon as the war was over the problem of unemployment was upon us. How were we prepared to meet the emergency? What plans did Congress lay down? What agency of Government was set up to put the unemployed to work? Instead of facing the oncoming army of unemployed and providing intelligently for their needs, the National Government floundered around, sidestepping the problem. Loans were made to rehabilitate the nations of Europe, but no provision was made for proper rehabilitation of our own people. Years have rolled by and yet we have no permanent agency of the National Government to deal in an effective way with the problem of unemployment. We have figures and statistics on everything else, but we do not count the unemployed. We have no complete and reliable census of those out of work.

RESOLUTION TO CREATE BUREAU OF UNEMPLOYMENT, 1919

On January 2, 1919, I introduced a bill creating a bureau of unemployed in the Department of Labor. This bill (H. R. 13592) provided:

That there shall be in the Department of Labor a bureau to be called the "Bureau of the Unemployed", and a commissioner of the unemployed, who shall be the head of the said bureau, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and who shall, in the absence of the commissioner, act as and perform the duties of the commissioner of the unemployed, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of Labor or by the said commissioner.

The said commissioner shall have power and authority under the direction of the Secretary of Labor—

(a) To take a census, at as frequent intervals as possible, of the unemployed in the United States.

(b) To make and keep a classified enrollment of the unemployed by avocations.

(c) To correct and keep full records of the industrial and commercial conditions throughout the United States, especially in relation to opportunities for the employment of labor.

(d) To furnish the fullest possible information to the unemployed of opportunities for employment in any part of the United States and to devise plans for facilitating the movement of the unemployed to places where opportunity for employment exists.

(e) To make investigations and report to Congress and the President annually on the first of December, and oftener if requested, the extent of enforced idleness and unemployment in the United States and the causes thereof, with suggestions for remedies for the same.

RESOLUTION DIRECTING HOUSE COMMITTEES TO PROVIDE FOR THE UNEMPLOYED IN 1918

On November 21, 1918, only a few days after the armistice was signed, and when we knew that demobilization was upon us, I introduced a resolution (H. Res. 452) directing certain committees of the House to provide work for the unemployed. Had this resolution been promptly acted on by Congress, it would have avoided much of the distress and danger that came upon the country shortly after the war, and it would undoubtedly have led to surveys and intelligent national planning for the handling of unemployment.

House Resolution 452 provided:

Whereas the rapid demobilization of 4,000,000 soldiers and 10,000,000 or more war workers in the United States during the next few months is liable to create a great body of unemployed; and

Whereas these conditions are brought about as a direct result of the exercise of the war-making power by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the plain and imperative duty of Congress to at once initiate the necessary steps to open opportunities for employment to all workers in the United States who face enforced idleness during the coming months;

Resolved further, That as a first step to remedy the danger of wide-spread unemployment of millions of our people during the winter and following months, this House hereby authorizes and directs the Committees on Labor, Interstate Commerce, Public Buildings and Grounds, Rivers and Harbors, Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, District of Columbia, and Post Offices and Post Roads to each make an investigation as to the possibilities of work for the unemployed in those branches of industry, either in public or private employment, coming within the purview of each of the above committees of this House;

Resolved further, That said committees shall have power to subpena witnesses and administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, and employ such assistants as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this resolution, and to report to this House on or before December 20, 1918.

On February 28, 1919, I stated that there is but one thing to be done: The Government, which by its war program created this abnormal condition, must step in with ample capital, which it is able to command, and provide the means for opening up employment for all those in enforced idleness.

HEARINGS ON LUNDEEN UNEMPLOYMENT RESOLUTION IN 1919

In December 1918 the House Committee on Rules held hearings on this resolution. Members of Congress appeared at the hearings, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 28, 1919, are printed the statements made by Members and others who testified on the resolution.

NEW POSITIONS TO BE CREATED

In referring to my resolution to create a bureau of the unemployed, I stated 16 years ago (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 28, 1919):

It is true that we have a Labor Department and we have employment bureaus. This, however, merely distributes positions already existing; it does not create new positions. The bureau and departments cannot lay down a program of road building, reclaiming lands, such as swamp lands, cut-over lands, and irrigated lands, and open to labor hundreds of millions of acres of good, productive land now being held out of use by speculators and monopolists. I venture to say that if something is not done soon to relieve distress in this country Congress will hear from our great industrial centers in no uncertain way; in fact, already we are in receipt of many letters and resolutions demanding that something be done. Strikes and growing unrest are now the order of the day.

There are those who scoff at the idea of unemployment in this country. They seem to fear to admit that such a condition exists or that it may grow worse. In fact, if the war were actively on, anyone who might seek to remedy the condition would be called pro-German possibly, or perhaps disloyal. Certainly those who seek to better conditions are loyal to the people who work and to their families who are suffering want. If, however, such action is hostile to the great employers who desire lower wages, in order that they may increase their profits, if that is disloyalty, I am willing to accept that term.

DUTY OF GOVERNMENT IS TO CREATE JOBS

At the same time I stated, 16 years ago, that the man who is willing to work and able to work is entitled to a position; and if he cannot find a position it is the Government's duty to find one for him; and if the Government cannot find one for him, it is our duty to create a job, so that he may support his family and not become a seeker for charity, which destroys the morale, weakens the strength, and degrades the character of our citizens. Today the Government's responsibility for the livelihood of its citizens is more widely recognized than it was 16 years ago. I submit that my policy was correct then, and my position is the same today.

Our planning has been haphazard; our remedies for unemployment have been hastily conceived and certainly are not fundamental. Years of planning by a central agency designated for the purpose would have helped us to meet the crisis and solve the problem of unemployment.

NOT TOO LATE FOR PLANNING NOW

I stand today where I stood 16 years ago. The Department of Labor is the logical agency to study and plan and solve the problem of unemployment. In the Department of Labor are the best facilities for the securing of information on the extent, causes, and cure of unemployment. The Lundeen unemployment, old age, and social insurance bill (H. R. 2827) provides that the Secretary of Labor shall administer the system of unemployment insurance set forth in the bill. The Department of Labor should always employ people who are sympathetic with the problems of the working people. All branches of labor, of hand and of brain, should be represented in the Department of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR SHOULD ADMINISTER SOCIAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

There is no good reason for turning over the administration of a social-security program to a new commission with its ever-lengthening lines of patronage. The Department of Labor must aid labor in the solution of its problems. Today the American Federation of Labor announces that unemployment for June 1935 has increased over May 1935, and there are over 11,000,000 now unemployed. This estimate is conservative, and it is likely that we have from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 or more unemployed right now. There has been no fundamental solution of the problem and very little unemployment relief. Unemployment is the greatest single problem facing labor today. That problem must be solved, and it is up to the Congress and the United States Department of Labor to solve it. Bread lines and patronage have failed.

READ THE RECORD

I want my friends to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1917, 1918, and 1919. As for me, let the record stand. I need not alter a phrase or take a sentence back. I did not go to sleep with those who saw no danger. I was among those who stood on the watchtowers of this Nation. We warned our fellow citizens in no uncertain terms of impending tragedy, and often proposed constructive legislation which would have averted the disaster that came upon us.

THE INCREASING EMERGENCY DEMANDS AN IMMEDIATE SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS

We are told now that we have social security on our statute books. But what kind of social security? What kind of unemployment insurance and old-age pensions? Let us look into that. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has stated repeatedly, and I quote him, that the social-security law now on our statute books is "pitiably inadequate." With 15,000,000 unemployed crying out for work and bread, Members of Congress ought not to be on their way home. They ought to be in the halls of Congress where they were elected to serve the people.

We still have time to rewrite our Social Security Act. Under the pressure of an emergency that is increasing in intensity, I opposed adjournment with all the power at my command. The adjusted-service certificates should be paid at once. That would eliminate a million unemployed. The late Congressman Truax stated that half a million farm homes will go under the sheriff's hammer within the next 12 months unless we pass the Frazier-Lemke Refinancing Act. Moratoriums will not save our farms. They only postpone the inevitable tragedy of loss of home and fireside. Low interest rate refinancing acts must be passed to save our urban and rural homes. Above all we must have adequate and genuine social security in this country, and some day we will have a national labor party and we will elect a Congress which will go the whole road for those who labor and produce the wealth of America.

WE HAVE NOW TRIED EVERYTHING BUT MONEY

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, now that the gavel is about to fall for the last time on the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, said to have been the most difficult Congress in American history from the standpoint of the number and importance of legislative measures considered, I wish to avail myself of the privilege of a brief review of the program.

The thought uppermost in my mind today in connection with this program was the wide publicity given to suggestions made 2 years ago that we should have recovery first and reform afterward. It would be charitable to say that those who urged this course upon the President had forgotten the old adage that—

> When the devil is sick, the devil a saint would be;
> When the devil is well, the devil a saint is he.

No; they had not forgotten it. They knew full well that if and when the country recovered, meaning thereby a return of the alleged prosperity which ended in 1929, reform would be impossible. They wanted to preserve the old order of things. They wanted a return to normalcy, which was well defined by the author of the Merry-Go-Round as a return "to corporate chicanery on a planetary scale." The coming generation of Americans, who are now being alluded to so frequently in connection with both Democratic and Republican youth political movements, can thank the man in the White House for having the sense to know that the patient must be operated on now to remove the cause, if a future and perhaps more violent recurrence of the disease was to be prevented.

The President has operated. Under his leadership the Congress has enacted a series of major measures to insure against the return of corporate predatory chicanery on a planetary scale. Under our economic system, adjusted solely to production, no legislation could have prevented a period of very hard times, and no legislation which can be enacted by this Congress can bring about a state of prosperity in which all the workers of the country will be assured of what one of our Republican colleagues who is a candidate for President pledges, to wit, the American wage scale and standard of living. I would like to see him blueprint that. To accomplish this the readjustment must go beyond what has been placed on the statutes. But what has been done, if honestly and fairly administered, will prevent a recurrence of the orgy of speculation and exploitation which in one industry alone robbed American investors of $16,000,000,000, and the total of which in all activities probably reaches the inconceivable sum of $100,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, my voice is feeble and of short range. I do not claim it had anything to do with the determination of the President to keep this Congress in session until it had executed his program, but, in view of the clamor that has been going on for months for this Congress to adjourn and go home and give the country a chance to recover, I feel justified in my own behalf in calling attention to my declaration, to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 6, 1935, on my resolution adopted by the House asking the President for a transcript of his press conference on the resolutions of the United States Chamber of Commerce condemning his entire recovery and reform program, that—

"The program should go through, every major measure on it, even if it takes all summer. Every measure considered vital to the completion of the program should be put on the books at this session of Congress and be given a measure of time to work out. It is useless to think of coming back to Washington next winter and getting our case ready for submission to the people."

I may also be pardoned for calling attention to my answer to the Washington Post when it took a poll of the Membership some weeks ago on the question of speedy adjournment. My answer was: "The President ought to get all he can of what he wants now." He has gotten it, and, given a year in which to work out, I have faith that the situation in the country will right itself and that the verdict of the people will be favorable to the President, who had the vision, the courage, and the determination to conceive this program and to carry it through to execution in the face of opposition as vicious, as corrupt, and as powerful as ever opposed the program of a President.

Mr. Speaker, the President was right when, in his radio address to the young Democrats in Milwaukee, he spoke of the depression as something toward which we have been heading for a whole generation. Yes; and a very long generation; more than 60 years of the law of the jungle, the unbridled reign of corporate wealth, of national administrations under which the natural wealth of the country was sold, stolen, or given away, and its man-made wealth permitted to rule, exploit, and corrupt, until it had almost become a case of locking the barn after the horse is gone.

This condition was the inheritance of Franklin D. Roosevelt. He has tried to meet it with an unparalleled program of achievement, the achievement being none the less notable by reason of the fact that one or more of these measures may be temporarily frustrated. I can give only mention by name to a few of the most notable. Abolition of the gold standard; repeal of the gold-payment clause in a hundred billion dollars worth of obligations; bank reform; national industrial recovery; agricultural adjustment; securities; Stock Exchange Act; Tennessee Valley Authority; Utilities Act; social security; taxation; public works and relief; Federal communications; motor-transportation regulation; an overhaul of finance, banking, industry, agriculture, commerce, transportation, and communications.

The brunt of the opposition to this great program fell, of course, upon the President, but even inconspicuous Members of Congress have not escaped. I shall mention only one feature of the many thousands of letters and telegrams reaching me in opposition to first one and then another of the recovery and reform measures. They would kill the affected industry. It was a program of destruction. Every Member of Congress must have taken of his time, energy, and blood, when he should have been doing other things, to answer this never-ceasing stream of protests. The answer is that all these activities are still flourishing—not only flourishing but making headway. I believe it will be so with all of the program. Nothing will be killed that is worth preserving, but some things will survive which should be killed.

At the expense of being called a "rubber stamp", I want to reaffirm a statement made by me in the debate on the holding-company bill that I was pledged to go along with the President as far as possible and to give him the benefit of the doubt; and now that the curtain has rung down on this extraordinary and trying session of Congress, I want to add that I have done so. Every measure that he has sent to Congress and which was finally by Congress returned to him for his official signature went there with the aid of my vote.

I have gone along with the President. But this does not mean that I have always seen eye to eye with him. One great question in particular has not been dealt with—the money question. There has been a strong sentiment throughout both of these Congresses—and I believe it is much stronger in the country—for an expansion of the currency, for the substitution of money for bonds; but none of the bills introduced for this purpose have seen daylight, and the amount of money in actual circulation today is less than it was 2½ years ago, and the amount of debt much greater.

More than a year ago I began telling the inflationists in Congress—that, is those Members who believe in any expansion of the currency; and all such are inflationists in the lexicon of sound money—that if the country could achieve recovery and return to the so-called "prosperity" prior to the panic without the use of money, it would settle the money question for a long time to come. It cannot yet be clearly seen what the issue will be. But if the question of recovery is still in the balance when the next session of Congress convenes, I look to see the money question become much more acute than during the past three sessions of Congress, when it was overlaid by a program of economic legislation such as no Congress in American history ever even approximated. With these measures now on the books and out of the way, attention may necessarily focus on the money question.

Some say it is only a question of credit. I say credit should be based on cash. I repeat, there should be some proportional relationship between cash and credit. Government is apparently the only institution thus far which can operate on the basis of bankruptcy. Maybe we expansionists are wrong. Maybe the need of money is only an illusion. Maybe the advocates of scarce and dear money as the only safe and sound basis of finance are right. At any rate, it has always won. We reached the greatest height of prosperity in American history on credit—why not repeat? True, it blew up. Bonds, taxes, and interest mount; but some day credit, which consists only of confidence, will overtake them, and the ghost of more money will be laid forever. So the medicine men of sound money say. It is an interesting experiment, and I hope I will be permitted by kind Providence to stick around until I see the answer.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE PRESENT CONGRESS IN THE INTEREST OF THE MASSES UNPARALLELED IN THE HISTORY OF THE NATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have served in this body for 29 years, having been spared by the Almighty and permitted by the unfailing kindness of my constituents to serve here for a longer continuous period than anyone now a Member of the House of Representatives. For this I am profoundly grateful. For it has been a great privilege to have had the honor to have associated and cooperated for so great a portion of my life with many great men, men of great intellects, men of great ability as statesmen, and men of great patriotism and devotion to country.

Hundreds of those who have passed across this public stage in the more than a quarter of a century that I have been here have now gone to their final rewards. But in imagination sometimes I fancy I can still see and hear the voices of my departed colleagues. To view in retrospect their memories is to inspire me anew with confidence in the perpetuity of our form of Government and the future of the United States of America.

For instance, I can see again today in the Speaker's chair that plain, rugged, honest Missourian, Champ Clark; and sitting near by him on the rostrum, his son, Bennett, then Parliamentarian of the House and now a United States Senator from Missouri. Bennett practically grew up on the floor of the House. Speaker Champ Clark physically was an unusually handsome man, with a noble and serious countenance, but in repose he had a merry, kindly twinkle in his eye. He was loyal to his friends, and an indefatigable fighter for his party. He died in a nearby hotel in the closing hours of a hectic war Congress. His last mortal words, as he lay delirious and dying, and imagining that he was presiding at the Speaker's table, were: "The House will be in order."

And we all recall that other great Democratic Speaker, who so recently left us, Henry T. Rainey of Illinois. A picturesque figure, able, courageous, a progressive and aggressive Democrat always; and as our presiding officer, fair and impartial to all. He and I served together for 25 years. Members become very close to one another in so long a period. The cordial and respectful personal attitude of one Member toward another, regardless of their political affiliation or attitude on legislation, when not in actual verbal combat on the floor, is one of the factors that goes to make membership in this body so pleasant and attractive. Anyone who has ever served as much as even a single term here will testify to this. Friendships established among Members generally endure throughout life. Speaker Rainey particularly was my intimate and personal friend. In our younger days it was our custom of a Sunday to hike through parks and nearby woodlands. His passing affected me very deeply.

Also, I can see again, when I try, the massive figure and hear the thunderous tones of that great Democrat, Ollie James of Kentucky. And striding up and down the center aisle, as was his custom when making an important speech, I see the fiery and brilliant North Carolinian, Claude Kitchin. A more conscientious and consistent champion of the principles of Thomas Jefferson never served in this House.

I remember, too, another great majority leader, the always suave, dignified, and gentlemanly Oscar Underwood, of Alabama; also John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, and W. Bourke Cockran, of New York, both of whom thrilled us with their passion and eloquence.

All are gone. But they have left their "footprints in the sands of time." Their words of wisdom, their patriotism, their zeal for the cause of men, women, and children—than which there is no more sublime mission for those of us in public life—remain recorded forever in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The works of these great Democrats live after them, adding to the rich heritage of the party to which they were so whole-heartedly affiliated. For the spoken word, once printed, "from that moment has a soul" and lives forever.

But it was not my intention, originally, to speak of the past. It was my purpose to speak of the present. It is the custom for the living to praise the dead. But I would like to say that we have big men in this Congress, and on both sides of the aisle. Individually and collectively, its Membership will compare with that of any of the Congresses in which I have served.

Having participated in many trying sessions, especially those during the World War, I desire to go on record as declaring that there has been no Congress that has worked harder or passed more beneficial legislation than has the Seventy-fourth Congress in the session just closed.

I have previously called attention to the many excellent acts which this Congress has enacted, and, therefore, will but very briefly review some of them here:

Relief: Passed bill appropriating, under authority of the President, $800,000,000 for direct relief, and $4,000,000,000 for work relief to create 3,500,000 jobs by the end of the year. In other words, this is a measure to assure food, clothing, heat, and shelter for the needy. No other President or Congress in the history of this Nation has ever done so much for the benefit of the unemployed and deserving poor.

Social Security Act: Provides immediate Federal contributions to assist States in pensioning needy aged; establishes a permanent Federal old-age annuity system under which 25,000,000 workers ultimately will be paid $10 to $85 a month when they are 65; establishes Federal-State unemployment insurance systems; provides Federal contributions to the States for needy mothers and children, crippled children, and blind.

Wagner Labor Disputes Act: Guarantees to all workers within the scope of Federal power the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing; sets up a Federal Labor Relations Board to enforce the act.

Banking Act of 1935: Reorganizes the Federal Reserve System, giving the administration increased authority over it; centralizes control of open-market operations, rediscount rates, and other devices by which the Reserve banks affect flow of credit and money; provides for credit expansion by liberalizing rediscount rules; continues Federal bank-deposit insurance; requires State banks with more than $1,000,000 to join the Reserve System in order to have such insurance after July 1, 1942.

Tax on wealth: Passed new revenue act to collect $250,000,000 annually, largely from higher income levies on persons receiving more than $50,000 a year; higher taxes on large estates and higher rates on the more profitable corporations.

Liquor control: Federal Alcohol Administration set up as a division within the Treasury, to continue the work of the old Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which expired with N. R. A. Regulates liquor trade practices, but provides for Federal beer and brewery regulation only to the extent of the laws in the various States. Bulk liquor sales prohibited.

Public utilities: Wheeler-Rayburn utilities measure, directing Securities and Exchange Commission to eliminate after 1938 all holding companies more than twice removed from operating utility subsidiaries, and to restrict those permitted to live to contiguous territories and economically unified areas, holding companies not permitted to organize mutual service companies, except where their contracts with operating subsidiaries provide for service at cost and without profit. S. E. C. given discretion to permit holding companies to issue bonds on physical assets only or against outstanding stock. Federal Power Commission given new sphere of activity in regulation of operating utilities. Tennessee Valley Authority amendments, restating authority of T. V. A. to sell surplus power, which right had been challenged by Federal Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, Ala. T. V. A.

authorized to make loans to States and municipalities for purchase of power-distribution systems. Permitted to construct own power lines, even if they duplicate existing private facilities. This bill will ultimately protect, and save to innocent and bona fide investors, and to consumers, hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

Foreign affairs: Adopted neutrality resolution providing for 6-month arms embargo against all belligerents, prohibiting American ships from carrying munitions to belligerents, authorizing the President to restrict Americans traveling on belligerent ships, authorizing him to restrict the entry of foreign submarines into American ports and waters and to take steps to prevent ships from leaving American ports with men or supplies for belligerent ships at sea; and establishes permanent licensing system for munitions manufacture and export under supervision of a Cabinet board. This is one of the best measures ever enacted in the interest of peace.

Home Owners' Loan: Amendments to Federal Home Loan Bank Act, Home Owners' Loan Act, and National Housing Act, extending and liberalizing their provisions. Bond-issuing authority of Home Owners' Loan Corporation expanded by $1,750,000,000 to aggregate of $4,750,000,000, with provision for receipt of new loan applications by H. O. L. C. within 30 days after approval of act, on May 28. This act will enable hundreds of thousands of threatened home owners to save their homes.

A. A. A. amendments: Approved processing tax rates and farm benefit payments in effort to protect legality of new-deal crop-control program; restricted suits of recovery of processing taxes to those who can prove they did not pass tax burden on to consumers or farmers; prohibited price fixing; continued Bankhead Cotton Control Act and Kerr-Smith Tobacco Control Act for another crop year; and authorized potato-control system.

Bus and truck regulation: Placed interstate bus and truck lines under I. C. C. regulation with respect to rates and safety measures.

Railroad reorganizations: Simplified procedure for reorganization of financially distressed lines under I. C. C. approval.

Railroad pensions: Provided for pensioning of rail employees at 65 or after 30 years' service, replacing last year's pension act which was held invalid.

Spanish War veterans: Restored full pensions to these veterans at a cost of $45,000,000 a year.

N. R. A. extension: Continued a skeleton N. R. A. organization until April 1, 1936.

Baby bonds: Authorized sale of Government bonds in denominations as low as $25.

Farm-mortgage moratorium: Replaced the old Frazier-Lemke Law, held unconstitutional, with a new act to stay foreclosures for 3 years, providing farmers turn property over to Federal courts in bankruptcy procedure.

Guffey Coal Act: Sets up a little N. R. A. for the bituminous industry, with a commission to enforce labor standards, trade practices, and price provisions.

This legislation, and a great deal more, too numerous to mention, was in the interest of all the people, and not in the interest of Wall Street and the special interests. Naturally, the latter are greatly displeased because they could not dictate to or control President Roosevelt or this Congress. They have been accustomed to control not only the legislation but the finances and policies of former administrations, and therefore they are greatly perturbed that they cannot under the Roosevelt administration have their way and unload their burdens upon the masses, and continue in their avariciousness to pile up millions upon millions on their wealth. No wonder they look with disfavor upon legislation that aids the laboring man, the farmer, and small businesses. They resent increased wages and the elimination of child labor. Knowing they cannot dictate the policies, as they did under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, they charge President Roosevelt with being a dictator, because he frustrated their efforts after he started the country back again on the road to recovery. And it is now their aim to get back in the saddle to be able in the next few years, as they have in the past, through their manipulations, to create another panic, as they did in 1894, 1907, 1921, and 1929.

Formerly the propagandists and publicists tried to hold the Democratic Party responsible for the panics, but that old bunk will not work any longer, because the people know the panics of 1907, 1921, and 1929 occurred under Republican administrations. In their desperation to get back into power they have begun a vilifying crusade against President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration. They have hired and engaged as many prominent writers and public men as money can buy to conduct this infamous campaign. It is to be regretted that these Wall Street interests have been able to reach out and obtain the services and cooperation of some former Democrats, but in nearly every instance these latter gentlemen were connected previously with the avaricious and vicious Wall Street interests. But notwithstanding their intellect, shrewdness, cleverness, and adroitness, they have failed in all their efforts to create an issue, and therefore they have turned to the issue of the Constitution, behind which they are trying to hide.

The columns of the capitalistic press are open to them, and not only that, but many of their propagandists are on the pay rolls of the biggest of these newspapers. Some of these writers have gone out of their way to assail me and others who have dared call attention to their vicious propaganda on the question of the Constitution and the judiciary.

A few weeks ago I pointed out that it was not the President of the United States but the courts that are endeavoring to usurp the power of Congress. The RECORD itself will show that many beneficial and humane congressional acts, passed by both Republican and Democratic Congresses, have been held unconstitutional. In fact, many times when legislation is passed in the interest of the masses and which tends to restrict the power of the special interests, immediately, upon one pretense or another, the legislation is assailed and an effort is made to have it declared unconstitutional. In the celebrated Schechter case, as in many others, the lawyers representing the special interests have been used and financed to have such legislation held unconstitutional. However, notwithstanding the tremendous power and the millions they expended in the past session to defeat progressive, beneficial, and humane legislation, it availed them not.

It is true that we have not been able to enact the bonus bill into law, tax-exempt securities, and to pass several other important measures, but I am absolutely certain that in the next session of Congress this legislation will be enacted. I for one will exert every ounce of my energy to bring about the passage of these measures.

I hope the people all over the United States will organize and frustrate the efforts of those conniving gentlemen who are leaving no stone unturned to undermine the popularity of the President. I have served under seven Presidents, and I am satisfied no President has been more deserving of the support of the American people than Franklin D. Roosevelt. His aims are the aims of a man who recognizes the abuses perpetrated under the Republican administration and who is seeking to bring about a fair and square deal to all. He is a real, sincere, and progressive Democrat, who believes in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Some gentlemen who are not even fit to shine his shoes call him a dictator and Socialist, but those lying and contemptible accusations, if they may be dignified as such—and it matters not by whom they may be disseminated—will be looked upon by all sensible men and women of our Nation as a desperate attempt to bring about his defeat so that they may in the future, as they have in the past, exercise their former power which they so shamefully abused to the detriment and misfortune of 95 percent of the American people.

ROOSEVELT LETTER CONVINCES BUSINESS IT SHOULD "GO AHEAD AND PLAY BALL"

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, no sponsor for our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has ever given a clearer, more convincing, or more unanswerable presentation of the purposes of his administration than did the President himself in a letter to Mr. Roy W. Howard, head of the politically independent Scripps-Howard newspapers.

The President made plain not only why he had done certain things, and what more he proposed to do, and why, but in sincere, plain language that every citizen may understand he explained frankly what is and has been in the back of his mind from the first. He took the entire Nation into his complete confidence. He made it plain that no honest and legitimate business has anything in the world to fear, and may henceforth proceed full speed ahead to complete normal business activity.

Publisher Howard replied that everything business had desired to know had been completely and convincingly answered, and that business can be counted upon now to go ahead and play ball.

OLD MAN DEPRESSION IS ON THE WAY OUT

At almost the same time the Howard-Roosevelt correspondence was being published, information was being made public from other sources proving that the Roosevelt administration is making steady headway in its fight to whip the depression. The reports show that this upswing is not a mere spurt, but a steady climb back to the good times that took a nose dive under the Coolidge and Hoover administrations.

In the last 7 weeks business has advanced past the halfway mark to normalcy, the American Federation of Labor reported in its Monthly Survey of Business. Prospects for the remainder of 1935 are called even brighter.

"The last 4 months of 1935 may well bring the highest level of industrial operations and earnings for any similar period since 1930", says the Survey. "The present business upswing is the healthiest thus far; it is the first not due to Government spending or currency action, the first which seems due chiefly to inherent economic strength."

N. R. A., lifting workers' buying power, and A. A. A., increasing the prosperity of the agricultural classes, stimulated mass buying, which, in turn, has started the wheels of the heavy industries. Retail buying has continued steady through this year. Purchase of farm machinery for the first half of 1935 is 75 percent above last year. The auto industry records total sales of 2,054,000 cars in this year's first 7 months, or 599,000 more than last year. That industry is now spending $100,000,000 on production equipment, steel $130,000,000. Machine tool orders in this year's first half were 47 percent above last year.

The average increase in income-tax collections for the country as a whole in the 1935 fiscal year, ending last June 30, as compared with the previous year, was 35 percent, the totals being $1,099,230,382 for 1935 and $817,025,339 for 1934.

THE HOWARD-ROOSEVELT CORRESPONDENCE

Because I believe the Howard-Roosevelt correspondence should become a part of the records of Congress, and wishing that it might be read by every man, woman, and child in the Nation, I desire to present it in full.

Mr. Howard, in a letter dated August 26, 1935, wrote:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As an independent editor keenly interested in the objectives of the new deal, I have been seeking reasons for the doubts and uncertainties of those business men who are skeptics, critics, and outright opponents of your program at a time when there is no commensurate dissatisfaction being evidenced by others of the electorate.

I do not accept it as a fact that the interests of what we broadly term "business" necessarily are in conflict with mass interests.

I expect to continue in support of your stated interpretation of American liberalism—notwithstanding my dissent and disagreement as to some details and some theories. Therefore, it is in a friendly and, I hope, constructive spirit that I attempt a few observations and opinions which I believe timely and pertinent.

These represent, I believe, a composite of the most frequently expressed criticisms of your administration.

That certain elements of business have been growing more hostile to your administration is a fact too obvious to be classed as news. So long as this hostility emanated from financial racketeers, public exploiters, and the sinister forces spawned by special privilege, it was of slight importance. No crook loves a cop. But any experienced reporter will tell you that throughout the country many business men who once gave you sincere support are now, not merely hostile, they are frightened.

Many of these men whose patriotism and sense of public service will compare with that of any men in political life have become convinced and sincerely believe—

That you fathered a tax bill that aims at revenge rather than revenue—revenge on business;

That the administration has side-stepped broadening the tax base to the extent necessary to approximate the needs of the situation;

That there can be no real recovery until the fears of business have been allayed through the granting of a breathing spell to industry, and a recess from further experimentation until the country can recover its losses.

I know you have repeatedly stated your position on sections of the Nation's problems, but as an editor I know also the necessity for repetition and reiteration. There is need to undo the damage that has been done by misinterpreters of the new deal.

I know that you feel as I do—that with all its faults, and the abuses it has developed, our system has in the past enabled us to achieve greater mass progress than has been attained by any other system on earth.

Smoke out the sinister forces seeking to delude the public into believing that an orderly modernization of a system we want to preserve is revolution in disguise.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

(Signed) ROY W. HOWARD.

PRESIDENT GLAD TO INFORM HONEST CRITICS

The President, under date of September 2, 1935, replied:

MY DEAR MR. HOWARD: I appreciate the tone and purpose of your letter, and fairness impels me to note with no little sympathy and understanding the facts which you record, based on your observations as a reporter of opinion throughout the United States.

I can well realize, moreover, that the many legislative details and processes incident to the long and arduous session of the Congress should have had the unavoidable effect of promoting some confusion in many people's minds.

I think we can safely disregard the skeptics of whom you speak. Skeptics were present when Noah said it was going to rain, and they refused to go into the ark.

We can also disregard those who are actuated by a spirit of political partisanship or by a willingness to gain or retain personal profit at the expense of, and detriment to, their neighbors.

Then there were those who told us to do nothing. We had heard of the do-nothing policy before and from the same sources and in many cases from the same individuals. We heard it when Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson proposed reforms.

The country has learned how to measure that kind of opposition. But there are critics who are honest and nonpartisan and who are willing to discuss and to learn. I believe we owe, therefore, a positive duty to clarify our purposes, to describe our methods and to reiterate our ideals.

Such clarification is greatly aided by the efforts of those public-spirited newspapers which serve the public well by a true portrayal of the facts and an unbiased printing of the news.

CONFIDENT THAT ANY DOUBTS AND APPREHENSION WILL VANISH

However, experience is the best teacher and results are the best evidence. As the essential outline of what has been done rises into view, I am confident that doubts and misapprehension will vanish. I am confident further that business as a whole will agree with you and with me that the interests of what we broadly term business are not in conflict with, but wholly in harmony with, mass interests.

I note what you say of the hostility emanating from financial racketeers, public exploiters, and sinister forces. Such criticism it is an honor to bear. A car with many cylinders can keep running in spite of plenty of carbon—but it knocks. When it is overhauled an important part of the job is the removal of that carbon.

In the large, the depression was the culmination of unhealthy, however innocent, arrangements in agriculture, in business, and in finance.

Our legislation was remedial, and as such, it would serve no purpose to make a doctrinaire effort to distinguish between that which was addressed to recovery and that which was addressed to reform. The two, in an effort toward sound and fundamental recovery, are inseparable. Our actions were in conformity with the basic economic purposes which were set forth 3 years ago.

As spokesman for those purposes I pointed out that it was necessary to seek a wise balance in American economic life, to restore our banking system to public confidence, to protect investors in the security market, to give labor freedom to organize and protection from exploitation, to safeguard and develop our national resources, to set up protection against the vicissitudes incident to old age and unemployment, to relieve destitution and suffering, and to relieve investors and consumers from the burden of unnecessary corporate machinery.

DOUBTS IF ANY PARTY WILL OPPOSE THESE PRINCIPLES

I do not believe that any responsible political party in the country will dare to go before the public in opposition to any of these major objectives.

The tax program of which you speak is based upon a broad and just social and economic purpose. Such a purpose, it goes without saying, it not to destroy wealth, but to create broader range of opportunity, to restrain the growth of unwholesome and sterile accumulations and to lay the burdens of Government where they can best be carried.

This law affects only those individual people who have incomes over $50,000 a year, and individual estates of decedents who leave over $40,000.

Moreover, it gives recognition to the generally accepted fact that larger corporations, enjoying the advantages of size over smaller corporations, possess relatively greater capacity to pay. Consequently the act changes the rate of tax on net earnings from a flat 13¾ percent to a differential ranging from 12½ percent to 15 percent.

No reasonable person thinks that this is going to destroy competent corporations or impair business as a whole. Taxes on 95 percent of our corporations are actually reduced by the new tax law.

A small excess-profits tax is also provided as well as an intercorporate dividend tax which will have the wholesome effect of encouraging the simplification of overly complicated and wasteful intercorporate relationships.

Congress declined to broaden the tax base because it was recognized that the tax base had already been broadened to a very considerable extent during the past 5 years.

INVISIBLE TAXES FALL ON POOR MAN

I am aware of the sound arguments advanced in favor of making every citizen pay an income tax, however small his income. England is cited as an example. But it should be recalled that despite complaints about higher taxes our interest payments on all public debts, including local governments, require only 3 percent of our national income, as compared with 7 percent in England.

The broadening of our tax base in the past few years has been very real. What is known as consumers' taxes—namely, the invisible taxes paid by people in every walk of life—fall relatively much more heavily upon the poor man than on the rich man.

In 1929 consumers' taxes represented only 30 percent of the national revenue. Today they are 60 percent and even with the passage of the recent tax bill the proportion of these consumers' taxes will drop only 5 percent.

This administration came into power pledged to a very considerable legislative program. It found the condition of the country such as to require drastic and far-reaching action. Duty and necessity required us to move on a broad front for more than 2 years.

It seemed to the Congress and to me better to achieve these objectives as expeditiously as possible in order that not only business, but the public generally, might know those modifications in the conditions and rules of economic enterprise, which were involved in our program.

UNEMPLOYMENT STEADILY DIMINISHING

This basic program, however, has now reached substantial completion and the breathing spell of which you speak is here—very decidedly so.

It is a source of great satisfaction that at this moment conditions are such as to offer further substantial and wide-spread recovery. Unemployment is still with us, but it is steadily diminishing and our efforts to meet its problems are unflagging.

I do not claim the magician's wand. I do not claim that Government alone is responsible for these definitely better circumstances. But we all know the very great effect of the saving of banks, of farms, of homes, the building of public works, the providing of relief for the destitute, and many other direct governmental acts for the betterment of conditions. And we do claim that we have helped to restore that public confidence which now offers so substantial a foundation for our recovery.

I take it that we are all not merely seeking but getting the recovery of confidence, not merely the confidence of a small group, but that basic confidence on the part of the mass of our population, in the soundness of our economic life and in the honesty and justice of the purposes of its economic rules and methods.

I like the last sentence of your letter and I repeat it—"With all its faults and with the abuses it has developed, our system has in the past enabled us to achieve greater mass progress than has been attained by any other system on earth. Smoke out the sinister forces seeking to delude the public into believing that an orderly modernization of a system we want to preserve is revolution in disguise."

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

No man with any conscience who is not owned and controlled by the vested interests can any longer, after reading this letter, question the sincerity of President Roosevelt or find fault by charging him with being a dictator on one hand and a Socialist on the other, or that he is disregarding the Constitution.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the provision of House Concurrent Resolution No. 40, I declare the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress adjourned sine die.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution No. 40, the House adjourned sine die.
